Visitation To City 'Steady'
Historic Sites Now 'In Full Swing'

Technology, Taxis Boost Local Tourism

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Local tourist numbers are bouncing back with the summer sunshine and could even exceed last's year's statistics, thanks to technology and taxis.

From high tech to low tech, Quincy's profile is expanding and new projects are in the works, according to Donna Mavromates, Vice President and Director of Tourism for Quincy Chamber of Commerce and Caroline Keinath, Deputy Superintendent, Adams National Historical Park.

Mavromates described the chamber's recent regional strategy that's aimed at residents or potential tourists already in the area.

DISCOVER QUINCY'S new ads appearing on local taxis to help drum up visitation to the city's historic sites and other attractions.

As an example, Mavromates said tourists flagging a taxi at Logan Airport might see an ad in a Yellow Cab that touts the city's 400-year history and ties with the Revolution and the Adams family sites, then add Quincy to their 'must-see' list.

Department Restructuring Complete;
Prendeville New Superintendent Of Public Works

Raymondi Appointed DPW Commissioner

Mayor Thomas Koch Tuesday appointed Daniel Raymondi, who has more than 30 years of service to the city, as commissioner of Public Works, completing a restructuring the mayor said that will build on operational improvements in recent years by placing a renewed focus on the administrative functions of the department.

Raymondi resigned as Ward 2 city councillor, a post he has held for 22 years, on Tuesday morning prior to being sworn-in as Commissioner.

Lawrence Prendeville, the commissioner whom Koch credited with being the "best operational leader in the Commonwealth," was also sworn in as superintendent of Public Works, which McCulley, owner of Yellow Cab of Quincy, according to Mavromates who said McCulley "allows us ten cabs," and added that, normally, taxicab advertising is very expensive.

Others potential tourists can tap in Discover Quincy, the Quincy Historical Society (QHS), Adams history on the net, and find data intriguing enough to plan a visit. The QHS boasts of Quincy's history "Of Stone, Of Ships, Of Minds."

Even the Street-Works plan for revitalizing downtown is helping tourism, according to Mavromates who said that chatter on Facebook and the Internet about the Street-Works' plan has raised the city's profile and "kind of heightened awareness."

"We don't anticipate construction will impede (tourism)," said Mavromates.

Such publicity often piques interest and visitors will want to learn more about Quincy, according to Mavromates.

Both Mavromates, Keinath, and a spokesperson at QHS describe the current visitor numbers as "steady." Keinath and Mavromates believe the soggy spring chilled the early tourist season, but that the visitor numbers now are equal to those of last year.

"It's remaining steady. It was a little slow but now we're in full swing," Keinath said.

Mavromates offered a similar assessment, "We expect things to stay fairly steady."

In addition, local hotel managers report solid bookings for their services. Sean Galvin at Best Western Inn said, "The Best Western Adams Inn is experiencing the same surge as most of the Boston market. We anticipate 5% growth this year and we have just come off our best June since 2008."

David Cesario, General Manager of the Boston Marriott Quincy, offered a similar assessment, "Boston is experiencing a very strong demand with regard to leisure travel and we continue to reap the positive effects in Quincy, with many of our hotel visitors booking 30 days in advance, particularly for the weekends."

Keinath said the Park's visitor numbers are off from October to May 30, but that does not include the busy month of June which won't be tallied until mid-month and she's optimistic about those numbers.

For the eight months, the Park registered 34,550 visitors and its children's' program is so popular there's a waiting list, according to Keinath who said 6,000 youngsters engaged in the Park program this year.

"We've been very busy with school groups through May," said Keinath who praised the Grade 4 programs sponsored by the Quincy Historical Society and similar efforts for Boston's middle school students.

"We don't advertise," said Keinath, adding that there's a waiting list as they receive "more requests than we're able to meet."

Currently, the Park is undergoing major maintenance upgrades, according to Keinath who said the Stone Library is being repointed and the windows of all the buildings have been replaced, thanks to funds from the Park Service.

As for the future, Keinath said the Park is already preparing for next season when a film will be available featuring actors' playing the roles of revolutionaries.

Keinath said that Adams Park competed for National Park Service funding for the project which is currently underway with filming in Sturbridge, Salem, Concord and Lexington.

Actors will be featured in scenes modeled after Colonial times and aboard The Friendship, Salem's historic replica of an 18th century ship as well as at Minuteman National Park

Next year's program will also feature themed tours focusing on such areas of Adams history as Science, Grounds and Gardens, and Servants. The science tour will highlight John Quincy Adams' interest in science and astrology.

John Quincy Adams maintained his devotion to astrology throughout his life. After his presidency, he laid the cornerstone for the Cincinnati Observatory and was a key person in establishing the Smithsonian Institute.

SEEING DIAMOND IN A WHOLE NEW LIGHT!

A diamond's grading report will reveal whether (and to what degree) the gemstone "fluoresces," the trait that some diamonds have to change color when exposed to the sun's ultraviolet (UV) rays or fluorescent light. Diamonds that fluoresce usually turn yellow, blue, or white. Yellowish diamonds that fluoresce blue may have their yellow tint masked by the effect in fluorescent light; diamonds that fluoresce yellow can appear whiter under incandescent lights. Most fluorescence is subtle and will not produce a noticeable color change. Strong yellow fluorescence, however, may decrease value, but strong blue fluorescence may actually increase the value of diamonds with yellowish tones. Thus, it is important for consumers to be aware of this characteristic.

Don't let fluorescence unjustifiably sway your choice when selecting a diamond. It's important for you to be happy with the diamond you buy. Ask our jeweler at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center to show you examples of fluorescence and try to look at diamonds in many types of light before you make a decision. If you have any questions about the exquisite pieces we offer please feel free to contact us at 617-773-3636.

Buyer Plans $34 Million Investment After Bankruptcy Eases Debt

Medical Center CEO Pledges No Interruptions In Top-Notch Care During Transition

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The proposed capital partnership between Quincy Medical Center and Boston-based Steward Health Care Systems could be finalized as early as this fall, according to Interim CEO John Kastanis.

Under the agreement, Steward will invest $34 million in the hospital and the hospital will transition from a non-profit hospital to an investor-owned entity.

JOHN KASTANIS

While the plan offers a major change for the 120-year-old institution, the hospital clientele will only benefit, according to Kastanis.

Patients seeking care will continue to receive top-notch medical treatment with no interruption while the transition is underway, according to Kastanis.

"We're not going to skip a beat," Kastanis said Tuesday during an interview with The Quincy Sun regarding the hospital's agreement with Boston-based Steward and the hospital's current bankruptcy proceedings.

Kastanis said he hope to conclude the entire process

White House Wreath To Honor President John Quincy Adams

Cong. William Keating To Speak At July 11 Ceremony At United First Parish Church

The White House wreath-laying ceremony to commemorate the 244th birthday anniversary of President John Quincy Adams will be held Monday, July 11, at noon, at United First Parish Church (Unitarian) in Quincy.

Also known as "Church of the Presidents," the tombs Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams rest within the stone crypt inside the church alongside the tombs of their wives, Abigail Adams and Louisa Catherine Adams.

Cong. William R. Keating, Mayor Thomas P. Koch, and John Adams, a descendant of President Adams will speak. Commander Scott Graham, Commanding Officer, Navy Operational Support Center - Quincy, will offer remarks on behalf of President Barack Obama and a Navy Honor Guard will place the wreath on President Adams' tomb. The U.S. Navy Brass Ensemble from Newport, R.I., will play during the ceremony.

Rev. Sheldon Bennett, Minister, said, "As we honor John Quincy Adams as the sixth President of the United States, we also honor his distinguished public service as a diplomat, Senator, Secretary of State, and Congressman. We also honor his early leadership against slavery in the years leading up to the Civil War.

In the 1960's, President Lyndon Johnson began the tradition of the White House arranging for a large laurel wreath to be placed with due ceremony on the graves of deceased U.S. Presidents. President John Quincy Adams was born in Quincy (at that time the North Precinct of old Braintree) on July 11, 1767.

The ceremony is free and open to the public. Following the ceremony, the crypt will be open for people to pay their respects at the tombs of the two Adams Presidents and First Ladies.

Parking is available in the Presidents Place parking garage located at 1250 Hancock Street.

Your equity builds very quickly. And you pay thousands less in interest, compared to a longer-term mortgage loan. Rates are still at historic lows. How much longer? Who knows. Wanted: Ward 2 Seat Warmer

"Wanted: One seat warmer on the City Council.

"Applicant must be a Ward 2 registered voter.

"Knowledge of city government – and experience working and volunteering in the community – preferred."

That description may be just what the City Council is looking for when it convenes Tuesday, July 12 to choose a successor to fill out the balance of Dan Raymondi's term as Ward 2 councillor. Raymondi resigned his council seat Tuesday to accept the Department of Public Works commissioner's post offered by Mayor Tom Koch.

RAYMONDI

City Council President Kevin Coughlin has called a special council meeting for Tuesday, July 12 beginning at 6:30 p.m. in the Council Chamber. Any registered voter in Ward 2 who is interested in serving as interim ward councillor should submit a letter of intent to City Clerk Joseph Shea, the clerk of the Council, by 4 p.m. Monday, July 11. Those individuals must also appear at Tuesday's special Council meeting to be considered for the appointment.

Raymondi's resignation does not warrant a special election since there is less than one year left on his council term. Instead, city councillors must meet within 15 days of a ward councillor's resignation to choose a successor when the balance of a term is less than a year, according to City Solicitor James Timmins who referenced the city's charter in issuing an opinion on the ward vacancy.

In the event of a councillor at-large vacancy, the city council would also meet to choose a successor – regardless of how much time (more or less than year) is left on the unexpired term. In other words, there will never be a special election to fill a councillor at-large seat even if that councillor – theoretically anyway – steps down one day after taking office.

The vacancy in Ward 2 is interesting since there are four candidates who are seeking Raymondi's seat already. Raymondi – who has been elected Ward 2 councillor 11 times – announced earlier this year that he would not seek another term this fall.

Those campaigning to be elected Ward 2 councillor this fall are Brad Croall, Christopher Eleey, Stephen Kozlowski and Steven Perdios. It's unsure whether any of them would even ask the council to consider appointing them an interim ward councillor.

Coughlin told The Sun he would not support any of these candidates as Raymondi's immediate successor because doing would be "tipping the scales" in an election year. He prefers a community activist – who has no intentions to seek a full-term – occupy the seat until voters elect a new ward 2 councillor this fall.

"I'm looking for a Paul Kirk type," Coughlin said, referring to the former special assistant to Sen. Ted Kennedy who was named an interim senator after Kennedy died. Kirk remained in the seat until a special election was held and Scott Brown was elected to fill out the balance of Kennedy's senate term.

One possible name that has been mentioned as a seat warmer in Ward 2: Betty DeCristofaro. She is the wife of the late Ted DeCristofaro who served as Ward 2 councillor for 14 years from 1982 to 1995. Betty is a well-respected member of the community who volunteers much time to a myriad of organizations including 1000 Southern Artery and Interfaith Social Services.

What makes this special appointment particularly interesting is that a ward councillor resigning before a term is completed is a political rarity in Quincy.

In fact this may be the first time ever that a ward councillor has stepped down with less than six months remaining on his term.

CHENEY

The last time a ward councillor resigned his seat occurred in 1984 but circumstances were different.

In early 1984, Ward 1 Councillor Leo Kelly resigned his council seat to take a job with the Quincy Housing Authority. The resignation occurred early in Kelly's term – just a few months after winning a two-year term in the fall of 1983.

Because more than a year was left on Kelly's term, a special election was held in June. In the final election, Michael Cheney defeated Robert Johnston to fill out Kelly's term. Cheney was unopposed in 1985 and won his first full-term on the council that fall.

In 1999, there was the potential for a vacancy in Ward 6 after Councillor Bruce Ayers was elected a state representative in the 1998 state election. But Ayers remained Ward 6 councillor while serving as a state representative. Ayers' council seat became open in the 1999 city election later that fall. Joseph Newton was elected to succeed Ayers.

McINTYRE

There have been a few vacancies because of the departures of some councillors at-large in recent memory. And these show that naming a successor can be a logical choice.

Charles McIntyre, son of the late mayor and state senator James McIntyre, ran for councillor at-large in 1993. McIntyre made an impressive political debut, finishing a respectable fourth behind the three incumbents who were re-elected: Tim Cahill, Joseph LaRaia and Michael Cheney. He finished 632 votes behind Cheney.

In July of 1995, then Mayor James Sheets appointed LaRaia – who also served a term as mayor – to the Board of Assessors. The council met in early September and elected McIntyre – the runner-up in the 1993 city councillor-at-large race – to serve the balance of LaRaia's term which was only a few months.

McIntyre did not run for a full-term on the council in 1995. Elected were Paul Harold – who topped the field – and incumbents Tim Cahill and Michael Cheney. Finishing fourth was Larry Chretien, the Ward 3 councillor who opted to run for the open councillor at-large seat that year.

KEENAN

Another noteworthy vacancy came after Councillor at-Large Tim Cahill was elected state treasurer in 2002. Cahill resigned his council post after being sworn in as state treasurer in early 2003.

The council elected John Keenan – who had finished fourth in the 2001 councillor at-large race – to fill out Cahill's remaining term on the council. Keenan finished 801 votes behind Frank McCauley in the 2001 council at-large race. Also elected that year were Cahill and Joseph Finn.

The council, in fact, has adopted language that stipulates that the successor to a council seat should be "whichever of the defeated candidates . . . (in the most recent election) received the highest number of votes at such election."

That's all fine and good when there actually is a runner-up in an election.

But "if such a candidate does not exist or is unwilling to serve," then the council must select a "registered voter of the city duly qualified to vote for a candidate for the office of city councillor," according to the city's charter.

That brings us back to the vacancy in Ward 2.

No one challenged Raymondi for the Ward 2 council seat in the 2009 city election. In fact, we think Raymondi has not had an opponent since he and Mark Roberts vied for an open Ward 2 seat in 1995 after then Ward 2 Councillor Ted DeCristofaro decided he would not seek re-election.

We have nothing but admiration for the four residents who have shown an interest in campaigning to succeed Raymondi in Ward 2. All four have their qualifications and reasons for seeking the seat.

But we don't think the council should select any of these four to fill out Raymondi's term.

Doing so would create an uneven playing field in this fall's election.

The successor will receive exposure on TV at the council meetings and have a chance to generate headlines at those meetings.

That extra media exposure could generate more name recognition which may be pivotal in the Ward 2 council race. With four candidates, there would be a preliminary election Sept. 20 to narrow the field from four candidates to two. And there will be probably be two council meetings before the Sept. 20 preliminary.

(The top two vote getters in the preliminary will be nominated and face each other in the final election Nov. 8.)

Let the city council name a "seat warmer" in Ward 2 next Tuesday.

And let the voters elect a new Ward 2 councillor this fall.

THIS 1937 postcard is a picture of a new QMC Special Service Truck custom built and delivered to the Quincy Fire Department by the Public Floodlighting Company of Syracuse, New York. The truck was purchased to replace a 1930 Chevrolet flood lighting truck damaged in an icy road accident the past winter. Pictured with the new truck are Mayor Tom Burgin on the left and Fire Chief William J. Sands on the right. Sands served the Quincy Fire Department for 40 years; the first six years as a call fireman and the last 16 as chief. He retired in 1946. He was also a longtime member and commodore of the Squantum Yacht Club. You Can Rely On Electronic Payments

By KRISTEN ALBERINO
Social Security Public Affairs Specialist

You probably don't need a reminder that natural disasters lurk around the corner when we least expect it.

Many natural disasters force people to leave their homes. The last thing a person who falls victim to this kind of devastation needs to worry about is how they're going to get their next Social Security or Supplemental Security Income (SSI) payment.

Here's a solution. Make sure that you're receiving your benefit payments electronically. Electronic payments are the best way to receive your benefit payments. Here's why.

Electronic payments are safe. Your money is deposited directly into your account each month. Because it's transferred electronically, there's never a risk of your check being lost or stolen.

Electronic payments are quick. You'll get your payment faster when it's made electronically. Your money is immediately available to you once it's deposited; no waiting by the mailbox for the check to arrive.

Electronic payments are convenient. No more need to stand in line at the bank to cash your check or to leave your house when the weather is bad. It's also nice to know your payment is in your account instead of your mailbox when you're on vacation or away from home.

Social Security Online Services

Perhaps we also should mention that electronic payments are now mandatory. People who apply for Social Security benefits on or after May 1, 2011, must receive payments electronically. Nearly everyone currently receiving benefits who has not signed up for electronic payments must switch to electronic payments by March 1, 2013. Electronic payments may be made by direct deposit, the Direct Express card program, or an Electronic Transfer Account. You can learn more about all three at www.godirect.org.

If you're ever faced with a devastating event, there will be no question about where you'll find your money when you receive electronic payments. The same cannot be said for paper checks being sent to mailboxes that may no longer exist.

Learn more by reading our online fact sheet, Get Your Payments Electronically at www.socialsecurity.gov/pubs/10073.html. Or go directly to the source, where you can learn more and sign up for electronic payments: www.godirect.org.

REPAIRS, RENOVATONS FOR TWO SCHOOLS

The school department has provided Councillor John F. Koegler with a list of necessary repairs and renovations needed for the 75-year old Lincoln School and the 81-year old John Hancock School.

School Superintendent Robert Pruitt and John Osterman, principals of both schools, drew up a list of the necessary work that would be required by the two schools in lieu of a new 650-pupil school in South Quincy.

Councillor Koegler said that he would ask Building Inspector Allan F. MacDonald to give him cost estimates for the additions and renovations before making up his mind whether to support the controversial request for a new $1.7 million school.

Wollaston Garden Club Celebrates 'The Rose in Bloom' At Granite Workers' Memorial

Members of the Wollaston Garden Club have long admired the well landscaped and beautiful rose garden and public park in West Quincy on Copeland Street – a partnership between the Quincy Parks Department and local resident gardeners.

Club members recently gathered at the site to host a catered picnic and ceremony honoring the rose garden's lead gardeners and recently deceased WGC past president, Barbara L. Ryan.

Pat Artis, garden club president presented, Steve Cantelli, a certificate for his long-standing commitment to beautify the West Quincy community and his leadership in developing the city's only public rose garden. Also honored were rose garden volunteers Alba Tocci and Barbara Persampieri.

Cantelli explained the history of the site and gave tours through the garden paths. More than 26 different varieties of roses can be found in the garden. Master Gardener, Cynthia Lewis provided members with rose care information.

The catered picnic was a gift to the club given in honor of retired Quincy teacher and garden club president, Barbara Ryan. Ryan was remembered for her keen wit and love of beautiful gardens.

Hospitality for the event was led by Susan Lynch and Karen Lundsgaard with assistance from Maria Holster, Elaine McGrail, and Jan Clifford. Cynthia Lewis created three beautiful centerpieces - arrangements of roses and garden perennials.

This event was the final part of a club program devoted to learning about roses; beginning in May with a lecture on "rose basics", and followed by a field trip to two public rose gardens in Boston and Brookline.

Garden club members came away with an increased awareness and appreciation of what a committed group of people can do in a neighborhood to create a place of beauty and serenity.

Jonathan's Thai Panang With Chicken

While we were all sitting down to a Sunday family dinner, the subject of food came up.

We began discussing new recipes that we had tried. My grandson Jonathan and his girl friend Suzanne were raving over a recipe that he has been making.

He said he has ordered something similar in Thai restaurants where they prepare it with fish. He decided to try it using chicken instead – and with great results.

He said he wanted to make it for me some night and when he came over, I watched him preparing it and it was so delicious that I wanted to share it with all of you.

All I had to do was make the rice.... how easy was that?

THAI PANANG

2 cans coconut milk (plus 1 can water
4 pieces chicken breast (cutlet size)
1 small bunch of asparagus
1 red pepper
1 tablespoon brown sugar
Red pepper flaked to taste
2 teaspoons red curry paste
Small bunch of fresh basil
1 small can pineapple chunks

In a large pan, heat the coconut milk and the water and the brown sugar. Set aside. In a small amount of water, place the chicken breast and cook until done. When cooled, cut the chicken in bite size pieces. Place in the pan with the coconut milk and cook. Then add the fresh asparagus spears (cut off the stems) and cook until asparagus are par cooked. Add the curry paste and the red pepper flakes he Keep simmering and then at the last minute, add the fresh basil and the pineapple chunks

In a separate serving bowls, place the rice on the bottom and the coconut milk mixture over the top. I hope you enjoy it as much as we all did.

I used brown rice and cooked 2 cups. Follow the directions on the package.

Environmental Treasures Program To Host Free Walking Tour Saturday

The Quincy Park Department's Environmental Treasures program will host a free walking tour Saturday, July 9 at 10 a.m. entitled "The Other Side of the Revolution: Braintree's Loyalists."

Led by Rev. Clifford Brown, Rita Cavonious and Diane Grondon of Christ Church and Ed Fitzgerald of the Quincy Historical Society, the tour will combine visits to the present church building, the 1725 Old Churchyard where many loyalists, patriots and slaves are buried, and the sites of Brackett's Tavern and the Liberty Tree.

Christ Church is the oldest continuing Episcopal parish in Massachusetts and is one of the oldest in New England.

A "daughter" of King's Chapel in Boston, at a time of the Revolution as the Church of England, it was considered a "hot bed of loyalists."

The tour will include fascinating stories such as the story of Caesar, a "servant" to the Miller family who in thanksgiving to the prish for acceptance shown to him and his family donated a silver chalice.

Meet at Christ Church parking lot, 12 Quincy Ave., at Elm Street. For more information, call 617-472-0799.

Swingle's Quarry Bridge Plaque Donated To Museum

The Quincy Quarry and Granite Workers Museum has received a donation of the original cast iron bridge plaque from the bridge that spanned a portion of the J. F. Swingle Quarry.

The bridge was built in 1904 after the Granite Railway Company opened a small quarry near the Reinhalter (Mannex) Quarry and prevented Swingle access to the northwest portion of his quarry.

Swingle was cut off from removing granite from the quarry and accessing his grout pile which contained stone for foundations and stock for street paving stones. When researching the granite industry in Quincy, one may find many stories of fierce competition among the quarry owners and manufacturers similar to the Swingle, Granite Railway Company friction.

The bridge – built in 1904 by the Berlin Construction Company of Berlin, CT – was a steel suspension bridge rated at 50 tons. It spanned 90 feet and was used as a foot bridge wide enough to permit heavily loaded wagons of granite to pass over.

The bridge was blasted into the water in the early to mid 1980's for safety reasons due to the deterioration of the heavy wooden deck planking.

In the late 1980's the drowning of Paul Gooch at the quarry prompted the draining to search for the body. The bridge became visible on the rear ledge toward the bottom of the quarry which was about 200 feet down a shear rock cliff. When the bridge became visible in the late 1980's, two young adventurers, Bernie Sweeney from South Boston now from Quincy and Bill Yuscavitch from Dorchester, climbed down and retrieved the plaque from the twisted remains of the bridge.

The bridge and plaque are pictured on one of the Thomas Crane Library's collection of historic photos in the Parker Collection. Bernie and Virginia Sweeney have donated the plaque to the museum in memory of Bernie's father, Bernard Sweeney and Bill's father, William Yuscavitch.

The information of the history of the bridge was obtained from Joseph Greene who is producing a documentary on the complete story of the Swingle Quarry from its beginning to the filling of the quarry for a park.

Judge Orders Arbitration

Both Sides Predict Legal Victory In Turbine Dispute

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Neither party won.

However, both Quarry Hills, LLC and the Town of Milton claimed progress after Superior Court Judge Barbara Dortch-Okara recently ordered them to resolve their difference through binding arbitration

The two parties are engaged in a legal dispute over plans for a 480-foot wind turbine atop the Milton border of Granite Links Golf Course, owned by Quarry Hills LLC.

Last week, officials of the Town of Milton and of Quarry Hill LLC, both suggested that the judge's decision and Dortch-Okara's June 2nd court-ordered arbitration regarding the lease details will only benefit their claim.

At issue is Milton's plan to erect the 480-foot wind turbine on town-owned land roughly 250 feet from the greens at Granite Links Golf Course. Construction requires access over a road within the lease boundary, but Milton's Town Meeting recently reclaimed that property.

Milton officials tout the turbine as part of a green initiative that will save their taxpayers money and energy while Quarry Hills LLC charges the wind turbine will not only adversely affect golfers and the City of Quincy, but, also, hinder the views from the Blue Hills Reservation and negatively impact wild-life.

"All of our claims are based on breach of lease," Quarry Hills' attorney Jeffrey Tocchio said last week after stating that his clients are pleased with the judge's decision. Tocchio is a partner with Drohan, Tocchio & Morgan, PC, of Hingham.

Milton's Town Council John Flynn of Murphy Hesse Toomey & Lehane is currently preparing for the hearings and will handle the case.

Milton's Town Administrator Kevin Mearn said that Milton officials are moving forward and "will continue working with NSTAR" even before any arbitration decision.

Milton has already earmarked $500,000 for an NSTAR interconnection system, according to Mearn who added, "We are certainly eager to get this resolved and we look forward to locating this turbine on town property to benefit the residents (through) savings on energy costs."

In a strongly worded statement, Tocchio last week called the plans for the wind turbine "a direct violation of the 1998 (50-year Lease) Agreement...." and warned of the risks and negative consequences to the City of Quincy.

"Milton sees a possible opportunity to generate income, but their plan requires that they breach their obligations under the Lease Agreement and bring harm to Quarry Hills ' operations," stated Tocchio.

Tocchio said Quarry Hills' 1998 agreement to close and cap Milton's landfill resulted in a savings to that town "in excess of $20 million.... In return for these benefits, Milton agreed to permit Quarry Hills to utilize specific parcels of town land to develop and peaceably operate a first-class golf course."

"Quarry Hill has consistently insisted that the Town of Milton abide by the terms of the Land Lease and intends to continue to use all avenues and means available to pursue the legal enforcement or out Land Lease Agreement," stated Tocchio.

"We are asking nothing more than that Milton continue to uphold its obligation under the Lease. We will continue to fight any attempted maneuverings by Milton to unilaterally disregard the letter and spirit of our long-term joint agreement."

Both parties acknowledged that the actual arbitration hearings could be scheduled many months in the future.

No Interruptions During QMC Transition

by this fall. Both the bankruptcy and financial transition will proceed on parallel routes while the hospital continues to offer quality services.

"The medical center will continue to operate...." said Kastanis who emphasized that there will be "no impact on patients or their care... No interruption."

Kastanis described the potential capital partnership with Steward as a major step toward revitalizing the hospital and its physical plant.

Under the terms of the agreement, Steward will invest $34 million in Quincy Medical Center within five years of the sale and those millions will be directed to major improvements.

"They're committing to upgrade the building and the entire facility," said Kastanis who said that enhancing the hospital was a major requirement of the agreement.

Before that sale is finalized, however, Quincy Medical Center must unload some of its $56 million debt through a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding filed July 1.

If that debt is restructured to a manageable sum, the sale will proceed, according to Kastanis who called the bankruptcy, "a means to an end."

"The end is not closure," said Kastanis, noting that Steward is well known for its low-cost, efficient and high quality medical care.

Kastanis, also, said that he and the Trustees have kept open communication lines with the hospital's 1200 employees and the response has been good, "It's been predominately positive."

In a June 28 e-mail to the employees, Kastanis wrote, "...you should know that pay, benefits and staff levels will remain as they are today, and we will continue to provide the high-quality patient care and services on which the people of Quincy and surrounding communities have come to depend."

Kastanis who joined Quincy Medical Center in May of 2010 worked with the Board of Trustees to locate investors interested in Quincy Medical Center.

"We cast a wide net," said Kastanis who said there were "a lot of interested parties."

Kastanis said the final choice was narrowed to three candidates and then two and finally Steward which is owned by the New York private equity firm Cerberus Capital Management.

While the medical center's Board of Trustees and Steward Healthcare are in agreement at this time, the transition and bankruptcy must clear a number of outside hurdles.

Under the plan, the arrangement with Steward will convert the non-profit hospital into an investor-owned institution. However, that switch requires the approval of the attorney general's office and the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts.

In addition, the bankruptcy must be approved by federal officials while the state's Department of Health must, also, approve Steward's role as a capital partner.

Quincy Hospital, founded in 1890, lists 282-beds and 350 staff physicians.

Kastanis was hired in May of 2010. Last winter, he was featured in Beckers Hospital Review for his successful work in overseeing the financial turnarounds at several New York medical facilities.

Mahoney Blasts Koch For Raymondi DPW Appointment

Mayoral candidate Anne Mahoney Tuesday blasted the appointment of Daniel Raymondi as the city's new DPW director, calling Mayor Tom Koch's appointment of the Ward 2 city councilor to the six-figure position a "million-dollar pension grab" that damages both employee morale and the city's reputation.

Mahoney, who had previously called upon Koch to withdraw the job offer, also lambasted the Koch administration for making no formal announcement of the controversial appointment prior to Raymondi's swearing in Tuesday morning.

"This proposed appointment was first mentioned nearly two months ago, yet Tom Koch waits until the July 4 long holiday weekend to try and slip it past the voters," Mahoney said. "I've got news for you, Mayor: The voters of Quincy are paying attention!"

In her campaign kick-off speech June 22, Mahoney charged that the Koch administration "has taken patronage and cronyism to new heights," pointing to the proposed Raymondi appointment to the $110,000 a year position as illustrative of how business is being conducted in the city.

"Instead of seeking qualified applicants with a background in public works or engineering, Tom Koch offered a six-figure job to a political insider with no experience in these areas whatsoever," Mahoney said. "The sad part is, I think nepotism and patronage come so naturally to Tom Koch that he truly doesn't think there's anything wrong with deals like this. He actually believes that this is the way government is supposed to operate – handing out jobs to friends, relatives and political cronies – and he's wrong."

Mahoney noted that Raymondi, 63, needs only to stay in the DPW director's position for three years in order to receive an $88,000 a year pension for the rest of his life. Prior to this appointment, Raymondi's annual pension would have been $48,000 a year.

"Assuming Councillor Raymondi receives a pension for 25 years, his original pension would have come to a total of $1.2 million," Mahoney said. "By accepting this blatant patronage appointment, his pension will skyrocket to $2.2 million – that's an extra million dollars for just three years of work. It's highway robbery of the taxpayers, pure and simple."

As mayor, Mahoney pledged to institute new city hiring policies based on qualifications, not political connections. And her first appointment, she said, will be a qualified public works director.

"The days of 'it's not what you know, but who you know' are about to come to an end in Quincy," she pledged. "As mayor, I'll make sure all city positions are publicly posted online and with organizations like the Mass. Municipal Association to ensure that everyone has a fair chance at applying for Quincy jobs and only the most qualified applicants are hired."

expands the duties of the previously existing Superintendent of Sewer, Water and Drain.

"I firmly believe we have the best field general in the state, and I cannot think of a someone who has more history, more experience, and more passion for this City than Dan Raymondi to handle the increasing administrative demands of the Department of Public Works," said Mayor Koch. "This is going to be a tremendous one, two punch. I know I will be judged by the results, and I expect those results to be substantial."

The reorganization allows Prendeville to focus entirely on the day-to-day and emergency operations of the department, which under his leadership won the praise of the New York Times for dramatic improvements to the City's snow removal operation. Mayor Koch said Prendeville's full energy in the field is especially important considering the large number of major infrastructure projects either underway or planned in the City.

As commissioner, Raymondi will address areas on the office side of the DPW that have changed historically to include an increasing amount of administrative functions. Koch said he views the position much like the state Cabinet-level position of State Transportation Secretary Jeffrey Mullan, who like Raymondi is a lawyer by trade.

He cited the contract management, increasing responsibilities of dealing with state and federal agencies, and ensuring a user-friendly department for residents as key components of the redefined Commissioner's post. Mayor Koch added that the Department does its best work responding to emergencies and other issues that come up, but he said he is looking for the restructured DPW to play a more active role in long-term planning for the City's infrastructure needs.

Koch said there are few people in Quincy with more knowledge of the City, more experience in dealing with constituent-related issues or who have dedicated more of their life's work to the community than Raymondi, whose father was a DPW Superintendent.

"I am humbled and grateful to accept Mayor Koch's appointment, and I am very much looking forward to hitting the ground running," Raymondi said. "Working to maintain and improving our City's infrastructure has always been a important part of my time as a City Councilor, and it is something I am deeply passionate about, a passion that was instilled in me by my father."

The reorganization plan devised by Koch does not create any new positions, and instead expands the duties of the existing Water Department Superintendent to become the Superintendent of Public Works, responsible for all field operations involving the DPW and taken over by Prendeville at his existing salary.

Raymondi has more than 30 years of public service, including six years as the Norfolk County Treasurer and eighty years on the Quincy School Committee.

Water Meter Replacement and Automated Meter Reading System Project

Information for Residents

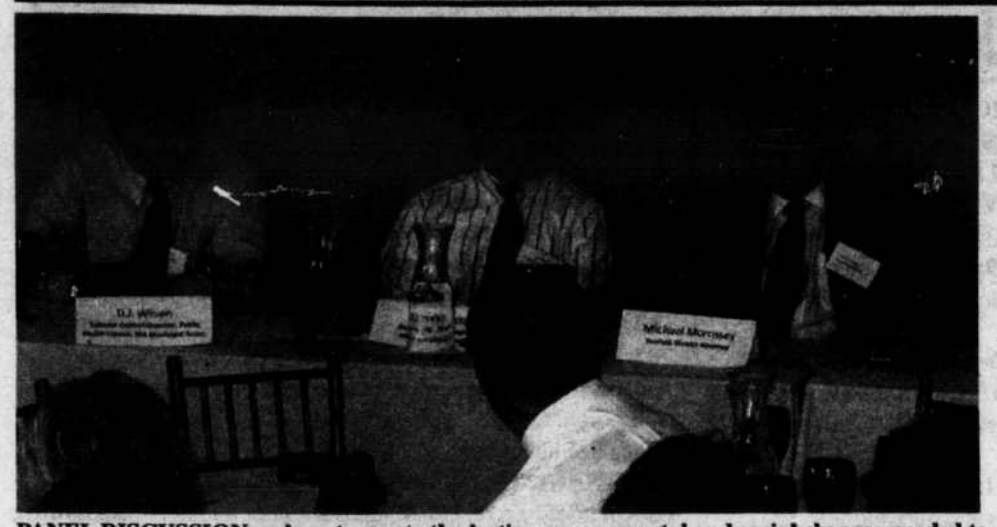

The Quincy Department of Public Works is updating 24,000 water meters throughout the city. The project includes the replacement of both the water meters and external reading system. The completed project will greatly improve the reliability and accuracy of water meter reading operations and will increase the efficiency of the DPW. The city has contracted with Easton Winwater Services, who will be performing the installations. Easton WinWater Services will need access to each water customer's house or business for this work. Please be aware that Easton WinWater Services will contact customers directly via U.S. mail. Residents of Quincy are reminded not to respond to unsolicited phone calls or home visits. All personnel installing water meters are issued identification and will arrive in uniform and in marked vehicles. A link to names and pictures of each installer can be found on the DPW website. If you believe you have been contacted by someone other than Easton Winwater or the city, please call the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

The meter replacement work will begin in September in the North Quincy/Squantum area, and will progress throughout the city by water meter reading route over the course of a two-year period. There is a systematic implementation plan for this project and therefore customers are asked to not contact Easton Winwater Service or Public Works for their meter replacement until they have received a notification letter from Easton Winwater. For a current update on this program please visit the DPW website at http://www.quincyma.gov/Government/PWD/WaterMeterRepacement.cfm

Delahunt, Morrissey Say Drug Abuse Growing

Speakers Issue Red Alert, Wake-Up Call To Communities

By LAURA GRIFFIN

It's time for a red alert on drug abuse, according to speakers at the recent second Opioid Conference organized by Impact Quincy, a community agency sponsored by Bay State Community Services.

Speakers warned that deadly drugs are not only on the street corners, but in the medicine cabinets and the dangers are mounting for the country's youth and the economy which is losing millions daily in health costs, social services and commerce.

"We have a generation that's at risk," said former Congressman William Delahunt, the keynote speaker.

Delahunt called the country's drug problem, not an epidemic, but "a latter day plague that we have to deal with. Illicit drug abuse is actually down. Prescription drug abuse has escalated to the point we have a real crisis."

"One out of five teenagers has abused pain medication," said Delahunt, stating that youngsters believe it's "safe and legal.... Mom and Dad have it in the medicine cabinet."

Delahunt traced the root of today's scourge back to 1995 and the introduction of Oxycontin. He recalled that when he left the office of Norfolk Country District Attorney, "Prescription drug abuse wasn't even on the table...."

Then Oycontin arrived.

"1995 and the world changed," said Delahunt, adding, "Now there's been a quantum change. The magnitude of what is happening is astounding. I was blindsided myself by what occurred since 1995."

QUINCY POLICE Lt. Patrick Glynn drew a strong round of applause when he told the Impact Quincy conference that the Quincy Police Department's use of NARCAN, an overdose prevention substance that can be delivered by laypeople, had already saved 17 lives in the city.

A Job Well Done

On Thursday, June 23, at approximately 11:11 p.m.., Officers Kent Yee and Paul Holland responded to the radio call for a large fight in the Vane Street parking area.

Upon arrival, Officer Yee observed numerous people, but focused on one male who was not wearing a shirt and was bleeding from his face. As the officers waited for an ambulance, they interviewed the male and his cousin, who said that they attended a party and were just leaving the building heading for their car when they were assaulted by a group of 6-7 male subjects who followed them out from the party.

LT. DAN MINTON

The victim described one male in the group as the one who started punching him on the street in front of the house. The victim attempted to flee but was chased by the group. The male suspect then landed a punch that broke the victim's eye glasses and caused a facial laceration. The victim's speech was slurred and he had a strong smell of alcoholic beverage. After being examined by the EMTs', it was determined that the victim sustained two black eyes and possibly a broken nose.

The victim's friend told Officer Holland that the fight started after the victim gave a hug to a female as they were leaving and that the female's boyfriend took offense, then followed them out and struck the victim. He said that the suspects were between 17-20 years of age and he too was punched by the same male. The victim was concerned about his glasses, so the area was checked and they were found damaged beyond repair.

At this time, the victims were asked to wait in the Vane Street parking lot while the officers interviewed the occupants at 44 Vane St. The officers were allowed inside and checked for the suspects to no avail.

Officer Holland located a door to the attic and as he began to open it, he heard foot steps running on top of the roof. After being ordered from the roof, the male suspect was led to the witnesses to determine if he was the male who punched them. The suspect, a 20 year old Braintree resident, was positively identified as the assaulter and arrested for "Wanton and Malicious Damage to Property (eyeglasses) and Assault and Battery."

Nice Work!

Quincy Remembers 'The Forgotten War: Korea'

JOHN 'BUTCH' MAHONEY, a veteran of the Korean War, speaks at the Quincy Veterans Council's 61st anniversary observance of the start of the Korean War. Mahoney chaired the special committee that raised $60,000 for the Quincy Korean War Monument that was erected in 1995 at the intersection of Hancock Street and Merrymount Parkway. The monument is dedicated to the 38 Quincy men who lost their lives serving during the Korean War which began June 25, 1950.

Project: Replacing Roof At Faxon Park Pavilion

Tom MacIssac City's Newest Eagle Scout

By JOE REARDON

All Tom MacIssac had to do was look up and he had his Eagle Scout project.

The 16-year-old Boston College High senior was attending a cookout at Faxon Park a fellow scout was holding and when he looked at the ceiling of the pavilion he was sitting in, MacIssac saw that it was rotted and needed to be renovated.

"I saw it as a possible project," said MacIssac, a member of Boy Scout Troop 42 out of the Christ Church in Quincy. "It was bad. The boards were really rotted. Just by chance I found it.

"I kind of thought it was too much to take on as a project at first but then I knew it could be done."

MacIssac began the process in September of filling out the necessary paperwork needed to start work on stripping and re-shingling the roof, replacing the rotted roof rafters and boards, and putting fascia board around the pavilion.

MacIssac estimated the cost of the project to be in the neighborhood of $2,500. He reached out to the community, friends and local leaders to help him reach his goal. MacIssac picked up donations from City Councillor Dan Raymondi, State Rep. Ron Mariano and Mayor Thomas Koch.

"They were very excited about it," said MacIssac. "I know Mr. Raymondi is very involved with Faxon Park."

Once the funds were accrued MacIssac and several fellow scouts spent a Saturday painting much of the wood that was going to be used on the pavilion. The following Saturday, MacIssac supervised more than 30 workers for eight hours in the renovation of the structure. The scouts who volunteered were able to pick up service hours.

"It looks a lot better now," said MacIssac, who expects to receive his Eagle badge sometime this fall. "It looked different when we were finished."

The pavilion renovation capped the process of accumulating merit badges needed to reach Eagle status. Some of the activities, MacIssac admitted, were more exciting than others. His favorite of the 22 was earning the shotgun-shooting badge. MacIssac clinched the badge two summers ago at a camp in New Hampshire. The intensive instruction included written tests on gun safety as well as the different pieces of a shotgun and their function. The final challenge was passing a marksman test.

"It was a lot of written work, but you got to shoot quite a bit," he said.

Two other merit badge projects entailed keeping journals for three months. MacIssac documented his spending over the course of 90 days, while the personal fitness journal mapped out what MacIssac did to keep fit over the same period of time.

Believe it not, there was a time when MacIssac didn't know if he wanted to continue with scouting. "When I first came in I really didn't know a lot about boy scouts," he said. "I didn't really like it. I kind of wanted to quit. One of the adults in charge really helped me to stay in it."

One of MacIssac's most memorable camping trips was a few years back at Camp Sawyer in the Blue Hills of Milton during the fall. MacIssac's father, Ken, accompanied the troop as a chaperone.

The night was especially cold and the scouts were sleeping on the Adirondack – a platform walled on three sides with one side completely open.

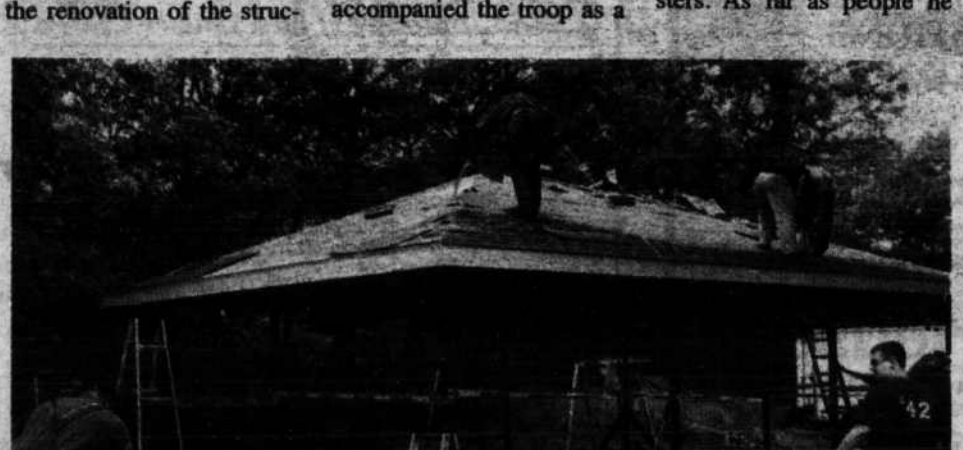

MacIssac awoke early the next morning, shivering uncontrollably. "We had sleeping bags that weren't really gauged for cold weather," he said with a laugh. "We woke up at 5 in the morning absolutely freezing. We ended up leaving early."

And while the Eagle badge is the most prestigious in scouts, most of MacIssac's friends don't understand the significance. "I have a friend who's a boy scout, but most of my friends don't know about it," he said. "To them, it's like another badge."

MacIssac has a nugget of advice to offer any youngster toying with the idea of joining the scouts. "Go for it," he said without a trace of hesitation. "There's nothing to lose. You can learn a lot and you get to do a lot of cool stuff. You learn a lot of skills. The skills you accumulate can help you."

A professed history buff, MacIssac pointed out that 11 of the 12 astronauts who have walked on the moon were boy scouts as youngsters. As far as people he admires, Abraham Lincoln tops MacIssac's list.

"He was so direct," MacIssac said of the beloved president who preserved the union. "Lincoln knew what he had to do and did it. There was no messing around with Lincoln."

Harbor Cruise Raises $9,000 For Interfaith Social Services

Despite recent dismal weather, Interfaith Social Services held a very successful Anchors of Hope Boston Harbor Cruise Fundraiser in partnership with Boston's Best Cruises.

Rain pelted guests June 23rd as they began to arrive at the dock in Quincy, yet miraculously the precipitation stopped as soon as the ship began boarding passengers.

Guests were able to lounge on the ship's three decks and enjoy spectacular views of Boston's skyline. If the scenery wasn't enough passengers could enjoy a game of Bingo, bid on silent auction items, listen to the live steel drum band or snack on delicious hors d'oeuvres and desserts. The heavens stayed dry for the entire cruise right up until passengers disembarked and began to drive home.

While Interfaith Social Services is a nonreligious organization, the extent of the weather's cooperation makes it appear as if divine providence was smiling on this event.

"This is all about helping families and those around us, our neighbors in need, who are suffering," said Interfaith's executive director Rick Doane. As part of the evening's program Doane related stories about a few of Interfaith's clients. He said that the recession has affected thousands of families on the South Shore. Since 2008 Interfaith's food pantry has gone from serving 10,000 people a year to over 16,000 in 2010.

"We are on track for another recording setting year," said Doane "and we sincerely appreciate the community's support in helping to maintain our programs."

INTERFAITH SOCIAL SERVICES' executive director Rick Doane (right), draws a name for the door prize winner. Interfaith's intern Paul Ostrander and staff member Paula Daniels assist with the silent auction.

Interfaith Social Services was founded in Quincy in 1947. Local churches realized that if they pooled some of their resources it would allow them to help many more families and children instead of working alone. One of the first programs created was a counseling program for children.

Sixty years later that program has grown into Interfaith's New Directions Counseling Center, staffed by eight counselors the center now assists hundreds of people, of all ages, each year.

"As the needs of our community have changed Interfaith's programs have grown and changed to help our clients," said Doane. Interfaith houses one of the largest food pantries on the South Shore, they have a homelessness prevention program, career clothing for low income job seekers, a thrift shop, urban gardening program and hospital chaplaincy.

Their service area covers 10 towns on the South Shore from Quincy to Cohasset.

The Anchors of Hope Harbor Cruise is one of various annual fundraisers which help Interfaith sustain their programs. They try to make each event a balance between fun activities and awareness about social concerns in our community. "The music, silent auction, and harbor views created a memorable evening with my friends aboard the Anchors of Hope Cruise" said passenger Mellissa Horr of Quincy. "It was a well organized event by Interfaith Social Services to benefit South Shore families."

For more information about Interfaith's programs, or other fundraising events, visit their website www.interfaithsocialservies.org or call 617-773-6203.

Team's Aim Is To 'Pedal Hard, Laugh Harder;' Fundraising Goal Is $250,000

Quincy Cyclists Riding PMC With Team CHUCKLE

By SEAN BRENNAN

Cancer is no laughing matter but sometimes when things look bleak humor is the best medicine.

According to an October 2010 report by The American Cancer Society from the United States National Cancer Institute's Surveillance Epidemiology and End Results (SEER) database, it was estimated that nearly 12 million (11,714,000) Americans had lived with cancer at any point in time; including people diagnosed with cancer in the past as well as those who were recently diagnosed.

Suffice to say cancer more than likely either affects you or someone you know, directly. With the advancement in research and treatment, especially through institutions like Boston's world-renowned Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, the hope is that this number will continue to decrease.

But a cure will not be an overnight remedy and, therefore, events like the 32nd annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC), the nation's pioneer charity bike-a-thon, which will be held this year on August 6-7, has become a vital source of raising revenue for adult and pediatric treatment and research at Dana-Farber through its Jimmy Fund. Since 1980, the PMC has raised $303 million for the Jimmy Fund making it the most profitable – research and treatment-wise – athletic event in the country.

Quincy residents Ray Waldron and William Prendergast, along with friends Rob Brennan and John Tobin, understand personally the emotional journey that a cancer diagnosis can have on loved ones or close friends. So, instead of sitting back and waiting for a cure, the four have put together a collective PMC team named, ironically, Team CHUCKLE (Comedy Helps Us Cure Kids' Lives), whose aim is to "Pedal hard, laugh harder." The team's goal is to "prove that laughter – and a healthy dose of sweat – really is the best medicine to beat cancer."

Last year Waldron, a Quincy firefighter and a married father of two children whose mother is a breast cancer survivor and whose father in-law died from a brain tumor just ten months after being diagnosed and Brennan, whose sister underwent cancer treatment recently at Dana-Farber, joined with Tobin to start Team CHUCKLE. Waldron, Brennan and Tobin raised $26,000 in 2010.

This year Prendergast, whose father passed away in 2005 after a short battle with cancer, joined the team and the four have since amassed a team of 37 riders – nearly all new to the PMC – with the goal of raising $250,000.

One of their biggest supporters has been the Boston comedy scene.

Team CHUCKLE recently held a night of laughs on June 22 at Nick's Comedy Stop hosted by local comedian Dave Russo and headlined by comedians Jimmy Dunn, Kelly MacFarland, Don Zollo, Graig Murphy, Corey Rodrigues, Tom Dustin, Lamont Price, Jon Fisch and Marty Caproni. Rodrigues, Zollo and Caproni will also be biking the 190-mile PMC route as part of Team CHUCKLE.

The evening brought laughter to the darkening scene that cancer carries with it while at the same time helped collect additional funds for the team's ultimate goal of raising a quarter of a million dollars.

"We had three members last year and now we have 37 members," said Waldron last month, "so (Team CHUCKLE) should be bigger and better this year. Our goal was to really bring in new first-time riders who can each raise thousands of dollars. We want to bring in as much money as we can for the PMC."

The success of June's Night of Comedy, according to Brennan, was the direct result of the charitable nature of Boston's comedians.

"(The show) actually came about through the comedians themselves," Brennan said. "Last year we had a fantastic comedy show. The comedic population in Boston is one of the top markets in the nation with some of the best comedians like Jay Leno and Conan O'Brien coming out of Boston. They are all very charitable.

"The majority of the shows they do are benefits. You name it, comedians are out there doing it, but oftentimes that ends at the event. Don Zollo really took the lead this year and saw (the PMC) as an opportunity to get involved and literally get on the bike and do the ride. Cory Rodrigues is doing (the PMC) in memory of his mother."

Prendergast first participated in the Pan-Mass Challenge in 2005. His involvement was in response to learning of his father's cancer diagnosis. Since then he has remained actively involved and this year, after an earlier encounter with Brennan, he also became part of Team CHUCKLE.

"For me my involvement came after my father got diagnosed with cancer," he said. "When that happened I spoke to someone about the PMC. It was probably two weeks after my Dad was diagnosed that I signed up and that was in 2005. Unfortunately he passed away before that first PMC but it has been such an emotional journey."

"Everyone you meet has an emotional and touching story," Prendergast continued. "I am in this because I had to deal with a bad outcome. Hopefully I never have to see someone else have to deal with that again."

One of the more inspiring aspects for riders of the Pan-Mass Challenge is that teams get paired up through the ride's Pedal Partner Program with pediatric oncology patients of the Jimmy Fund Clinic. These children are receiving the more advanced treatments and state-of-the-art care as a result of funds raised by the PMC.

This year, Team CHUCKLE's 37-person team is riding in support of Pedal Partners Jackie Mullen and Conor Gomes. Mullen, a four-year old from Norfolk, is currently being treated for a brain tumor at Dana-Farber while Gomes, a 17-year old from Bourne, is also currently being treated at the world-renowned cancer institute.

"Jackie is our original Pedal Partner but now we have two," said Waldron. "We are the only team that has two."

Team CHUCKLE will be hosting a second Night of Comedy on Wed., July 20 at Nick's Comedy Stop in Boston. Additional information can be obtained by going to www.TeamCHUCKLE.org.

If you would like to make a financial donation to Team CHUCKLE, or to an individual rider from Quincy, visit ww.pmc.org or call (800) WE-CYCLE. Checks can be made payable to PMC, 77 Fourth Ave, Needham, MA 02494.

John "Okie" O'Connell Memorial Golf Tournament, Fundraiser Friday

The 5th Annual John "Okie" O'Connell Memorial Golf Tournament will take place this Friday (July 8) at Presidents Golf Course with a dinner and "Fun" raiser to follow at the Waterclub in Marina Bay.

All are welcome to attended the "Fun" raiser. A $20 donation is suggested, with all proceeds benefiting the John "Okie" O'Connell Memorial Scholarship, which is given to students graduating from John's alumni, North Quincy High School, and to anti-violence education programs.

The 2011 recipients of the John "Okie" O'Connell Scholarship were Robert Gerard Bennett, Jr., and James Vincent Scribi.

John O'Connell was tragically killed by a single punch while attempting to be a peacemaker and breakup a fight between a friend and another man. His love and compassion for others drive his family and friends to give back to the community, which helped to develop such a tremendous young man.

Quincy's Andrew Holmes Overall Winner With Time of 28:34

Squantum 5 Road Race Drew Top Runners To City

By JOE REARDON

Andrew Holmes inched his way up to second place by the mile mark and for a brief few minutes that was, as close to the lead the 26-year-old Quincy resident believed he'd get in last Thursday night's 11th Annual Squantum 5 Road Race.

Holmes decided then that he'd make a push for the lead to feel out the BAA's Michael Vitelli who was setting the early pace over the roads of Squantum. "I had no idea what he had," Holmes said of the front-running Marshfield Hill's resident. "I picked up the pace and tried not to look back. Finally, at around mile four, I had to look and didn't see him. I kind of knew I had it. I just pushed as hard as I could."

Once Holmes had the lead, he pushed hard to put distance between himself and Vitelli.

With no challenges left, Holmes extended his lead and crossed the finish line in 28 minutes and 34 seconds to capture his first Squantum race after three previous top-five finishes. Vitelli maintained his pace to take second in 29:54 among the 258 finishers. Brendan Kearney of Somerville was third with his 30:53. Kearney captured the masters division with his runner-up finish.

"I'm stoked. I didn't think I was going to win this. I saw BAA and thought he's got this. When I passed him I said let's see if I can hold this. This was great for me. I was psyched. I've run this race four years in a row now," said Holmes.

Humid, breathless conditions kept the top runners in the field from making a serious run at Joe Navas' 2009 mark of 26:09.

For Holmes, who does the bulk of his training on the soft, forgiving trails that lace their way through Blue Hills, the win was a giant step back from a nagging knee injury that interrupted his training for two months. Holmes is comfortable running a conservative 40-miles per week, but intends to slowly increase his mileage to 70 a week.

Holmes, who played soccer at Wachusett High in central Mass, switched over to running indirectly through his coach. "My soccer coach told me to start running to stay in shape," said Holmes, whose personal best at five miles is 26:50. "It's just a really easy transition. You get those elongated muscles from soccer and you bring them to track."

Holmes, dressed in all red in his Hurtin For Certain running club outfit, said his Wednesday night workouts at Xaverian High School with his teammates go a long way in his success on the roads. "That's what gets me in shape for these," Holmes said.

Women's winner Emily Raymond of Cambridge warmed up by jogging the 2-1/2 miles from the North Quincy MBTA stop and proceeded to decimate the field with her 31:32. The Greater Boston Track Club speedster finished more than two minutes ahead of runner-up Jill Strathdee of Weymouth. Strathdee clocked 33:40 and Erin Green of Somerville was just seven seconds back (33:47) to nail down third.

In her only other Squantum 5 Road Race appearance, Raymond walked away as the women's winner in 2004. "I didn't remember the course at all," said Raymond, who ran collegiately at Brigham Young. "There was a nice breeze, but it certainly wasn't cooling me off."

Raymond took over the lead just 800 meters into the race and ran conservatively through the quiet Squantum neighborhoods, bracing herself for the large hill she had heard about before the start.

Raymond handled the hills with relative ease. "I kept looking for the hill," said Raymond. "I expected to turn a corner and see a big hill and it never came. There were a couple of little hills, but I expected bigger."

With two children, Raymond does most of her running in the morning, rising at 5:30 to take to the roads, packing in 45-50 miles a week. Raymond knew she was ready for a strong race when two days before, she ran a track workout with her GBTC teammates that consisted of a 5:38 mile and four, 800-meter repeats in 2:48.

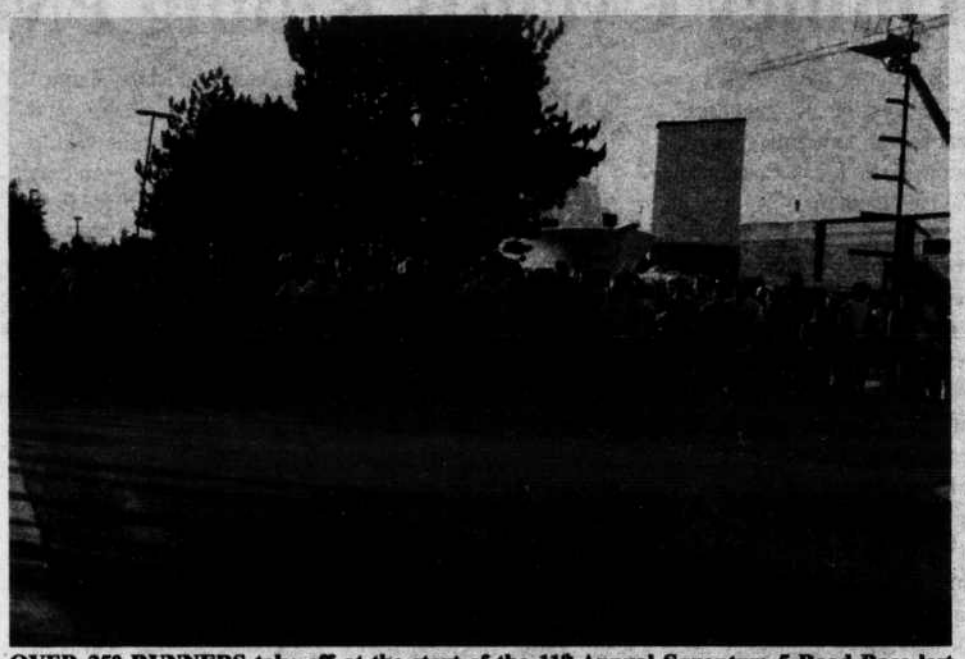

Raymond already has a pair of sub 3:00 marathons under her belt, but is confident she can shave time off the 2:52 she checked in with at the 2007 Hartford Marathon. At Boston, she's run a swift 2:56. "I still have to get it right," Raymond said. "I don't think it will be next year. I'm thinking two more years."

Quincy runners fared well in their respective age groups. Mark Costello (36:59) and Bob Ratuccio (48:02) finished 2-3 in the 60-69 division behind winner Joe McCarthy of Dorchester (36:48). Jeffrey Belovarac was third (31:08) in the open division and Joanne Morris clocked a 42:50 to win the 60-69 division.

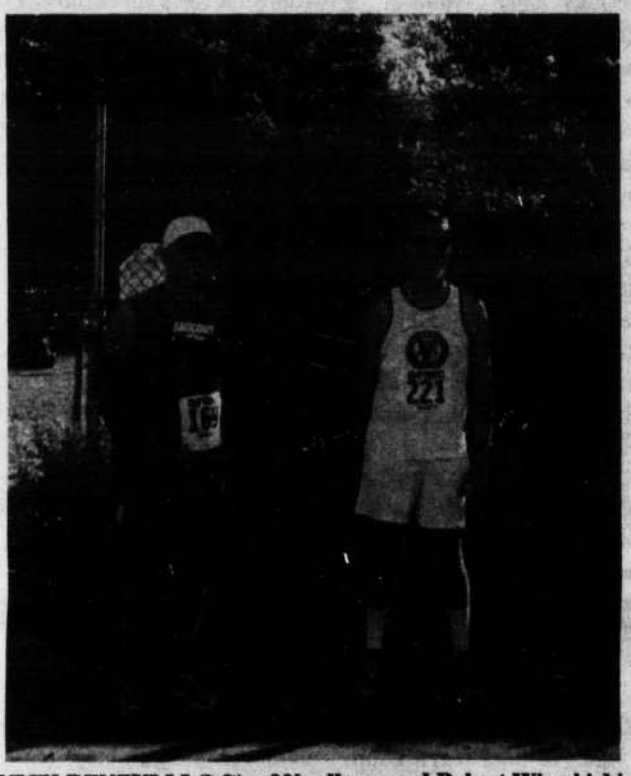

Other winners included Canton's James Pike in the 50-59 with a 35:12 and Marilou Moore of Weymouth with a 37:50 on the women's side. Cambridge's Debra Thomas won the 40-49 division in 36:51. Brookline's Ed Kirby won the 70-and-over category by averaging 8:38 miles to finish in 43:12.

The annual Squantum 5 Road Race is run in support and benefit of the Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge with proceeds going to the Claudia Adams Barr Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and its dedication to innovative research protocols in the fight against cancer.

Participants represent the neighborhood gyms that they attend and come from public, private, and parochial schools. Athletes cannot participate in the tournament if they played on a high school team during the winter. In a post game ceremony Recreation Director Barry J. Welch presented trophies and certificates to the members of both finalist teams.

Welch presented the George Dunn Trophy to Coach Rich McAllister – the Dunn Trophy is engraved with the championship team and the coach of the team and remains on display yearround in the main office of the Quincy Recreation Department.

Local High School Players Among Instructors

AFC Annual Summer Skills Camp July 11

America FC's Annual Summer Soccer Skills Clinic is set to begin on July 11.

This year the camp trainers include four collegiate players, one former national team player, and five of the club's most skilled students with most of the trainers playing in striker or attacking midfielder positions to reinforce the club's emphasis on ball control and possession skills.

"Though we do considerable work on passing and finishing skills in camp, a player does not have a pass or shot if they cannot hang on to the ball long enough to execute these options," said James Abundis, AFC club president. "Every player's option I soccer stems from their ability to buy time and space." Hence, the clinic focuses primarily on improving individual possession skills.

The summer skills clinic like the winter clinic, are out-of-season programs and are primarily player-oriented or skills oriented as opposed to team-oriented. These are training periods when players need to hone their individual skills since they are not playing on teams but are preparing for a fall or spring seasons.

The lead trainer is Conrad Whyte, an ex-national team player for Antigua, AFC's lead skills trainer and an Eastern Nazarene men's team coach. Whyte will train high-school age girls while Shane Regan, a former NQHS standout and current D1 midfielder/striker at Holy Cross will train the boys. Training U14 boys will be Boston College student/player Charles DyBaud with Messiah College student/player Hannah Perez training the girls – Messiah College was a D3 national champion in two of the past three years.

Training U12 boys and girls will be Cedric DyBaud of LaSalle College and QHS senior Victoria Wallace, one of AFC's top scorers this past spring season. AFC players Bjorn Armiri and Olivia Wallace round out the training staff with the U10 training group. Incoming sophomores at QHS, Armiri and Olivia Wallace are two of AFC's most gifted possession players and team playmakers; both are training to play soccer in college.

AFC U15 players Conor Dane and James Struga, incoming sophomores at QHS, join veteran's Sarah Gardner and Tyler Martin in the U8 program, one of AFC's largest training groups.

The clinic is offered in two-week increments of 16 hours or for six-weeks for 48 hours of training. The two-week sessions are interchangeable so players can work around summer vacations.

"Soccer is a sport you can easily learn with five minutes of instruction but it takes years of play and practice to master," said Abundis. "Everything we do at AFC is repetition-based so our students actually learn by doing. We don't want our parents to have to take out a second mortgage so their kids can learn the sport so we keep our prices low. But players need to put in the time to get good at it."

For more information, go to the AFC website at www.americafc.us or email Abundis at afcacademy08@gmail.com.

Openings For Recreation Dept. Dance Clinic

The Quincy Recreation Department announced late last week that limited openings still exist for a one-week long sports Dance Clinic, which will be conducted the week of July 11-15.

The clinic will be held under the direction of Emily Tucker, a local dance professional. The clinic is geared to beginner through intermediate dancers and will be held at Atlantic Middle School on Hollis Avenue.

Emphasis will be on routines and techniques in jazz, ballet and choreography and is open to boys and girls ages 7-14. The time of the clinic is 9 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. daily. The cost is $80, which includes a t-shirt for each participant.

Registration can be done online at www.quincyrec.com or in person at the QRD, One Merrymount Parkway. Registration is done on a first come first serve basis; any questions call 617-376-1394.

Recreation Dept. Summer LEGO Workshops

Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, announced that the Quincy Recreation Department will offer LEGO Workshops during the summer for boys and girls entering Kindergarten through Grade Three.

This workshop will offer children the opportunity to participate with others in the fun-filled, creative world of LEGO activities. With emphasis on fun, children will create and build with the popular LEGO toys in both individual and group projects.

NFPA Report On Home Fires

Cooking Equipment, Smoking Materials Biggest Dangers

U.S. fire departments responded to an estimated annual average of 373,900 home structure fires from 2005-2009 according to new research from the Quincy-based National Fire Protection Association (NFPA).

According to the report, cooking fires remain the leading cause of home structure fires and home fire injuries and smoking materials continue to be the leading cause of home fire deaths.

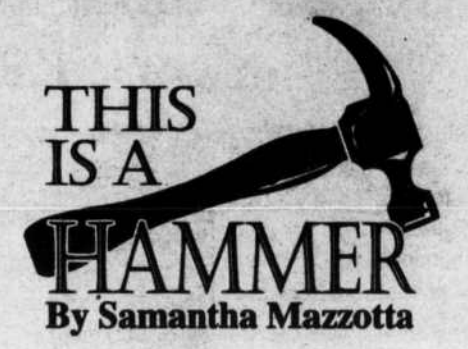

During the five-year period covered by the report, roughly one in every 310 households per year had a reported home fire. Each year, these fires caused an estimated average of 2,650 civilian deaths, 12,890 civilian injuries, and $7.1 billion in direct property damage. On average, seven people died in U.S. home fires every day.

One-quarter of the home fire deaths resulted from fires that originated in the bedroom, 24% from fires in the family room, living room, or den, and 15% from fires starting in the kitchen. Though only 20% of reported fires occurred between the hours of 11:00 pm and 7:00 am, half of the deaths were caused by fires reported during this time.

"These statistics are a sad reminder that fire is still a deadly threat and we must do more to prevent the needless deaths and losses," said Lorraine Carli, NFPA's vice president of communications. "Properly installed and maintained fire protection devices, such as smoke alarms and residential fire sprinklers, can help to prevent most fire deaths."

Almost two-thirds (62%) of home fire deaths resulted from fires in which no smoke alarms were present at all (38%) or smoke alarms were present but did not operate (24%). The report also referenced John Hall's recent report, U.S. Experience with Sprinklers, which found that having wet pipe sprinkler systems in the home reduces chances of dying in a fire by 83%.

The report is based on data from the U.S. Fire Administration's (USFA's) National Fire Incident Reporting System (NFIRS) and the National Fire Protection Association's (NFPA's) annual fire department experience survey.

Patching Carpet

Q: I've got a section of carpet that our cat used as an unofficial litter box more than once in the past couple years. I've cleaned the heck out of it and most of the smell is gone, but the area is stained darker than the rest of the carpet, and our cat still sniffs around it hopefully despite it being soaked in cat repellent. Can I replace it without creating a worse eyesore? – Dan H., Christmas, Fla.

A: If you have some leftover scraps or sections from when the carpet was installed, you can replace that stained section with the exact same type of carpet, which usually creates the best match (as long as the rest of the carpet isn't too old, stained or faded, in which case you may want to consider replacing the entire carpet). If you don't have extra scraps, never fear – take an unstained scrap of the carpet to a carpet specialty store to find the closest match.

You'll also need to replace the padding underneath the section, as cat urine can soak all the way through to the padding (and sometimes the underlayment), thereby preserving the pungent odor for many years and serving as an olfactory signpost for your cat – and any other curious pet.

If the stain is less than 3 inches in diameter, consider getting a carpet patch kit that includes a circular cutter. This will allow you to cut out the stain and then cut a patch that is exactly the same size and shape.

If the stain is bigger, use a box cutter to trim the stained section plus an inch or two beyond the stain. A metal or wood ruler will help you make a straight cut. Cut away the padding in the section as well. Take the padding and carpet section to the carpet store to match both the color and type of carpet, as well as the correct type and thickness of the padding.

Back at home, measure and trim the new padding and carpet to fit the cut-out section as closely as possible. Tack the padding in place with either a bit of carpet glue and/or staples. Double-check the fit of the new patch, then spread carpet glue over the bottom of the patch, as well as a light bead under the edges of the carpet surrounding the hole. Carefully press the carpet patch into place.

Making sure no glue is on your fingers, rough up the carpet pile to hide the edges of the patch. Allow the glue to dry for about half a day, then vacuum.

HOME TIP: Don't have any leftover carpet scraps? Consider "repurposing" a piece of carpet from the back of a closet, underneath the radiator or another hidden spot where there's not much need for carpet.

Conway Young Professionals Network Kicks Off

A group of young Jack Conway Realtors from Quincy to New Bedford recently gathered for an informal networking session at Conway Headquarters in Norwell.

Sales agents, managers and staff in their 20s, 30s and 40s came together as part of the company's new "after hours" Conway Young Professional Network.

"The idea is modeled on an effort going on at the state and national level to support young people in the real estate profession," said Conway Director of Education and Agent Services Christopher Haraden, 40. "The networking sessions are open to everyone, regardless of age, but we are hoping to provide younger Realtors with some specific tips on how to succeed in our business and how to serve the people in their age groups who are buying and selling houses."

The Young Professional Network allowed agents to share ideas and make suggestions to Conway management on support systems they might need.

"The ideas brought up at the meeting centered mostly on the newer Realtors' desire for in-office mentors," said Helen Shiner, 44, manager of Conway's Quincy Office. "They were asking to work with more experienced colleagues who would coach them until they felt comfortable going it alone. A mentor would accompany the new agents on listing appointments, show them how to access and fill out forms, and enable them to see the real estate business in practice instead of just in theory."

HELEN SHINER

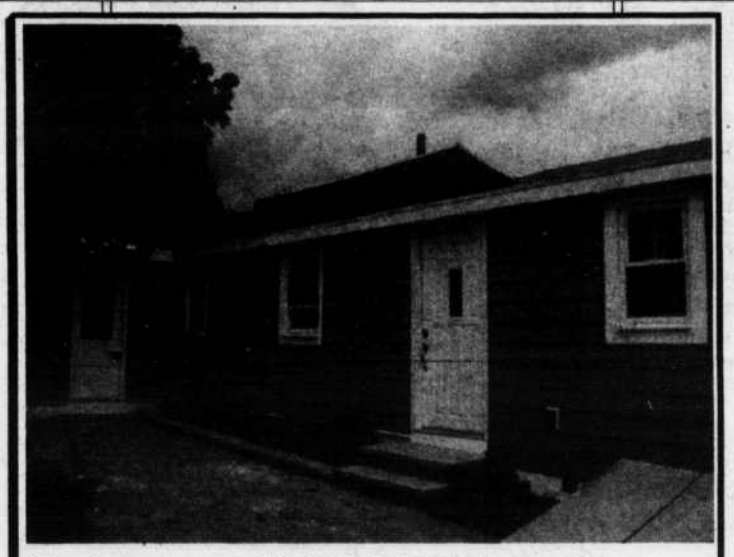

Al Becker, 40, Conway's Director of Marketing, hosted the session along with Haraden, and discussed the many prospecting methods available to new agents to generate buyer and seller leads.

"We had an agenda but the session was primarily social," said Becker. "We networked and just listened to people sharing ideas about issues affecting younger Realtors. Attendees were able to connect with one another in a peer support group and receive the guidance of older, more experienced agents within our company."

Darrin Wahlberg, 38, a new Realtor at Conway-Scituate, attended the first Young Professional Network meeting and plans to go again. "It was a good chance to meet with people my age and younger who represented the broad spectrum of Conway offices," said Wahlberg. "We talked about mentoring, marketing, social media and many other topics. I'm looking forward to the next session."

Conway CEO Carol Bulman was appointed chief executive officer of the 42-office family-owned firm when her father Jack Conway turned 86 in 2009. "My Dad has always had confidence in the talents and abilities of young people," said Bulman. "He started this company when he was only 32 years old, and working mothers made up a large portion of his early sales force. It's exciting to see how many people are entering the real estate profession today as their first career and our Young Professional Network will help them to succeed."

SPOTLIGHT on HEALTH and FITNESS

Quincy Medical Center Hosts First Asian Breast Cancer Project Workshop

Quincy Medical Center recently hosted the first Asian Breast Cancer Project educational workshop at the Medical Center.

Sixteen participants attended the workshop, which was delivered in Cantonese and provided information about early detection and screening for breast cancer.

Following the workshop, Quincy Mayor Thomas P. Koch was on hand to deliver a proclamation declaring June 18 Asian Breast Cancer Awareness day in the City.

The Asian Breast Cancer (ABC) Project was started by Chien-Chi Huang, a Taiwanese-American breast cancer survivor, to provide health education and increase screening of local Asian-American women – something she found lacking during her own experience with cancer. The project is launching its Greater Boston workshop series thanks to recent funding from the Massachusetts affiliate of Susan G. Komen for the Cure ® and the Saffron Circle, a Massachusetts Asian American giving group.

The Asian Breast Cancer Project is funded in part by a matching grant from Asian Americans/Pacific Islanders in Philanthropy.

Quincy Medical Center is a 196-bed acute care community-teaching hospital, providing quality, personalized and comprehensive medical and surgical services to patients throughout the South Shore.

A private, nonprofit hospital, QMC has played a vital role in the community since 1890, serving the needs of its diverse patient population without exception. Quincy Medical Center is uniquely positioned for the health care system of the future, as it is a high value provider with outcomes at or better than most national quality benchmarks and it delivers this care in a cost efficient manner as one of the lowest cost providers in the region.

QMC has a clinical affiliation with Tufts Medical Center.

Leave Kids In Car? Not Even For A Minute!

The week of Independence Day always sees a tragic spike in the number of children injured or killed by being left unattended in or around vehicles.

The Children's Trust Fund (CTF) is reminding parents and the public that children alone in a vehicle during the summer months are at greater risk of heat stroke which can result in death.

On a 70-degree day, even with windows slightly rolled down, the temperature inside a car can exceed 90 degrees in 10 minutes. At that temperature, it does not take long for children to suffer heat-related illnesses, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

"These injuries can be prevented," says CTF Executive Director Suzin Bartley. "Parents and care-givers can take simple steps to anticipate situations that might cause a child be to be left unattended or have access to a vehicle."

CTF recommends that parents follow these tips to prevent children from being alone in vehicles:

• Never leave infants or children in a parked car, even for a quick errand and even if the windows are cracked open.

• To remember that a child is in the car, keep a stuffed animal in the child's safety seat. When the child is buckled in, the stuffed animal should be moved to the front with the driver to remind him or her that the child seat is occupied.

• When leaving a vehicle, check to be sure everyone is out of the car. Do not overlook any children who have fallen asleep in the car.

• Always lock a car, even at home, and remind friends and neighbors to do the same. Always put keys in a safe place, out of the reach of young children.

• Make a plan with your daycare provider to always call if you keep your child at home for the day. If your child does not arrive at daycare as expected, your provider should get in touch immediately to ensure the child is not forgotten in a vehicle.

The public can help protect children from heat-related illness and injuries by reporting a child left unattended in a car to local police or other security officials.

Each year, several dozen young children across the United States die in parked motor vehicles from heat-related causes. At least 15 children have died this way in 2011 so far.

During Independence Day week, the number of children injured by being left unattended in or near a vehicle jumps. This is because families are often busy or distracted by holiday activities, says Anara Guard of Newton-based research group Education Development Center, Inc.

"In situations such as large family gatherings, it's easy for parents to lose track of a child who then may climb into an unlocked car and be unable to get back out," she said. "Families also sometimes overlook a sleeping infant or toddler, with lethal consequences."

CTF conducts a public awareness campaign title "Not Even for A Minute" to remind parents and the public of these dangers and provide helpful safety tips. For more information, visit CTF's online parenting resource OneToughJob.org.

Children's Trust Fund leads statewide efforts to prevent child abuse and neglect by supporting parents and strengthening families. As an umbrella organization, CTF funds, evaluates, and promotes the work of over 100 agencies that serve parents.

ARE SOUTHPAWS MORE PRONE TO INJURY?

As experts in biomechanics, chiropractors are trained to treat stresses and injuries related to abnormal body motions. This expertise may be particularly beneficial to athletes and exercisers who develop problems related to repeated movements associated with their sports. For instance, research shows that, among male college pitchers, the mechanics of left-handed pitching leads to added stress in the humerus (the bone that runs from the shoulder to the elbow). Curiously, their right-handed counterparts of similar weight, age, and throwing speeds exert less stress on their humeri. This stress reaches its peak in the pitching motion when the pitcher has the ball behind him and his arm is extended. Knowledge of this potential problem may help lefty pitchers avert injury.

We will only accept you as a patient if we sincerely believe we can help you. Let us at the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC help you live your life to the fullest. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where we provide professional chiropractic care for the entire family. Periodic spinal examinations to locate and correct vertebral subluxations should be a part of every family's health routine. The body talks to us on many levels about its needs – we can teach you how to listen. Call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment and let us help you. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. The stress that left-handed pitchers endure on the humerus may be so powerful that it can lead to fracture.

Getting a Handle on Heartburn

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: After an endoscopy, the doctor told me I have a hiatal hernia. He said nothing could be done for it and that I will have to live with it the rest of my life. He gave me no medicines or advice. I am anxious about this and would appreciate any info you can give me. – Anon.

ANSWER: The swallowing tube – the esophagus – begins at the throat, travels down the chest and finally ends by attaching to the stomach. To reach the stomach, it must go through an opening in the diaphragm, the muscle that separates the chest from the abdominal cavity. That opening is the hiatus. A hiatal hernia is a bulging of part of the stomach through the hiatus and into the chest cavity. Many times, a hiatal hernia causes no symptoms and needs no treatment.

At other times, a hiatal hernia produces GERD – gastroesophageal reflux – an upward spurting of acid and digestive juices from the stomach into the esophagus. That brings on heartburn, a common problem with many treatments. People without such a hernia also develop GERD.

Here are some tips to handle heartburn. Lose weight, if need be. Don't eat within three hours of going to bed. Elevate the head of your bed using blocks that are 6 to 8 inches tall and placed under the bedposts. This keeps stomach juices in the stomach while you sleep. Sleep on your left side for the same reason. Don't wear constricting garments around the abdomen or too tight a belt. Take antacids as needed – Tums, Rolaids, Mylanta and Maalox. Eliminate any food that gives you heartburn. Usual offenders are citrus fruits, tomatoes, onions, spicy foods, fatty and fried foods, chocolate, carbonated beverages, mints and caffeinated drinks.

If these steps don't solve the heartburn problem, try medicines called acid blockers: Tagamet (cimetidine), Zantac (ranitidine), Pepcid (famotidine) and Axid (nizatidine). In low doses, all of these can be purchased without a prescription.

The next step is medicines that turn off acid production. Prilosec (omeprazole) doesn't require a prescription. The prescription drugs are Prevacid, Nexium, Aciphex, Protonix and Dexilant.

If necessary, surgical procedures can correct hiatal hernias.

The booklet on hiatal hernias explains this common condition in detail. To obtain a copy, write: Dr. Donohue – No. 501W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My barber, Vinnie, said my eyebrows were receding and that is an indication of thyroid problems. I write to see what your take is on this. I would like to establish fact from fiction. – P.D.

ANSWER: Vinnie is somewhat near the truth by saying hair loss is a possible consequence of both an underactive and overactive thyroid gland. However, the loss is usually on the scalp, when and if it does occur. Loss only of eyebrow hair isn't a symptom of thyroid disease. And hair loss from the scalp is not the only sign that things are wrong with the thyroid. Other signs must be present, too.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Have you ever thought about all the things that you planned on doing back in your early years? How many of them have you been able to do? How many times have you waited for "someday?" How many times have you dreamed of the future and what you were going to do when that time came?

Some people spend their entire lives dreaming of the future only to realize in later years that their treasured dream is still very far away. Many of us waste much time wishing instead of doing what we really dream of and want to do . . . always thinking that we can put off for another year or another month . . . And that time never seems to come.

Someone once said that "Anything is possible, if you set your mind to it. . . Remember, this 'ole world of ours' is full of wonderful experiences. So don't keep your dream locked away for 'someday' because that 'someday' is now before you."

"Dreams never hurt anybody if he keeps working right behind the dream to make as much of it come real as he can." . . .

Delahunt cited statistics showing that for the five-year period ending in 2007, 3265 Americans died from drug overdoses and that number is 42 times the number of Americans who died in Iraq and Afghanistan during the same period.

"If those statistics continue, (that's) 50 today, tomorrow, and every day of the year," Delahunt said. "We have to tell that story."

Even more worrisome, many drug related deaths are camouflaged by other reported causes of death. As for the economics, Delahunt said that related costs add up to billions drained from the economy.

Both Delahunt and Norfolk County District Attorney Michael Morrissey, a panelist at the conference, said there are very few people who don't know a relative, a friend or a neighbor whose family has suffered due to the drug abuse of a loved one.

Despite that, they said more education is needed.

Morrissey encouraged his listeners to contact their state representative and senator to support bills aimed at combating drug abuse.

Morrissey said his Norfolk County office registered 45 deaths last year from drug abuse and the number is 70 already this year. He, also, fears the dangers are not filtering out to the community at large.

"So much of this is about education..." said Delahunt who urged the audience members to "talk about this issue so that we can make our family members aware."

While Morrissey said he prefers "prevention and intervention, rather than prosecution," he offers no leniency to those selling drugs.

Morrissey warned drug sellers will be charged and, "We will take your money and we will take your car."

Morrissey's hoping that the drug confiscation program will soon target the seller's house. He stated that Norfolk County confiscated $200,000 of property from one drug raid recently. That money is apportioned among law enforcement agencies, including local police.

However, Morrissey, also, suggested there are roadblock to reaching youngsters and referred to the recent changes in laws regarding marijuana possession.

Morrissey said police officers can deal with a juvenile who has a six-pack of beer as "a minor in possession. The kid with marijuana, nothing."

Delahunt and Morrissey addressed some 125 persons from all over the state at the June 2 conference held at Granite Links Golf Club at Quarry Hills. Many in the audience are already engaged in efforts to combat drug abuse and shared their programs and progress at the conference.

In his opening remarks, Mayor Thomas Koch praised the initiatives that Quincy has undertaken to combat substance abuse and said drug issues were a major priority of his administration.

"I truly believe we're making a difference," said Koch.

During the conference, Alejandro Rivera, Program Director, Impact Quincy, cited Koch and Weymouth's Mayor Sue Kay for their work as well as panel members and many in the audience whose efforts to combat substance abuse are succeeding. Kay attended the conference.

Current efforts include Narcan programs, communities collecting unused prescription drugs, groups' educating and helping families dealing with substance abuse, as well as programs to educate doctors, caregivers and teachers.

Formal programs include the Massachusetts Prescription Monitoring Program (PMP) aimed at tracking drug abusers who doctor-shop or doctors who over-prescribe prescription drugs.

In addition to Morrissey, D.J. Wilson, Tobacco Control Director, Massachusetts Municipal Association and John Gatto, Senior Vice President of Programs, AIDS Action Committee, served on the panel.

Maryanne Frangules, Executive Director, MOAR, (Massachusetts Organization for Addiction Recovery), and Kathy Deady, parent/End Drug Abuse Now (EDAN), presented updates on their programs.

William Spinks, Director of Prevention And Intervention, Bay State Community Services, Inc. and Arthur Keough, Chair, Impact Quincy, introduced the programs and speakers.

Impact Quincy's Rivera and Program Director Arlene Goldstein organized the conference. Impact Quincy develops substance abuse prevention and education programs addressing alcohol, tobacco and other drugs.

Ken Tarabelli is President and CEO, Bay State Community Services.

Francis Orlando Chosen Interim Ward 2 Councillor

By 8-0 Vote At Special Council Meeting

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City councilfors Tuesday voted 8-0 to elect Francis Orlando as interim Ward 2 councillor during a short special session called to fill the seat vacated by Daniel Raymondi. Raymondi resigned July 5 to serve as commissioner of the city's reorganized Department of Public Works.

"He has the right combination of energy and experience. He can hit the ground running," said Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci during his nomination of Orlando.

Palmucci and other councillors referred repeatedly to Orlando's work in the State House as an aide to former Sen. Michael Morrissey. In that position, councillors said he consistently helped local residents and the city.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee described "Mr. Orlando's help with constituent issues" while at the State House and called

Joe Benoit, Julie Kisielius Recertified By Recreation Department's Lifeguard Training Course

Quick Response By Lifeguards Saves 12-Year-Old Boy

By SEAN BRENNAN

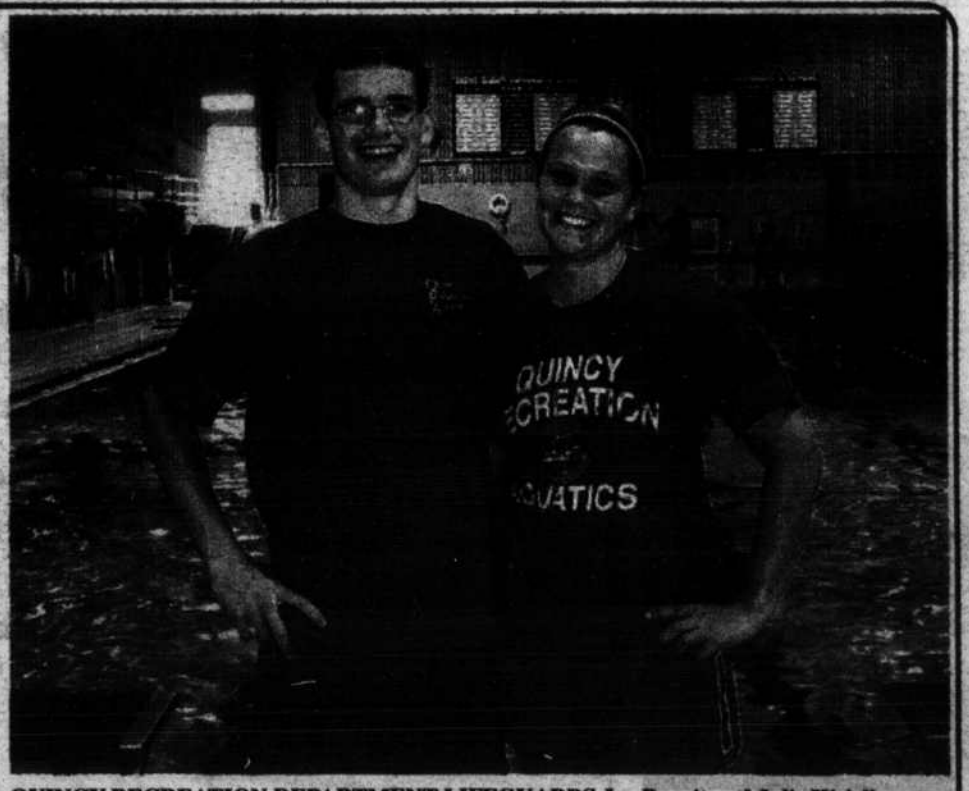

When a 12-year-old Quincy Point resident suddenly became distressed while completing a lap in the Lincoln-Hancock Community Pool on July 1, Quincy Recreation Department lifeguards Joe Benoit and Julie Kisielius reacted instinctively and pulled the boy from the water.

Benoit and Kisielius, five-year veterans of the Recreation Department's Lifeguard program, checked to see if the boy was breathing, he was not. They also checked for a pulse and did not find one. The pair immediately began Cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) with Benoit doing mouth-to-mouth and Kisielius performing chest compressions. By quickly reacting the way they had been taught, the boy, after two cycles of CPR, was able to breath again on his own.

Once Benoit and Kisielius stabilized the boy by laying him on his side with his arm up by his ear the Quincy Fire Department and local EMS arrived on scene and took over, eventually transporting him to an area hospital where he was admitted before being released later that weekend.

"We were swimming laps and when it came down to the end he reached the wall in the shallow end and as soon as he reached the wall, at that point he got a little light-headed, maybe he had held his breath too long, and I guess as we found out later on, I think he may have had a seizure," said Benoit who was one of the lead instructors of the Recreation Department's American Red Cross Lifeguard Training Course, which was held two weeks ago. "He went down and we came running over

Draft Stops, Sprinklers Targets Of Fire Investigation

24-Unit Apartment Building On Falls Blvd. To Be Demolished

By LAURA GRIFFIN

State and city officials said they are examining fire prevention systems at Faxon Park apartments after a weekend fire destroyed one of the seven multi-million dollar buildings in the apartment complex at 500 Falls Blvd.

"They're still conducting their investigations," Jennifer Mieth, spokesperson for the State Fire Marshal's office, said Tuesday of questions regarding the placement of sprinklers in the apartment units.

The Faxon Park fire caused by flames from a charcoal grill on a balcony ravaged the upper floors of the building and left tenants in all 24 units not only homeless, but also permanently stripped of all belongings but the clothes on their backs.

Quincy's Acting Fire Chief Joseph Jackson said Monday that firefighters responded to the first call at 9:46 p.m. Saturday night and continued battling the blaze "til the sun came up." A Boston ladder truck aided local efforts in containing the three-alarm fire.

At the scene Monday morning, Jackson said his officers would investigate protective measures in the complex.

"We're going to have to look at the draft stops in the attics," Acting Chief Joseph Jackson said, adding, "That's what keeps fires contained."

Jackson spoke at the scene Monday while nearly a dozen Quincy firefighters maintained a safety watch at the building hulk and said several flare-ups occurred Sunday afternoon.

Late Tuesday afternoon, Jackson reported that his investigators had, in fact, found problems with the stop gaps in one building and that the investigation in the complex will be completed by the building department

Despite the heat and speed of the fire, only one injury was reported. Firefighter Nicholas Levins was hurt while connecting a water supply through the rocky cliffs behind the building but his injuries were not critical.

"We're expecting him back next week," said Jackson.

According to Mieth, sparks from the illegal grill that "ignited the exterior wall" was the official cause of the fire. Mieth said no charges would be filed against the tenant.

Building Inspector Jay Duca condemned the building Sunday at the scene.

"It's unsafe and danger-

FAMILY PUPPY SAVED – Loyal Goff (left) said firefighters saved his 18-month old mixed breed puppy when fire struck Saturday night while he and his wife were out. The crate saved the dog's life as the units walls had started to cave in, according to Goff who said he lost everything in the fire including the room the couple had prepared for their first baby due in two months. With Goff is his father-in-law Bob Wurster of Oakland NJ who came to Quincy with his wife after learning of the fire. Quincy Sun Photo/Laura Griffin

RESIZING YOUR RINGTO FIT

Nearly all rings can be resized without any discernable sign of alteration. If a ring needs only a quarter or half a step (U.S. sizes) of modification, a machine can stretch or compress a band without stones. Plain gold bands with consistent cross sections lend themselves well to this technique. A machine that utilizes rollers to lengthen rings of varying thickness is also available. When greater changes in size are needed, the shank of the ring may be cut and a section may either be removed or soldered into place. Gemstones may also have to be removed if they cannot withstand the heat or stress of the resizing process. If rings are plated, the finish must be matched.

An experienced jeweler can resize most rings, and the resizing will be undetectable to the naked eye. Step into our store at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center to view our huge selection and to experience the type of service only we can offer. Should you have any questions or concerns please call us at 617-773-3636.

Employees' Health Insurance Contributions Will Increase From 10 Percent To 15 Percent

City Unions Approve 6-Year Health Insurance Agreement Extension

Mayor Thomas Koch and City workers have agreed to a six-year extension of a landmark health care agreement enrolling employees in the state health insurance program that will see workers contribute more for their own health care costs on top of millions of dollars already saved by the original overhaul.

Quincy is the largest City to negotiate voluntarily with its employees to enter what is the called the Group Insurance Commission, the health insurance program for state employees that has saved the City upwards of $35 million in the first three years of participation because of its larger customer pool.

The new agreement, signed by leaders of the City's employee and retiree unions and Mayor Koch, extends the City's enrollment in the GIC for six years, during which time employees will increase the percentage of their health care contribution by 50 percent -- from 10 percent of premium costs to 15 percent of premium costs.

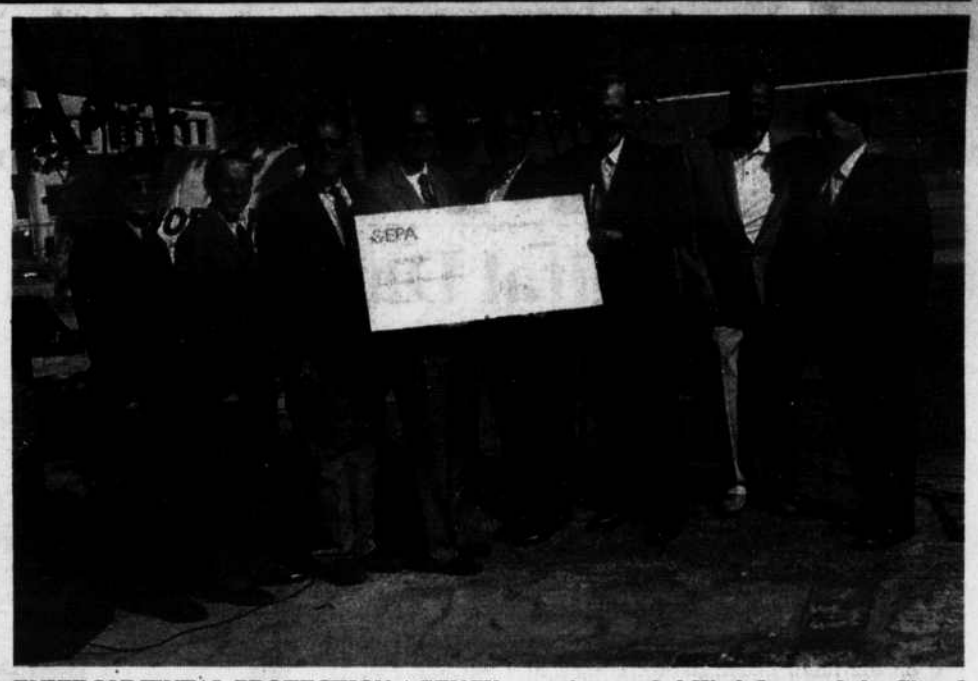

"Health insurance costs for employees has become a lightning rod statewide and nationally, and we are incredibly proud that we have been able to sit at the table with our unions and work cooperatively to achieve dramatic health care savings," said Mayor Koch.

"This extension not only continues the savings that the original agreement created, but includes an incremental increased contribution from our employees. I am grateful to our employees and their leaders for acknowledging the historically challenging times we are facing and working together to achieve a level of cooperation that almost no community in the Commonwealth can match," he added.

Unions agreed to the health care change under a three-year contract, which would have expired at the end of the current fiscal year. In its first year during Fiscal 2010, the program cut $10 million from the City's rising health care budget, and those savings continued based on projected increases to the City's previous health care program for employees.

Governor Deval Patrick authored Legislation in 2007 allowing cities and towns to join the GIC by negotiating with its labor unions. Since

The Digital Database Era Dawns At The Quincy Sun

I have a "love-hate relationship" with technology.

A few weeks ago, my iPhone went into "Marcel Marceau Mode." I couldn't hear anyone in the receiver when I used the phone.

Quite a frustrating experience.

But, thanks to the fine folks at an area Apple store, the phone was replaced and I can answer yes to the question "can you hear me now?"

Now for the "love."

I'm really excited about the recently completed Quincy Sun digitization project. With the help of former Quincy Library Director Ann McLaughlin and Linda Beeler, the head of reference for the city's library system, a new era has dawned at The Sun – as well as at the Crane Library.

Every page of every issue of The Sun – from its birth on Sept. 26, 1968 to Dec. 30, 2009 – has been digitized from microfilm. The project was completed this past spring. Now, the public and library staff can search any name or keyword across every issue of the paper through the end of 2009, and find a digital image of the page where the information was published.

An external hard drive with all the digital (pdf) files is available at the library's reference desk. The drive can be hooked up to any of the library's 35 computers so the public can do their own research.

The library also created a second hard drive that was presented to The Sun. So, now we can research our own back copies from the convenience of a computer.

Personally, this is one of the greatest things since well . . . sliced bread. Before, if we wanted to find a back copy, we'd have to navigate through a sea of towering bundles in our downstairs "news vault." Some missions were successful . . . others fruitless.

By my count, the data base features 2,148 issues of The Quincy Sun. It also includes special supplements that have appeared in The Sun over the years. They include Historic Quincy, the 350th anniversary of Houghs Neck (1986), Father Bill McCarthy's Golden Jubilee tribute (2002) and The Sun's 40th Anniversary Supplement produced in 2008.

It's fair to say the entire database has more than 70,000 pages. It can be searched by any name or keyword. The database is also broken down by decade to help streamline the searching.

Beeler says the database is already being used at the library.

"We get genealogy questions all the time and it's wonderful for obits because some obituaries don't appear in the bigger papers so we always check it for that," Beeler says.

Other popular searches include high school and youth sports, induction ceremonies and advertisements, too.

It's come in handy here, too, searching old stories for information on various subjects.

The database and search function act like a localized "Google." Type in a keyword and presto – there's a list of pdf files (pages) where that keyword appears.

For example, I decided to search my byline – By Robert Bosworth – throughout the database. Within a few seconds, there are hundreds of files representing stories I have written over the years. And, just to be sure, I also keyworded "By Bob Bosworth." That shows up 7 more times.

The possibilities for the public are really endless. They can search for news about births, honor rolls, graduations, political races . . . you name it. If it appeared in the Sun, you can now find the page and issue it appeared on.

Library staff will also assist in searching the database. Call the library at 617-376-1316 or email qureference@gmail.com and someone from the library's reference department can search the database. The library will then email a digital file (pdf) of the page that contains the information someone was looking for.

They can also print out pages on 8 1/2 x 11 sheets of paper. "It's very clear and readable," Beeler says.

Sometime, hopefully in the not-too-distant-future, the public will be able to search the database using their own computer. The organization that did the digitization – LYRASIS Mass Digitalization Collaborative – is also responsible for putting all the images on the internet.

When it does, the database will be on the internet. The website is www.archive.org.

Beeler says she is confident the files will be accessible on the internet at some point in the future.

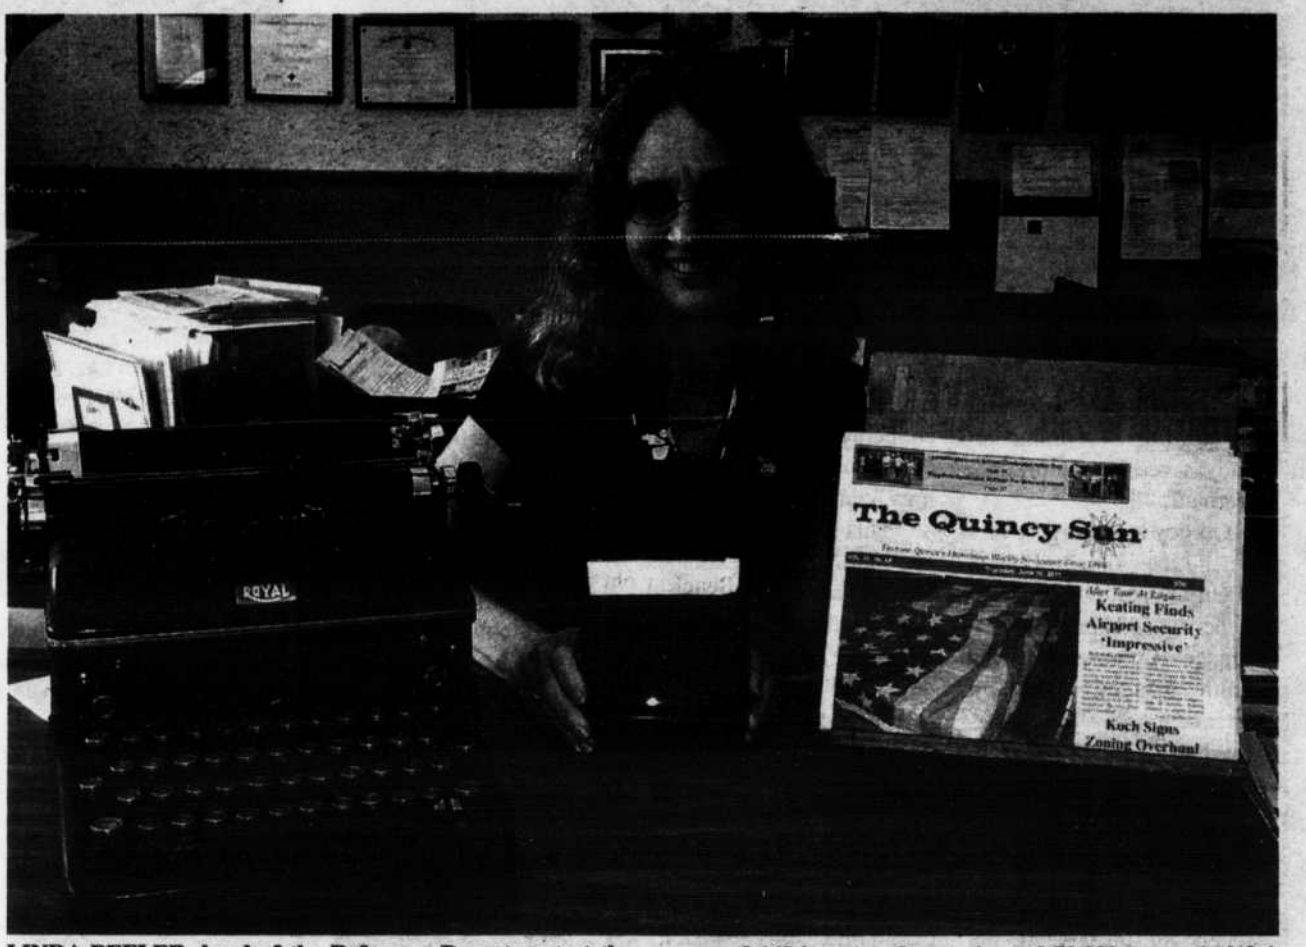

"They are still figuring out the technology to do newspapers," she explains. "They have lots of books and music but newspapers – because they are so many pages to them and to make them searchable and to download the pages quickly because pdf images are sort of big – they're still struggling with it but I have every confidence that they will succeed."

There are also plans to hopefully expand the database to add Quincy Sun issues of future years. For example, the 52-issues produced during 2010 will be added at the conclusion of this year.

No city funds were spent on the project that was funded by $7,000 in grants.

Beeler says she is both pleased and proud of the database project.

"It could not have come out better. It was exactly what I wanted it to be. I'd like to see it on the internet and for people to be able to sit at home and look at it. I think that will happen but in the meantime it's kind of interesting to have people come in and talk to us about the kind of things they want to know."

LINDA BEELER, head of the Reference Department at the Thomas Crane Public Library, holds an external computer hard drive containing digital files of every page of every Quincy Sun from its beginning on Sept. 26, 1968 to Dec. 30, 2009 – some 2,148 issues and an estimated 70,000 pages. At left is Henry Bosworth's manual typewriter that he used as the long-time publisher of The Sun. On the right is newsstand copies of the Sun at its office in Quincy Center.

This project illustrates the advancement of technology. But it's really the people behind the project that deserve true credit.

We acknowledge Linda Beeler who filled out a 50-page application to get a grant for the project. She described the Sun as providing a unique, intimate chronicle of political, economic, religious and social life in the City of Quincy.

"This is true," she says. "The Quincy Sun is a picture of the community at a particular time that isn't available from any other source."

Beeler is quick to acknowledge McLaughlin who supported the project from the get-go and made its finalization a priority before she retired.

"She was instrumental in making sure that this project was done when she left. I thank her because I think I would have gotten discouraged. It took several years to go through all of this. And I think the technology changed as we were doing this. I was glad I waited instead of going with somebody that was going to do it not as well. I think it just worked out very well," Beeler says.

We also want to extend our thanks to Harold Crowley, president of the Friends of the Library; former mayor and local political historian Frank McCauley; and Lisa Tuite, Quincy native and long-time director of the Boston Globe Library, for writing letters in support of the project.

The last person who deserves recognition: my father, Henry Bosworth.

McLaughlin and Beeler made a personal pitch for the project during an office visit here in early February, 2009. Henry quickly got on board and was eager to see this technology come to fruition.

When learning of the digitalization project and realizing the way it could open up access to the local material he presented each week, Henry gestured to the manual Royal typewriter on his desk and said, "We've come a long way!"

Sadly, Henry passed away just a few days later.

But I am positive Henry would have embraced this database.

I can hear him now asking me "can you search for that Sunbeams column on . . ."

Now, with the Quincy Sun database, I can read every one of my father's columns.

Thank you Crane Library, supporters, and Henry.

A new era is here.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS AN early 1920's postcard view of Manet Beach on the south shore of Hough's Neck looking east. The large building that was at Harvey's landing is in the left center and in the distant right center is the Quincy Yacht Club. The pier on pilings extending to the right was the remains of the Steamship wharf that ran out from near the old Mear's Hotel that was just beyond today's public landing. Manet Beach in the foreground is along Edgewater Drive that was originally known as River Road probably because it faced the Fore River. The old granite seawall was an early attempt to protect the summer cottages that are now year-round homes along here. The city has recently allocated money as part of a new bond issue to improve the seawall here to protect this shoreline. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net. Correction: There was a typographical error in the caption describing last week's postcard. The truck featured in the potcard was a GMC Special Service Truck, not a QMC. The Sun regrets the error. From the Collection of City Historian Tom Galvin

Praises Keenan For Mental Health Leadership

Sen. John Keenan deserves praise for his leadership of the Committee on Mental Health and Substance Abuse. He is aggressively advocating for individuals with mental illness and substance use to receive appropriate treatment for their emergent problems in a manner similar to individuals challenged with other medical issues such as coronary artery disease or cancer.

Sen. Keenan has highlighted the statewide problem of certain patients in Emergency Departments who require psychiatric hospitalization spending days or weeks at the Emergency Room. Often this is due to psychiatric facilities rejecting individuals with histories of behavioral problems who are perceived to be difficult to manage.

I testified at the recent public hearing of Sen. Keenan's Committee that South Shore Mental Health works collaboratively with Quincy Medical Center, South Shore Hospital and Milton Hospital conducting evaluations of individuals who present at the emergency departments with a psychiatric emergency. South Shore Mental Health also provides mobile emergency services and walk-in service at its location at 460 Quincy Avenue – the Quincy Mental Health Center.

Individuals in need of psychiatric emergency services can choose to be seen outside of an emergency room by calling (617) 774-6036 or (800) 528-4890 for in-home and community-based evaluations and services.

There has been a 15% increase in evaluations over the past two years which appears to be related to better access to care and the decline in the economy. In contrast to the increase in evaluations the number of people presenting at the emergency room of Quincy Medical Center has decreased by 40% over two years. Paradoxically, the number of hours spent in the emergency room by patients with psychiatric issues has increased by 70%. This startling trend is directly related to psychiatric hospitals refusing to admit certain individuals with histories of criminal or violent behavior. This is a difficult problem to solve as psychiatric facilities can maintain a high occupancy rate without assuming the responsibility for patients they deem difficult to manage and may also lack insurance coverage.

I made the following recommendations at the hearing to address this issue:

Insurance companies should take a more active role in assisting Emergency Service Programs to locate psychiatric beds for difficult to place clients.

General hospitals on South Shore consider developing a psychiatric unit to serve its communities. There are no psychiatric beds for children or adults on the South Shore.

The Arbor Hospital should be allowed to proceed with the opening a 16 bed psychiatric inpatient unit at the Quincy Mental Health Center focusing on individuals who are difficult to place.

Better access to psychiatric inpatient care is not sufficient to effectively address the needs of this population. The role of the inpatient hospital is to stabilize and return the individual to the community. Hospital stays are short term. There needs to be community-based services that provide the continuing care required to enable individuals to live successfully in the community. Such services include counseling, medication management, day services and care management. South Shore Mental Health established in 1926 provides mental health and early intervention services to over 17,000 children and adults from Boston to Cape Cod in the areas of education, treatment and recovery.

Mental health parity will not be achieved until we address the barriers faced by families seeking appropriate care for their loved ones.

$835,000 CONSTRUCTION PLANNED FOR WOLLASTON RECREATIONAL FACILITY

The old Wollaston Golf Club on West Squantum Street is no more.

The Norfolk County Commissioners officially took over operation of the club on Monday, July 7, and it became the Wollaston Recreational Facility.

The present 18-hole golf course will remain in operation until the end of July but on or about Aug. 1 construction will start on a new course and recreational area and a temporary nine-hole course will be used during construction.

The Wollaston Golf Club had moved to Milton and the Wollaston Recreational Facility had taken over on West Squantum Street.

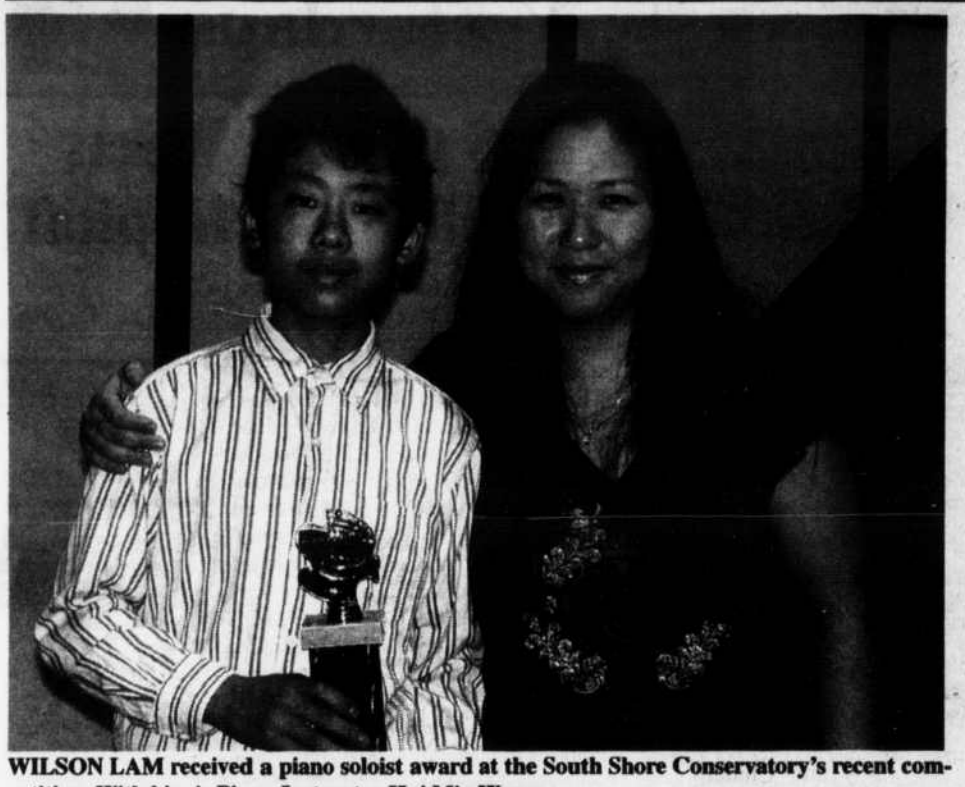

The County Commissioners, Chairman James J. Collins of Milton, George B. McDonald of Quincy and Thomas McManus of Norwood, will be in charge of the new facility and Jim Fitzgerald of Pittsfield will be the superintendent.

The construction is expected to be completed in the spring of 1976 and the facility should be in full operation by the fall according to John J. Sullivan, Jr., executive assistant to the commissioners.

Over 400 Dancers Participate At In Sync Center Of Arts Recital

Hundreds of happy dancers graced the stage at Milton High School recently for the In Sync Center of the Art's 15th annual dance recital.

The theme for the shows was "Let's Go On Vacation!" and the air was full of music about tropical getaways, country adventures and hitting the road.

"We always use a theme for our annual dance recitals," said owner Teri Mangiaratti. "It helps the kids feel more connected to the show as a whole and they get really excited about the story they are helping to tell."

In Sync's "Mini Recitals" are focused on younger students age 3-8 and run with less speed and stress as a typical recital.

Mangiaratti said young dancers get to hit that stage at least three times and because the focus is on them, they are not distracted by large numbers of older dancers.

This year, over 400 young students participated in the five In Sync MiniRecitals.

"Every single dancer hit that stage and performed wonderfully," Mangiaratti said.

The In Sync "Full Recital" is the typical recital experience - about 2 hours long averaging 125 students in each show. It held two this year.

One of the big attractions in the Full Recital is the Finale routine where all 125 dancers perform a final routine together with their dance teachers.

"The kids love to see their teachers hit the stage and have some fun with them," Mangiaratti said.

Dancers from Milton, Weymouth, Quincy and surrounding towns participate in weekly classes at In Sync and performed in the 15th annual recital.

Lifelong friendships have been established over these last 15 years and 14 seniors were bid a farewell at the final recital this year.

"It is wonderfully rare to be able to be a part of these young lives for so many years - some of these dancers I have known since they were preschoolers and now we are seeing them off to college," Mangiaratti said.

Suzie Rogerson, a former graduate of Weymouth High School and In Sync, will be returning to teach full time this fall. After graduation in 2005, Rogerson went on to Jacksonville University as a dance major and continued to teach dance in Florida.

"We are very happy to have Suzie back again," Mangiaratti said. "She is a dynamic dancer with wonderful energy and she is looking forward to coming back to In Sync."

Summer camps are in full swing at In Sync Center of the Arts and fall classes begin Sept. 10.

Quincy Crisis Center's Prayer Breakfast

A Summer Jump Instead Of A Summer Slump

By DONALD SAUTTER

It's one thing when a corporation or organization actually survives in our current recession. It's something else when it thrives, not just survives.

Clearly, that is the case with the Quincy Crisis Center and its parent not-for-profit organization, the Esther Sanger Center for Compassion.

This all become quite evident at the Quincy Lodge of Elks, in the Tirrell Room at a Quincy Crisis Center's Prayer Breakfast for compassion June 28. It was quite an affair, practically a celebration!

The keynote speaker was Kevin Coughlin, president of the City Council. The mayor of Quincy, the honorable Thomas Koch, was also present.

Others attending included Fr. John O'Brien, pastor of Sacred Heart Roman Catholic Church, and Quincy College President Peter Tsaffaras. There were other community leaders and laymen of all walks of life who also attended.

These people came to support the mission and purpose of the Quincy Crisis Center.

David Wooster, executive director of the Esther Sanger Center for Compassion, compassionately articulated this mission to us in these words. "The Quincy Crisis Center exists to help people in times of crisis to survive their present turmoil and return to independent living. QCC conducts a number of programs aimed to help people at risk in Quincy and across the South Shore."

This mission and purpose stems back to its role model visionary, Esther Sanger. She literally distributed her home phone number seeking to serve people in crisis. The "Crisis Hotline" is still Esther's phone number. This hotline provides a compassionate response to people in crisis through free confidential crisis counseling. The counseling gives information and referrals to other agencies that can provide needed help.

Other services provided by the Crisis Center include:

• Food for Families – Food Delivery program.

The Crisis Center delivers "a food pantry on wheels" focusing on the elderly, disabled shut-ins, and others who cannot access other food pantries. With the help and support of our donors and volunteers over the course of 2010 the Quincy Crisis Center was able to provide 12,660 bags of food in 2,532 deliveries to 7,541 people in 838 homes. The amount of food delivered last year equaled 70 tons.

• Help for the Holidays

QCC provides holiday food assistance to over 280 families at both Thanksgiving and Christmas including turkeys with all the fixins' and Christmas gifts for the children. Over 580 deliveries, 11 tons of food at Thanksgiving, 9 tons at Christmas; gifts to over 480 children.

• Faith Covenant Meal – Community Meal Program.

A free, nutritious meal is served every weekday in Quincy Center. Over 21,000 meals are served a year with no sign ups or pre-qualifications involved. The Faith Covenant Meal Program was able to provide 21,704 meals. An average of 100 people were served each day.

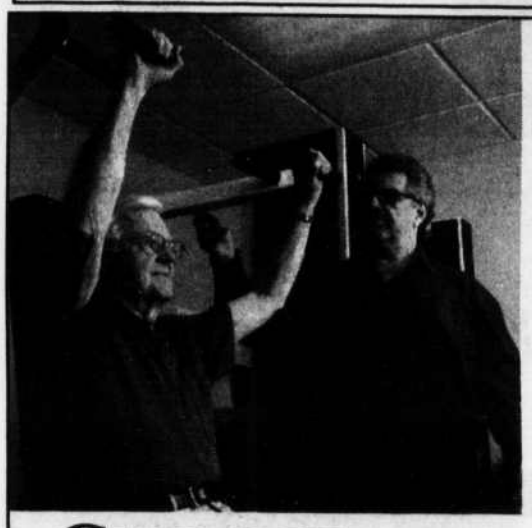

• Mary-Martha Learning Center

A residential educational program for homeless families, primarily women with young children. We provide educational and social services that assist our students in achieving positive, long-term changes in their lives and in gaining financial independence. After 23 years of service to over 800 families, this program is temporarily suspended as we renovate the building and improve funding.

ous. I ordered it torn down Sunday morning," Duca said, adding, "No one is allowed in the building."

On Tuesday, Duca said that he expected to issue a demolition permit later that day and the building would likely be demolished on Wednesday.

Duca's condemnation and demolition order meant tenants like Mark Routhier lost everything they owned.

"They won't let us back in," said Routhier whose furniture, television, clothing, money and jewelry remained in the building.

Routhier went out to eat Saturday night so he had his wallet and was later given $50 for food by the Red Cross. That's all he has now or will get.

"I'll be eating filet mignon," said Routhier, but he meant the opposite.

Another tenant, a native of India, said her parents were visiting and all their documents were lost as were her computers, records, clothes, and jewelry and those of a visiting friend.

The woman passed up personal property insurance on the lease and warned others of the consequences.

"Buy that insurance," she said.

"I think everybody's just happy that everybody got out," said resident Loyal Goff who had gone out to eat with his wife Saturday night but could never return to the apartment where they planned to welcome their first baby in two months.

"We had just set up a baby room," said Goff whose unit was just below the origin of the fire. "It was a pretty intense fire."

For Goff, his major worry was the 18-month old pup they'd left behind. Firefighters rescued the dog but all their clothes, wedding photos and sonograms of the baby they're expecting in two months are gone.

While Jackson said his department will examine the draft stops, an inspector from the state fire marshal's office said Monday that his department will investigate a resident's charge that smoke detectors in the complex do not meet the proper codes.

"I'm going to follow up on this issue," said Dana Haagersen, Fire Protection Engineer with the State Fire Marshal's office.

Haagersen spoke after Faxon Park resident Keith Mayo charged the sprinklers in his apartment were not properly located and were, in some cases, blocked by dried paint. Mayo who lives in another building in the 171-unit complex said he reported those findings to management last week before the fire, and was not satisfied with the response.

"It's out of code," asserted Chris Cunningham, sprinkler engineer and owner of Boston Fire Protection, Inc. Cunningham measured the ceiling sprinkler locations while visiting Mayo's apartment recently.

"They're still conducting their investigation. They're researching it now," Mieth said Tuesday morning, when she confirmed the investigation. "We're taking it very seriously."

On Sunday at the fire scene, many of the displaced tenants were aided by Red Cross services, according to spokesman Steve Napoli who said the metropolitan office opened 24 case files and serviced 21.

"We're assisting 21 families," said Napoli, noting that the Red Cross offers two-nights lodging and $150 to each person in such emergencies, a sum that is fixed across the country.

"We understand that $150 does not go very far (in this area)..." said Napoli, adding that the Red Cross is geared toward immediate needs when a catastrophe occurs. Then their caseworkers try to offer referrals for long-term help.

The 24-unit structure was one of seven buildings housing 171 units in the Faxon Park complex located atop the hills off Quincy Avenue and abutting a Walmart and a 183-unit condominium complex.

According to city records, Faxon Park is owned by SPUSV5 Faxon Park LLC. Efforts to reach representatives of the owner were unsuccessful and a call to the local maintenance number was answered in Houston, TX.

According to the city's assessor records, the entire complex is valued at $21.4 million and each building approximately $3.4 million. Most of the complex was built in 1997. All the buildings are vinyl sided over a wood frame.

Safety Tips For Gas, Charcoal Grills From The NFPA

(Editor's Note: The following safety tips for gas and charcoal grills from The National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) based in Quincy appeared in The Quincy Sun's June 2nd issue. In the aftermath of this past week's fire at The Falls, we're printing it again as a public service message.)

Gas grills constitute a higher risk, having been involved in an annual average of 6,200 home fires in 2004-2008, while charcoal or other solid-fueled grills were involved in an annual average of 1,300 home fires.

NFPA offers the following grilling safety tips:

• Only use propane and charcoal grills outside of the home – never use them indoors.

• Make sure the grill is positioned well away from the home and/or deck railings, and that it is not underneath any eaves or overhanging branches. It should also be far from any lawn games, play areas, or foot traffic.

• Establish a child- and pet-free zone around the grill of at least three feet.

• Use grilling tools that have long handles, which will allow more clearance from the flames.

• Remember to clean fat and grease off the grill and from trays underneath it regularly in order to reduce the risk of it igniting.

• Never leave the grill unattended.

Gas grills:

• Before using the grill for the first time each year, check the gas tank hose for leaks. To do this, apply a light soap and water solution to the hose and turn the tank on. If the hose releases bubbles, this indicates a propane leak.

If you find a leak:

❑ if the leak stops, bring your grill to a professional to be serviced before further use.

❑ if the leak does not stop, call the fire department.

• Only use equipment bearing the label of a recognized testing laboratory. Use the manufacturer's instructions regarding assembly, use, and proper care of the grill.

• If you smell gas while using the grill, get away from the grill immediately and call the fire department.

• Do not store propane tanks indoors in houses or garages. If storing your grill indoors during the winter months, disconnect the cylinder and leave it outside.

Charcoal grills:

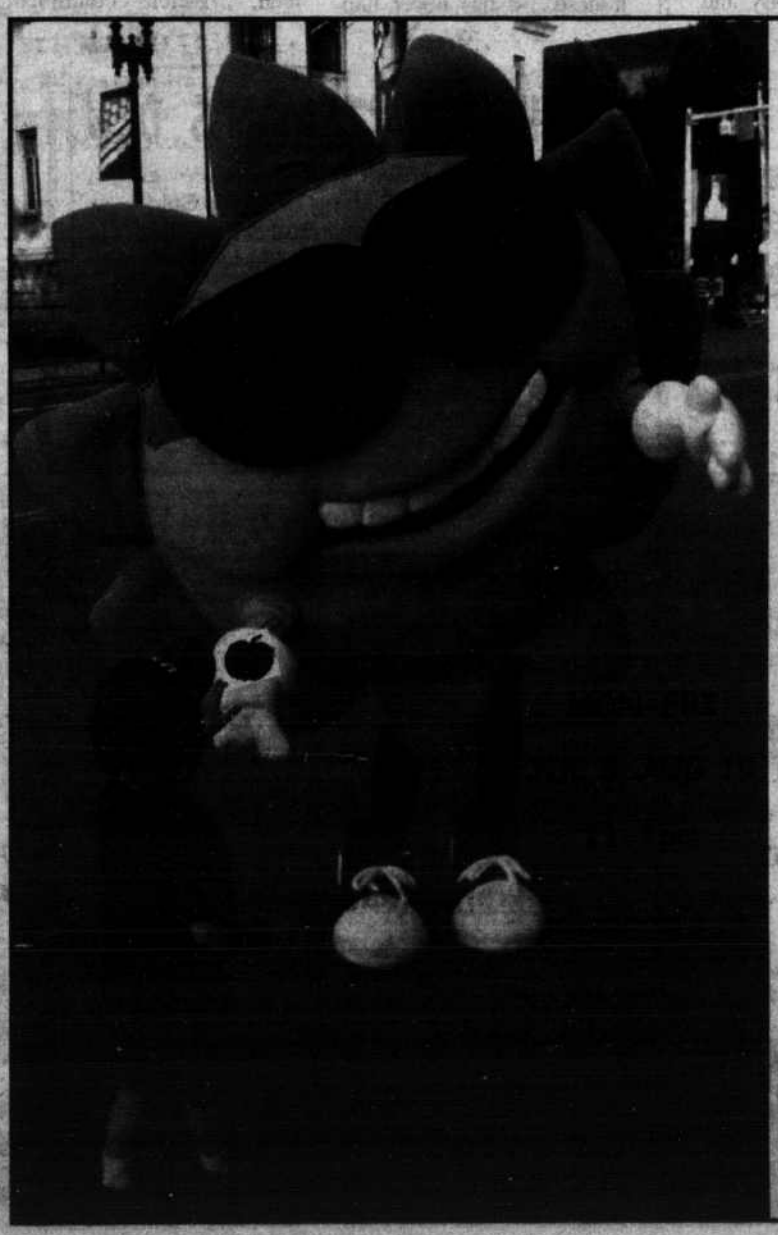

• If using a "charcoal chimney" to light charcoal for grilling, use a long match to avoid burning your fingers while lighting the paper.

• Never add starter fluid to coals or kindling that have already been ignited – and use only charcoal starter fluid.

• Never use gasoline or any other flammable liquid. Keep charcoal fluid away from heat sources and out of reach of children.

• When finished grilling, wait for the coals to cool completely and then dispose of them in a metal container.

and we pulled him out. At that point his lips were a little blue and he had no pulse and he wasn't breathing, so we began CPR."

"I guess after about two cycles he was able to breath again on his own," continued Benoit. "We just remained calm and kept him the way his was until EMS showed up. He was able to squeeze my finger and say my name and his name; we just had to make sure he stayed awake."

Benoit and Kisielius are two of fourteen Recreation Department lifeguards who are working this summer at the Lincoln-Hancock Community Pool. Every lifeguard in the program is required to complete the American Red Cross CPR training course on a yearly basis as well as completing a lifeguard recertification class every two years. The preparations for the summer swim sessions proved invaluable, a fact that was not lost on Kisielius in the aftermath of this averted tragedy.

"I have been a lifeguard for five years with the Recreation Department," she said. "We took the recertification class two weeks ago. When I saw (the other swimmers) lifting him up I immediateiy ran over and right when I saw him it wasn't like 'what do I do,' I just went into a mode."

"I knew it could happen but I was a little shocked when it did happen because, honestly, it has never happened any summer I have been here," continued Kisielius.

Both Benoit and Kisielius were quick to make it known that despite the fact that they were the two lifeguards who jumped into action any of the other twelve guards on staff would have been capable and prepared and would have reacted the same way.

"Me and Julie just happened to be in the right place," stated Benoit, "but had anyone else been there I think everything would have ended in the same positive way. Everyone at the pool is a lifeguard and there are always two separate lifeguards whose job it is to watch the pool. They don't teach, they just watch. We have all eyes on everybody in the pool at all times."

With his staff of fourteen lifeguards teaching around 400 youngsters per swim session, the first runs from June 20-July 19 and the second is held from July 21-August 12, Director of Recreation Barry Welch had nothing but praise for the way Benoit and Kisielius handle this difficult situation.

"I am just delighted that with all of the training and all of the drills that when something happened it went as well as it did," he said. "Everybody knew their job and everyone did their job and the outcome was successful."

"We have a staff of fourteen," Welch continued, "and every person who works at the pool is a lifeguard; everyone from the people in the pool teaching the class to the people in the locker room. They are all American Red Cross lifeguards."

Benoit and Kisielius have total confidence in the lifeguards at the Lincoln-Hancock Community Pool should a situation like this be warranted in the future. However, in this incident, the young boy who required CPR was not a novice swimmer. He is actually considered, according to Benoit, to be a strong swimmer, but things happen sometimes when you are in the water. It is all about preventive lifeguarding.

"This was mainly a 12-to-15-year old class," he said. "They are the best class and he is a strong swimmer. I just think as he reached the wall the lack of oxygen caught up to him. It wasn't a swimming issue."

"It is all about preventive lifeguarding," Benoit continued. "Just making sure that situations that look dangerous you get rid of them as soon as possible so that problems like this don't arise. Quincy has a ton of shoreline, so kids should know how to swim because if they are going to be near water it can be dangerous."

For lifeguards knowing how to perform CPR is a requirement. It can save a life as this situation showed. Benoit and Kisielius now have first-hand experience and they both expressed that if you can you should become certified in CPR because you never know when it may be the difference between life and death.

"Being able to perform CPR is a good thing to know how to do, it can save a life," Kisielius stated emphatically.

City Unions Approve Health Insurance Agreement Extension

then, only 3 cities – Quincy easily the largest – and 15 small towns have been able to negotiate an agreement to enter the GIC. This week, new legislation will make it easier for cities and towns to join the GIC largely because of the difficulties cities have had in coming to negotiated settlements.

"We sat down at the table two years ago and we got it done and we sat down again this year and we got it done. This is how it is supposed to work," said Ernie Arienti, the Quincy Firefighters Local 792 President and Chairman of the Public Employees Committee that negotiated the extension with the Koch administration.

Frank And Kathy Hogan Spearheading Effort

Push On For Kilroy Postage Stamp

By JOE REARDON

The expression had humble enough beginnings, but eventually became an iconic rally cry for the Allies during World War II, catching the attention of Adolph Hitler and Josef Stalin, winding up on the Great Wall of China, and as the album name of the rock band Styx's 1983 release.

And now there's a big push being made to make the expression and caricature "Kilroy Was Here" an official U.S. Postal stamp.

Frank and Kathy Hogan have been working tirelessly the past six years for the expression to get its just due on a stamp. "Let's hope it's soon because there aren't that many veterans left," said Frank. "It's not army. It's not navy. It was shared by every person, every branch, in the military. All the Allies shared in it. It's an icon now. It's amazing; it ties soldiers from World War II together, from the lowest grunt to a four star general. It ties them from the bottom to the top. This is for the veterans. In the war it broke down every barrier.

"Why shouldn't Kilroy have a stamp?"

Frank has received plenty of feedback from veterans who are anxious in seeing the stamp come to fruition some time soon.

"While we're talking here another veteran has died," said Frank. "That to me is why the time is important. Kilroy may have come up with the image, but it was the veterans themselves who created the myth."

The origin of the expression was simple enough and no one could have foreseen the popularity it would take on. During the second World War, James Kilroy of Quincy, an inspector at the Fore River Shipyard, would scrawl the expression "Kilroy Was Here" to show the number of rivets he inspected on the navy ships being built. With no time to paint over the markings before the ships were completed, the phrase provided a huge moral boost for allied troops.

The scrawling of the expression with the caricature of the individual, known as "Chad" and his large nose peeking over the top, somehow found its way into Adolph Hitler's bunker during World War II. Convinced that Kilroy was a spy against Germany, Hitler and Stalin alike, ordered their troops to hunt down the mystery person. Stalin used a VIP bathroom during the Potsdam Conference and saw "Kilroy Was Here" painted on the wall. "He came out and asked his aid 'Who's Kilroy?'" said Frank with a laugh.

Hitler was obsessed over capturing the "spy" Kilroy. "Adolf Hitler was absolutely and completely paranoid regarding one insurgent in particular," according to the website kilroywashere.org. "This individual seemed able to get into everything and anything that was thought to be secure in Nazi Germany. Hitler ordered his best men to begin actively searching for this super-spy and all troops were commanded to shoot and kill this menace."

When the Berlin Wall was knocked down in 1989, the expression could be seen on the wall amongst other graffiti. Today, it is on the World War II Memorial in Washington and the Kilroy postcard is the most popular item sold at the memorial's gift shop.

The Hogans are trying to get Congressman Stephen Lynch behind the push for the stamp. Lynch represents the post office in Congress as a member of the Postal Service Committee. Former Cong. William Delahunt, State Rep. Tackey Chan and Mayor Thomas Koch are behind the stamp efforts and all three have contacted Lynch's office in Washington D.C.

Kathy believes the caricature and story behind the expression could play a part in getting kids interested in American History. "It's very important for kids to know about this," she said. "It's a funny thing to look at. It gets your attention and you smile when you look at it. It arouses some curiosity. When kids learn that this is about World War II. I think it's a great way to get them interested in learning."

U.S.M.C. Captain Martin Starta has seen Kilroy pop up in Iraq. "I found Kilroy," Starta said. "He is alive and well and apparently in Iraq. I found him on the side of an old Iraqi aircraft hangar in Al Taqaddum Airbase in Iraq. Al Taqaddum is situated about seven miles from Fallujah and 35 miles west of Baghdad. He's been there ever since we showed up. No one knows how he got there either. They all say they always remember Kilroy being on the side of the hangar."

'KILROY WAS HERE' sign continues to be seen in various places, including this one on the windshield of a coach bus parked outside the old Quincy High School during the filming of the movie "Here Comes the Boom." Kathy Hogan (above) and her husband, Frank, are leading an effort to have the famed Kilroy featured on a U.S. postage stamp.

Francis Orlando Interim Ward 2 Councillor

him "results-oriented."

"He does have a background of constituent service," said Councillor John Keenan who seconded the nomination and Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said, "We'd call the office (Morrissey's) and he would always respond."

At 25, Orlando, a resident of 100 Alton Rd., is the third youngest councillor to serve the city, according to City Clerk Joseph Shea. He worked five years as an aide to then Senator Morrissey and is currently employed by State Treasurer Steven Grossman.

In his letter to the council, Orlando cited his lifelong residency in Ward 2 and his education in the Quincy public school system and wrote that "...this neighborhood has provided me the essential tools and skills needed to succeed in our (innovative) economy."

In his address to the council Tuesday, Orlando called the position "an opportunity to give back to the community that has given so much to me."

Orlando was one of three candidates for the open position.

Also in the running were Richard Churchill of Forum Road and Stephen Kozlowski of Berkeley Street. Kozlowski is one of four declared candidates for Ward 2 councillor this fall.

Before and after the council session began, City Council President Kevin Coughlin sought to exclude candidates for the position and asked each of the three to state whether they were on the November ballot.

In his letter, Kozlowski outlined his service to the residents of Ward 2 his efforts to speak out about the issues that affect those residents.

The third candidate, Churchill, served as a Quincy police officer for 25 years and as a Marine for 20 years. Those years included two tours in Vietnam and he was activated for Operation Desert Storm.

"I would be extremely honored to continue this public service as the acting Ward councillor for Ward 2," said Churchill.

"All three love Ward 2," said Palmucci who commended all three candidates.

At the opening of the meeting, City Solicitor James Timmins outlined the requirements of the city charter which gives the council the right to choose an interim councillor, but requires their meeting be held within 15 days of a resignation.

After the meeting, Orlando said he is eager to work and hear from constituents and can be reached at Francis.Orlando@GMail.com or 617-872-5415.

Coughlin, Gutro Seek Wollaston T Station Update

Ward 3 City Councillor and Council President Kevin Coughlin and Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro, who represent the neighborhoods surrounding the Wollaston T station, continue to seek updates on a study commissioned by the MBTA's Board of Directors on May 6, 2010 concerning upgrades to the Wollaston MBTA station.

The councillors had advanced a City Council Resolution on May 3, 2010 calling upon the MBTA to move forward on a plan to make needed and required improvements at the Wollaston T station which fails to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). The T Board authorized spending $3.3 million to design handicapped-accessibility upgrades for three train stations, including the Red Line station in Wollaston. According to the two councillors the decision was long overdue, as they had joined senior citizens and disabled Wollaston residents, as well as families with children in carriages who have been petitioning for the upgrade for years.

The design engineering contract which was approved by the MBTA board last year was awarded to SEA Consultants of Cambridge and called for the company to evaluate the possible addition of elevators and modifications to platform stairs, walls, benches, doors, restrooms and signs and various other changes that would bring the Wollaston station into compliance with the Americans With Disabilities Act. The project also would provide an accessible path to the existing elevators and station platform and address a flooding problem in the station's lobby. The cost of the study is being underwritten by a Federal Transit Administration grant and from the MBTA's revenue bond fund, which is used to pay for most of the authority's capital improvement projects.

"Just a few months ago," Coughlin said, "I waged an ultimately successful legal battle to get the Mass. Department of Transportation to install handicap accessible ramps on the West Squantum Street/Newport Avenue overpass near the North Quincy T station. It was work that should have been incorporated in the recent rehabilitation work that had been done there, work that seemed to be avoided despite ADA and case law requirements that I pointed out. At the Wollaston T station, although I am pleased that the MBTA Board took the first steps last year to fund the study which I first sought back in November of 2005, the residents we represent have been deprived far too long and I join them, Doug Gutro and my other elected colleagues in hastening the completion of the design phase and getting the actual improvements done as soon as practicable. I have already scheduled to have this matter back before the council and expect to keep it on the council docket until we have tangible results."

A recent report obtained by Councillors Coughlin and Gutro dated July 2011, notes a partial Notice To Proceed was issued June 27, 2011 and the design engineering services are proceeding. These will include architectural concepts and site drainage recommendations that can manage a 100 year storm event to prevent station flooding, which both councillors have stressed is a necessary precursor to the improvements to be constructed.

Gutro said the MBTA Board deserves credit for "moving this project forward with its vote in 2010, but we need to continue our advocacy until these long awaited improvements come to fruition."

Gutro added: "Not a week goes by when I don't hear from a resident or business leader who inquires about the status of these important upgrades at the Wollaston MBTA station. I look forward to continuing to work with Council President Coughlin and our state legislative delegation to keep this project on the front burner."

Jay Davis Candidate For School Committee

Former City Council President and Ward Four City Councillor Jay Davis announces he is a candidate for the Quincy School Committee.

JAY DAVIS

Davis, a West Quincy resident and a father of two Quincy Public School students, will be running for one of the three seats in this fall's election.

"This year we will be losing a great deal of leadership on the school committee as School Committeewomen Jo-Ann Bragg and Elaine Dwyer have decided not to seek re-election. They have worked tirelessly to improve and maintain the quality of our schools, and I believe I can help fill the void," Davis said.

"Quality public schools make economic sense. Not only do they attract home buyers to our city, but they also allow residents to save tens of thousands of dollars in not having to send their children to private schools in order for them to get a great education."

As a City Councilor, Davis said he was a strong advocate for the Quincy Schools.

"As a public school graduate, a father of public school children, a school volunteer, the brother of three public school teachers (none of whom are employed in Quincy) and a businessman who hires public school students, I was able to draw upon those experiences to advocate for our schools as a councilman," Davis said.

As a member of the School Committee, Davis said he would work with others to keep classroom size low, advocate for increased parent participation to boost student academic performance, support the growth of extracurricular activities, and promote community service learning.

"I believe my experience as a city councillor advocating for the new Quincy High School will be extremely beneficial as the city plans for and builds the new Central Middle School and addresses the ongoing concerns with Sterling Middle School. As our schools age, we must work together on a short-tem and long-term basis to address the physical needs of our neighborhood schools in a fiscally responsible way." Davis said.

In 2006, as the Ward 4 councillor, Davis led a group of educators, police personnel and community activist to start the West Quincy Teen Program. The program emphasized sports and community service as positive activities for area teens looking for things to do during the summer.

Davis has also served as a member of the Quincy Public Schools Business Partnership for more than eight years. The partnership promotes collaborations between Quincy businesses and schools. Through his law firm, Davis has employed several interns from Quincy High School.

"As a businessman I have been able to see first-hand the quality education our interns possess. They come into our office ready to hit the ground running and quickly become essential parts to our team," Davis said.

Davis said believes his longtime involvement with schools, youth support and community groups has provided him with invaluable insight about our schools. "Nothing beats talking to a parent on a field, a teacher in a classroom or a student in a hallway to learn first-hand about the important issues." Davis has been an active volunteer and supporter of a number of schools and community agencies including Lincoln Hancock Community School, Sterling Middle School, Central Middle School, Montclair Elementary School, Beechwood Knoll Elementary School, North Quincy High School and Quincy High School, Neighborhood Housing Services of the South Shore, the South Shore YMCA, Quincy Youth Soccer, Quincy Girls Softball, St. Mary's Basketball, the Southwest Community Center, St. Mary's/West Quincy Girls Basketball, Girl Scouts, Quincy Youth Baseball, Quincy Youth Soccer, Big Brother of Greater Boston, DOVE, American Legion Boy's State program and the Volunteer Lawyers Project.

A graduate of Syracuse University and Suffolk University Law School, Davis and his wife, Honor, live with their three daughters, Madison, age 13, and Meghan, age 10, and Emma, age nine months, on Shawmut Street in West Quincy.

"As a resident of this city, I will always care about and be committed to the quality of our public schools. As a parent of two public school students and the parent of a nine-month old child, I am in this for the long haul," Davis said. "When all is said and done, my three children will have spent a total of 39 years in the classrooms of our public schools. I want to do all I can to insure it remains the positive and rewarding experience it has been thus far."

Davis has been practicing law in Quincy for more than 15 years and is currently the managing partner in the law firm of Graeber, Davis and Cantwell. Prior to attending law school he was the executive director of the Thomas Jefferson Forum an organization that worked to develop community service programs for high schools students across Massachusetts including those in North Quincy and Quincy High Schools.

Davis will kick-off his campaign Wednesday, July 27, from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Four's Restaurant in Quincy Center. Tickets are $25 per family. For more information on the reception or his campaign, call 617-548-1902 or email jdavis@gdc-law.com.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On July 18, AD 64, the great fire of Rome breaks out and destroys much of the city. Despite the well-known stories, there is no evidence that Roman emperor Nero either started the fire or played the fiddle while it burned. The fiddle did not even exist at the time. Nero was actually 35 miles away in Antium when the fire broke out.

• On July 21, AD 365, a powerful earthquake off the coast of Greece causes a tsunami that devastates the city of Alexandria, Egypt. It was not until 1995 that archaeologists discovered the ruins of the old city off the coast of present-day Alexandria.

• On July 19, 1879, Doc Holliday commits his first murder, killing a man for shooting up his New Mexico saloon. Despite his formidable reputation as a deadly gunslinger, Doc Holliday only engaged in eight shootouts during his life, and it has only been verified that he killed two men.

• On July 24, 1901, William Sydney Porter, otherwise known as O. Henry, is released from prison after serving three years in jail for embezzlement from a bank in Austin, Texas. He began writing stories to support his young daughter while he was in prison.

• On July 22, 1923, John Herbert Dillinger joins the Navy in order to avoid charges of auto theft in Indiana, marking the beginning of America's most notorious criminal's downfall. Years later, Dillinger's reputation was forged in a single 12-month period, during which he robbed more banks than Jesse James did in 15 years.

• On July 20, 1972, a National Highway Traffic Administration study concludes that 1960-63 Chevrolet Corvair models are safe, contradicting charges made by consumer advocate Ralph Nader. In his 1965 book "Unsafe at Any Speed," Nader had dedicated an entire chapter to the rear-engine car.

• On July 23, 1982, Vic Morrow and two child actors are killed in an accident involving a helicopter during filming on the California set of "Twilight Zone: The Movie." Special-effects explosions caused the pilot of the low-flying craft to lose control and crash into the three victims.

Quincy Chamber, City Officials Promote The Downtown

At Biotechnology Industry Organization Conference

As the city prepares to add over one million square feet of office space within the new Quincy Center, the Quincy Chamber of Commerce, Department of Planning & Development, and Street-Works Development partnered together to promote this new construction at the 2011 BIO International Conference that was recently held in Washington, DC.

Attracting approximately 20,000 visitors annually, the conference is the largest global gathering of Biotech and Life Science companies. The new downtown was promoted as a BIOReady site within the Massachusetts Pavilion in collaboration with representatives of the Massachusetts Biotechnology Council (MassBIO), the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center and the Mass Alliance for Economic Development – leading organizations that facilitate the growth of this industry in the Commonwealth.

In 2010 the City of Quincy was given a Platinum rating by MassBIO, the highest rating for a community seeking to attract and support biotechnology companies. The Platinum rating means the community has features in place such as commercial sites designated for biotech uses, streamlined permitting, and abundant sewer and water capabilities. The new development planned for Quincy Center meets and exceeds these criteria, and has over one million square feet available as of by-right zoning for laboratory research and biomanufacturing. "Attracting biotech companies to the city of Quincy will provide quality jobs for our residents and strengthen our commercial tax base," explained Mayor Thomas P. Koch. "We know how great Quincy is, and promoting Quincy at this conference is one example of how we are going to make sure national and international markets are aware of the amenities we have to offer as well."

Dean Rizzo, president of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce, and Nick Verenis, Economic Development planner for the city of Quincy, attended the conference. Over 35 countries and 28 states were prominently showcased to promote their communities to conference attendees.

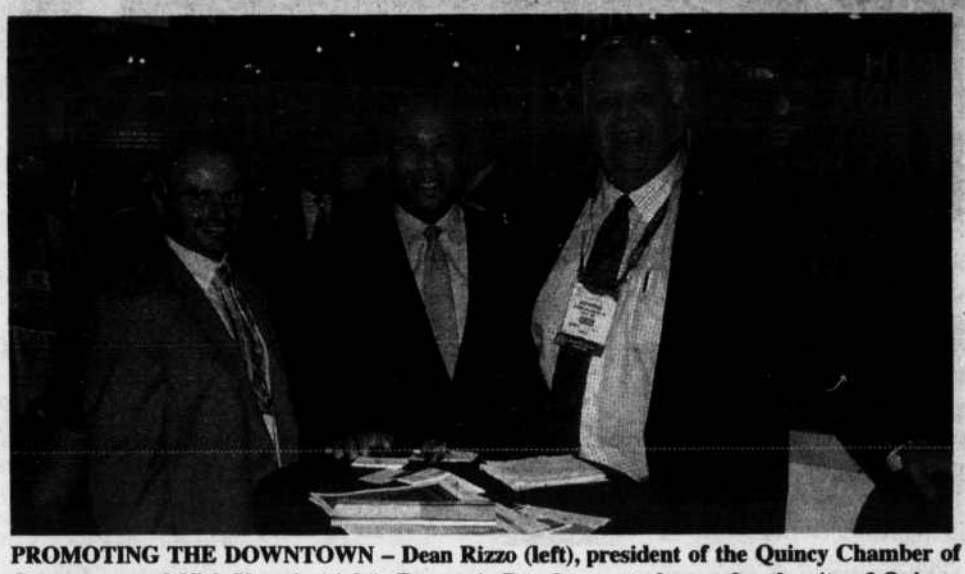

"We were able to promote and talk about the many great opportunities we have in Quincy to companies looking to locate in the Commonwealth," Verenis said. "Quincy's close proximity and convenient access to Boston and Cambridge, highway access, water transportation to Logan Airport, and the MBTA red line make Quincy a very attractive and viable location."

In 2012, the BIO International Conference will be held in the city of Boston, bringing thousands of industry leaders to our region. "Not only did we talk with many companies, but we were able to make strong connections with many agency representatives in Massachusetts that help to facilitate the growth of the biotech industry in the Commonwealth," noted Rizzo. "It was very important to have Quincy recognized as a partner in the Commonwealth's effort to support this important industry sector of the economy as state leaders make plans for the conference to come to Boston next year."

"Attending this conference is an example of the Chamber's ongoing efforts to attract quality businesses to Quincy," noted Quincy Chamber Chairman Ed Keohane from Keohane Funeral Homes. "Partnering with the city and Street-Works to market Quincy is a great example of the benefits working jointly can bring as we wave our flag noting that Quincy is open for business."

In addition to the over 1.1 million square feet of commercial office space available, the downtown development project includes 600,000 square feet of new retail and service space, an entertainment center, medical center and wellness facility, higher education component, and over 1,100 residential units. "The new Quincy Center is designed to be a first class urban environment where one can work, live and recreate without getting into a car," noted Richard Heapes, principal from Street-Works. "Companies are looking to reduce their costs through attractive lease rates, access to national and international markets through convenient transportation networks and quality infrastructure, as well as attract a quality workforce through easy commuting and providing them a variety of recreational amenities," Heapes further noted.

Community leaders are bullish on the notion that there is no better place to meet all of these needs than the new Quincy Center. Based on the high level of interest at the BIO International Conference it appears the private sector is beginning to take notice.

City Planner Chairs National Committee Meeting

Principal Planner Sean Glennon from the city's Department of Planning and Community Development attended the Annual Meeting of the National Community Development Association (NCDA), held in Cincinnati last month.

Glennon is a member of the Board of Directors of NCDA, and serves as co-Chair of the organization's national Technology Committee. He is also vice-chair of NCDA's entire New England Region.

Sessions at the conference included topics such as affordable housing preservation, upcoming changes to block grant programs, and updates on consolidated planning enhancements, which will streamline community development planning efforts in municipalities across the country.

The highlight of the conference was a plenary session entitled, "The Importance of Public Service," with guest speaker Emily Nottingham, a former member of NCDA, and the mother of Gabe Zimmerman, the former community outreach director for Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords.

Zimmerman, along with six others, was shot and killed during the infamous "Congresswoman on the Corner" event on Jan. 8 in Tucson, Arizona. Nottingham, in her very impassioned speech, gave homage to those entrenched in the world of pubic service, and illustrated the importance of cultivating a new generation of leaders who are dedicated to serving their communities.

At Appreciation Lunch At Siros Marina Bay

Local Veterans Thanked For Participating In Saving The Reality Documentary, Tours

An appreciation lunch was recently held at Siros Marina Bay, Quincy, to thank veterans who gave their time to share personal stories of war for the "Saving the Reality" Tour and documentary.

Jon D'Allessandro of Hingham, a volunteer and benefactor of the Museum of World War II in Museum, hosted the lunch.

Veterans Israel Arbeiter, Emanual Abrams, Morley Piper, Richard Dinning, Samuel Bernstein, Eugene Hadge, Harlan Jeffery and several others have been donating their time to the Museum.

Israel Arbeiter is an Auschwitz survivor. He is the president of the Holocaust Society in Massachusetts and works to keep the story alive. Arbeiter has made several trips to Germany to share his memories and speak with the children.

Emanual Abrams was a B-24 navigator with the 8th Air Force who flew 30 missions in Europe.

Morley Piper was with the 29th Infantry Division, 115th Regiment. On D-Day he landed on Omaha Beach, seven minutes into the wave and a half. Piper survived countless battles with only 4 weeks hiatus from the war for being wounded.

Richard Dinning was a Captain, B-17 pilot with the 8th Air Force. He flew 33 missions over Europe.

Samuel Bernstein was a Marine in the 5th Marine Infantry Division who landed with the sixth wave on the beach of Iwo Jima. He was in the last Banzai charge which was the final battle for Iwo Jima. He describes his time there as "36 days of hell."

Eugene Hadge was a navigator in the Pacific theater. He flew various reconnaissance missions over Japan. Harlan Jeffery of Hingham is a Randolph native. The former Marine fought on Iwo Jima and was awarded two Purple Hearts and a Silver Star during the war.

Each Thursday that the special tour is scheduled, several of these veterans meet their tour guests on Route 9 in Natick. They re-tell stories and events from their Word War II days.

They share their emotions, frustrations and vivid details from their time in the war. They answer questions, for the lay curious, as well as the avid educator.

For three hours, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., they give a glimpse into the history of how US citizens enjoy the freedoms garnered from their civil service.

A Job Well Done

On Friday, July 1, at approximately 11:52 p.m., Officer Dave Zupkofska was working a detail at a bar in Quincy Square when a waitress told him there was a problem inside.

LT. DAN MINTON

The Officer observed a bar employee holding a man as he attempted to escort him outside. As they led the suspect outside, the Officer learned that the suspect had assaulted a female patron in the presence of the employee and other patrons. The suspect denied there was an assault, that he attempted to give his girlfriend a hug and she slipped and fell.

Officers Steve Kelley and Matt Hockney arrived moments later and stayed with the suspect, while Officer Zupkofska met with the victim. She was crying and visibly upset. She stated that her ex-boyfriend just showed up, shoved her and then knocked her down. She declined medical assistance but stated she did strike the back of her head. She made it clear that she did not want him in trouble.

Officer Zupkofska interviewed one of the victim's friends and she said they were standing with other friends when the suspect came out of no where and with both hands, shoved the victim very hard - knocking her down. That is when the employee grabbed the suspect.

Officer Matt Hockney located a neutral witness, who said that he saw the guy go right up to the girl and knock her down really hard by shoving her in the chest. At this point, the suspect, a 21 year old Weymouth resident, was placed under arrest for "Domestic Assault and Battery" and transported to the station. The victim was advised to get a restraining order but she declined.

The victim's brother arrived to take her home and told Officers that the suspect assaulted his sister at the Saint Patrick's Day parade and he was arrested then too.

At approximately 12:50 a.m. Officer Zupkofska received a phone call from the victim stating that her car mirror was ripped off her car when she left the bar. She told the Officer that she received two text messages from the suspect, stating, "Come to your car" (11:42 p.m.) and "Come to your car you fat @#$%." She said that damage occurred to her car about 8 months ago when the suspect had possession of it and returned it with considerable damage to the passenger side.

The suspect told her that someone side swiped the car while he had possession of it, but he did buy a new mirror. During this conversation, the suspect was about to be bailed on personal recognizance ($40), but after learning this new information, Officer Zupkofska approached the Clerk Magistrate and advised him on the additional charge of "Malicious Destruction to a Motor Vehicle" and bail was raised to $500.

The suspect, who had just received his property back, was placed back in the cell. A few minutes later, the victim's brother called and said that the suspect just texted his sister/victim. During the brief time that he had his property back, he immediately contacted her.

Officer Zupkofska was very concerned for the safety of the victim and urged her to get an emergency restraining order, but she said that she did not want one. He advised her that the order could help the Police in the event that he approached her or attempted to contact her. She again stated that she did not want a restraining order!

Safe Summer Fun

Even in the northernmost reaches of the country, we're now well into summer and its routine of barbecues, swimming and general outdoor fun. Of course, with all these activities, an element of risk is always present.

Here are a few suggestions to keep your family and yourself safe this summer:

• Keep barbecue grills at least 5 to 10 feet away from the house. Grills give off tremendous heat, which will melt vinyl siding easily and can cause a house fire.

• Place a fire extinguisher near the grill when it's in operation.

• Prevent excess sparks and flare-ups on the grill: Heat the charcoal properly, and don't place too many high-fat items over the charcoal at once. If the fire flares up, close the grill lid for a few seconds, then open and remove greasy foods from the grill.

• If using an inflatable swimming pool to entertain the kids, assign a responsible adult to watch the pool at all times. Toddlers can drown in just a few inches of water.

• The same goes for any type of backyard activity with children: Have a responsible adult supervise all activities to prevent accidents or stop kids from wandering off.

• Repair or replace any broken or splintered outdoor furniture before your event, and put away lawn tools and pet toys.

• Wear high-SPF sunscreen, a hat and sunglasses when outside on a sunny day. Drink plenty of water throughout the event, and limit alcohol consumption.

• Check yourself and the family for ticks at the end of the day, and remove them immediately. You can reduce the chance of having one jump on you by trimming the grass beforehand, pruning back low-hanging tree branches, and wearing hats and long sleeves when possible.

HOME TIP: Try using a charcoal starter to preheat charcoal more evenly; this provides more consistent heat and gives off fewer sparks.

Keeping Pesky Bed Bugs At Bay, Out Of The Home

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and Better Business Bureau are advising consumers on ways to ultimately prevent bed bug infestations from stepping "foot" in your home.

In just this year alone, BBB has received over 375 complaints against pest control service companies. In a recent October release, BBB recommended tips for choosing a trustworthy pest control company to banish bedbugs. This time, BBB, along with the FTC are advising consumers on ways to prevent a bed bug problem from taking over your home in the first place.

"While it may be easier said than done, it's always important for consumers to know how to prevent and control a pest problem," said Paula Fleming, BBB Spokesperson. "Preventing the problem, prevents the possibility of a pest control scam."

BBB and the FTC urge consumers to be proactive when it comes to preventing bed bugs from entering your home.

Inspect, inspect, insect? If you recently purchased furniture from a second-hand store or flea market, make sure that your purchase doesn't actually have "fleas," or in this case, bed bugs, before bringing it into your home.

Take out the "hide" in hide-and-go-seek. Keeping bed bugs from being able to hide is important. Only enclose mattresses and box springs in covers labeled "allergen rated," "for dust mites," or "for bed bugs." Make sure to periodically check for rips or openings so that you can patch them up securely. That also includes repairing cracks in plaster, loose wallpaper and any loose light switch covers and being proactive by always making sure to apply caulk to seal crevices, joints in baseboards and gaps on shelves or cabinets.

Don't be a hitchhiker. When traveling, use luggage racks to hold your suitcases when packing and unpacking rather than setting your luggage on the bed or floor. When staying in a hotel, check the mattress and headboard before getting into bed. Keep the critters from infesting your home by unpacking directly into a washing machine. Wash all items showing bed bug stains, and dry on the highest setting for at least 20 minutes. The heat from the dryer kills the bugs. Before relaxing, inspect and then vacuum your luggage. Empty the vacuum or seal and dispose of its bag outside of your home after each use.

Finished Season at 15-3 In District 6 East

Murray, Offense Storm Past Cohasset, 10-1

By SEAN BRENNAN

Starting pitcher Don Murray provided the lighting while first baseman Matt Goreham and outfielder Tim Liuzzo brought the thunder as Morrisette Post 294 (13-2 overall) solidified its grip on first place in District 6 East with an authoritative 10-1 victory over Cohasset Post 118 on July 6 at Adams Field.

Murray, a recent graduate of Boston College HS who will be heading to Holy Cross in the fall, dominated Cohasset during his five innings of work. The big right-hander allowed two hits and struck out 12 as Morrisette's offense, backed by Goreham (1-for-3, HR, two RBI) and Liuzzo (2-for-2, two RBI), provided all of the support Murray needed by jumping out to an early 3-0 lead before blowing the contest wide open with a five-run bottom of the fifth inning.

The two teams, both among the five District 6 East programs advancing into this week's District 6 East/West best-of-three playoffs, had to sit through two long weather delays brought about by a summer storm that carried with it rain and lighting.

But it was Morrisette, which weathered the storm and in the process repaid some retribution to a Cohasset program that had handed them their second loss of the season back on June 30.

Murray (2-0, 4.50 ERA, 18 strikeouts, 10 innings), pitching just his second game for Morrisette this season, began his evening with control issues. After walking leadoff batter Andres Goetz, he induced Tim Kensinger into a fielder's choice groundout. Another walk to third baseman Jeff Cavanaro placed runners on first and second but Murray quickly rediscovered his fastball control and proceeded to mow down Jamie Timothy and Shane Haggerty to close out the threat.

"I got into a groove but I wasn't feeling it that first inning," said Murray. "I only walked six kids in 54 innings at BC High and tonight that was three walks and a hit batsman, so that was not me. My fastball is my number one pitch and I can live on both corners with my four-seam and two-seam, so it is definitely the pitch I like to go back to and I am not afraid to throw it in any count. I like to get that first-pitch strike."

"I wasn't doing that much tonight and it made me uncomfortable," continued Murray. "The strikeouts didn't even seem like they were coming. Afterwards they told me what I had, but it didn't feel like that many because the walks were mixed in."

Morrisette's Greg Nelson (1-for-1, double, three RBI) reached on an error by Cavanaro to start the top of the first, but shortstop Colin Ryan (2-for-4, two RBI) bounced into a 6-4 double play. Following a walk to Goreham, Cohasset starter Chase Michaud fanned third baseman Joe Alibrandi (1-for-4) for the final out.

Murray had no such control issues in the second. He struck out Richard Roach, got Pat Stewart on a 6-3 groundout and blew away Casey Burns with high heat for his fourth strikeout in two innings.

Morrisette plated three runs in its half of the second as designated hitter Jason Pekkinen drew a one-out walk and Liuzzo followed with another free pass. After a fly out by second baseman Leroy Wallace (1-for-3, RBI), left fielder Chris Connolly drew a two-out walk (Michaud's third walk in the inning) to load the bases. On a 1-2 pitch, Nelson roped a double into left-center scoring Pekkinen, Liuzzo and Connolly for the 3-0 lead.

Murray would top his strong second with a dominant third frame as he sat down Matt Sheehan, Goetz and Cavanaro on strikes, giving him seven strikeouts through three innings. Post 294 went quietly 1-2-3 in the bottom of the third before the umpires halted the game due to lighting in the distance. When it was clear to commence, Murray found himself in a tricky situation to start the fourth. A walk to Timothy opened the frame, which was followed by a strikeout of Haggerty. Roach flared a single to right before Murray plunked Stewart to load the bases with only one out.

Cohasset was threatening. Murray decided to deal. He reared back and ended the inning with strikeouts of Burns and Sheehan giving him ten through four innings, none bigger than these last two.

"I saw Don pitch for BC High in two games and in both games he was in extremely tough spots early in the game and he struck out the side and just hit it from that point on," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze. "He did it against Xaverian and he did it against Catholic Memorial in the (state) playoffs. He did the same thing here."

A one-out double from Liuzzo in the bottom of the fourth gave Wallace a RBI opportunity. The 19-year old connected, driving in Liuzzo with a single (4-0). Wallace was thrown out trying to steal and Connolly struck out to end the inning. Murray ended his evening by getting Goetz to ground out 1-3 before fanning Kensinger and Cavanaro to finish with 12 strikeouts.

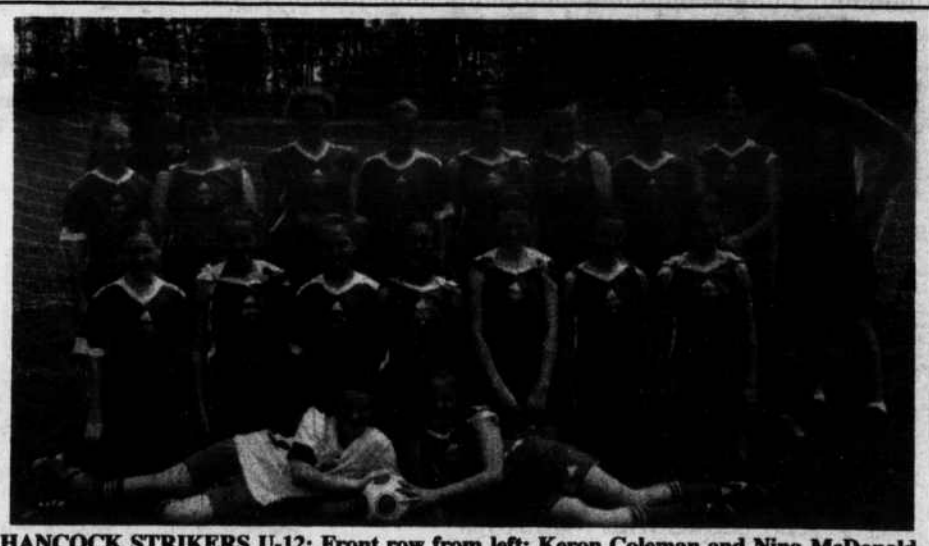

Following another long delay, this one due to heavy rain, Morrisette teed off on a tired Michaud in the bottom of the fifth. Mike Stille reached after getting drilled in the back and proceeded to swipe second base and Ryan followed with a clean single to left, scoring the North Quincy product (5-0). Cohasset's Haggerty relived Michaud and Goreham greeted him and scored Ryan with a home run to straight away center that traveled an estimated 410 feet (7-0). Alibrandi then doubled; Kelly struck out; Pekkinen walked, and Liuzzo drove in both runners with his second double of the game (9-0).

"You know what it is with these guys?" Maze asked before answering his own question. "When they are up and when we get a couple of runs, forget it. We pour it on."

"They knew (Michaud) had been out there awhile and had had too long of a break and, you know, I have said it since Day One: hits are contagious," continue Maze. "If you get a hit, the next guy gets a hit and then Goreham gets a hold of one and now we are really going."

Jack Higgins (two innings, four strikeouts) took over for Murray in the top of the sixth and got Timothy on strikes to start his outing. A single by Haggerty and a walk to Stewart were sandwiched around a strikeout of Roach. Higgins loaded the bases after allowing a two-out single to Burns but the righty got out of the inning by forcing Sheehan into a 4-3 ground out.

Post 294 reached ten runs as Stille, again, led off an inning by reaching base (single) to start the home half of the sixth. He advanced to second on a wild pitch and scored on Ryan's second straight RBI single (10-0). Higgins allowed a triple to Goetz and a RBI groundout to Kensinger in the seventh but closed out the victory by fanning Timothy and Haggerty.

Series Began Tuesday Night At Adams Field

Morrisette Vs. Franklin In Best-Of-Three Playoff

By SEAN BRENNAN

A 15-3 regular season earned Morrisette Post 294 the No. 1 seed from District 6 East in this week's American Legion District 6 East/West best-of-three playoff round, which began on Tuesday with the top-five programs from the East matching up with the top-five programs from the West.

Morrisette hosted No. 5 Franklin on Tuesday night at Adams Field and played Game Two last night (Wed.) at Franklin High School. Game Three, if necessary, will be played tonight (Thursday) beginning at 8 p.m. at Adams Field.

For Coach Steve Maze's team, its successful season, including a first-place finish in District 6 East means nothing once the playoffs start. Morrisette will need to continue to play error-free ball, must come up with timely and consistent hitting, and needs its pitching to continue performing at a high level to hold a sneaky strong Franklin team at bay.

"This is what it is all about," said Maze on Monday. "It can be tough playing as the number one seed against a five (seed) because they have nothing to lose. If we can continue to play error-free baseball, if we can continue to get consistent and timely hits, which is the name of the game, and if we get the pitching we have gotten all year long we should be fine."

"You don't have a choice this time of year," continue Maze. "This is the fun time in the season. The postseason is when you make a name for yourself."

Morrisette took the top spot in District 6 East followed by Braintree (14-3-1), Cohasset (11-6-1), Hyde Park (11-7) and Milton (10-8). In District 6 West the top-five teams are Norwood (15-3), Walpole (14-4), Medfield (11-7), Canton (9-9) and Franklin (9-9).

The best-of-three District 6 East/West playoff matchups include Morrisette/Franklin, Braintree/Canton, Cohasset/Medfield, Hyde Park/Walpole and Milton/Norwood.

The Quincy Local Qualifying Meet is the first stop on the road to Hershey, PA for competitors who moved on to the State Meet in Bolton. This year the local meet attracted over 100 youngsters interested in Track & Field with learning, participation, enjoyment and physical exercise being the main elements of the Hershey's Track & Field Games program.

Director of Recreation Barry J. Welch applauded the "quality recreation and school program where children have fun and are introduced to physical fitness through basic track and field events."

Sheriff Bellotti, Manet Community Health Create Innovative Program

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti and Manet Community Health Center have formed a partnership designed to increase inmate accountability by forcing inmates to comply with a state mandate requiring that they have health insurance when they finish their incarceration.

The novel program is part of a comprehensive inmate re-entry initiative intended to prevent inmates from re-offending when they rejoin society after wrapping up their jail sentences.

"Under this innovative program, inmates will be accountable to Massachusetts laws because Manet Community Health will be able to immediately enroll them in a health insurance program upon their release," Sheriff Bellotti said. "A Manet Community Health representative comes directly to the jail and signs up the inmates just prior to their release so that no one falls through the cracks."

Manet CEO Henry Tuttle said, "We're pleased to have such an exciting new opportunity to serve within the Norfolk County Correctional Center and to work with Sheriff Bellotti and his staff. They are an innovative and forward thinking partner."

The program enables inmates to continue essential counseling and health programs initiated during their incarceration. By making sure their medical needs are addressed, inmates have a better chance of remaining law-abiding and productive members of society, according to Sheriff Bellotti.

This is the second program collaboration between Manet Community Health and the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office. The first one began last summer when they developed an HIV testing and prevention program at the Office of Community Corrections in Quincy.

ManetCommunityHealth has a mission to "provide accessible, quality health care for all" and serves the broad health needs of South Shore residents. In 2010, Manet provided 51,193 visits to 13,712 patients at its five locations. It has been accredited by The Joint Commission since 1999, demonstrating they meet the highest standards of quality health care. Their clinical program is recognized by the American Diabetes Association (ADA).

Walk For Hope July 23 To Benefit Suicide Prevention

Friends, family and neighbors will gather in support of suicide prevention at the first annual Another Path - A Walk for Hope Saturday, July 23.

The approximately 4-mile walk will begin at Pageant Field in Quincy.

Proceeds from the event will benefit Suicide Awareness Voices of Education (SAVE), a national nonprofit agency.

Another Path - A Walk for Hope is being held in memory of loved ones from the Boston area who have taken their own lives. Organizers of the event wanted to create an event that would bring people together to raise awareness for suicide prevention in the community, while providing funds for SAVE's suicide prevention programs.

"Suicide awareness in our community is essential for people of all ages," said Joan O'Mahoney, one of the event's co-organizers. "Another Path - A Walk for Hope is a chance for people to join together and recognize the crisis we face as well as remember those we've lost."

The event will feature a DJ, a bouncy playground, snacks and lots of smiles.

Registration for the walk is available in advance or the day of the event. Prepaid registration is $15 for adults and $5 for children under 12.

Registration paid the day of the event is $20 for adults and $10 for children under 12.

People who would like to participate, but are unable to attend the event, can make a secured online donation.

Hearing, Balance Woes Can Signal Meniere's

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Please address Meniere's disease in your column. I am 88, a female and in good general health. I do not smoke or drink alcohol. I weigh 125 pounds and am 5 feet 1 inch tall. My diet consists mostly of health foods. – G.R.

ANSWER: Vertigo (dizziness), ear noises (tinnitus) and fluctuating hearing loss are the three signs of Meniere's (men-YAIRS) disease. Vertigo comes in spells lasting 20 minutes or more, and they leave the person off balance for several days. Tinnitus can be ringing, roaring, hissing or other sounds that come and go but eventually stay permanently. The same happens with episodes of hearing loss. It becomes a permanent problem in time. All these signs are due to a buildup of fluid in the inner ear, the place where hearing and balance take place.

Treatment of Meniere's focuses on ridding the inner ear of the fluid buildup. A strict low-salt diet goes a long way in reducing symptoms. The reason is that salt brings on fluid retention. Restricting caffeine and alcohol also helps. Diuretics – water pills – might be needed to get rid of the fluid.

A hearing aid usually overcomes deafness.

Dizzy spells are accompanied by nausea and vomiting. Antivert and Phenergan relieve all three.

Should these measures fail, more-heroic efforts are called into play. One is an injection in the ear of the antibiotic gentamicin, which destroys the ear's balance organ and eliminates dizziness. Another approach is the Meniett device, a little gadget that creates pressure pulses that are transmitted to the inner ear. The pulses pump fluid out. A doctor has to make a small hole in the eardrum so the pressure waves can make their way to the inner ear.

An ear, nose and throat doctor can evaluate you and determine if you are a candidate for these treatments or for other treatments I haven't discussed.

The booklet on vertigo discusses its many causes and treatments. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue – No. 801W, Box 536475. Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Can. with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have a pain that starts near my elbow and shoots down my arm to the little finger. It doesn't happen all the time. I don't know what brings it on. It just appears to happen for no reason. What could this be? – E.J.

ANSWER: I'm sure you've heard of carpal tunnel syndrome. It's due to a compression of a wrist nerve as it passes through a tunnel of ligaments and bones on its way to the hand and fingers.

You describe something similar, compression of the ulnar nerve at the elbow. This nerve supplies the little finger and the adjacent side of the ring finger. Compression of the nerve causes the kind of symptoms you have. You can try a simple treatment, an elbow splint. Your wear it at night, and the elbow should be bent about 60 degrees. Give it a week. If the pain doesn't leave, you should have an exam. Other conditions can cause the same kind of pain.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

TEETHING REMEDY WARNING

The FDA recently issued a safety announcement that warns parents against using benzocaine teething products in children under the age of two years. The use of these products (including Orajel, Baby Orajel, Orabase, and Anbesol) can lead to a serious condition known as "methemoglobinemia," which involves the inability of the oxygen-carrying protein in red blood cells to transport oxygen in the body's cells and tissues. Fortunately, there are a number of alternative treatments to benzocaine teething gels, including chilled rubber rings that babies can chew on to soothe their teeing discomfort. Solid frozen rings, on the other hand, should be avoided since they can cause injury to baby's tender gums. Parents can also message their baby's gums with clean fingertips.

This informative column on benzocaine teething products has been brought to you as a public service. We stress the importance of preventive dental care for the entire family. When was the last time you had your teeth checked by a professional? Call us now at 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. Your total emotional and physical well-being is as important to us as your teeth. We will do what is best for you and we will not compromise. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. A good teething remedy is a wet washcloth that is twisted into a rope and set in the freezer for a few minutes. Teething babies can chew on the washcloth until it returns to room temperature.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

by Dr. Gabrielle Freedman
Chiropractor

ALL IN YOUR HEAD?

Headaches are a perplexing malady that can have a number of causes ranging from stress to bone misalignments. If x-rays reveal that a patient with chronic headaches displays a misalignment of cranial or cervical bones, it is quite possible that chiropractic treatment may help. Some headaches of this type arise as the result of an auto accident or fall that leads to irritation of the nerves of the neck. If so, patients may experience head pain that runs from the neck to the top of the skull and around the ears. A thorough examination can help determine the cause of headaches, which should lead to the proper treatment. Taking painkillers to mask the pain will not address the root cause.

Chiropractic is a health care discipline that emphasizes the inherent recuperative power of the body to heal itself without the use of drugs or surgery. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, your good health is our main concern. Stop the pain - call 617.472.4220 today to schedule an appointment. Our office is located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. Chiropractic is a scientifically sound and time-proven natural way to health. It's so effective; it's hard to believe. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Headaches caused by irritated nerves may even radiate into the face and eyes, making concentration extremely difficult.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

The late Dale Carnegie was one of the most successful men in his field of all time. He believed in courtesy. He practiced it and this is what he said about courtesy. . . "Courtesy will do wonderful things for you. . . first, it will help you get ahead. Discourtesy is so rank and rife that the man or woman who radiates courtesy is not going to have much trouble forging ahead. He is going to have very little competition. . . second, you will have much fun being courteous. You will enjoy your work more. The courtesy you express will please your associates, and this, in turn, will kindle a warm reflected glow in your own heart. . . third, you will consciously develop better manners because you are courteous. . . finally, smile, treat everyone as you want to be treated."

The place to start practicing courtesy is in the home and school. If every member of a family, every student and teacher uses courtesy in all daily activities, it will not be hard to succeed in life because courtesy will be "built-in."

This I remember from earlier years: "Hearts like doors, open with ease with these words: Thank you, and if you please."

All this goes right back to the Golden Rule, which in one form or another, is taught in all religions.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You're not Sheepish when it comes to asserting your opinions on what you think is right or wrong. Be assured that you're being heard, and something positive will follow.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your sense of justice makes it difficult not to speak up about a recurring matter involving a co-worker. But, once again, you need facts to back you up before you can act.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Romance is still dominant, and if Cupid misfired before, don't worry. He'll take better aim at someone new this time around. Expect favorable news about a financial matter.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The zodiac's Moon Children can expect things to work out pretty much as planned. One negative note involves a minor relationship problem that suddenly turns serious.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You're suddenly being asked to make choices between two practically equal offers. Which one to choose? Easy. The one most likely to gladden your Lion's heart.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Once again, you're confronted by a workplace problem you thought you'd already resolved. This time, you might need to go higher up to find a just resolution.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Good for you: You're determined to stick with your goals and ignore those naysayers who might try to discourage you. You're on the right track. The challenge now is to stay on it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You'll soon get news that is supposed to help you with a troublesome situation. Use your sharp Scorpion instincts to determine if the information is reliable.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) If you learn someone has betrayed your trust, don't just accept it and walk away. You need to know why that person decided to do what he or she did.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A painful family relationship problem could finally begin to heal. Be prepared to show more flexibility than you might like. But it could be worth it.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) It's a good idea to enhance your career skills so you'll be prepared to accept a more responsible position when it's offered. A friend returns a favor just when you need it.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Show that strong, steely backbone that you usually hide, and demand to be included in any family decision-making that could affect the well-being of a loved one.

BORN THIS WEEK: You can be happy being alone at home. But you also love exploring the world outside and meeting new people and sharing new ideas.

12th Edition 'Best Ever,' Says Leo Kelly

Beach Guide Offers Tips On Dips At City's 13 Beaches

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Nothing defines Quincy more than its 27 miles of coastline and 13 public beaches and there's no better guide to the city's waterfront than the annual "Quincy Beach Guide," according to Leo Kelly, chairman of the Beaches and Coastal Commission.

"This is probably our best ever Beach Guide," Kelly said Monday of the slick 56-page 12th edition of the booklet that offers tips on beach dips and boating sprinkled with humor and history.

This year, the guide's covers and pages feature scenes of bygone days at Quincy beaches, courtesy of Quincy historian Tom Galvin whom Kelly commended for his

Old City Hall On Move

By LAURA GRIFFIN

A mid-August moving day appears to be set for the 16 city employees who currently work in the Old City Hall building, officially the James R. McIntrye Government Center.

Four city departments will move to different office space this summer, according to Gary Cunniff, the city's Director of Public Buildings.

The move is underway as part of Mayor Thomas Koch's plan to repair and renovate the century Old City Hall building. Earlier this year, consultants found

Mayor Thomas Koch is advising seniors to take advantage of the City's fully air-conditioned Kennedy Center this week as temperatures are expected to rise above 90 degrees later in the week.

Project Will Restore Cupola, Dome, Weathervane

United First Church Bell Tower Restoration Begins July 26

The United First Parish Church will host a "Start of Restoration" ceremony for its bell tower Tuesday, July 26 at 11 a.m. at the church – known as "The Church of the Presidents" – 1306 Hancock St., Quincy Center.

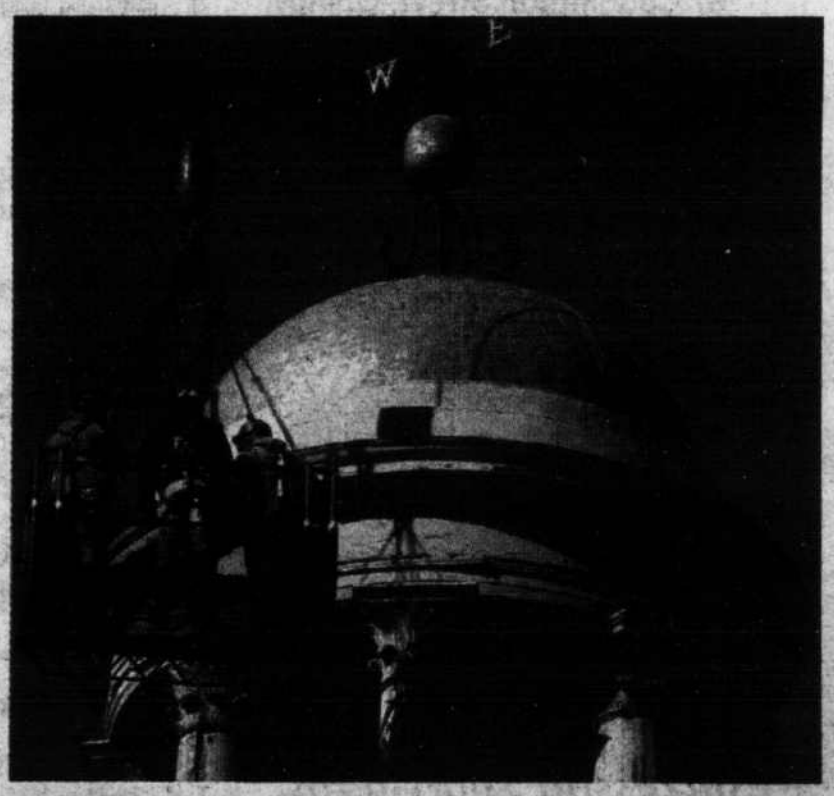

Rev. Sheldon W. Bennett, church minister, said the ceremony will mark the start of the actual construction work to restore the bell tower cupola, dome, and weathervane of this historic church building.

"We also want to acknowledge and thank our grantors, the Citizens of Quincy, and all who are supporting this important project," Bennett said.

The ceremony will include welcoming remarks by Jack Phillips, president of the United First Parish congregation; and invite remarks from Mayor Tom Koch.

"We will acknowledge our grant funders: the City of Quincy Community Preservation Committee, the "Save America's Treasures" grant program administered by the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, and the American Express "Partners in Preservation" program, a partnership of the National Trust for Historic Preservation and the American Express Foundation.

"We will introduce our design consultants and our contractor, and I will offer a faith reflection and a closing blessing," Bennett added.

"We're hoping people can come out and support not only Fr. Bill's mission but to also support these restaurants," Yazwinski continued. "Even in tough times these restaurants are donating their time and their food for this great event and this great mission. These chefs take great pride and joy in their creations and we hope people will come out and try these great foods."

Food and desserts can be sampled between 6 and 8 p.m. A live auction, silent auction and raffle will follow.

The winner of the raffle will choose from three vacation destinations: Vegas/Grand Canyon combo; New Orleans, complete with a Cajun cooking lesson; or Sonoma or Napa Valley Wine tour. All include air and lodging for two.

There will also be live entertainment by The Smoking Jackets, a local cover band, known for playing outdoor venues; and East Coast Acappella.

Miss Massachusetts will also make an appearance.

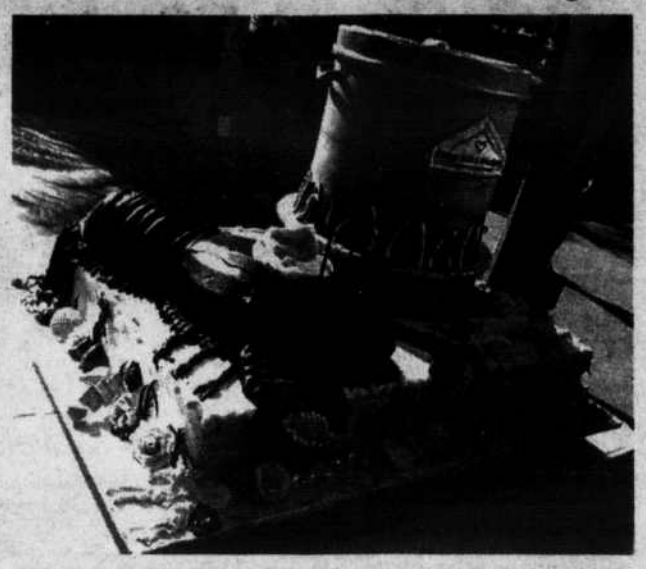

The live and silent auction will be hosted by professional auctioneer Jim Wells and his special guest, Scott Wahle.

Live auction items include:

- Celtics package including Celtics tickets for four, a pre-game meal, group picture on the famed parquet floor and an autographed item.
- Bill Brett signed photography.
- Musical instruments, sports memorabilia, outdoor grilles and landscaping tools; Red Sox tickets and trips.

The silent auction will feature many practical items for use around the home and business as well as gifts for someone special.

"The event is not a program," Yazwinski said. "People can come and go as they like. We're very fortunate to be so well-supported. We have a lot of corporate sponsorships and individual ticket sales. Hopefully we'll have a good live auction and silent auction that night."

For tickets, visit www.helpfbms.org, call 617-376-2255 or buy them at the door next Tuesday night. Tickets are $100 each.

The Foodfest was Fr. Bill's idea some 17 years ago. The first one featured a handful of restaurants in the atrium of Presidents Place. Some $4,000 was raised.

"Father (Bill) clearly saw that you couldn't rely on just public support in the sense of public grants and state and federal resources (to provide shelter for the homeless)," Yazwinski said. "He turned to his angels – people in the community from the corporate world to the faith world to local business owners and people in his parish – and said 'I need help. I have people coming to my door at (St. John's) church and the school and I need help.'

"They decided to have this Foodfest idea."

And for the next 14 years, Fr. Bill was the driving force behind each and every Foodfest.

"This is the one thing every summer that he really put his energy towards – making sure we raised enough money so that no matter what we'd have an extra cot or extra pillow or blanket. We still need to do those things today. This was his baby. We've done our best to continue this tradition.

"This will be the third Foodfest without Father. He died a few days before the 2009 event. But we know he's with us."

Yazwinski says there are many people who continue to turn out and support the FoodFest because they were such great admirers of Fr. Bill.

"They tell me they are going to come to FoodFest and they look forward to it because there are other people who they can talk to about Fr. Bill and talk about the stories.

"Everyday I have someone reminding me about Father and how he touched so many people and how his mission has helped so many people and saved so many lives."

Star Of Sea 'Relegated To The Profane'

'Friends' To Appeal Any Attempt To Sell Their Church

Last Thursday, the Community of Star of the Sea learned that Cardinal Sean O'Malley issued a decree to "Relegate" their beloved Church "to the Profane."

The decree brings the Cardinal one step closer towards a move to sell the church, which Maureen Mazrimas and Sean Glennon, co-chairpersons of Friends of Star of the Sea, say they have been expecting since O'Malley closed the church as a worship site in September 2010.

In anticipation of the decree, the Friends filed a "pre-appeal" at the Vatican last fall, but now that the decree has been officially issued, they filed their official Remonstratio against the relegation on Monday. The Remonstratio and the subsequent appeals process should delay any possible sale of the church for an estimated two to three years.

Mazrimas and Glennon point to a series of "split decisions" that have recently been issued from the Vatican, in which the Holy See has upheld a bishop's right to "suppress" a parish, but has decided in favor of parishioner groups when it comes to "relegation to profane use."

The Friends said they hope for the same outcome with their next appeal.

The decree, as published in The Boston Pilot last week, cited that the church was being relegated due to a "grave" cause. Canon law says those who legitimately claim rights for themselves in the church must consent to the relegation.

Furthermore, a Decree of Relegation must not be issued if the good of souls will suffer from the relegation.

Mazrimas and Glennon argue there was no "grave" cause to relegate their church to profane use, and that "souls will suffer" from this decree. Further, the co-chairpersons say those "who legitimately claim rights" were not consulted in a meaningful way. Of those who were consulted, however, a significant majority, 66 percent, opposed the plan to relegate to profane use.

J.P. Plunkett, a real estate broker and Executive Vice President at NAI Hunnemann in Boston, says that the church may not be worth more than the land it sits on. Additionally, on July 1, the church property went back on the City of Quincy tax rolls – with a bill in excess of $40,000 annually.

Mazrimas and Glennon said that with the property now being taxable, and the diminished real estate value, it makes more sense to keep the building open as a worship site.

They say the faith community of Star of the Sea stands ready to help out in any way to bring their beloved church back to its former glory. They suggest that in the last 7 years while the RCAB has been the steward of Star of the Sea, the church and buildings have fallen into disrepair.

"This didn't happen on our watch," say Glennon and Mazrimas. "It is in everyone's best interest to reopen Star of the Sea as a worship site, to welcome back those who were alienated either by the abuse crisis, the closing, or any other reason.

"It's time for the healing to begin."

Fr. Bill's FoodFest, Auction Still Going Strong

John Yazwinski remembers the conversation vividly.

The CEO of Fr. Bill's & MainSpring was visiting a failing Fr. Bill McCarthy at his home three years ago. The organization's annual FoodFest and auction – Fr. Bill's idea for a fundraiser to help support his mission to end homelessness – was approaching.

YAZWINSKI

FR. BILL

"Father didn't have much time and he was receiving hospice at his house. A few days before the FoodFest I went to see him. He told me, 'You don't cancel FoodFest if I don't make it.'"

In typical Fr. Bill style, the beloved namesake for the Quincy homeless shelter was still making phone calls during those final days to raise money for FoodFest.

"He's doing it because it doesn't want anyone to die outside," Yazwinski says.

Fr. Bill died a few days before the event.

It is a memory Yazwinski will never forget.

And a life lesson he'll always hold close to his heart.

"I think it showed me the strength that you need to have to be in this type of work and how to handle challenges," Yazwinski says remembering his mentor whom he called family.

"For me it was a great opportunity to work with a great person, somebody who wore his heart on his sleeve. A lot of people may struggle with his mission but I will always be in awe of him taking care of the poorest of our neighbors and standing up for what he believed in and the amount of people he touched was truly amazing."

As promised, the FoodFest went on that year.

And continues to be a signature event in Quincy and the South Shore.

Next Tuesday, the 17th annual FoodFest and Auction will be held at The Ocean Club, Marina Bay, Quincy. The evening will feature food from some 40 restaurants, entertainment, a raffle and a live and silent auction. Food can be sampled from 6 to 8 p.m. The live auction will be held from 8 to 9:30 p.m.

"We hope to raise about $250,000. With the recession it might be tough but we're very lucky to have the people in the community who support us," Yazwinski says.

Tickets are $100 per person. Visit www.helpfbms.org, call 617-376-2255 or buy them the night of the event at the door.

Yazwinski calls the money raised by FoodFest "the lifeblood" for Father Bill's homeless shelter in Quincy.

"The state supports us by funding 75 beds for men and women and we've been averaging about 120 men and women this past year. So we have to privately fund raise to make sure we get everybody indoors and nobody's out on the streets," he says.

"We also assisted about 50 families from the greater Quincy area who were homeless this year. We've rented units throughout the South Shore. We shelter 82 families a night every night in the South Shore so the proceeds really help fill the gaps to where the public funding isn't," he adds.

Those needing assistance come from all walks of life. Recently, there's been a surge in the number of veterans, young adults, high school students and families with young children who have turned to Fr. Bill's for assistance.

For instance, during the past year, Fr. Bill's assisted more than 100 veterans and many of them were recent returnees from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Another fast-growing population needing help: young adults.

"I remember when I came to Fr. Bill's in 1996," Yazwinski recalled. "We served maybe 10 or 12 18-to-21 year-olds. This past year we served about 150 young adults at Fr. Bill's. We're seeing high school kids needing us for shelter because they've been jumping around in unsafe situations.

"We actually started a new program this year where we ended up supporting about 10 high school kids in the Quincy area so they didn't have to stay at Fr. Bill's Place. They rented (housing) units together and worked with the local school system and helped the kids graduate," Yazwinski says.

People may be surprised to learn that the average age of a homeless person in this country is 8 years old.

"Fr. Bill's and MainSpring see a lot more young moms and working families because their full-time jobs have gone part-time. We've seen people being laid off and reductions in their health care coverage. Situations where people were one or two paychecks away from being homeless and now we're seeing them come into the shelters."

Another focal point of assistance is taking people who are struggling with substance abuse and mental health issues off the streets.

"We've seen a real decrease in that through the years and we hope the community feels we are doing our best," Yazwinski says.

State hospitals have shut down, straining resources and leaving some with no place to go.

"There are a lot of people in our community who are struggling right now," he continues. "We're hoping we can continue to be just a stepping-stone for many people. We want people to know that Fr. Bill's Place – the homeless shelter – assisted about 1,000 people last year unduplicated and 80 percent of them only stayed for 30 days or less. People just needed us for a temporary stop.

"But 20 to 25 percent of the people could end up being long-term residents because they used to live in more residential supportive care – rest homes, nursing homes, state-assisted housing – and they have a lot of behavioral health issues and we need to help those people."

Fr. Bill's is more than the homeless shelter on Broad Street, the site of the former Registry of Motor vehicles Quincy branch. It's supportive housing, prevention and food.

"We've developed supportive housing for families and individuals and veterans who are facing homelessness to get housing, not just shelter. In the South Shore, we have about 286 units of housing with support. We're not trying to become a big housing developer, we're just trying to get those 20 percent of those people who don't need us as a spring-board."

Fr. Bill's also helps people in jeopardy of losing their own home.

"We got a call from an elderly couple recently that their house is being foreclosed in Quincy and they didn't know where to turn. We're working with the bank and trying to negotiate something so they don't end up becoming homeless and having to come to Fr. Bill's Place," Yazwinski says.

All told, last year, Fr. Bill's helped more than 3,000 people in the South Shore with housing, shelter, prevention, food and utility assistance.

"We try to respond to any type of hardship and even if we don't necessarily have the resources right away, we'll do our best to try to broker and try to find the resources in the community to help them. I feel like every day our staff and our volunteers are coming to me and saying, 'we've got this situation going on.'"

When times get tough, Yazwinski finds himself channeling Fr. Bill.

"I'll always remember what Fr. Bill used to say about Mother Teresa. When you take on great challenges, be prepared to be criticized. I think our organization would love to take the sign down at Fr. Bill's Place."

The sign removal – signaling the end of homelessness in Quincy – was Fr. Bill's true mission.

"I remember my first day on the job as executive director in 1999. I turned to Fr. Bill and said, "What's my job description? He said, "Your job is to take that sign down."

And there have been some signs of that coming true.

"We shut St. John's School down (the first homeless shelter) after it had been open for 15 years. We did that to show people that we were willing to close shelters down and we're willing to do it again.

"We did that because we didn't have the need. We'd love to be able to take down the sign at Fr. Bill's shelter, too."

Next Tuesday, folks will gather to support Fr. Bill's and MainSpring at the FoodFest. They will remember Fr. Bill, too.

"This will be the third FoodFest without Father," Yazwinski says, "but we know he's with us."

The event also rekindles fond – and funny – memories of the man who walked this earth to make this corner of the planet a better place for those less fortunate.

"I remember one FoodFest about 10 years ago we were down at Marina Bay setting up during the day," Yazwinski recalls. "We were about an hour or two before the event and the sky darkened and the clouds started rolling in. It looked bad. We were concerned about the weather."

Fr. Bill, wearing his famous summer straw hat, was perched near the water. Bible in hand. Saying prayers.

"Amazingly during the evening the clouds just dispersed and we had a beautiful night. That's Fr. Bill for you – he was a special person.

"I always said he could move mountains but that night Fr. Bill moved clouds."

Fr. Bill's lending hand is legendary. But his humorous side is a close second.

One day, years ago, Yazwinski and Fr. Bill drove to City Hall to see then Mayor Jim Sheets.

Fr. Bill pulls into the mayor's parking spot to park the car.

"I asked Father, 'What are you doing?' This is the mayor's spot."

Fr. Bill replied, "I just want to be sure he knows that I'm here."

There will be a lot of people there for Father Bill at next Tuesday's FoodFest.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS 1920 POSTCARD is a view of the beach in Atlantic that is part of the DCR's Wollaston Beach Reservation. Known as Moswetuset Landing, the pier shown here extended out into the shallow water from near the end of Atlantic Street. At the time it was a popular public landing where locals kept their boats on floats or moored in the mudflats that are exposed along here at low tide. In 1908 – when the Boulevard was opened along Quincy's shoreline – the original small beach here was joined to two other small beaches to become part of the new Wollaston Beach that extended from here south to Fenno Street. Moswetuset Hummock can be seen in the distance in the center of the picture. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

$57 Million Project For Quincy Hospital

By FRANK McCAULEY

Groundbreaking ceremonies for the $57 million replacement facility at Quincy City Hospital took place on Wednesday, July 16 at 5:30 p.m. at the hospital.

This Week 1986 25 Years Ago

Mayor Francis X. McCauley, state Sen. Paul D. Harold, the Hospital Board of Managers, and hospital Director Mark Mundyn were on hand for the event.

The $57 million project would replace about two-thirds of the buildings and patient beds at the hospital. The new facility would contain 180 medical/surgical, 14 intensive care, and 20 pediatric and 20 mental health beds.

In addition, 25 hospital departments will be housed in the new buildings.

Construction was scheduled to start by mid-August with a completion date in the fall of 1989.

HEALTH COMMISSIONER SEARCH DOWN TO 2

Quincy's search for a new health commissioner at a salary of $25,000 a year has been narrowed down to two candidates according to Mayor Francis X. McCauley, and a decision could be made within two to three weeks.

McCauley said that Personnel Director David Smith and Administrative Assistant Arthur Foley completed interviews with 14 candidates.

"They are now looking at two strong candidates for the position and will interview them again," said McCauley, who added that their backgrounds will now be checked.

(Editor's Note: A home rule petition, dropping a requirement of an MD degree was adopted, because of the difficulty finding a medical doctor to take the full-time position for a salary of $40,000 per year.)

Calls For City Officials To Work Together

I was recently watching a Quincy School Committee meeting on Channel 22. Committee members Dave McCarthy and Anne Mahoney (mayoral candidate) has requested Park, Forestry and Cemetery Director Kristen Powers to attend the meeting.

McCarthy and Mahoney questioned Powers on the condition of the Quincy schoolyards and told Powers that they had gotten phone calls regarding poor maintenance. Powers was puzzled upon hearing this, but did mention the shortage of help and the fact that there was no summer help this year, in addition to employees being out on sick days/vacation. She encouraged School Committee members to contact her with specific problems, if any.

I believe that this whole show was about trying to make the mayor and his administration, including Ms. Powers, look bad.

How did I come to this conclusion?

At the end of the questioning, School Committee member Emily Lebo told Ms. Powers that she felt the Park Department was doing a very good job, and that Lebo had received no phone calls of complaint about the schoolyards. None of the other School Committee members had anything to say about it, either.

Mr. McCarthy and Ms. Mahoney, I ask, please: all elected officials, work together to straighten out any real problems the City of Quincy has been dealt with, especially due to loss of revenue from the state, for the good of all.

We Will Miss You, Coach Kutt

Coach Matt Kutt, who came to Eastern Nazarene College in 2007, is leaving next week to move to Florida with his lovely wife and five-year old daughter. I met Coach Kutt in 2008 when my grandson, Devin, took batting lessons from him in the winter months before his baseball season started.

Devin has also worked with Coach Kutt the last few years at the baseball camp that ENC runs in July. Coach Kutt cares for his ENC team, the boys he helped with their batting, their parents and the community. He made the boys believe in themselves.

He probably doesn't realize how many lives he touched in the four years he was here. Our loss is Florida's gain.

We will miss you Coach Kutt.

Darcy's Pub Pizza Top Slice Again

At the recent third Annual Ward Four Palmucci Pizza Challenge, Darcy's Pub reined supreme over the competition and was voted as having the best pizza pie in all of Ward Four, for the second straight year.

The annual event hosted by Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci matches pizza from various eateries throughout South/West Quincy.

Competing for the crown of best pizza this year were pies from Copeland Pizza, Spukies, Railroad Café, Unchained Pizza, The Pasta & Pizza Café at the Common Market Food Court, and Darcy's Pub.

The event was attended by nearly 100 pizza connoisseurs of all ages from throughout the city, each with their own criteria for what comprises the best pizza.

After the many votes were tallied, Darcy's Pub edged out its nearest competitor, the 2009 champion Railroad Café by two votes to take top honors in the 'Best Overall Pie' category. Railroad Café did achieve top honors for the 'Best Pepperoni Pie' competition.

"We're lucky to have so many fine eateries in Ward Four, I believe that was reflected in the closeness of this years contest" Palmucci said. "However, it's clear from the vote tallies of the night that Darcy's Pub was the biggest crowd pleaser yet again, congratulations to them."

The challengers will have to wait until next year to take another shot at the top prize and distinction of calling themselves the Best Pizza in Ward Four.

Farmers' Market 'Independence Day Toast Contest' Supports Disabled Veterans Fishing Trip

On July 5th, 1777 John Adams wrote these words to his daughter Abigail to describe the first anniversary of Independence Day.

"At three we (John Adams, George Washington and several members of the Marine Committee), went to dinner, and were very agreeably entertained with excellent company, good cheer, fine music from the band of Hessians taken at Trenton and continual vollies between every toast, from a company of soldiers drawn up in Second Street before city tavern, where we dined. The toasts were in honor of our country and the heroes who have fallen in their pious effoorts to defend her."

On July 4th, 1826, John Adams spent the last day of his life celebrating Independence Day with a toast, "Independence Forever."

In the toasting spirit of John Adams, the Quincy Farmers' Market recently held its first "Toast Contest."

The contest raised $127 to support the Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club's Annual Disabled Veterans' Day Fishing Trip. This year the trip was held yesterday (Wednesday) out of the Quincy Yacht Club in Houghs Neck.

The winning toast, submitted by Anne Marie Brochu of Quincy, read:

"From Quincy's wind blown, salty shore – to Blue Hill's leafy forest floor – Life and Liberty evermore!"

Persons who wish to make a donation to support the disabled veterans' fishing trip may do so by sending a check to Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club (HSWFC) c/o the Quincy Farmers' Market to 132 Rhoda St., Quincy, MA 02169, or stop by the Farmers' Market any Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Hancock Parking Lot across from the Court House on Chestnut Street.

Spinach, Artichoke Fritters

I guess I have cooked fritters of all kinds, from clams to veggies and then some. So this combination of spinach and artichoke hearts was a new one. and since one of my favorite combinations is spinach and artichoke dip, I thought it would make a great tasting fritter.

And so with that combo, the fritters got raves and they are now a family favorite.

You can either use fresh spinach as I did, or frozen – either chopped or loose leaf.

SPINACH, ARTICHOKE FRITTERS
2 cups cooked spinach
1 frozen package of artichoke hearts (or a large can)
2 eggs
¼ cup Romano or Parmesan grated cheese
2 tablespoons flour
¼ cup water
Salt and pepper to taste
Enough vegetable oil for sautéing (start with ¼ cup)

Cook the spinach and set aside. Cut up the artichoke hearts in pieces. In a bowl, beat the eggs, add the flour, salt and pepper and cheese and beat until fairly smooth. Add the spinach, the artichokes and water, and stir until blended.

In a skillet, heat the oil then add the mixture by tablespoons. Cook until browned on both sides.

Drain on paper towel and keep in a warming oven until time to serve.

West Nile Virus Confirmed In Mosquitoes From Quincy

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health announced Tuesday that West Nile Virus has been detected in mosquitoes collected from Quincy.

There was one WNV-positive mosquito sample (pool) identified from samples collected July 14.

Last year, 121 WNV positive mosquito samples were identified in 42 Massachusetts towns in seven counties. Quincy had one WNV positive mosquito sample identified in 2010.

While WNV can infect people of all ages, people over the age of 50 are at higher risk, for severe infection. WNV is most commonly transmitted to humans by the bite of a mosquito infected with the virus.

The City of Quincy Health Department and the state Department of Public Health recommend that the public continue to take action to avoid mosquito bites and reduce mosquito populations around their home and neighborhoods.

• Limit your time outdoors during peak periods of mosquito activity (dusk and dawn) or, if you must remain outdoors, wear a long-sleeve shirt and long pants.

• Use a mosquito repellent that contains DEET or Picaridin. Oil of lemon eucalyptus may also be considered. Products with permethrin should only be used on clothing. Always follow directions on the label. Repellents should not be used on children younger than two months of age.

• Take special care to cover up the arms and legs of children playing outdoors. When bringing a baby outdoors, cover the baby's carriage or playpen with mosquito netting.

• Fix any holes in screens and make sure they are tightly attached to all doors and windows.

• Remove any standing water around the home that is available for mosquito breeding. Mosquitoes will begin to breed in any puddle or standing water that lasts for more than four days. Make sure water does not collect and stagnate in ceramic pots, trash cans, recycling containers, old tires, wading pools, bird baths, etc.

Remove leaves and debris that may prevent drainage of roof gutters.

There were also information booths on bicycle safety and domestic violence. For more information or to set up an appointment for car seats, call Officer Terry Downing at (617) 745 5824.

The Quincy Police Department has been awarded 58 bicycle helmets as part of the 2011 statewide bicycle safety grant program funded by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) and distributed through the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security's Highway Safety Division (EOPSS-HSD).

The helmets will be distributed at no cost to members of the community.

A bicycle helmet can reduce the risk of serious head and brain injury by as much as 90 percent. According to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, 91 percent of bicyclists killed in 2008 were not wearing helmets. For more information on the bicycle helmet law and bicycle safety tips, go to www.mass.gov/highwaysafety.

$290,000 Lease Until June

School Administrators Staying At Burgin Parkway Headquarters

School administrators won't have to move this year due to a 12-month extension of the city's $290,000 lease for their current headquarters at 159 Burgin Parkway.

City Solicitor James Timmins confirmed Tuesday that Mayor Thomas Koch has approved the terms of a lease extension for the third floor office space in the building owned by the National Association of Government Employees (NAGE).

The NAGE building has been home to school administrators since construction of the new Quincy High School began. Koch and NAGE President David Holway executed the first 12-month lease in 2007.

NAGE, a national labor organization of roughly 40,000 government employees from 41 states, functions under the Service Employees International Union (SEIU).

Timmins said that NAGE officials have agreed to waive the two months rent due in May and June as part of this agreement and Koch's spokesman Chris Walker cited that savings in an official statement issued Monday.

Walker said, "The School Department has been renting space at the NAGE building since construction of the new Quincy High School began several years ago and that lease will end, at significant savings, when the renovations to Coddington Hall under the Mayor's Capital Improvement Plan are completed.

"Renovating an existing city building for school administrative offices is a far (more) cost-effective strategy in the long-term."

According to the lease details, the agreement provides school officials with the 12,903 square feet on the third floor, access to conference rooms and 31 parking spaces.

Lease payments are funded through the Quincy High School construction bonds. The city's portion of the high school's $126 million cost is $54.5 million.

and it's an enjoyable, comfortable and safe place to beat the heat," Mayor Koch said.

On Tuesday, the city also issued tips provided by the National Weather Service on staying safe during the hot weather:

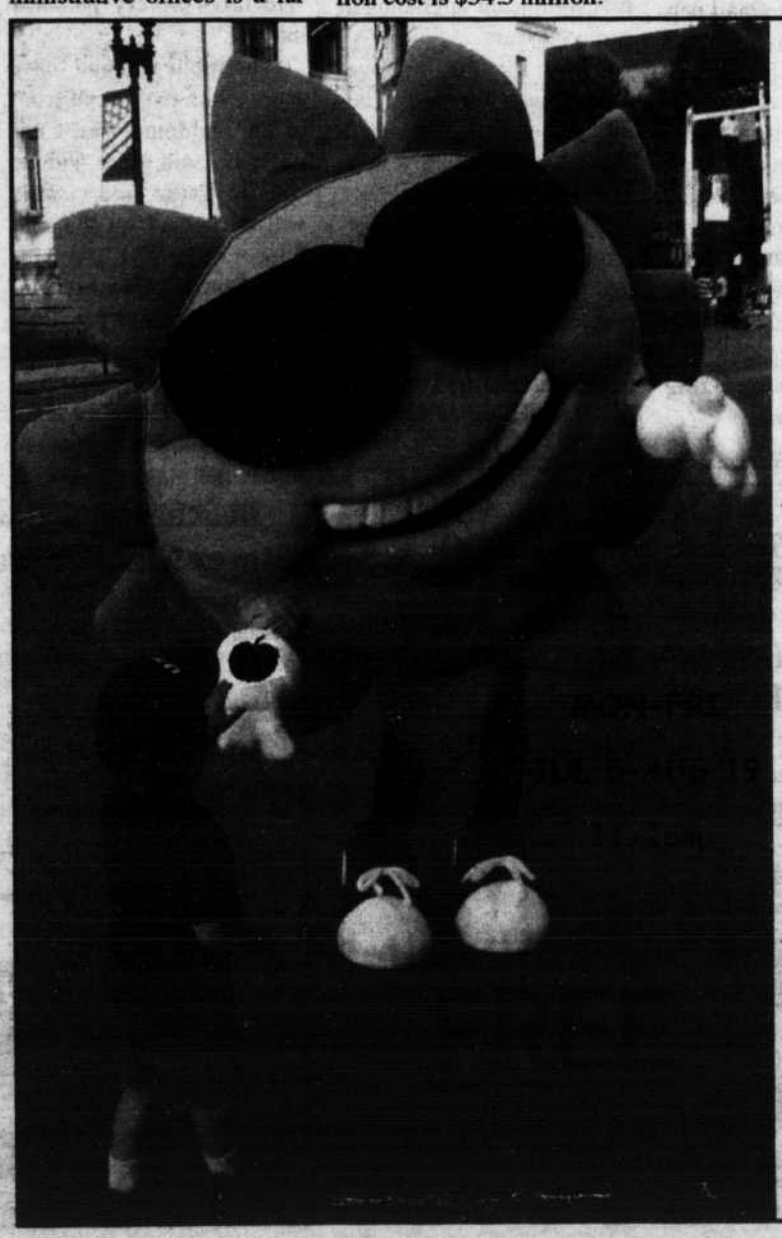

• Avoid strenuous physical activities during the hottest part of the day.

• Wear lightweight, light-colored clothing to reflect heat and sunlight.

• Drink plenty of water to stay hydrated. Stay away from alcohol and caffeine, which can contribute to dehydration.

• Stay in air-conditioned places. If you do not have an air-conditioned home, spend time at a library, store or other air-conditioned building during the hottest parts of the day.

• Don't get too much sun. A sunburn reduces the body's ability to dissipate heat.

"I am running for Ward 6 councillor because I feel that we need someone that knows about construction work, and jobs; the more jobs and businesses help the tax revenue for the city of Quincy."

Miller said his three sons attended Quincy Public Schools.

"I love Quincy and I am very proud to be in the Quincy Wrestling Book (The Wrestling families of Quincy.) I worked very hard to help in anything to do with Quincy activities, such as First Night Quincy.

"I was in charge of making all construction work along with my fellow Building Trades members."

He added: "There is one other thing that I am proud of in Ward 6: The Squantum Sailors' football team. They didn't have the funds that year for the team so the president, Joe Sheffer, and myself arranged to get the money for the team so they could play that year. That makes me proud to be in Ward 6."

If elected Ward 6 councillor, Miller said "I will have plenty of time for the people in Ward 6. I will be a full-time candidate, not part-time."

Christopher Rooney Receives $5,000 Scholarship From Grand Lodge Of Masons

Christopher D. Rooney of Quincy recently received a $5,000 scholarship from the Grand Lodge of Masons in Massachusetts.

This year, the Massachusetts Freemasons awarded 108 scholarships totaling $405,000 for the next academic year.

Scholarships are granted on the primary basis of the applicants' academic achievement, financial need, and broad participation in community and school activities. Since beginning the scholarships program in 1995, Massachusetts Freemasons have distributed more than $5 million to enable full-time, undergraduate attendance at accredited educational institutions.

CHRISTOPHER ROONEY

"As Masons, our priority is to contribute substantially to our communities through projects like the Grand Lodge Scholarship Program," said Richard J. Stewart, Grand Master of Masons in Massachusetts. "We recognize the importance and impact secondary education has on young people. We are proud to contribute through this initiative and wish the recipients the best of luck as they pursue their education at schools throughout the country."

Rooney, a 2007 graduate of North Quincy High School, attends Bridgewater State University. He is pursuing a bachelors of Arts degree in English and anticipates graduating next year. After completing his education, Rooney plans on attending graduate school and becoming a professor.

Bruins Award 'Reading Rink' To the Thomas Crane Public Library

Thomas Crane Public Library in Quincy has been selected as one of six libraries in Massachusetts to receive a Boston Bruins Reading Rink.

The Reading Rinks feature a Bruins rug, Bruins themed hockey furniture and bookcases made from hockey sticks. They provide a comfortable space for young readers and their families to read together, do a craft, or take part in a library program.

"Having the Bruins support our literacy efforts sends such a positive message to young readers," said Children's Librarian Julie Rines.

Bruins mascot Blades will visit the Thomas Crane Public Library to the deliver the rink to the Main Library Children's Room Wednesday, July 27th at 10:30 a.m.

As part of the summer library program, "One World, Many Stories," Chef Patricia Yeo of OM Restaurant will be accompanying the delivery of the Reading Rink. She will demonstrate how to make dumplings as well as sharing the story of how she became a chef and how different foods and cultures inspire her.

This event is for children ages 4-12.

Reading Rinks will also be delivered to public libraries in: Athol, Bourne, Chicopee, Framingham, and Salisbury. The libraries were selected through a grant process which drew applications from across the state.

The Boston Bruins have been active partners and advocates for reading and literacy since 2009 when they joined the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners (MBLC) and the Massachusetts Library System (MLS) to create "When you read, you score!" that works with the MBLC and MLS' existing summer reading programs.

Tim Thomas, Milan Lucic, Mark Recchi and other players also helped libraries develop Favorite Books of the Boston Bruins, a recommended reads list, to encourage children and teens to read a variety of books over the summer.

The Bruins also offer prizes for children and teens selected from a pool of candidates who demonstrate outstanding summer reading involvement. Among the prizes is the opportunity to greet members of the Boston Bruins as they get ready to take the ice during a Bruins home game.

the 167-year-old building in need of serious updating – inside and outside.

Among the updates sought: a new slate roof, copper gutters and downspouts and new windows. Inside, every system should be replaced: electrical, plumbing, heating and air-conditioning.

New fire alarm and fire prevention systems should also be installed along with an elevator to comply with the handicap accessibility code.

The restoration project will mark the building's first significant upgrading in some 90 years.

Plans for the improvements are currently being developed through a $200,000 Community Preservation Grant.

Cunniff said the nine employees in the city clerk's office will move across McIntyre Mall to the Munroe Building, 1227-59 Hancock St. as will the two employees of the Housing Rehabilitation Department.

In the Munroe Building, the new city clerk's offices will be street-level with a counter that is currently being installed. At various times in the past, the building housed several banks, the most recent South Coastal Bank. South Coastal's Quincy branch is now located at 77 Granite St.

Cunniff said the banking area provides safe receptacles for city records which are overseen by City Clerk Joseph Shea.

"Joe Shea is very particular about protecting the records," said Cunniff adding, "He takes a very personal interest."

The public will find "easy access with parking in front of the building," said Cunniff who said there will be walk-in traffic, and visitors will be served on the first floor.

Council Moving

City council offices and the city auditor's office currently occupy the second floor of Old City Hall. Those employees will move across the glass passage to city hall annex, according to Cunniff.

Cunniff said city councillors will occupy the current meeting rooms on the second floor and offices will be partitioned for Council President Kevin Coughlin and City Auditor Sue O'Connor.

However, Cunniff said that no decision has yet been made on a location for city council meetings.

As for Cunniff himself, his office with four employees will be moved to 58 Saville Ave., a building previously occupied by the school administration.

Cunniff said the contractor is currently completing the electric and telephone wiring in the Munroe Building. He expects the move will go smoothly.

Koch signed the lease for the Munroe Building in 2010 in anticipation of a major overhaul of Old City Hall. The lease specifies a $146,250 annual cost or monthly payments of $12,187 plus taxes and common area maintenance charges.

Ed Ennis, present for A.L. Prime, noted Prime bought the station in 2005 with the understanding it was a 24-hour license. He has spoken with both Johnson's Filling Station and Bonfiglioli's and neither remember a 24-hour station.

Ennis stated three reasons Prime wants a 24-hour license: to sell more gas, not to worry about shift changes and gas stations have a tendency to be robbed. Ennis believes it would be high volume and a little life in the middle of the night may help the neighborhood.

Speaking against: Edward Himmell, 511 Hancock St.; George Kober, 21 Linden St.; Peter Gleba, 540 Hancock St.; and Ward 5 City Councillor Doug Gutro all stating there is no need and the additional hours would create late night noise in the residential area.

Also read into the record by the Chairman were letters and e-mails from area residents Peter Gleba, Diane Mathieson and Edward Budreau, 41 Ellington Rd.; Helen and Fred Ricciardello, 11 Earle St.; and Diane and Todd Leslie, 10 Earle St. And one e-mail in favor from Ilyas and Waseem Khan.

Ennis questioned if he could ask for 5 a.m. til 11 p.m. Chairman Shea noted Prime would need to apply again and appear before the Board.

Agenda 8. Hearing regarding the request of JET Eight Group, LLC, d/b/a The China Restaurant/Sports Bar, 681 Hancock St., Judy Chen, Manager for Transfer of the All Alcoholic Restaurant License and Change of Location previously held by the Rockwell Group, Inc. 291 Newport Ave. Judy Chen and Attorney Dick Gellerman present.

Chairman Shea explained he was not present for the May 24th hearing but has viewed the entire video, listened to all testimony and signed the required affidavit.

Attorney Gellerman submitted an entire application, postal cards verifying abutter notification, corporate filings and Chen's resume. Chen stated her father is not a member or shareholder or involved with Jet Eight and that there will be no gaming or gambling on the premises. The hours of operation requested are 8 a.m. to 1 a.m., Sunday 11 a.m. to 1 a.m.

Neighbors speaking against were:

Chu Chen, 8 Chapman Street, who stated there are already two bars and liquor stores in the area. He asked the Board "Do we really need another? Please reconsider."

George Kober, 21 Linden St., stated "Basically the Zoning Board got it right the first time; it does not fit the character of the Wollaston Area. It's not a good location." He asked the Board to set a closing time that will not disturb the neighborhood.

Soki Chau, 21 Chapman St., asked the Board to reconsider.

Chairman Shea read an e-mail he received from Diane Mathieson and Ed Budreau, 41 Ellington Rd., who state they are also against. Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro, who also testified May 24, noted his position remains in opposition, noting the hours of operation, he asked the Board to consider limiting the hours, no signs, especially roof top signs. He would also oppose an entertainment license.

Director Duca stated the occupancy is under 100 and would not require sprinklers under Mass. General Law.

Attorney Gellerman stated his client would comply with all laws, the seating is listed at 72 with total occupancy of 100.

Deputy Chief Jackson instructed Ms. Chen to contact the Fire Department for permits.

Commissioner Scheele asked for plans and questioned the dumpster and used grease area.

Chairman Shea noted Attorney Gellerman stated Ms. Chen has a stellar record in Canton. He asked Ms. Chen if there were any violations. Ms. Chen stated not in the past five years.

Chairman Shea "I'm looking at an ABCC April 18, 2009 violation at the Asian Restaurant form Jack Carey who testified they served to an underage person." Also letters from Golden China showing they paid a fine and agreed to the facts in lieu of suspension. These letters were dated July 2009.

"You testified you had none. This information was sent from the ABCC not the Town of Canton. "I won't read the other two listed."

Ms. Chen stated "I do remember this."

Commissioner Scheele stated he could not support an 8 a.m. opening, others open at 11 a.m. He added when the plans are submitted Ms. Chen must stay to plan or return to the Board with any changes.

Chief Keenan stated " I don't support this, this is not the right business, it does not prove any public need. I will not support."

The hours of operation, 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. were agreed to by both Ms. Chen, Attorney Gellerman and Board members. Commissioner Scheele noted after a year the hours could be reviewed by the Board.

Motion to grant the request made by Commissioner Scheele, second Director Duca. Chairman Shea took the following 4-1 vote:

Chief Keenan: No

Director Duca: Yes

Commissioner Scheele: Yes

Deputy Chief Jackson: Yes

Chairman Shea: Yes.

Agenda 9. Hearing to discuss neighborhood complaints of odors @ V&S Auto Body, 65 Holbrook Rd., Mr. Damon Tam operator. Hearing requested by Commissioner Scheele.

Commissioner Scheele informed Mr. Tam that he has received complaints of odors and suspects the doors of the spray booth are being left opened. Deputy Chief Jackson noted there were 55-gallon drums not labeled and he needs seal and label and keep a record, his department will be checking. Commissioner Scheele instructed Mr. Tam to the doors closed, and consider today a warning. The Board agreed to place this warning on file.

Agenda 10. Hearing regarding the violation of MGL 138 §34, May 26, 2011 received from Lt. Peter Turowski at Blue 22, 1237 Hancock St. Garvin Chan, Peter Au, present.

Lt. Turowski read his report of the May 26 violation: service of alcohol to a minor. Au stated all employees are TIP's trained and the bartender on duty that night has been re-trained. Chief Keenan directed Au to have all servers check ID's and not to rely on the doormen completely.

Blue 22 has been open for four years without violations. Chief Keenan motioned to place a written warning in the file for one year. Second Director Duca. All in favor.

The next License Board meeting is scheduled Aug. 9.

New Board President, Members Also Elected At At Annual Meeting

QCAP, Inc. Recognizes Extraordinary Community Service

The Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP) Board of Directors honored some of the community's most extraordinary helping hands at its 46th annual meeting and awards ceremony held recently at the Quincy Lodge of Elks.

State Rep. Ron Mariano, Quincy resident Anneli Johnson, Hancock T.V. & Appliance, Braintree Electric Light Department, and QCAP employees were among the honorees.

The Board recognized Rep. Mariano with a 2011 Extra Mile Award, given to community members who go above and beyond in their support of QCAP's mission and its clients. Mariano – who is also the House majority leader – worked tirelessly to ensure that child care resource and referral services were available at the local level to families in need. These services, which include child care subsidies, benefit more than 1,000 children in Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate, and Weymouth.

"I want to thank Rep. Mariano for his tenacious advocacy on behalf of low-income children and their families," said Beth Ann Strollo, QCAP's executive director. "These services are absolutely essential for families to not only maintain employment, but to advance their education and careers so they can lead self-sufficient lives."

The Board also honored Quincy resident Anneli Johnson, founder and manager of the Quincy Farmers' Market, with an individual Extra Mile Award. Thanks to Johnson and her efforts to implement new technology, eligible residents can now use food stamps to purchase produce and farm foods at the stand, improving access to healthy and nutritious food to some of the area's most vulnerable residents.

Organizations receiving Extra Mile Awards were Hancock T.V. & Appliance – represented by Joseph Palumbo, president – for its generosity of spirit and support to QCAP's Head Start holiday gift program and Braintree Electric Light Department (BELD) – represented by Anthony (Tony) Agnitti, chairman – for providing energy conservation measures in the town of Braintree that helped many low-income families save both energy and money.

In addition, Deborah Gray, Head Start Lead Teacher, was presented the Lois Craig Memorial Employee Award, for her exemplary service to QCAP Head Start families and children, and the community.

QCAP employees, Charlotte Currie, Head Start Nutrition Coordinator; Linda Dermady, Head Start Bus Aide; and Helen Ferullo, Head Start Family Service Worker, were honored for 20 years of dedicated service to QCAP's clients.

"I am delighted to celebrate the achievements of some of our unsung heroes," Strollo said. "The honorees have made extraordinary contributions to QCAP, our clients, and the community without expecting any recognition. We thank them for their tireless efforts to improve the quality of life for all community members."

The annual meeting was also marked by the election of Board President Josephine Shea, who was instrumental in securing support and funds needed to establish the new Head Start Early Learning Center in Quincy Point. Shea succeeds Paul Connolly, who was recognized for his years of service and contributions to the agency as the Board President.

"I am honored to follow in Paul Connolly's footsteps," Shea said. "I look forward to leading QCAP as we move into our Head Start Early Learning Center, and as we continue to meet the growing demand for our services in a challenging funding environment.

In addition to Board President Shea, board officers elected include: Vice President Jean Kenney, Treasurer Tim McAloon, Esq., Assistant Treasurer Janet Crowley, and Secretary Grace Raymondi. Other Board members include: Maureen Ayers, Rev. Sheldon Bennett, Michael Berry, Paul Connolly, Judith Farmer, Kevin Glennon, Kevin Matta, Barbara Morris, James Murdoch, Kathryn Murphy, Esq., Linda Perry, and Holly Stokes. New Board member Jean Pike of Weymouth, representing the Lakeview Manor Tenant Association, was inducted at the annual meeting.

Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch congratulated the award winners and applauded the work of QCAP and its staff on behalf of the city's residents. Other notable guests included: Senator John Keenan; Representatives Bruce Ayers, Tackey Chan, Ron Mariano, and Walter Timilty; Quincy City Councilors Kevin Coughlin, Douglas Gutro, Margaret Laforest, Brian Palmucci, and Daniel Raymondi; Weymouth Town Councilor Thomas Lacey; and Jim Quigley representing Congressman William Keating.

MORE FOR YOU HERE AT HOME

South Suburban Oncology Center: 12,000 Quincy Neighbors Have Been Through Our Doors

The team of board-certified radiation oncologists at South Suburban Oncology Center in Quincy, has been treating residents on the South Shore with the most advanced radiation therapy options in New England for more than 15 years. Radiation treatment is often the most time consuming part of cancer treatment, so it makes a big difference to our patients and their support team to receive care close to where they live or work. At South Suburban Oncology Center (SSOC) patients receive the very latest in radiation technology while still maintaining some semblance of normalcy during a time that can be emotionally and physically draining.

Radiation therapy is often recommended because of its ability to effectively and precisely target the tumor, while avoiding the healthy tissue surrounding it. Many residents of Quincy know the benefits of radiation in the treatment of cancer, but surprisingly, many don't know that some of the most powerful, advanced, specialty treatment options are not just available in Boston – but right here in Quincy. In fact, SSOC has pioneered a number of significant advancements in radiation technology that are still only available in select cancer treatment facilities throughout the world.

Electronic Brachytherapy is one such technology, receiving a lot of attention for its effective treatment of early-stage GYN and Breast Cancers. A patient who is eligible for this powerful therapy can finish treatment in just five days – a significant difference over the standard cycle of up to six weeks.

Dr. Katherine Kim of SSOC praises Electronic Brachytherapy, saying, "It's not only very safe and patient friendly, but shows extremely positive results. It takes about 10 minutes, twice a day for five consecutive days, making it a very good option for women with early stage breast or endometrial cancer who qualify for the treatment. SSOC is one of few radiation oncology centers in New England to offer this very advanced technology."

When it comes to beating cancer, it's more than just local access and innovative treatment. It's board-certified physicians and experienced professionals joining to form a team of compassionate care givers; it's collaboration with a patient's surgeon and medical oncologist to create a personalized treatment plan; it's going the extra step by offering free transportation and translation services; and it's exceeding safety and quality assurance standards to ensure the very best patient environment. At SSOC it's about combining it all –technology, compassion, expertise, amenities and safety – to create a convenient center committed to providing the very best care for our patients and their support teams. And we know 12,000 Quincy neighbors who would agree.

*SSOC is accredited by the American College of Radiology, a national organization dedicated to making imaging safe, effective and accessible.

A Job Well Done

On Wednesday, July 13, at approximately 11:50 a.m., Officer Ronald McKim was dispatched to a Wollaston address for a report of a domestic assault and battery that occurred "in the past."

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, the officer met with the 30 year old female victim, who appeared nervous, shaking so bad that when she spoke she stuttered. She stated that she was terrified that her boyfriend was going to return to the apartment later from his job site in South Boston.

Officer McKim calmed the victim and asked what happened. The victim said that they have been dating and living together off and on for the past 8 months. During this period, she discovered that her boyfriend is an alcoholic who becomes violent when he drinks.

She stated that he came home the last night intoxicated. She told him that he would have to start saving money to find another place to live. He immediately became enraged, swearing and yelling at her, followed by pushing her into the bathroom and onto the floor.

The victim said that her hand still hurts from hitting the toilet as she fell. While on the ground, the boyfriend/suspect #1 put his tightly clenched fist up to her face and angrily said, "It is taking all of my power not to punch you now."

She said he was so angry that his mouth was foaming. The suspect backed off and the victim fled to her bedroom, where she remained silent for the rest of the night in fear that he would hit her if she spoke. Officer McKim was able to track down the address where the suspect was working in South Boston and then contacted Boston Police to arrest him if located. The victim said that she did not want the suspect to "ever come back." She stated that she was afraid of what he would do to her if he did.

After Officer McKim reviewed the victim's rights pertaining to domestic violence prevention, the victim told the Officer that this was not the first incident of domestic abuse – it was actually the fourth time that she could remember that he had pushed her when he was drunk. She did call the police in the most recent incident in May, but hid the part about physical abuse. The victim was very concerned that the suspect possessed a key to the apartment and emphatically requested that it be taken from him.

Officer McKim said every effort would be made to get the key, but she should strongly consider changing locks, since the suspect could have duplicate keys. The victim then said that she would get a restraining order against the suspect. She then requested that we inform her if the suspect was arrested and if he gets released. She stated that she was terrified that he was going to come back and harm her.

Officer McKim told her he would let her know if he was arrested, that the Police would make frequent checks in the area and that she should call "911" if she sensed anything was wrong. She stated that he usually gets home between 4:30 and 5 p.m. She was advised to have her cell phone in the ready "911" position in the event she was surprised by the suspect.

At 2:20 P.M., Officer McKim received a call from Boston Police Sergeant Marchant, who stated that the suspect was under arrest by Boston Police Officer R.Lucas. Officer McKim went to Boston Police –Precinct 6 and transported the 44 year old suspect to the Quincy Police Station for booking, on charges of "Domestic Assault and Battery." Officer McKim then called the victim to inform her that both the suspect and the key were in custody. The victim was contacted when the suspect was bailed.

Building Inspector To Discuss Fire Safety Issues With Faxon Park Agents

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The 500 Falls Boulevard apartment complex was overdue for its five-year safety inspection when fire swept through one building July 9th destroying 24 units, according to Building Department records.

Building Inspector Jay Duca said city officials and the owner's agents will discuss this issue and other issues during meetings this week.

According to Duca, the owner's agents are flying in from Houston on Wednesday afternoon to meet with city officials and they have been cooperative since the fire and during the demolition process.

However, the response was not always so speedy before the fire, according to city records.

"We sent out an application for a public safety inspection April 29, 2011," Building Inspector James Anderson said Tuesday. Anderson said those letters are automatically issued for multi-family structures every five years.

Those letters inform owners that a certified professional engineer must inspect the structure and a report must be filed with the Building Department.

After the notice was sent, Anderson said, "We didn't get a response. We sent a violation letter June 17, 2011. We cited them."

That violation letter states the structure "is being occupied without a valid Certificate of Inspection from this office." The letter was sent by certified mail and signed by Anderson. The letter also states building owners have a right to appeal within 45 days.

The owners did not respond to either letter until this week, according to Duca who said his office received the application check and the required application for a Certificate of Inspection on Tuesday (July 19), four weeks after the city's official citation.

Under the state building code, Anderson said the owners of a multi-family residence must hire a licensed professional engineer to inspect each building every five years. "It's up to them to do it."

In fact, the state statute specifically designates the owners as the responsible party. "It is the responsibility of building 'owner' as defined in Chapter 2, to meet the inspection requirements...."

Those inspections focus "primarily on Fire Protection Systems and Life Safety Systems," according to Duca who described emergency lights, exit signs, stair railings and stairways as part of the life safety category.

The fire protection category would include fire alarm systems as well as sprinklers, according to Duca who said, "Those are the main things."

Duca said a building owner could be required to add or improve such measures as stop-drafts to a multi-family building even if those were not part of the code when it was built.

That is likely to be a major issue when Duca and other city officials meet with representatives of SPUSVS Faxon Park LLC this week to discuss issues arising from the fire.

After the fire, Quincy Deputy Fire Chief Joseph Jackson described his concern regarding stopgaps in the upper levels of the building. The state fire marshal is investigating questions regarding the sprinkler system.

Duca said this week that the Faxon Park buildings meet the fire alarm codes and, obviously, worked when needed during the July 9th fire.

As for inquires by the state fire marshal and the city's fire department, Duca said he has not received any reports as of Tuesday.

Efforts to reach representatives of SPUSVS Faxon Park LLC for comment were unsuccessful.

Freeing a Stuck Window

Q: I'm renting an apartment in a 100-year-old building, and the apartment itself hasn't been updated much in the past 20 years or more. One annoying factor is that all of the windows are stuck shut. The landlord told me I'm welcome to make minor repairs or renovations and take the cost out of my rent. But I'm a little worried about breaking these very old windows in trying to open them. Any suggestions? – Daniel T., Brockton, Mass.

A: Because of the age of the windows, a number of factors could be in play that are keeping those windows lodged shut. Previous tenants or owners may have tried to seal the windows shut, for whatever reason; layers and layers of paint on the surrounding frame may have inadvertently sealed them; or the wood of either the frame or the sash may have swollen due to water damage or age. Many century-old homes in your area still have the old weight-and-rope-pulley system which assists in smooth lifting of the windows; if the pulley and rope are disconnected, the window is that much harder to lift.

With all of these factors in mind, closely survey all of the stuck windows from the inside and outside. Look at the gap between the window and the frame; is there material like paint or silicone caulk joining the two? Insert a wide-bladed putty knife into the sealed section and gently wiggle back and forth to loosen the connection. You may need to do this around the entire window where it meets the frame.

If the material is silicone-based caulk, removing it can be difficult. Check at your local home improvement store for a caulk remover, rather than trying to cut or chip it away from the wood.

Once you've loosened up all the visibly sealed areas, if the window still won't open, bring in the muscle. From the outside of the window (if possible), insert a pry bar under the sash. Place a small block of wood on the window ledge to use as leverage and to protect the window surface. Slowly apply pressure to the pry bar to lift the window, being careful not to damage the sash.

Another method to try is to place a two-by-four against the sash, then tap the board with a hammer to try and loosen the window.

Once the window is unstuck, lift it and remove or fold out the lower window to inspect it. Check for swollen or weak wood in the window and the frame, which indicates the window may need replacement. Built-up paint layers should be scraped down a layer or two and sanded (wear a filter mask and goggles for this).

If the windows simply need a bit of TLC and not replacement, once you're done sanding and cleaning them, add weatherstripping along the sides of the frame and the bottom of the sash. In older homes, this inexpensive touch can noticeably lower your heating and cooling bills.

HOME TIP: Got a tiny puncture in a window screen? Use an awl or pick to straighten out the screen strands, then dab a few coats of clear nail polish over the repair.

Conway Sponsors Real Estate Technology Conference

Jack Conway, Realtor recently sponsored and participated in Real Estate Bar Camp Boston 2011.

The unique technology seminar drew hundreds of local real estate professionals to the Back Bay Events Center for day-long learning and networking. Several Conway agents and members of the management team joined the event.

"We were so excited to be a part of this, and proud to be a sponsor," said Conway Regional Manager Peter Ruffini. "It was a chance to learn and hear from some really knowledgeable and innovative people in the industry."

The concept for RE BarCamp came from a technology BarCamp event held in San Francisco. Wikipedia defines a barcamp as: an international network of user generated conferences – open, participatory workshop-events, whose content is provided by participants. Every session is not planned out in advance. Nobody is paid to deliver a session. Anybody can deliver a session and attendees are strongly encouraged to participate.

Don't Let Down Your Financial Guard

Depending on which pundit you listen to, the news on the economic front still isn't good. Purchases of homes are still down. There was a small upward blip in advance of the tax credit for homebuyers coming to an end, but then the figures and prices fell again. Consumer confidence is still down, and not too many people are expecting to buy big-ticket items soon.

Still, if you know where to look and are willing to take small changes as indications of a recovering economy, it's possible to find hope:

• More shipping containers are being processed in ports. More trucking companies are hiring drivers. Stores wouldn't be ordering merchandise unless there was an indication that consumers will buy.

• Small local banks in many parts of the country are posting profits again, no longer barely hanging on.

• In a survey by Advantage magazine of small business owners comparing 2010 with 2011, fewer owners think we're still in a recession, a higher number expect revenue to be as good as last year, the majority plan to keep staff and approximately one-quarter even plan to hire.

• Divorce rates are rising again. Think about it: It takes some confidence in the financial aspect of one's life to file for divorce. There's the house (Will it sell? Is there any money to divide up?), the prospect of paying alimony (Is there enough job security to make alimony possible?) and the division of assets. The emotional aspect should be included here: If it's perceived that the bad financial times are over, maybe having a partner isn't as important now.

Even if the news were all bad, it's still possible to live a secure and contented life in spite of the economic news.

Your own money plan should continue as it has for the past few years. Your goal should be to spend as little as possible. Save every dollar you can, ideally in an interest-bearing account, until you have your rainy day fund. You should know within $10 what your actual bills are each month. Keep credit-card debt low or nonexistent so you're not spending money on interest and fees. Take care of your health, reduce stress and get exercise daily. Focus on friends and family, and look for free activities. Keep your vehicle in good shape to avoid expensive repairs.

Just don't let down your financial guard – not yet.

Improved To 2-0 In South Sectional Round With 8-1 Victory Over Hyde Park Post 78

Morrisette One Win Away From American Legion State Finals

By SEAN BRENNAN

Morrisette Post 294 moved to within one victory of advancing into this weekend's American Legion Eight Team State Championship at Riverside Park in Hudson following a relatively easy 8-1 win over Hyde Park Post 78 Monday afternoon at Adams Field.

Post 294 improved to 2-0 in sectional bracket play after defeating Hyde Park for the third time this season – Post 294 knocked off Hawkeye Post (East Bridgewater) on Sunday night, 15-3. Morrisette, as of Tuesday, needed one win to move onto the next phase of the 2011 American Legion playoffs.

Starting pitcher Luke Barkowski (six innings, six hits, win) was dominantly efficient. Staked to a 4-0 lead after one inning, Barkowski pounded the strike zone as he let the defense behind him make the routine plays. Hyde Park threatened in the early innings but the young righty escaped a two-on, one-out threat in the first inning and a two-on, one-out situation in the second before the Morrisette offense behind the slugging of first baseman Matt Goreham (3-for-3, 1B, 2B, 3B, two runs) blew the sectional game wide open with a four-run third inning that gave Barkowski an 8-0 advantage to work with.

"The fielders behind me were great today," Barkowski said. "(Hyde Park) is a great hitting team but I knew the guys behind me were going to get the job done if I let them put the ball in play."

"We are a great offensive team and it was great going out there in the second inning with a 4-0 lead," he continued about his team, which scored 23 runs against Hawkeye and Hyde Park combined. "We are coming together at the right time. Our hitting is putting up monster runs and the pitching is shutting teams down all day; we are clicking at the perfect time."

Hyde Park came into the game on a high. Post 78 had upset No. 1 Somerset, 12-11, Sunday afternoon and had already defeated a high-powered Walpole team in the District 6 best-of-three round last week. Leadoff batter Ryan Connelly grounded out to start the game but Barkowski allowed a one-out single to Shane O'Leary followed with a walk to Todd MacDonald. With two runners on, the BC High product got cleanup batter Gavin Pittore to tap into a double play ending the early threat.

Just as Post 294 had done Sunday evening versus Hawkeye Post (11 first inning runs), the offense gave its starting pitcher an early cushion with a four-run bottom of the first. Shortstop Colin Ryan (on base three times, two runs) walked with one out and scored on Goreham's deep triple to right off of Pittore. Third baseman Joe Alibrandi's (2-for-4, two RBI) double plated Goreham with the second run before catcher Malcolm Kelly (1-for-3, RBI) walked. Both Alibrandi and Kelly came around to score on pass balls by Pittore.

Barkowski allowed a lead off single to Brad Petitpas to open the second and Mike Larocque's one-out base hit gave Hyde Park the two-on, one-out opportunity. However, Barkowski bore down and got Mike McKie and Jake Naughton to fly out to end the inning.

Pittore got Morrisette's Mike Stille, Chris Connolly and Nelson in order and the bottom of the frame and Barkowski worked around an error and hit batsman in the top of the third to send the contest into the bottom of the inning with Post 294 up 4-0.

The Suffolk-bound Ryan got the four-run third inning rally started by taking a fastball off the numbers. Goreham walked and Alibrandi singled home Ryan. Goreham and Kelly moved up a bag following a wild pitch and both scored on a single by Kelly who eventually came around to score on another wild pitch by Pittore.

"Batting third you see a lot of curve balls and off-speed (pitches)," said Goreham who later would add a walk and a single to his shat sheet. "My first at-bat I just went with the pitch and it carried to right. My other at-bats I just hit it hard. Top to bottom everyone gets on base and it is also good knowing that I got Joey (Alibrandi) hitting behind me."

Barkowski retired Hyde Park 1-2-3 in the fourth and Morrisette went quietly during the bottom half of the inning. In the fifth, Post 78 loaded the bases with no outs on a walk and two consecutive singles but Barkowski was relentless. He got MacDonald to ground out Alibrandi to Kelly at the plate and then closed the door by getting Pittore to ground into a double play.

"Luke did a good job for us today," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze. "When you get a lead the ball just seems to find the plate and now you just throw the ball and it helps when your team turns double plays. He did a great job."

Morrisette had a chance to expand its lead in the fifth as Bob Kozlowski walked, second baseman Leroy Wallace singled and Connolly walked to load the bases with two out but Greg Nelson lost a foot race to the first base bag to end the threat.

Barkowski finished his six-inning outing by getting Petitpas to fly out, and after allowing a single to Mike Pisano, he got pinch hitter Dan Segal to ground into another inning ending double play.

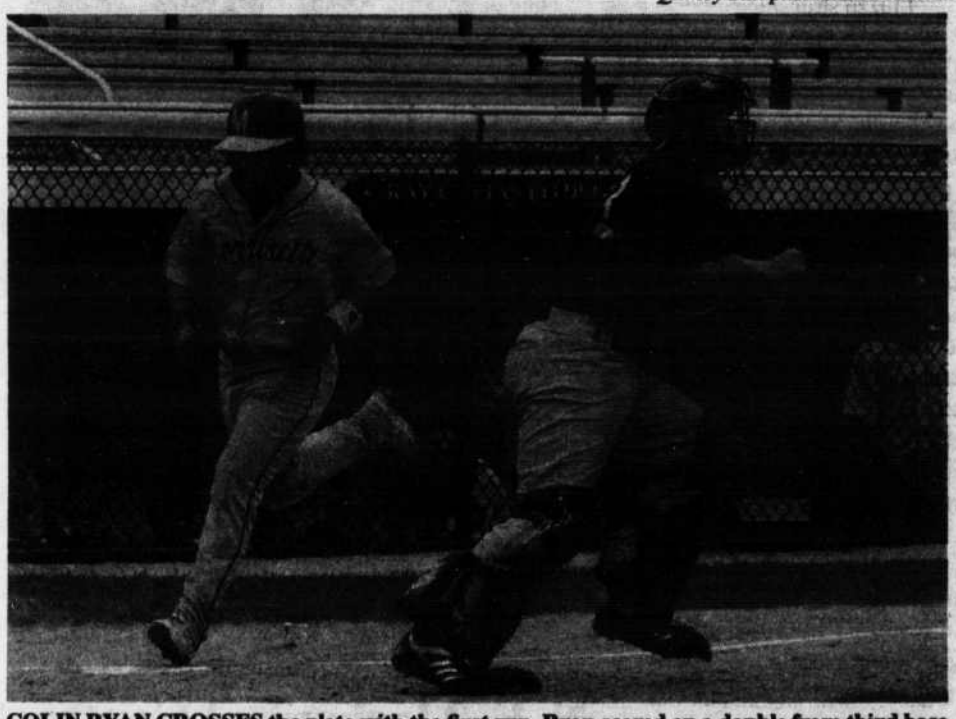

Pitchers Tommy McDonald (inning, run) and Jack Higgins (two innings) threw effectively for Post 294 in relief of Barkowski as Morrisette dropped it into cruise control late in the game, winning going away 8-1.

"We are 2-0 and in the driver's seat in the sectional round," stated Maze. "A team now has to beat us twice and that is not easy at all."

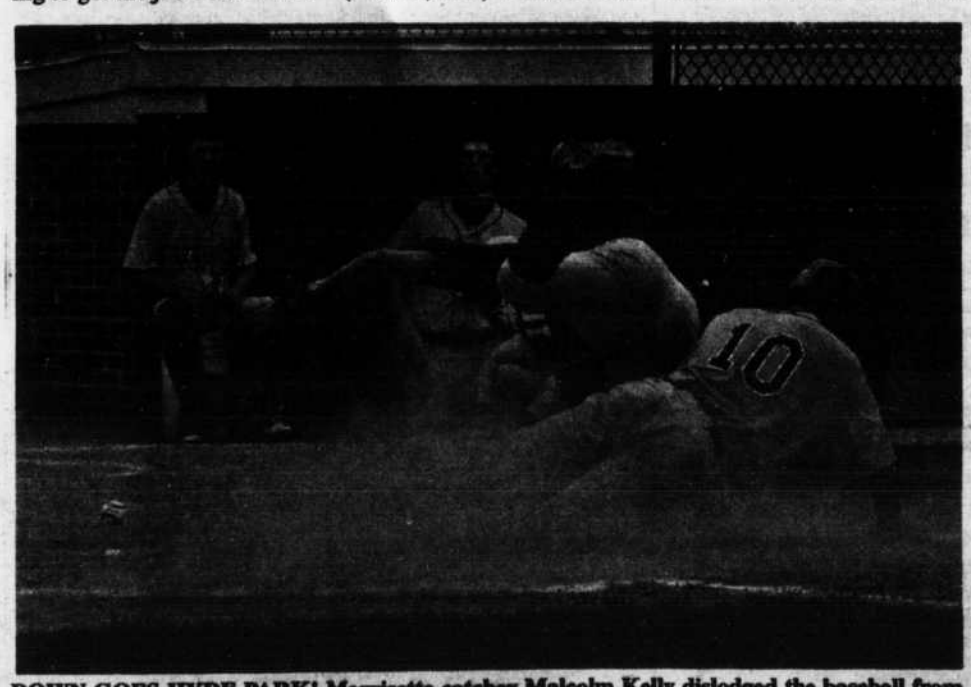

LEROY WALLACE SLIDES safely into second base during Morrisette Post 294's 8-1 victory over Hyde Park Post 78 on Monday afternoon at Adams Field. Morrisette needs one more win in the sectional round to advance into the Massachusetts state finals this weekend at Riverside Park in Hudson.

Quincy Sun photos/Lisa Aimola

COLIN RYAN CROSSES the plate with the first run. Ryan scored on a double from third baseman Joe Alibrandi as Post 294 jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning.

DOWN GOES HYDE PARK! Morrisette catcher Malcolm Kelly dislodged the baseball from Hyde Park catcher Mike LaRocque during the first inning of Post 294's 8-1 win at Adams Field. Kelly added a RBI single in the third inning.

One More Win For Morrisette Means...

At press time Cyril P. Morrisette Post 294 was in the driver's seat in the race for a South Sectional bracket title. With its 2-0 record following wins over Hawkeye Post (East Bridgewater) 15-3 on Sunday night and Hyde Park Post 78, 8-1, on Monday afternoon Post 294 needed one victory to advance onward.

Undefeated Morrisette played a 4 p.m. game on Tuesday at James Sullivan Field in Somerset against the winner of the Somerset/Hyde Park game, which was played at 1 p.m. A win Tuesday would have moved Post 294 into the Massachusetts Final Eight Team Department Championship Tournament, which begins Saturday at Riverside Park in Hudson. Had Morrisette lost on Tuesday than Somerset/Hyde Park and Post 294 would have played a win-or-go-home elimination game Wednesday.

The sectional tournament is a double-elimination, round robin format with three brackets of four teams. The top three teams from each bracket advance to the state championship. No. 2 Morrisette was in a bracket with Somerset (No. 1), Hawkeye (No. 3) and Hyde Park (No. 4).

The upcoming state finals is an eight-team, double elimination event. The eventual Massachusetts champion moves forward to the Northeast Regional Tournament in Old Orchard Beach, Maine beginning Aug. 4.

The ultimate goal for every legion team is the 2011 American Legion World Series. This year's Series is being held in Shelby, North Carolina starting Aug. 12.

After Falling Behind 3-0 Team Scored 11 Runs In The First Inning; Won The Game 15-3 In Seven Innings at Adams Field

Morrisette Post 294 Unloads On Hawkeye Legion In Sectionals

By SEAN BRENNAN

Hawkeye Post of East Bridgewater got in the first jab against starting pitcher Tim Liuzzo Sunday night at Adams Field in the opening game of the South Sectional bracket tournament, but Liuzzo, with the support of the Morrisette offense, took the blow and responded with a series of left and rights to knock Hawkeye Legion out in seven innings, 15-3.

Liuzzo struggled early. He allowed a base hit to Casey DeAndrade to open the first and after inducing Nick Cogliano into a fielder's choice walked Dan Brodie. A double-steal scored DeAndrade and Mike Marshall drove in Cogliano with a single - he later scored on a base hit from Will Lucini (3-0). Another hit and another walk placed two runners on with one out but Liuzzo finally found his groove and got out of trouble with a double play.

The early attack on Liuzzo did not sit well with Morrisette's offense as they took out their displeasure with authority on Brodie in the bottom of the first. Sixteen batters, eight hits and eleven runs later the rout was on and the game was all but over.

Greg Nelson (2-for-4) reached on an error and advanced to second on a balk. Matt Goreham (two hits, RBI) singled with one out and Joe Alibrandi (four hits, three RBI) plated Nelson with a base hit to left. Malcolm Kelly (two hits, two RBI) scored Goreham and Bob Kozlowski (two hits, three RBI) doubled home Alibrandi and Kelly for a 4-3 lead. After Leroy Wallace (RBI) reached on Hawkeye's second error of the first, Mike Stille walked. Chris Connolly would reach on another error, which scored two more runs and Nelson followed with a RBI double.

Liuzzo allowed a lead off single to CJ Haddad to begin the second, a lead off single to Lucini to start the third and a two-out walk to Lucini in the fifth but besides that he was spectacular throughout his six innings of work. Liuzzo ended his outing by retiring 15 of the last 18 batters he faced. By utilizing his fastball to set up his off-speed pitches, the right-hander keep Hawkeye Legion off balance and his offense did the rest.

"Timmy gave up three runs early," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze. "I don't know if it was nerves or maybe too much rest. He had been complaining that his shoulder was a little tight and he may have had a tough time getting it loose but as soon as we got into that second inning he settled down and got into a groove. He did a great job."

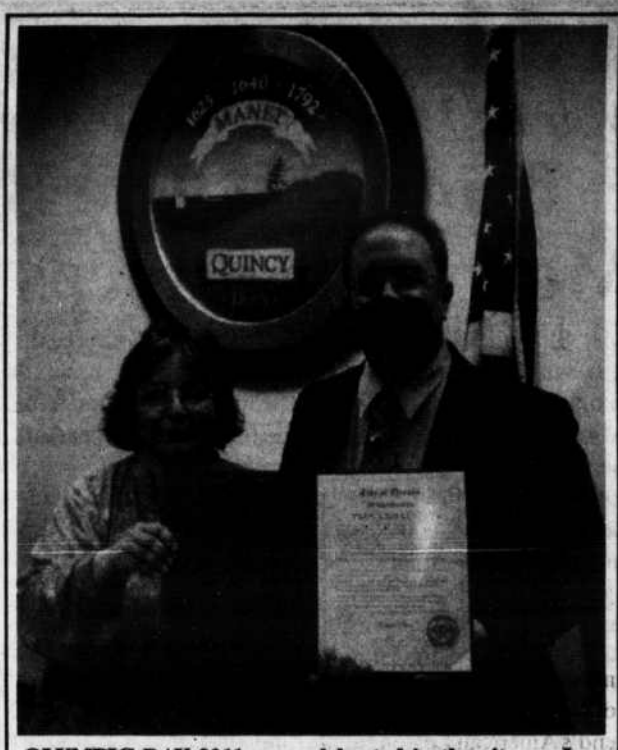

In the sectional round the games extend from seven to nine innings unless one team holds a ten-run advantage after seven innings played. Morrisette made sure that everyone would get home earlier than expected by scoring a single run in the fourth, two runs in the fifth and one run in the sixth (15-3).

Stille drew a two-out walk off reliever Brendan Galvin in the fourth and advanced to second on a balk. Connolly drove him in with a clutch double. In the bottom of the fifth Alibrandi started a two-out rally with a single, which was followed by Kelly reaching base after being plunked in the leg. Kozlowski singled home Alibrandi (13-3) and Wallace scored Kelly with a clean hit to center (14-3). In Morrisette's half of the sixth Ryan drew a one-out walk and scored on another two-out double from Alibrandi (15-3).

"We hit it today," stated Maze after Post 294 racked out 14 hits. "Hits are contagious and my guys are momentum players. You get a hit then the next guy gets a hit. Once that happens and my guys start barking from the dugout it makes the other team start to think too much."

Morrisette's Tom McDonald relieved Liuzzo to start the top of the seventh needing just three outs to close the game out based on the ten-run slaughter rule. DeAndrade reached on an error by Goreham at first base but was gunned down by Kelly attempting to swipe second base for the first out. Cogliano and Brodie connected on back-to-back singles but McDonald threw Marshall a sinking fastball that was pounded into the infield dirt for a game-ending double play.

The victory placed Post 294 into the winner's bracket along with Hyde Park Post 78, which had defeated Somerset, 12-11, on Sunday. Morrisette knocked off Hyde Park, 8-1, Monday afternoon to grab a stranglehold on the bracket title.

Clinched Zone 6 Best-of-Three Playoff Series With An 11-1 Victory; Won Game One, 7-6

Bring Out The Brooms: Morrisette Sweeps Franklin

CATCHER MALCOLM KELLY shows the umpire the baseball after tagging out Franklin's Tyler Buck at the plate to end the top of the third inning during Game One of the best-of-three playoff series at Adams Field. Kelly and Morrisette won Game One, 7-6, and knocked out Franklin with an 11-1 thrashing in Game Two on July 14. Kelly finished the series-clincher with six RBI.
Quincy Sun photos/Lisa Aimola

By SEAN BRENNAN

Starting pitcher Matt Goreham (six innings, win) and catcher Malcolm Kelly (four hits, six RBI) lifted Morrisette Post 294 over Franklin Post 119, 11-1, in Game Two of the American Legion Zone 6 best-of-three playoff series last Thursday afternoon at Franklin High School.

The victory capped off Post 294's 2-0 series win over Post 119 (Morrisette won Game One, 7-6 – see story below) and advanced them into Sunday night's double-elimination, round robin sectional round. Morrisette improved to 17-3 with this series-clinching result.

Goreham opened the scoring assault with a two-out home run in the top of the first. After leadoff hitter Chris Connolly and shortstop Colin Ryan struck out against Franklin's Bobby Chaiton, the big righty blasted a deep four-bagger to right field to give the visitors an early 1-0 advantage. Cleanup batter Joe Alibrandi followed with a walk and stole second before advancing to third on a wild pitch. Kelly's first hit of the contest drove in Alibrandi with the game's second run (2-0).

Goreham brought his long ball momentum to the hill to start his outing and with the help of solid team defense, including three double plays turned, rolled through the first five innings unscathed. With Goreham dealing, Morrisette's Mike Stille led off the top of the second with a walk before stealing second and scoring on a one-out single from Connolly (3-0). Ryan followed with another walk and Goreham drove in Connolly (4-0) with a base hit. With two outs, Kelly came through again smacking a two-run double into the gap (6-0) scoring Ryan and Goreham.

Morrisette scored an additional three runs in the top of the fourth (9-0) and Kelly drove in Alibrandi, whose double had scored Ryan (walk), with a single to close the scoring. Goreham allowed a single run in the sixth before reliever Jack Higgins pitched a perfect 1-2-3 bottom of the seventh to finish off Post 119.

The series opener between Morrisette Post 294 and Franklin Post 119 ended up being a 7-6 walk in the park for the boys from Quincy.

The long and winding road ended when shortstop Colin Ryan (1-for-2, RBI, run, BB, HBP) took a five-pitch walk with one out and the bases loaded in the bottom of the seventh, which scored left fielder Tim Liuzzo (2-for-3, run) with the winning run; Liuzzo had led off the inning by beating out an infield single.

Top-seeded Post 294 struggled to generate any offense in the early innings. Morrisette missed a golden opportunity in the bottom of the first after starting pitcher Sam Lawlor (two-plus innings, four runs) set down Franklin in the top of the frame. After leadoff batter Chris Connolly grounded out to first base, Ryan roped a single to left and Matt Goreham (2-for-4, two runs) followed with a single of his own. After third baseman Joe Alibrandi (3-for-4, RBI, two runs, SB) moved the runners along with a ground out to first, catcher Malcolm Kelly (2-for-3, RBI, run) struck out on a fastball from Tyler Buck.

Lawlor began his second inning by fanning Buck before getting Brandon Eccher to fly out to center. A single from Jared Kuzio was followed by a strikeout of Reed Turgeon.

But Morrisette, again, in the bottom of the second let Buck off the mat. Bob Kozlowski (2-for-4, two RBI) struck out to begin the inning; Liuzzo reached on an error before being forced out at second on a fielder's choice from right fielder Mike Stille. A single by second baseman Leroy Wallace (1-for-3, BB) put two runners on but Buck got Connolly to ground out 5-to-3.

Franklin drew first blood in the top of the third. Lawlor induced Jake O'Rourke into a 6-to-3 putout for the first out, but then the wheels began to fall off. Lawlor hit Steve Gilbert with a breaking ball before Mike Householder doubled Gilbert in with the game's first run. Brendan Skidmore then singled in Householder (2-0), Brian Campbell advanced Skidmore with a base hit, and Buck laid down a perfect bunt to load the bases. A free pass to Eccher made it 3-0 and a sacrifice fly by Kuzio put Post 119 up 4-0.

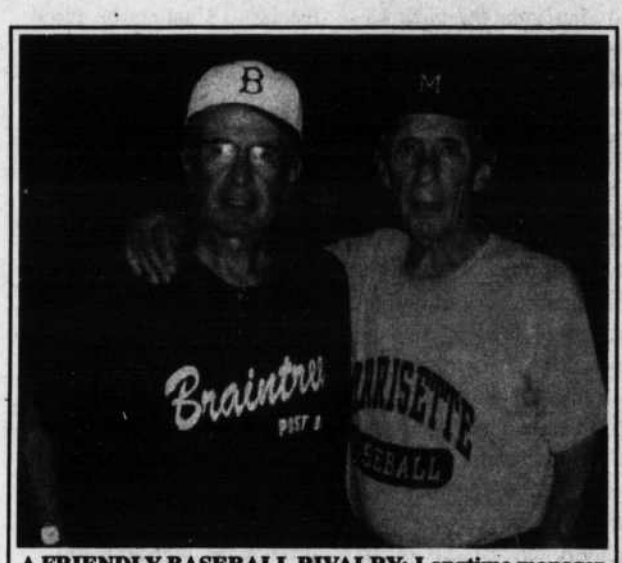

Morrisette escaped further damage with an outstanding defense play by Liuzzo. Turgeon singled to left, but Liuzzo, playing shallow, fired the relay to Ryan who sent a pea to Kelly at the plate to cut down Buck trying to score.

As they have all season, Morrisette responded to adversity with a bang. Ryan led off the bottom of the third with a walk, advanced to second on an error by Buck and came around to score on consecutive wild pitches (4-1). Goreham singled, Alibrandi singled and Kelly walked to lead the bases. Kozlowski plated Goreham and Alibrandi with a base hit to cut Franklin's lead to 4-3.

"We are a team that has been a rollercoaster (all season)," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze. "We have been quiet until someone gives us a spark and then we go. The same thing happened tonight. I came back to the dugout after the first couple of innings and just kept saying 'timely hitting, timely hitting' and eventually you are going to break through."

After allowing a leadoff single to O'Rourke to start the top of the fourth, Lawlor was relieved by Tommy McDonald (three innings, run, K, BB) who proceeded to sit down Gilbert, Householder and Skidmore to end the frame. Morrisette went quietly in its half of the inning as Buck got Connolly, Ryan and Goreham in order.

McDonald escaped a jam in the fifth after allowing back-to-back singles to Campbell and Buck by rearing back and striking out Eccher and getting Kuzio to tap out Ryan-to-Goreham and Turgeon to ground out to Goreham unassisted.

Alibrandi led off the bottom of the fifth with a single, but was caught leaning the wrong way and was picked off first base by Buck. However, Kelly and Kozlowski followed with back-to-back singles with Kelly eventually scoring the tying run (4-4) on an error by Franklin.

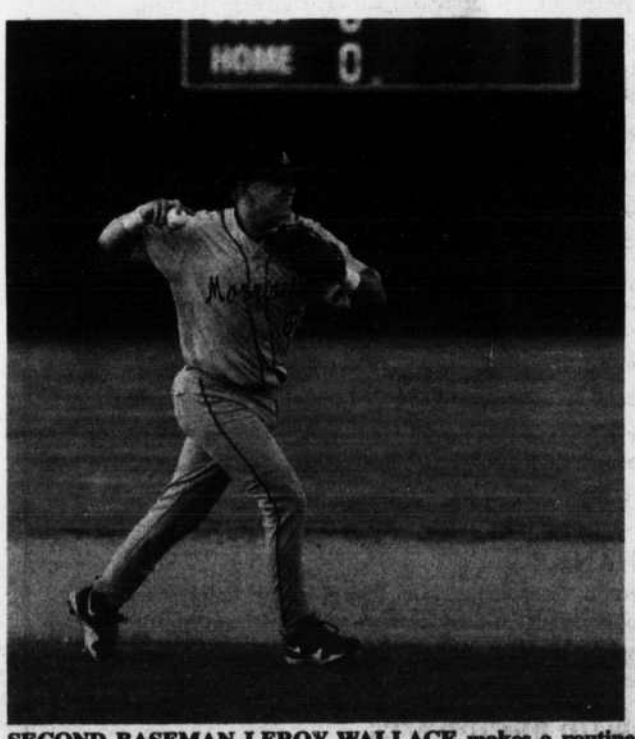

Post 119 regained the lead off McDonald in the top of the sixth. A one-out walk to Gilbert and subsequent wild pitch put the runner at second. Householder tapped a fastball to Alibrandi for the second out and things looked good for Morrisette. But a three-base error by Stille in right field – the sinking line drive glanced off his glove – scored Gilbert. To Stille's credit, he chased down the baseball and zipped it to Ryan on the outfield grass; Ryan turned and fired a strike in time to Kelly at home to get Skidmore who was attempting to score.

Trailing 5-4, Connolly struck out to start the bottom of the sixth before Ryan was plunked by a Buck fastball. Goreham forced Ryan at second on a fielder's choice, but with two outs, Alibrandi doubled home Goreham (5-5) and Kelly singled home Alibrandi (6-5), giving Morrisette its first lead of the game.

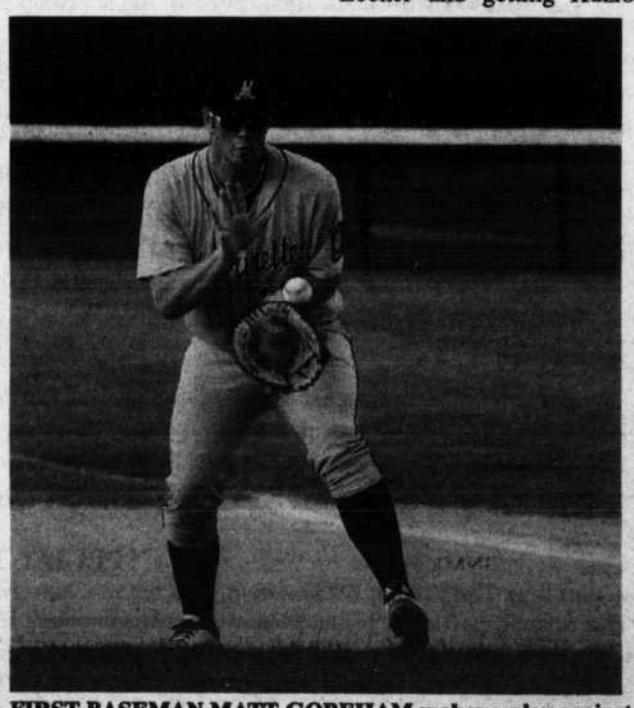

With three outs to go, Post 294 closer Jack Higgins relieved McDonald. Campbell (three hits) greeted Higgins with a double to left. The young righty got Buck to pop out to Goreham for the first out but pinch hitter Hunter Taute scored Campbell with a clean base hit to center (6-6). Higgins escaped further damage by getting Kuzio (ground out) and Turgeon (strikeout) to end the threat.

Franklin replaced Buck with Brendan Kuzio in the seventh and Kuzio just did not have it. Liuzzo singled; pinch hitter Greg Nelson laid down a sacrifice bunt – Liuzzo to second; Wallace walked; Connolly walked and Ryan drew a walk to score Liuzzo with the winning run.

"If you aren't going to throw strikes, we are not going to swing the bat," Maze said matter-of-factly. "Franklin did a great job tonight. They are a good team and they are not a five seed. They are better than that."

SECOND BASEMAN LEROY WALLACE makes a routine play during Post 294's 7-6 win over Post 119 on July 12 at Adams Field.

FIRST BASEMAN MATT GOREHAM makes a play against Franklin. Goreham pitched six strong innings in Game Two earning the win and also hit a home run to lift Morrisette into the sectional round, which started Sunday night.

DA Morrissey's Summer Basketball Camp Also About Passing Messages To Kids

Norfolk Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey recently held his first Quincy Summer Basketball camp for about 30 youngsters from Germantown and around the city, in an effort to fill their summers with positive messages and positive experiences.

"There are plenty of drills and scrimmages, but we are also providing a steady diet of information and talking about growing up safe and strong in the City of Quincy," Morrissey said after spending part of the morning shooting around and talking with the youngsters, grades 3 through 8, in the gym of his alma mater, North Quincy High School.

The camp also included visits from Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti and two of the canine officers who work for his department, along with a dramatic demonstration of drug sniffing dogs and the work they do.

"We had Paul Bregoli, the girls' soccer coach at North talking with the kids," Morrissey said. "We also had Mike Jackman and Jim Quigley from Cong. Bill Keating's staff – Quigley is a Quincy kid, and a past coach of the JV Basketball team at Quincy High."

Community Policing Officer Matt Miller also came in to talk with the group.

In addition, Quincy High basketball coach David Parry worked with the kids and North Quincy High's new girls' basketball coach, Jessica Worden, brought a couple of her players to talk about making the right decisions and the success that can bring," Morrissey said.

Coach Bregoli said that the theme of his talk was that "the road to success is marked with tempting parking spaces," like skipping school and doing other things that kids themselves sense are not right. But that kids have the choice to continue forward and leave those parking spots behind.

"This camp started with the previous district attorney and I like the concept," Morrissey said. "Money that is forfeited by drug dealers and others who have made the wrong decisions is repurposed to help good kids stay good kids and make the right decisions."

GOOD REASONS TO LOSE WEIGHT

It makes sense that the less weight one carries, the less stress is placed on one's entire musculoskeletal system. It comes as little surprise, then, that a recent study shows that losing even a little weight can prove beneficial to those suffering from back and musculoskeletal pain. When researchers assessed pain levels among 32 obese and overweight women, they found that losing as few as ten pounds made a significant difference. Over a 12-week period, the women lost an average of ten pounds, which led to a 20% to 30% reduction in pain in their upper and lower backs, knees, hips, and elbows, as well as overall pain. SCOTT DEWARE

Life is filled with uncertainties. One never knows what is around the corner. This often fills us with a sense of fear, or undue anxiety. On the other hand the uncertainty of life can be inspiring. Walking across a meadow makes us aware of the surprises nature has for us. The beauty of the sights, the happy songs of the birds, the sounds we encounter are but a few of the unexpected and happy surprises we encounter.

Whenever the pattern of life becomes too dull we have a tendency to add our own elements of mystery and drama. Athletic contests, the 'who dunit' novel, amusement centers, the desire to explore are some of the ways we create exciting experiences. We crave the challenge, the excitement of the unexpected. On the other hand, we would like to have certain guarantees with life. Some have suggested that they would enjoy having some guarantee of success in their chose profession. Yet what if happiness could be assured in every marriage. . . what if we were guaranteed a life of moral, spiritual and intellectual perfection? Or, that every prayer would be answered with a yes? Couldn't life be boring if this were so? . . The certainty of life is that God is with us. He will provide all we need to overcome the events of life that would otherwise shatter us. This we hold on to in all adventures, disappointments, joys and the sorrows of life.

A funeral service for Donald M. Deware, 95, of Quincy, was conducted Monday at St. Chrysostom's Episcopal Church in Quincy.

Beach Guide Offers Tips On Dips generosity.

Postcard shots of Mound Beach in 1911, Perry Beach in 1912 and Manet Beach, 1913, are among the cover photos while inside the booklet is a 1930 snapshot at Squantum's Nickerson Beach as well as a collage of action shots from the 2011 John Hancock Plunge.

Not only does the guide offer a good dose of humor, and activities, but more importantly, it provides a handy reference with four months of tide charts and a rundown on laws on boating, fishing and beaches as well as phone numbers for federal, state and city offices.

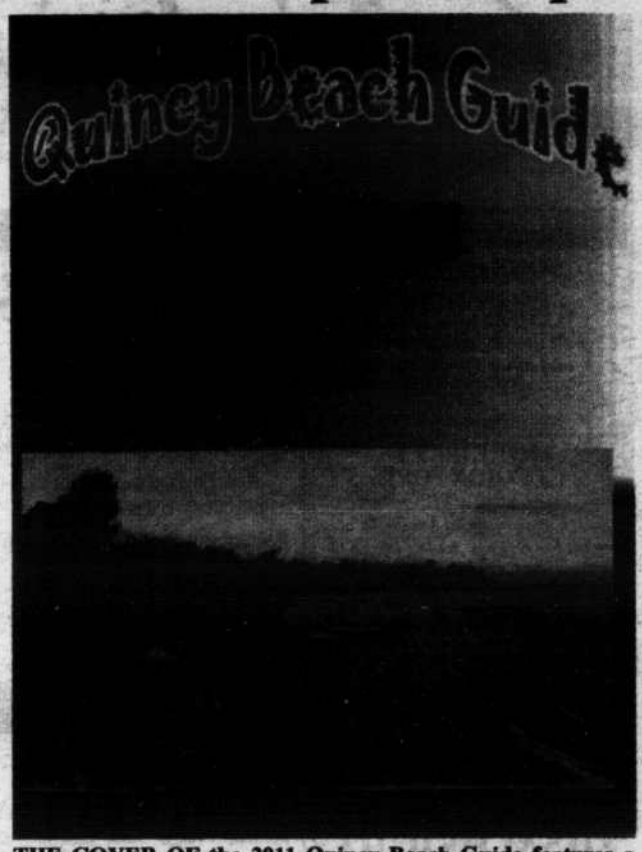

Every year, the guide's popularity grows, according to Kelly who said, "People are starting to do more at the beaches."

Kelly, along with Commissioner Richard Herbert, delivers guide copies to local stores, restaurants, the Adams historical sites, and libraries and they are always welcomed. Copies are also available at the front counter of The Quincy Sun office, 1372 Hancock St., Quincy Center.

"When I bring them in, they take them right out of my hand," Kelly said of the response to the guide at local stores and restaurants.

The guide describes all 13 of the city's beaches and includes directions as well as information on parking, nearby playgrounds, building sand castles, T access, harbor views and picnic facilities as well as the water test results posted in 2010. All but Wollaston Beach are operated by the City of Quincy.

However, if you do visit these beaches, learn your beach manners, according to the guide.

THE COVER OF the 2011 Quincy Beach Guide features a 1906 color postcard of Manet Beach looking toward the Quincy Yacht Club. The postcard is from the collection of City Historian Tom Galvin.

"Don't feed the gulls," notes one section in which readers are encouraged to respect the beaches and "Leave nothing on the beach, except footprints." Other sections warn of dumping not only in the ocean, but, also on beaches and in storm drains as the run-off of street waste and trash contaminate the ocean.

While the guide has strong messages describing laws, the guide intersperses them with a dash of humor and lively illustrations, such as a mini-shot of England's Princess Eugenia displaying "the hat," not to wear at the beach and, in another section, the warning: "Just like fish, people get into trouble when they open their mouths."

Kelly praised Commissioner Kristen Awed-Ladas for this year's success, stating she had worked hard editing and designing this year's guide and cited Commissioner Chickie Abdallah, Treasurer, for her work creating or locating the crossword, maze and word puzzles.

In the next few weeks, the Beach Commission will hold a kite festival at Pageant Field and movies at Mound Street Beach, according to Kelly who said that Commissioner Margaret Milne is also planning an event featuring telescopes.

"Mayor Koch has been an asset to us," said Kelly, stating that Koch has consistently encouraged the commission's activities.

Kelly has headed the commission since its founding 15 years ago during the administration of Mayor James Sheets.

During those years, he also served as Ward 1 city councillor but chose not to run in 2010 for a tenth term. Despite a near-fatal illness last winter, Kelly said he's fit now at 79-years-old and excited about the commission's work.

Serving with Kelly on the commission for the past ten years is Vice-Chairman Doug Gutro, Ward 5 City Councillor, and a founder of Friends of Wollaston Beach.

On July 12, Gutro succeeded in having the council accept a donation from the Copeland Foundation of $2500, which will allow additional signage and activities on Wollaston Beach.

Regional Trash Collection, Single-Stream Recycling Key

Waste Down, Recycling Up

Quincy residents are throwing away 3,400 tons less in garbage and recycling 1,100 tons more of their household waste after the first three years of the City's innovative regional trash collection contract and single-stream recycling program, Mayor Tom Koch announced Tuesday.

"This is tremendous progress in a very short period of time, and it is a credit to our residents who are without question making a conscious decision to throw away less and recycle more," said Mayor Koch. "This is a program that makes it easier for residents to recycle –

City Auction Raises $192,000

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Last week's auction of foreclosed properties raised nearly $200,000 for the city's General Fund, but that get-tough tactic has had a ripple effect on other tax delinquents, according to City Treasurer Deborah Coughlin and Assistant City Solicitor Paul Hines.

"It certainly highlights that the city is ready to take action," said Coughlin, noting that about 10 property owners have settled old tax bills since word of the auction spread.

"People come in with checks," said Hines who described a $96,000 payment in April that covered taxes due since 2005.

Coughlin said other payments have been considerably lower than the $96,000 and she described an owner

House Majority Leader Says New Bridge 'Will Be A Reality'; Mariano Also Comments On Expanded Gambling, Re-Districting

Vertical Lift Design Eyed For New Fore River Bridge

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

The new Fore River Bridge that connects Quincy and Weymouth via Route 3A could be a vertical lift design to accommodate more sailing vessels with reduced bridge openings, State Rep. and House Majority Leader Ron Mariano says.

"The (new) bridge is going to happen. We're battling a little bit on the design with the Coast Guard and Mass Highway and trying to get a design that everyone can live with. But the bridge is going to be a reality," Mariano said in a recent interview with The Sun.

RON MARIANO

A vertical life bridge – which operates like the current temporary bridge that some have likened to an "erector set" – provides faster openings than the previous draw bridge. But Mariano said a permanent vertical lift would be more aesthetically pleasing than the temporary bridge that is there now.

"The erector set is going to come down and we're going to have something that looks like a bridge and we can be proud of. It may not be exactly the same as what was there but we don't want exactly what was there because we want to reduce the number of (bridge) openings so we want to make it wider and higher."

Mariano noted that maritime traffic – based on old English laws – has the right of way.

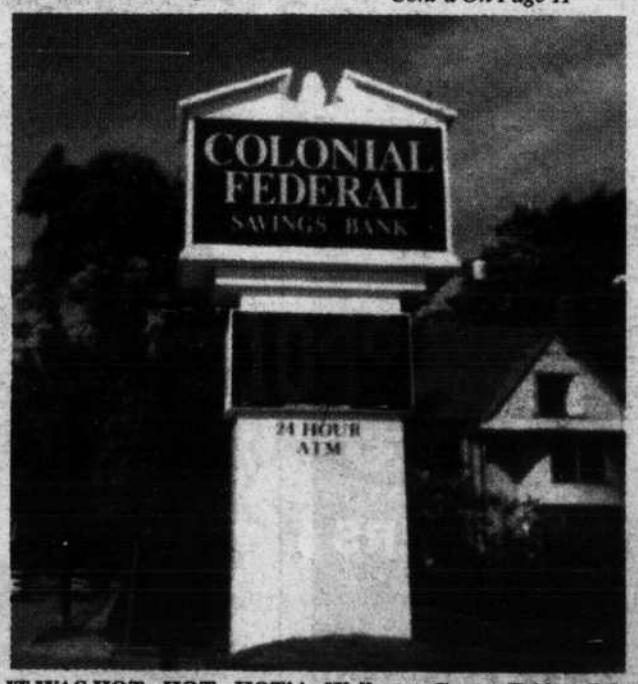

"So, if you have some guy coming out of a yacht club four or five times they have to open the bridge," the Quincy Democrat said.

But making the bridge higher would accommodate more vessels without requiring the bridge to be open.

"By going up 25 feet, we could reduce 61 percent of the openings at the bridge. Imagine what that does to the traffic on the South Shore," Mariano said. "And that's the goal: to come up with a plan that's aesthetically pleasing but reduces the number of openings. That's the challenge. When you make it wider, you lose the ability to open it and close it quickly.

"The solution may be the vertical lift but if we do a vertical lift I guarantee you it'll look a lot better than what's there now. The verti-

Church Of The Presidents Restoration Project Underway

Bell Tower Restoration Part Of Long-Range Preservation Plans

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy Center's two major historic buildings, the Church of the Presidents and Old City Hall, will soon be revived and serve as bookends with Adams Green between them, according to Mayor Thomas Koch.

Koch spoke Tuesday at a special ceremony kicking off the bell tower restoration project at United First Parish Church (Unitarian), Quincy Center.

"We look forward to the actual start of the restoration in just a few days," said Minister Rev. Sheldon Bennett who planned Tuesday's "Start of Restoration" ceremony as a special thank you to the church project's donors and supporters.

Rev. Bennett concluded the ceremony with a blessing thanking all and stating, "May this bell tower with its golden dome again gleam in the sunlight as a landmark for the founding vision of our city and nation...."

No one group was responsible for the bell tower project and Rev. Bennett cited Mayor Koch, residents, the many individuals and groups and congregants whose work, donations, and support over the past four years allowed the bell restoration project to progress.

The United First Parish Church received half of the project's $600,000 restoration cost or $300,000 through varied grants for the project. The congregation will contribute the balance of $300,000, according to Rev. Bennett.

"We want to thank the citizens of Quincy, our grantors and everyone who has helped make this important project possible," said Rev. Bennett.

Joining Rev. Bennett at the ceremony was Kirt Switzer, Vice President and Vice Chairman of the Board of Directors.

"You share this wonderful cultural and architectural asset with the entire community," said Koch predicting that work on Old City Hall, a matching granite structure, will also begin soon.

"It's a win, win for everybody," said Koch.

The Church of the Presidents structure was envisioned by President John Adams who described a "temple to be built of stone" to replace the former structure on the same land. Granite from Adams land was used in the building which was completed two years after his death.

According to Rev. Bennett, planning to restore the bell tower began four years ago when it was obvious the woodwork of the cupola was deteriorating and decaying. He expects the work will be completed before the holiday season begins.

The prep work is already done as green netting now protects visitors from the dust floating from the worksite and scaffolding now surrounds the exterior.

James Meinecke, a member of the Bell Tower Committee, said the contractors had to erect an outside metal stairwell to the dome as part of the project. That metal ladder was installed, thanks to a 100-foot crane.

Rev. Bennett noted that the first grant for the project was awarded by the Community Preservation Committee (CPC) for $80,000 and he introduced CPC Chairman Steve Perdios.

"There's nothing more Quincy than this," said Perdios of the CPC's support of the Church of the Presidents where both Presidents John and John Quincy Adams and their wives are entombed in crypt in the lower level of the church.

Perdios described the work of the Community Preservation Committee which is funded by Quincy's taxpayers and receives a 27% match from the state. The CPC awarded a second smaller grant to the project last year.

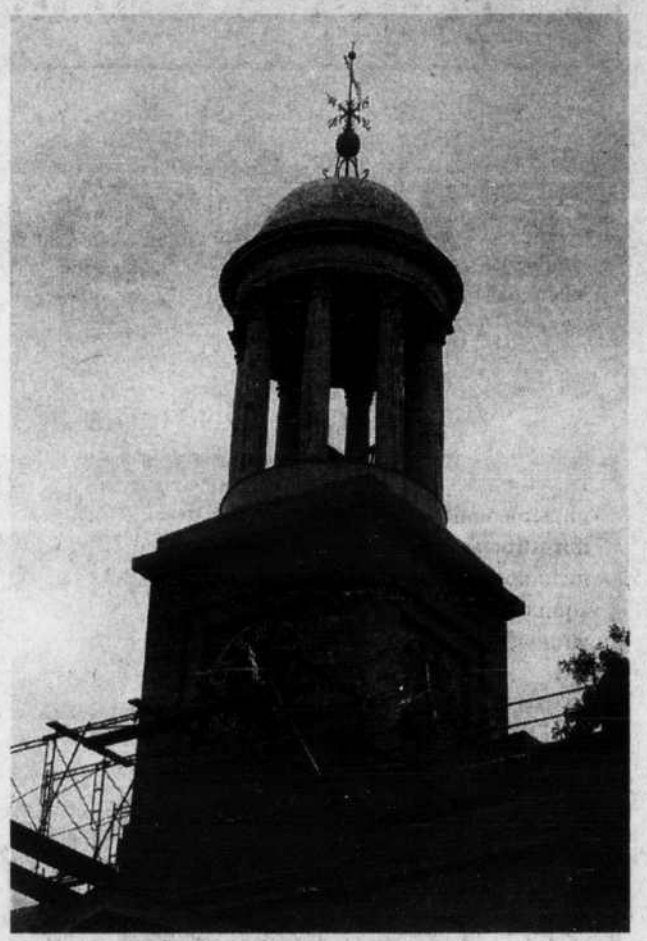

Rev. Bennett also introduced Erin Doherty who represents American Express's 'Partners in Preservation' program. That program is a partnership between the National Trust for Historic Preservation and the American Express Foundation.

A third source of grants was a "Save the America's Treasures" grant administered by the National Park Service Department of the Interior.

The bell tower restorationn is part of the long-range preservation plans for the building that begun in the 1990's when the work focused on the restoration of the slate roof and the interior of the main sanctuary including the stunning ceiling.

Those projects cost $1.7 million. In 2001, the church sold 11 pieces of historic silver to pay off the loans. The church has continuing preservation projects focusing on landscaping, drainage and interior work.

United First Parish Church is a Unitarian Universalist congregation located at 1306 Hancock St., Quincy Center. Services are open to all and will resume Sunday, Sept. 11.

SCAFFOLDING SURROUNDS the bell tower of the historic United First Parish Church (Unitarian) in Quincy Center signaling the start of a $600,000 project to restore the tower. The project will restore the deteriorated condition of the wooden cupola columns and the faded gilding of the magnificent dome. The project is expected to be completed by the end of October.

A LOT ON OUR PLATE

Jewelry made of white gold (an alloy of gold and nickel and silver or palladium) is usually electroplated with rhodium (a member of the platinum family) to give it a reflective, white surface that is resistant to scratches. As hard as rhodium is, however, it will wear off, especially on wedding rings and other pieces worn every day. At that point, it is necessary to have the piece replated to bring it back to life. The thicker the plated coating, the longer it can be expected to last. Also bear in mind that some platinum and silver pieces are rhodium plated. Replating them when necessary restores the shine to platinum jewelry and helps silver resist scratching and tarnishing.

If you are looking for a new piece of jewelry in white gold, platinum, or silver be sure to ask the jeweler if it has been plated in rhodium. This will ensure that you maintain the piece properly and enjoy its beauty for years to come. You are cordially invited to view all that we have to offer at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. Our professionals will help you select the exact piece for any occasion. Call us at 617-773-3636. Understated beauty or bold splendor, whatever your choice, any of our wide selection of jewelry will look magnificent on you.

Public Infrastructure Improvements

Brewer's Corner Project Nearing Completion

The Brewer's Corner Neighborhood Improvement Project is substantially complete, Mayor Thomas P. Koch and Planning Director Dennis E. Harrington announce.

The project—managed by the city's Department of Planning and Community Development—entails the implementation of public infrastructure improvements including new traffic signal equipment, new sidewalks with ADA compliant ramps, trees, and other neighborhood amenities in Brewer's Corner at the Copeland Street/Water Street/Granite Street intersection.

All improvements are being funded with federal funds via the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) and the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant programs (EECBG)

Mario Susi and Sons out of Dorchester was the lowest bidder for this project at $662,413 and was awarded the contract in March.

"I'm very pleased with the contractor and their commitment to get this project completed on time and on budget," Harrington said. "One can already see a dramatic difference in aesthetics at Brewer's Corner."

All of the new sidewalks, curbing, and ADA compliant ramps have been put into place. It is anticipated that the new traffic signal equipment will be installed within the next few weeks and will be tweaked over the next month to ensure optimal performance.

Also, the old trees have been removed and replaced with Princeton Elms and planted in horizontal "treeways" that incorporate a structured soil complex.

Harrington identified the Brewer's Corner neighborhood almost five years ago as an appropriate place to target some of the City's CDBG funds for business district revitalization activities.

During the project development phase in 2007, the Planning Department completed a revitalization plan for Brewer's Corner which provided an assessment of the infrastructure conditions and put the city in a position to spend federal CDBG funds for the construction of eligible activities.

Your equity builds very quickly. And you pay thousands less in interest, compared to a longer-term mortgage loan. Rates are still at historic lows. How much longer? Who knows. If a 15-Year sounds good to you, let's talk. Soon! Come see us or call Angela Blanchard or Richard Coleman at 617-471-0750. Mariano's At Home In The House

Ron Mariano – elected state representative 20 years ago this December – ascended to the powerful position of House Majority leader earlier this year.

Along the way, there have been other forks in the political road that Mariano could have taken.

MARIANO

The popular Quincy Democrat admits he "angled" for the House Speaker's job the last time it was vacant.

He considered running for state auditor last year.

He would have been a front-runner if he had entered the race to succeed William Delahunt in Congress last fall, too.

And, when Mariano's State House days are over, don't be surprised if you see him run for mayor of Quincy, either.

In politics, you never know when opportunity will knock. And it's best to never close a door completely.

But for right now, Mariano is 100 percent satisfied being part of the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives. As the majority leader, Mariano fulfills many responsibilities including sitting in on leadership meetings and setting the House agenda with Speaker Bob DeLeo. He has the responsibility of helping secure votes and organizing the caucuses while being an advisor to the speaker.

The House is home to Mariano. And that suits him just fine.

"Being the majority leader covers the whole gamut of what goes on up there (at the State House). Some days I may be settling a dispute on office space or trying to resolve an issue between the House and the Senate.

"There's no general job description. I preside over the session. Make decisions on the rostrum on what's going to go forward, and amendments. It's pretty wide-ranging and it's interesting. That's what keeps me going. You don't get in there and do the same thing every day."

Mariano adds: "It's more than an advisory role. It's a leadership position in garnering votes and speaking to members and helping them deal with some of the issues that they have in their districts. It's also fundraising; it's going out and speaking on issues."

The former Quincy school teacher is also a mentor to incoming freshmen legislators.

"For the new guys when they come in it's kind of overwhelming," Mariano says. "I remember when I first walked in (after winning his seat in a special election in 1991). Coming in by myself is really different. You have to sort of learn on the fly.

"When you come in as a group, you all sort of make the same mistakes all at the same time. When you're by yourself, you think every mistake you make is a disaster."

One new legislator Mariano has helped bring under his wing is Tackey Chan who was elected state representative in Quincy's 2nd Norfolk District last fall.

"I've been able to sit with Tackey and some of the other new guys – there's a great new group this year – and I think they're going to leave their mark on the House of Representatives."

One piece of advice he gives all freshmen legislators: spend as much time as possible in their district.

"I'm a firm believer in the first term you just get back into your district and get to know every one in your district that you can get to know. That's where the foundation is built for anything you want to do up there.

"I've seen so many people come in up there and after their first swearing in they want to set policy for the Commonwealth. In order to set policy you have to be around a while and the best way to make sure you're around a while is to build that foundation.

"Whenever we're not in session you should be doing something in your district."

Freshmen legislators would be wise to heed Mariano's advice. His successful political career can be traced to building grass-roots coalitions back when he was the president of the Ward 2 Civic Association and chairman of the Ward 2 Democratic City Committee. Mariano also served as a school committee member before he was elected state representative.

Mariano served two years as the assistant majority leader in the House before he became the majority leader. But it was the speaker's job that Mariano had his sights on first.

"I had 27 votes for Speaker but I didn't have the ability to grow (support) the way Bob DeLeo did. Bob was the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee so he was interacting with every member almost on a daily basis.

"I had 27 loyal, good guys and my ability to grow beyond that was limited. The obvious thing was to go to Bob and work together. I came in with Bob and I've known him for 20 years. We've been friends a long time. We've been on different sides of Speaker's fights but I knew he was someone I could work with."

Mariano says he's thrilled with how it's worked out. "(Bob DeLeo's) made this a very meaningful position for me and I appreciate that."

At the age of 64 – with a high-profile job on Beacon Hill – naturally Mariano's name is mentioned within the political speculation circles.

Asked if he would consider running for a state-wide office, he replies, "I thought about running for auditor when Joe DeNucci vacated his seat last fall. I tinkered with it. But my role in the House is significant. To give that up would be kind of silly. I feel good now. I love the job that I'm doing. It's exciting. I enjoy the people I work with. I enjoy going there and as long as I enjoy it I'm going to keep doing it.

"I don't see myself taking on a state-wide race."

But, the former Quincy school committeeman adds he could return to local politics and run for mayor some day.

"I would never run against Tommy (Koch). I think Tommy's done a good job," Mariano says.

It's expected Lt. Gov. Tim Murray will run for governor in 2014.

Would Mariano consider running with Murray as his lieutenant governor?

He says he's not interested in that job . . . but admits it would depend on who he's teamed up with.

"Timmy Murray is the first (lieutenant governor) who's made it into something more than just a ceremonial position. He has Deval's confidence and they seem to work extremely well together. Up until that point I really would never even look at it because it's been sort of a ceremonial position other than chairing the governor's council meetings."

So, at the moment, it doesn't appear Mariano will pursue another job in public service.

"In this business, things can change quickly but right now things are good for me and I enjoy what I'm doing. The challenges in the state are many. We're starting to come out (of a difficult economy.) I'd like to stick around and enjoy the good times if we get the economy back on it's feet and we can start to do some things again."

THIS 1912 real photo postcard shows Wollaston Boulevard a few years after it opened in 1908. East Elm Avenue is on the right. A horse drawn carriage is shown just down the road, automobiles were not yet widely available. The house of the right became a small summertime restaurant with outside seating in the 1920's and then in the 1930's it was Howard Johnson's first roadside ice cream stand. He also sold fried clams and frankforts here until 1938 when he moved into a new building one block south on the corner of Sachem Street. The store remained there for 30 years until it was closed and under new owners it became The Clam Box. The dirt Boulevard as shown here was only 24-feet wide. In the distance you can see the road rise at Rye Island where it ended at Fenno Street. Rye Island was leveled and the roadway was extended to Furnace Brook Parkway and Sea Street in 1915. Quincy's Yesterdays

Religion Major Part Of Local Finns

By FRANK McCAULEY

Ninety-eight percent of the people of Finland belong to the Lutheran Church; yet ironically, the first church established in Quincy by the people from that country was the Finnish Congregational Church.

In 1894, there were about 200 Finns in the city without a place to conduct services in their native tongue. The American Congregational Home Missionary Service, learning of the need for religious services, sent Rev. Andrew Groop from Fitchburg to minister to their needs.

This Week

In 1895, he organized a congregation known as the Quincy Evangelical Christian Church.

In 1896, with 17 regular members of the church, pledging assistance, a hall on Copeland Street was rented for six dollars a month and a full-time minister, Rev. K. Hendrickson, whose salary of forty dollars a month was paid by the Home Missionary Service, arrived to officiate regularly.

In 1897, land on Buckley Street was purchased for four hundred dollars. Many of the male members of the church took a week off from their regular jobs to do the actual work on the church, the clearing of land, digging the cellar and building the foundation.

The new church and the new century began at the same time. On Christmas 1900, although it was not yet completed, services were held in the white clapboard structure that was, a few years later, to be known as the Finnish Congregational Church.

BUS PATRONAGE OFF 1/3; SCHEDULE CUT

The Eastern Mass Bus Company, as an aftermath of the 119-day strike that ended July 7, was experiencing a 30 to 35 percent loss in riders.

John H. Moran, president of the company said that riding is off between 30 and 35 percent and it appears to be settling down after three weeks of resumed services.

To counteract part of the loss, the company, according to new schedules, has cut services by about 25 percent.

Star of Sea Co-Chairpersons React To Decree Of Relegation

On July 14, 2011, we learned that Cardinal Sean O'Malley issued a decree to "Relegate" our beloved Star of the Sea Church "to the Profane." This move brings the Cardinal one step closer in his attempt to sell our church.

In anticipation of receiving this decree, we filed a pre-appeal at the Vatican last fall, and also sent a "Remonstratio" to Cardinal O'Malley on July 18 to reiterate our community's opposition to the Relegation.

The timing couldn't't be more ironic. It was six years ago July 17 that Star of the Sea was reopened as a chapel of Sacred Heart Parish in North Quincy, and now the Archdiocese has set the wheels in motion to try to sell the property. In late 2004, the Meade-Eisner Reconfiguration Review Committee was established by Cardinal O'Malley to examine the suppression of certain parishes. In 2005, we made a presentation to members of that committee, arguing that the parish was vibrant and ought not to have been suppressed.

During that meeting with Meade-Eisner, we expressed concerns about the negative financial implications of selling the church property, then assessed at $1,148,900 by the City of Quincy. Zoned Residence A, a developer could create no more than 3-4 house lots. The going rate per lot was about $250,000, and that did not factor in the cost of demolition, which could diminish a developer's willingness to pay that amount. Even assuming $250,000 per lot, it would have resulted in a net lost of $148,900 in 2005.

We also talked about the changing demographics in the North end of the City. Based on increased population projections through 2010, we told the Committee that new development would increase the need for a church in the area. The 2010 census confirmed a population increase in the northern end of the City. (And, that was before the Catholics Come Home initiative which was rolled out a couple of months ago to encourage lapsed Catholics to return to the practice of their faith.)

We suggested to the Committee that, if Star of the Sea were closed and if we allowed the church to be sold, rising costs to build a new church of equal size to Star of the Sea would be prohibitive and new land would not be available in the future. We noted that at the time of suppression, our parish was self-supporting; and that maintaining the church property made economic, social and spiritual sense in the life of the community.

Our arguments apparently resonated with Meade-Eisner because Star of the Sea was reopened as a worship site in July 2005.

Six years after the reopening, the property is now assessed at nearly $2 million. However, on Feb. 21, 2011, J.P. Plunkett, a real estate broker and Executive Vice President at NAI Hunnemann in Boston, was quoted in a published report saying that the church may not be worth more than the land it sits on.

"In my opinion, it's a tear down. What is a house lot in Quincy worth? Two hundred grand, tops." Plunkett said that "36,000 square feet of land [with no off street parking] leaves few options." Using Mr. Plunkett's figures, a new net loss of over $1 million is likely

'RAISE THE CURTAIN' – a local summer musical theatre program, is celebrating its 20th anniversary.

'Raise The Curtain' Musical Theatre Celebrating 20th Anniversary

It was back in 1991 that Peggy Spencer founded a little summer musical theatre program working with a cast of 24 young performers.

Since then, the numbers of cast and crew members has climbed to as many as 130 students who have mounted productions that include Annie, Fiddler On the Roof, Li'l Abner, You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown, Peter Pan, The Point! and Beauty and the Beast. Shows – featuring intricate costumes, challenging choreography, complicated vocals and breath-taking sets – are accomplished in two weeks.

"We have done several 'book shows,'" said Spencer, once named Massachusetts Arts Educator of the Year, "but more often, the RTC productions have been originals, with the scripts written and developed by the extraordinarily talented staff. This way, the shows are tailored to the talents and strengths of the cast and crew. Every child is featured in some way. They all have their moment in the spot light."

Staff includes professional choreographer Jennifer Kenneally, with a BFA in Dance and technical director Thomas Doucette, Quincy High School's Drama Club advisor and director, with a BFA in Technical Theatre. Richard Kenneally, a Berklee graduate and instrumental director at both of Quincy's high schools was an advisor on the recent movie filmed in Quincy, "Here Comes the Boom."

Paula Callanan, a costume designer at several childrens' theatres in the Greater Boston area and Ann Kenneally Ryan, a professional singer and vocal instructor complete the RTC staff.

This summer's original production, "Give 'Em the Old Razzle Dazzle: Twenty Years of Raise the Curtain" will also serve as a reunion to which the thousands of cast and crew members who have been part of RTC's casts and crews since 1991 have been invited. Performers include many who have gone on to become professional singers, actors, dancers and theatre technicians.

Raise the Curtain is open to performers and technicians from 9-17 years old. Younger children are accepted by interview. The program, which services both Quincy and non-Quincy residents, will be held in the new Quincy High School theatre complex, from Aug. 1 - 12th.

Registration information can be found on the Quincy Public School web site under Summer Scene, by calling the Dept. of Continuing Ed. at 617-984-8888 or by e-mailing peggyspence@aol.com.

QUINCY SUMMER SINGERS choral group will present a free concert at 7 p.m. Friday, Aug. 5 in the Cove Fine Arts Center on the Wollaston campus of Eastern Nazarene College.

Quincy Summer Singers To Perform Free Concert Aug. 5

The Quincy Summer Singers choral group will present a free concert at 7 p.m. Friday, Aug. 5 in the Cove Fine Arts Center on the Wollaston campus of Eastern Nazarene College. All are welcome to attend.

The 60-member multigenerational community choir will perform American, European and African folk songs as well as gospel and pop songs.

The concert will also feature New England shapenote singing and a selection from Beethoven's "Choral Fantasy" for chorus and solo piano. Quincy musician Sarah Troxler, the group's assistant director, with be the piano soloist, while professional singers from Quincy Point Music Academy will also be featured in several pieces.

"Many cities and towns have a community choir, but what makes the Quincy Summer Singers really unique is the incredibly wide range of music we perform," said Quincy musician Delvyn Case, the group's founder and director. "My goal was to create a group that was open to anyone and everyone, regardless of musical experience, so they could all have a chance to make beautiful music together."

A free-will offering will be taken during the concert to benefit Totally Art, a joint parent/faculty program at Beechwood Knoll School that provides opportunities in music, dance, drama, and visual arts for local elementary school children. Students from the program will present a special performance at intermission.

The Eastern Nazarene College campus is located at 23 E. Elm Ave., Quincy. The Cove Fine Arts Center is air conditioned and handicapped accessible.

Program Highlighting Mercy Otis Warren At Adams National Historical Park Aug. 7

A program highlighting Mercy Otis Warren, the "Muse of the Revolution" and John Adams, the "Atlas of Independence," will be held Sunday, Aug. 7 from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Adams Carriage House on the grounds of the Adams National Historical Site, 135 Adams St., Quincy.

Mercy Otis Warren published her three-volume eyewitness account of the Revolutionary War, The History of the Rise, Progress, and Termination of the American Revolution in 1805. President Thomas Jefferson ordered copies of Warren's exhaustive account of the war and its principal players for himself and his entire Cabinet; the irascible John Adams, whose monumental efforts for independence were found wanting in Warren's expose, dismissed her account of his contributions, declaring "History is not the province of ladies" and initiated a scathing interchange with his former friend in which Adams rebuked the woman once called the "muse of the revolution" for her critical assessment of his own Revolutionary achievements.

Patricia Bridgman and Tom Macy will bring the "Atlas of Independence" and the "Muse of the Revolution" to life and reveal their always fascinating, often contentious, and ultimately endearing relationship.

There will also be a presentation and book signing by Nancy Rubin Stuart, the author of "The Muse of the Revolution: The Secret Pen of Mercy Otis Warren and the Founding of a Nation." Stuart examines the relationship[between Adams and Warren and reveals "one colonial woman's lifelong effort to capture history as she had lived and witnessed it through the glorious ideas of the early patriots.

Pork Chops With Broccoli Rabe

One of my favorite vegetables – and also my family' – is broccoli rabe. It's similar to broccoli, but has a more distinctive taste and flavor.

Recently I found a great recipe for this vegetable made with pork chops and if you like the broccoli, you will enjoy it with the chops.

PORK CHOPS AND BROCCOLI RABE

4 pork chops (medium size)
1 bunch broccoli rape (cut in pieces)
¼ cup white wine
1-cup chicken stock
Salt and pepper to taste
2 anchovies (optional)
2 tablespoons oil
¼ cup white raisins

Season the pork chops with salt and pepper. In an oven type skillet, heat the oil, and sauté the pork chops turning them until browned on each side. They don't have to cook through because they are going in the oven to finish cooking.

Add the two anchovies and mix them in with the sauté. Add the white wine and the chicken stock and cook for a minute or two until blended. On top of that add the cut up broccoli rape, and sprinkle the raisins on top. Season the top with salt and pepper.

Place in a 275-degree oven and bake uncovered until broccoli is done.

Thank You, Quincy Fire Department

On Friday, July 15, to commemorate the second anniversary of the opening of The Kennedy Center at 440 East Squantum Street the firefighters of the Quincy Firefighters Association hosted a barbeque for the senior citizens. Over 100 seniors attended.

Representing the Fire Department were 14 firefighters who donated their day off, and three retired firefighters. All 17 men worked tirelessly for several hours, providing the food and light refreshments, cooking and serving, folding and storing the tables and chairs after the event, disposing of rubbish and even sweeping the gymnasium.

From all of us at the Council on Aging, management, workers and volunteers, a sincere thanks to all. Thanks also to Mayor Tom Koch for his foresight and planning of this beautiful facility for the senior citizens to enjoy.

Some special highlights of the day should be noted:

Devin, you were a tremendous help to everyone with your wonderful smile and courteousness to everyone. I loved dancing with you.

To Nancy DiPaolo's daughter Christine, thank you for stopping by. As usual, your presence brightened up the Center, whose existence in its present form owes so much to your loving mom, who, without a doubt was looking down and smiling contentedly.

Perhaps the greatest highlight of the day was the visit of Nick Panarelli who spent more than two hours with us after a long absence, sitting behind the reception desk. Hope we see you and Cleta back permanently soon. Everyone has missed you both. It was astounding watching the women pushing each other to kiss and hug Nick when they spotted him. Reminiscent of the Sinatra days when another famous Italian was surrounded by the ladies. I really didn't mind Nick because all the young ones stuck with me. Try not to be jealous Nick – love you.

The City of Quincy is in safe hands with guys as dedicated as these to watch over us.

– because the property is worth more improved than it would be for a building lot. Additionally, on July 1, the church property went back on the City of Quincy tax rolls – with a bill in excess of $40,000/annually.

With the property now being taxable, and the diminished real estate value, it makes more sense to keep the building open as a worship site. It's $40,000 found money, to say nothing of the revenues that would be generated in the weekly collection. It's a win-win.

Equally ironic is that July marks the 95th Anniversary of the first Mass said in Squantum. It was not the Archdiocese that saw a need for a Catholic presence in Squantum, but a group of laypeople who organized the first Catholic Mass in 1916.

It was the laity who formed the Squantum Catholic Club, who acquired the land with their own money, and raised the funds necessary to build the first Catholic church in Squantum in 1924. That church became a "mission" of Sacred Heart. And, owing to the fidelity and vitality of the laity in Squantum, the late Cardinal Cushing created Mary, Star of the Sea Parish in 1945.

When the parishioners of Star of the Sea outgrew their little wooden church, it was the laity who raised the money to build a new brick church, which was consecrated 55 years ago in 1956, and "built to last."

We have received many calls and emails asking about "what's next?" "Are they really going to sell off our church?"

The answer is not that simple.

Initially, nothing can be done with the church property until "all appeals are exhausted." And, since we have just kicked off a new round of appeals and are investigating the possibility of exercising options under civil law, marketing the church will have to wait until the courts decide its fate.

Also, there have been a series of "split decisions" that have recently been issued from the Vatican. In Pennsylvania, New York, and Springfield (MA), the Congregation for the Clergy (the Vatican's lower court) has upheld a bishop's right to "suppress" a parish, but has decided in favor of parishioner groups when it comes to "relegation," and therefore, the Vatican has ordered those relegated churches to reopen as worship sites.

There is no reason to believe Star of the Sea and the other Boston parishioner groups who have appealed the Relegation would have a different outcome.

The decree, as published in The Boston Pilot, cited that the church was being relegated subject to Canon 122 §2 which states:

"Where other grave causes suggest that a church no longer be used for divine worship, the diocesan bishop, after having heard the presbyteral council, can relegate it to profane but not sordid use, with the consent of those who legitimately claim rights for themselves in the church and provided that the good of souls suffers no detriment thereby."

We argue that "souls will suffer" and that those "who legitimately claims rights" were not consulted in a meaningful way.

The archdiocesan press release regarding relegation spoke to the web-based Consultation that was conducted in March of this year. Rev. Arthur Coyle said that in an Archdiocese of 1.8 million only 300 people responded in opposition to the plan to close churches while 150 favored the plan.

While the archdiocese may argue that 450 responses is hardly a meaningful response – a significant majority, 66%, of those respondents opposed the plan.

In the last 7 years, we have had only 4 meetings with archdiocesan officials. Two were at the Chancery in Brighton, one at the Cardinal's residence in the South End, and one in Squantum with the Meade-Eisner committee (after the church had been closed).

In spite of numerous requests to the archdiocese before, during and after the church was closed and then reopened and then reclosed, no one came to the church to hear first hand the concerns of "those who legitimately claim rights for themselves in the church." (Can. 122, §2).

They relied on the impersonal Internet to gauge the feelings of those who were disenfranchised. With there being only a half dozen parishes named in the Decrees to Relegate, a pastoral visit would have been in order to have a valid consultation.

Also, there is a "Section 1" to the Canon regarding Relegation. It states: "If a church cannot be used in any way for divine worship and there is no possibility of repairing it, the diocesan bishop can relegate it to profane but not sordid use."

Section 1 is the higher standard, and the archdiocese could not have legitimately met that standard. In the case of Star of the Sea, we question what "other grave causes exist."

The faith community of Star of the Sea stands ready to help out in any way to paint, garden, etc. to bring our beloved church back to its former glory.

In the last 7 years while the archdiocese has been the steward of Star of the Sea, the landscaping has become overgrown, the exterior trim of the church could use some paint, and the statue of our Patroness has fallen victim to the elements.

This didn't happen on our watch.

It is in everyone's best interest to reopen Star of the Sea as a worship site, to welcome back those who were alienated either by the abuse crisis, the closing, or any other reason.

It's time for the healing to begin.

Does Anyone Care?

The good news is Quincy College wants to move into the new Quincy Center. The bad news is Quincy College already has its main campus in Quincy.

So it's a win-lose situation.

We gain a tenant in the so-called old Quincy. According to an expert on commercial space, in top-end property, rents will run around $15 to $20 a square foot. Peter Tsaffaris, president of Quincy College, will be looking for 300,000 square feet. At approximaely $15 a foot, he is looking at four a half million dollars a year. Seems like a lot of money for a small school.

And the students who have to drive to school, can they afford to pay to park every day. I don't think so.

They will be jamming the streets in the so-called old Quincy in order to park free.

It's not win-lose, it looks more like lose-lose for the old Quincy.

Does anyone really care? I think not.

City, Street-Works File Major Environmental Permit For Downtown Project

Mayor Thomas Koch and Street-Works Development filed a voluminous state environmental notice Tuesday for the $1.6 billion redevelopment of Quincy Center that sets the stage for the most intensive state permitting process on the historic revitalization plan.

"We are making substantial progress everyday, and this notice is a critical step toward breaking ground on what will be the largest private investment and largest job creator in our City's history," said Mayor Koch. "Together with our partners at Street-Works, we are very much looking forward to laying out the broad range of environmental details that will be required as part of this process."

The filing is called an Environmental Notification Form and it advises the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs of the project's intentions and provides a broad outline of many of the project's environmental components. It is essentially a trigger mechanism for state authorities, who will review it and then give the City and Street-Works a specific scope of work for what is called an Environmental Impact Report.

That document will spell out in specific detail the wide range of components – and their environmental effects – included in the redevelopment, including traffic, parking, drainage, water supply, and landscaping among others. The Environmental Impact Report, when completed, will provide the foundation for a series of necessary permits.

"This is a tremendously comprehensive filing, showing a level of engineering and technical diligence that is only going to grow as we continue to move forward with the state environmental process," said Stephen Chrusciel, Director of Construction Services for Street-Works.

The City and Street-Works expect to receive a response from state regulators on how to proceed by Labor Day, officials said.

Committee Votes To Revive Quincy College Athletics Program

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Imagine a Tour de Quincy bike race or a championship battle for a basketball title with Quincy College students in the lead.

College President Peter Tsaffaris said Monday that's all possible.

The Tour de Quincy bike race could be a fundraiser for the college and for Quincy Medical Center and Quincy College students could compete with other local community colleges for championship titles again if the sports program is revived.

At Monday's meeting, the Finance and Facilities Committee of the Quincy College's Board of Governors agreed with Tsaffaris and unanimously supported funding a salary for an athletic director.

Tsaffaris said that the athletic program would support intramural competitions and varsity activities with meets between Quincy College and other local colleges, such as Bunker Hill and Massasoit Community Colleges.

Both Bunker Hill and Massasoit Community Colleges field four to six athletic teams and Quincy College has had athletic teams in the past.

"It gradually dropped off," Tsaffaris said Tuesday of the previous program when the college supported basketball and soccer teams. All that's left now are some intramural sports at the Plymouth campus.

"Our focus is on well-rounded student development," Tsaffaris said explaining his interest in re-establishing a sports program.

Tsaffaris had substantial support from committee members who not only approved a motion to add funds to the Development Account for an Athletic Director, but also suggested that various sports be included.

The full 13-member Board of Governors must now approve the new position but that's likely as all seven committee members supported Monday's motion.

The committee chairman is Francis Byrne with members Attorney Paul Barbadoro, Christopher Bell, William Grindlay, Joseph Shea, Attorney Frederick Doyle and Committee Vice Chairman Thomas Feenan. Grindlay is chairman of the Board of Governors.

Quincy Social Security Office To Close At 3:30 P.M.

Effective Aug. 15, the Quincy Social Security office at 1250 Hancock St. (Presidents Place) will be open Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. – a reduction of 30 minutes each weekday.

Congressional budget cuts forced the reduced public hours at the office.

While agency employees will continue to work their regular hours, the shorter public window will allow them to complete face-to-face service with the visiting public without incurring the cost of overtime.

Susan Canavan To Teach Young Women To Be Hairdressers

Quincy Hairdresser Headed To Bangladesh To Teach Girls At Orphanage

The wife of the director of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office Triad program will travel to the Far East this fall to teach young women at an orphanage how to be hairdressers.

Susan Canavan, wife of NCSO Triad Director Joseph Canavan, is slated to travel to Bangladesh on a two-week volunteer mission to establish a cosmetology school and teach residents of the orphanage how to cut hair.

"I feel truly blessed to have this opportunity to help other women share in some of the blessings I've received in my own life. This is my opportunity to pay it forward," said Susan Canavan, the owner of Aura Salon in Quincy and a hairdresser for 35 years.

She said she decided to make the trip to Bangladesh, which is located between India and Myanmar, after a fellow salon owner explained to her that many young women in that impoverished country are forced into sweat shop labor or worse if they do not have an education or trade.

"The average annual salary for a person without an education is $1,000," Canavan noted. "Even with an education, it's only $5,000."

SUSAN CANAVAN

Susan's husband, Joseph Canavan, directs Sheriff Michael Bellotti's Triad program, which links senior citizens with local police and fire departments and councils on aging to learn about helpful programs aimed at seniors. Such programs include Sheriff Bellotti's Project Lifesaver and Yellow Dot programs and "Are You OK?"

"I was not surprised to learn that Sue Canavan would take on such a great mission to help others," Bellotti said. "She and Joe are both extremely community-minded people."

Susan Canavan will be traveling with a group of area cosmetologists associated with the Friends of the World Charitable Trust.

dents to recycle – which is good news for both the environment and our local finances."

Numbers released today by the Department of Public Works showed that the City disposed of 32,710 tons of garbage in Fiscal Year 2008, the final year of the previous collection program, compared to 29,302 tons of garbage in the fiscal year that ended on June 30. During the same time period, recycling increased from 4,030 tons to 5,121 tons.

The results are the product of the City's first-of-its-kind regional trash contract with Braintree and Weymouth that was implemented in 2008. Along with the new collection contract with Capitol Waste Services, the program provided for a new streamlined recycling program that no longer required residents to separate recyclables before leaving them curbside.

When the program started, City officials distributed large recycling stickers and encouraged residents to attach the sticker to a regular-sized trash barrel for recyclable material, rather than use the previously issued – and smaller -- recycle bins. It was clear from that point, that the larger recycling containers – without required separation – were being filled up on a regular basis, officials said.

In addition, 3,000 blue 32-gallon recycling barrels were distributed in November to homes on the Monday trash route – primarily Ward 1 neighborhoods – thanks to a federal energy efficiency grant and the "Energy Smart Quincy" program conducted in partnership with the Massachusetts Energy Consumers Alliance.

In the first five months of the pilot program, the recycling rate increased by nearly 40 percent on the Monday trash route. The City will continue to study the results of the barrel program with the hope of eventually extending the program citywide if it is proved effective over a longer period of time, officials said.

"This has been a great team effort of a lot of people working together to make it happen – our energy and recycling manager John Sullivan, Larry Chretien and Maura O'Gara from Mass Energy, and most importantly, our residents have contributed to make this a great success," said Mayor Koch. "We are just getting started."

Bellotti Launches New Program To Help Seniors

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti has launched a new Yellow Dot program designed to help senior citizens in the event that they are involved in an auto accident.

"The Yellow Dot program allows emergency responders to a car accident to know what medical conditions a senior citizen may have and which medications he or she may be taking," Bellotti said. "This helps them quickly determine which medical treatment is safest and best suited to help the injured person."

Bellotti noted the Yellow Dot program is similar to his File of Life program, which is a list of crucial medical information that is kept in a highly visible place in a person's home.

"The difference with the Yellow Dot program is that it is kept in the person's car so that they continue to have that blanket of security when they leave their home," Bellotti said.

People who sign up for the program affix a highly visible Yellow Dot sticker to the rear windshield of their car. If they are involved in an accident, paramedics and EMTs quickly spot the Yellow Dot on the vehicle and know to look for the information packet in the person's glove compartment.

A photo of the person is included in the packet to eliminate confusion in case someone else is driving the car.

Anyone interested in learning more about the Yellow Dot program should call the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 781-751-3516.

Calls On Legislative Leaders To Make Comprehensive Changes To Habitual Offender Laws

Sen. Keenan Urges Quick Action On 'Melissa's Bill'

Saying that it will close "glaring loopholes" in state laws and strengthen public safety throughout the Commonwealth, Sen. John Keenan has called on the chairpeople of the Legislature's Judiciary Committee to swiftly approve "Melissa's Bill" so that it can continue advancing through the legislative process and come before the Senate for approval.

JOHN KEENAN

"For years now, since the tragic death of Melissa Gosule in 1999, the Legislature has almost perennially debated measures aimed at strengthening habitual offender laws while residents of the Commonwealth and beyond have remained at-risk," Keenan wrote in a letter addressed to committee chairs Senator Cynthia Stone Creem and Representative Eugene O'Flaherty.

"As a Legislature, as parents, and as leaders in each of our communities, we must finally take action as soon as possible to move forward on a responsible and comprehensive version of 'Melissa's Bill' that strengthens our public safety and keeps our communities safe from dangerous career criminals," he added.

Keenan, a member of the Judiciary Committee which heard testimony for the bill at its hearing on March 16th, specifically called attention to provisions within the bill that would expand the habitual offender trigger in its current form to include those twice convicted of felonies in Superior Court or twice convicted in any court, including Federal courts, of a felony punishable by more than 10 years. He also strongly advocated for strengthening requirements that would require consecutive sentences when crimes are committed when individuals are out on bail or probation, and to completely eliminate parole eligibility for habitual offenders.

In addition, the city is working with the owner of one foreclosed property.

According to Coughlin, one property was removed from last week's auction schedule because the owner plans to pay off the bill by mid-August.

"Our goal was to get these properties back on the tax rolls," said Coughlin of the June 21 auction handled by Daniel J. Flynn & Co. at which three foreclosed properties were sold.

Two Intervale Street parcels sold for a total of $110,000, according to Coughlin who said there were two bidders at that sale.

There were eight bidders for the 1141 Sea St. property which sold for $62,000 and six bidders for 39 Island Ave. which sold for $20,500.

As for future foreclosures and auctions, Coughlin said nothing is in the works yet, "We have to look at what's sitting there in Tax Title."

Coughlin said the Land Court process is lengthy and expensive.

Library Trustees Mull Request To Host City Council Meetings

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Library trustees didn't say no, but they didn't say yes this week when City Clerk Joseph Shea asked that they host City Council meetings in their community room while Old City Hall is under renovation.

City councillors won't be homeless, as their offices will be moved to the newer wing of City Hall while renovations are underway on the historic building, officially the James McIntyre Government Center.

However, city officials must locate a meeting room large enough for public hearings and with access to cable television for an indefinite span while construction is underway.

Apparently, Library trustees aren't convinced the meeting room at Thomas Crane Public Library, Quincy Center, is the best fit and asked Shea to explore other options.

Trustees discussed the issue at their Monday morning meeting and plan a special meeting in August to revisit the issue, according to Sandra McCauley, chairwoman of the Board of Trustees and Library Director Harry Williams.

Contacted after Monday's meeting, McCauley said the Trustees cited the financial dilemmas already dogging the library system due to budget cuts. The Trustees suggested that the city explore all other options, such as Quincy High School auditorium where the School Committee meets.

Trustees also mentioned the shuttered old Quincy High School building as a potential site, but were told that will be demolished.

"The main feeling of the members (was) if the city had looked elsewhere for the council to meet..." said McCauley, adding that trustees worried that the renovation project could take a considerable number of years.

"They would like to be shown that there isn't another location," said McCauley, adding that council meetings would require additional security and custodial costs on the library's already burdened budget.

McCauley noted the library closes at 9 p.m. and custodians are off-duty at 9:30 p.m. while council meetings can continue until after midnight. As a result, library security could be an issue as the building would have to be open to the public for the entire time and labor contracts would have to be reopened.

"Our rooms are used a lot," Williams said, noting that community groups vie for access to the library which is centrally located and easily accessible. The calendar fills quickly.

Library Trustees who are appointed annually by the mayor have sole control of the use of the library property.

When reached Tuesday morning, Shea said the city has examined a number of options, including a Park Department site but the library is the best for the meetings, "We have already looked elsewhere."

Shea sounded optimistic regarding the library site, "We're still in negotiations."

Other city boards and commissions, such as the Zoning Board and Planning Board, will also have to move their meeting site, but Shea said they do not require as much space as the City Council.

School Committeeman Dave McCarthy Candidate For Re-election

Dave McCarthy, a two-term member of the Quincy School Committee, announces he is a candidate for a third four-year term this fall.

McCarthy recently kicked off his campaign at a fundraiser at the Quincy Yacht Club.

He told supporters: "I'm excited about getting started and looking forward to a productive summer and fall. The last eight years on the Committee have been very busy and incredibly productive. I enjoy consistently supporting the Quincy Public Schools."

McCarthy was elected in 2004 and re-elected in 2008. He served as the School Committee Vice Chairman from 2008-2010. He has also been a member of the Quincy Park and Recreation Board since 2006 and recently was elected Chairman of the Board in 2011.

McCarthy, after his election in 2004, was appointed chairman of the Health, Safety, and Security Subcommittee. He said he immediately placed himself into the limelight as an advocate for students and staff, utilizing his skills as a career professional in the security/safety field.

McCarthy assisted in instituting citywide security policies and procedures, lobbied for additional security personnel, and implemented the popular "School Messenger" system now Honeywell Instant Alert. This proven system enhances communication regarding all aspects the Quincy Public Schools to high school, middle school, elementary and pre-kindergarten parents as well as all Quincy Public Schools staff.

In addition, during his first term he worked with the school system on a new citywide Health Curriculum for the 6th, 7th, and 8th grades, worked with the high school principals on the re-implementation of visitor identification badges, coordinated new alarm systems for both high schools, and enhanced awareness and knowledge necessary for a secure school environment.

McCarthy called his knowledge in this area "invaluable to the school system as well as the City of Quincy."

Over the last eight years McCarthy has served on a variety of subcommittees within the School Committee. He has been a member of the Building Needs Subcommittee, which has played a pivotal role in the construction of the New Quincy High School.

"The completion and opening of the new Quincy High School has been very exciting," he said.

"This impressive school has brought Quincy a state-of-the-art facility and serves as an academic, arts, athletics and career/technical education leader on the South Shore."

He said he also is involved and excited as the school system looks forward to constructing the new Central Middle School.

"I think the deserving families of Quincy will be quite pleased with the new Central building design and educational plan. The 80% reimbursement from the state is certainly welcomed by our City," McCarthy said.

McCarthy served as the chairman of the Budget and Finance Subcommittee for two years and sat on the Policy Committee as well. He said he has made it a point to work closely with the administration and the Superintendent to ensure all budget options and policy decisions are reviewed in depth.

"The financial landscape of the school system is a focal point for the city and it must be kept in a healthy state," McCarthy said. "Its vitality adds value across the city. Folks who move into any city ask two questions: 'How's the neighborhood and how's the school system?'

"The management of the budget is the key to a balanced productive school system and a direct beneficial link to all of Quincy's neighborhoods."

As an advocate of Special Needs, McCarthy is a member of the Special Education subcommittee and has been on this subcommittee for all eight years.

"The Quincy Public School's Special Education department does a tremendous job with all levels of the program," McCarthy said. "This special group of children are wonderful. I will never forget them and work as hard as I can to get what families need."

He added: "Quincy does a superb job working with these families in trying to get the resources they need. We always need to be focused as a team to ensure success."

McCarthy called the next few years "very critical to the City of Quincy" and added "the educational landscape must be protected.

"I promise to work very hard to ensure the students capitalize on every opportunity available. The major projects that are ongoing will impact the city, strengthening a school system that is already moving forward. As new programs, projects, and facilities are initiated in Quincy stability is needed to ensure success.

"Effectiveness on the Quincy School Committee means to be involved citywide. Quincy is a diverse community with a school system second to none. Your involvement as a committee member must be for all students in Quincy. Be it academics, athletics, the fine arts, music, career and technical education, ROTC or other programs, our students all have different identities and they are all are very important to me.

"So from Quincy Point to Squantum/North Quincy or Houghs Neck to West Quincy, you'll find me working and looking for ways to help our kids in Quincy."

McCarthy has been married to Rosanne (Johnson) McCarthy for 25 years. They have 8 children, ranging in age from 19 to 5.

"I am honored to represent Quincy and look forward to speaking with many constituents this summer as I work towards re-election," he added.

Mariano: Quincy A Moving Target In Re-Districting Plan

cal lift is what's there now. It's the fastest: the whole deck comes up in one piece, the boat goes through and then it comes down.

"Right now it's as high as it's probably going to be. The frequency of openings has decreased, especially in the summer time. The boats from the yacht clubs can sail through without any problem," he added.

Mariano also addressed other issues including a "tax-free holiday" in August, expanded gambling in Massachusetts, and Congressional redistricting in the Bay State.

Mariano said support is growing on Beacon Hill to enact a "tax-free" retail sales holiday next month because tax revenues have exceeded projections.

"The (revenue) numbers have been significantly better. We put $300 million in the 'rainy day' fund about a month ago and we had a great April. "Revenues were 52 percent above projections so it's been pretty good. I think the feel is that we should give a little back right now if we can."

Mariano said he expects a decision on the "tax free holiday" will be made by the end of this month.

There was no tax-free day last summer.

"I don't know if it will be two days in August. It may just be a Saturday or a Sunday," the majority leader added.

Mariano said offering consumers and retailers one day of shopping without collecting the 6.25 percent sales tax is one way to help jump start the economy. But, he added, he thinks state government should focus on job creation.

"I think that's one of the things we need to focus on in September. We're talking about a number of different things. Mostly educational, some job training and some tax incentives for small business.

"The thought being if you can help people through the front door of some of these businesses, and they make themselves valuable to some of these small businesses, they'll keep them on.

"What you have now is a general uncertainty in the economy. They don't want to hire that extra person. They're afraid it'll put their budget out of balance and they'll have a hard time making payroll. We understand the hesitancy of hiring."

On gambling, the House Majority Leader said the odds are increasing that "you're going to see something" – legislation supporting 'racinoes' and casinos – by the end of September or early October.

"The speaker has pushed it back because there was some disagreement with the Senate."

Last year's expanded gambling bill called for three casinos and two racinos. A racino would offer slot machines and simulcast wagering but no gaming tables.

"I support giving the 'racinos' right to the (dog and horse race) tracks because it's an entity that's prepared for gaming right now," Mariano says. "They're regulated. You can put slots in and get the revenue right away. Racinos are a good way to get the money instantly.

"Casinos will take two or three years before they're up and running. But racinos are a destination. That gives us instant revenue. Otherwise you're looking at two or three years. I think three years is optimistic because you have to get the infrastructure built, you have to get the commission in place, you have to get the regulations adopted. They have to staff up and hire people.

"People think casinos would open the day after the legislation passes. They're three years away and then there's the question over who's gonna run it and be the watch dog.

"The benefit we have is we don't have to reinvent the wheel. We can look at other states and the legislation they've proposed and how's it worked so we can go to school off of that. But we still have to put something in place. There's nothing in place right now that could manage something that size."

One wild card on the gambling issue is Gov. Deval Patrick.

"I don't know what the governor will do. I think he wants to do something but I'm not sure exactly what he wants. We have to wait and see."

On the redistricting issue, Quincy is a moving target. In what re-drawn Congressional district the city ends up in is anybody's guess, Mariano says. Possibilities include placement in an expanded South Shore and Cape Cod district; a district that stretches west across the state; be part of a Boston district; or in a new coastal district that spans both the North and South Shores.

"This is a tough one. We're going from 10 seats to 9. The hope is the 10 Congressional folks could work this out so we don't have a (political) blood bath. They're all Democrats. It would be nice if that could happen and then we could get into making the (nine new) districts. But it appears to be no consensus among the delegation so it's going to be left to us (state commission) to come up with the districts."

At the moment, all 10 Congressmen appear they will seek re-election next year. That means two incumbents would square off for the same seat. The last two Bay State congressmen to be elected were Niki Tsongas – who represents the 5th District – in 2007; and Bill Keating – who represents Quincy and the 10th district – who was elected last year.

The other Massachusetts congressmen by seniority are:

Rep. Ed Markey (7th District, elected 1975); Barney Frank (4th District, 1981); Richard Neal (2nd District, 1989); John Olver (1st District, 1991); James McGovern (3rd District) and John Tierney (6th District) both 1997; Michael Capuano (8th District, 1999) and Stephen Lynch (9th District, 2001).

"Traditionally, it's been a seniority thing," Mariano said. "Seniority is going to be a factor – I don't know how much a factor so that puts Quincy right in the middle of it because Bill Keating is the newest representative in the state delegation. I think Quincy could stay the way it is, with some additions because the Cape has lost population and we have gained population. So, the 10th as it stands now could look similar to how it looks now but a little bigger with a few towns added on."

However, Mariano adds: "It could change significantly depending on whether or not some folks end up running against each other which is the scenario in play right now. I would have to think it's Bill Keating against someone else because he's the last one in. I don't know. It's really too early."

Rumors are also adding fuel to the re-districting speculation. One has Sen. John Kerry getting an appointment in the Obama administration. That would open up his Senate seat and lead to some Congressmen running for Kerry's seat.

Another interesting factor to keep in mind: congressmen are not required to live in the district they represent.

"These guys can pick and choose what they're going to do and we can draw the districts and we don't have to worry about where they live. We can just draw the districts based on population. They decide who's gonna run where. That may end up happening."

Another factor: minority issues.

"You've got the minority issues that you have to deal with otherwise the (re-districting) plan will be thrown out in court and you try to address those things up front," Mariano said. "I think Capuano has a minority-majority district so the smart thing is to leave that one alone and not change it.

"Then maybe with Quincy – with the increase in minorities now up to almost 24 percent – becomes an attractive community because it does bring a number of minorities into play and makes the plan look balanced and responsible. Quincy is pivotal. A lot of people want us in their Congressional district."

He added: "I've seen a number of different scenarios. I think come September – after Labor Day – there's going to be some hard decisions to make."

House Speaker Bob DeLeo has appointed a 15-member committee to draft a redistricting plan for the congressional seats. The committee also prepares a plan for the 160 House, 40 Senate and governor council's districts.

The plans will be presented to the House for approval and then submitted to the Senate.

Mariano said the House, Senate and governor's council districts plan must be approved by the end of October. "You have to be a resident of the district a year before the election. We have to get it done before the first week of November."

For the new Congressional map, that plan doesn't have to be approved until the end of the year. But Mariano thinks both plans will be voted on around the same time.

"I don't know what the committee is going to do. It's a wide-ranging, diversified committee. We hope they can come up with a plan that can fly."

One scenario Mariano does not want: Quincy split into two separate districts.

"I think it's more beneficial to be in one district and have a say in who the congressman is going to be. I think if you get divided that power is diluted."

Although it's a local issue, the $1.6 billion initiative to redevelop Quincy Center has attracted a lot of interest at the state level.

"I get more questions from other reps about what we're doing and how is the deal structured, how can this happen? Where did these guys (Street-Works) come from? How did you come to these agreements? Is this real?

"I've already had a few reps come down and take a look at the plan. It's viewed with some degree of excitement by other reps who represent older cities and have the infrastructure problems that Quincy has. Most of the greater Boston guys are watching this and are anxious to make something like this happen in their communities.

"So, a lot of credit has to go to the mayor (Tom Koch) and to the governor (Deval Patrick). The governor's team has made it pretty easy for us to get the permitting and work with us making sure we have access to all the money programs that the state has."

Mariano said the state recently streamlined all public financing programs under one leader. The leader will evaluate the applications and "we're in the process of changing the law now to empower this person so he or she has control over all the programs. So you have one spot; you put your application in and then they tell you what you're eligible for. You don't have to chase around 10 or 12 programs.

"I know (Quincy Planning Director) Dennis Harrington has put his application in already and we're working on getting approval and going through the programs to see how much money we can get from the Commonwealth."

Mariano fully supports the downtown project.

"This is a great idea. We've been waiting so long for something to happen. My view of this is if they do everything in that plan it's a homerun. But in order for this to be successful, you don't have to hit a homerun. You can hit a double. If you can change the culture of the downtown and change it from just nail shops, bars and hair salons to some shops supported by condos you change the culture of the downtown.

"We've already seen more restaurants coming in; we've seen change already. You bring more people into the downtown you'll see even more change. And I think if we just hit a double then the project will be a success."

Mahoney: Quincy Needs Comprehensive Economic Development Strategy

In a statement released by her campaign Tuesday, mayoral candidate Anne Mahoney pledged to implement a comprehensive citywide economic development strategy that would inject new life into Quincy's neighborhood business districts while instituting more stringent city oversight of the downtown redevelopment project.

Mahoney, currently the vice chairperson of the Quincy School Committee, said she would draw on her degree in finance and private-sector business experience to better manage the billion-dollar development project while expanding City Hall's focus to include business districts in North Quincy, Wollaston, Quincy Point and other areas of the city.

"Tom Koch has put all his eggs in Street-Works' downtown basket to the detriment of Quincy's other business districts," said Mahoney, noting that the Koch administration has discouraged and created obstacles for businesses seeking to open up in other areas of the city, such as BJ's Wholesale Club, Lowes and Walgreens.

"Quincy needs a mayor with the background and experience in business to implement an economic development strategy that looks at the city as a whole and doesn't favor one large developer at the expense of the hundreds of businesses that are the lifeblood of the Quincy business community."

In addition to developing a strategic plan for proactively recruiting businesses to all of Quincy business districts, Mahoney pledged to:

• Protect taxpayers' investment in the downtown redevelopment project through more stringent oversight.

• Increase the transparency of the project through public availability of project timelines, deliverables and costs.

• Ensure all citizens understand the scope and true costs associated with the downtown redevelopment.

• Remove politics from the City/Street-Works relationship and ensure that any hiring is based on qualifications, not connections.

"A project of this magnitude requires experienced, professional leadership at City Hall," Mahoney said. "As mayor, I'll ensure that the downtown redevelopment is executed in the best interests of Quincy residents and business owners, not developers."

Mahoney charged that the Koch administration, "in its zeal to please Street-Works, has driven out successful Quincy businesses, forcing them to relocate elsewhere." She pointed to the case of the Little Q Hot Pot restaurant, which made a significant investment in opening a highly-rated restaurant in Quincy Center, only to learn shortly thereafter that the building in which it had signed a 20-year lease was slated for demolition as part of the downtown redevelopment project.

"Little Q Hot Pot is considered one of the best restaurants in the entire Boston area; it brought people to Quincy from all over the region," Mahoney said. "It was exactly the type of business the mayor's office should have worked to keep here in Quincy – but instead the Koch administration's mismanagement forced them to relocate elsewhere. Now, Boston and Arlington will reap the economic benefits of having Little Q Hot Pot in their communities."

In Mahoney's release, she stated Ming Zhu, Little Q Hot Pot's owner, said he was shocked to learn just seven months after investing $800,000 and more than a year of negotiating and construction that the building in which he opened his Quincy restaurant had been scheduled for demolition.

"We spent months dealing with the building department, the licensing board, the health department – and not one person told us about (the demolition)," said Zhu, who came from California to open his restaurant in Quincy. "We could not understand why everyone tried to cover the project from us."

When faced with the news that he would have to move, Zhu said he hoped to find another Quincy location for his new restaurant, which had already built up a following.

"The city had a relocation specialist who was supposed to help us find a location – but they did not present us with a single location to consider," Zhu said. "We had made so many customers in Quincy we did not want to leave. But when the city wouldn't help us find another location and told us they could only offer $225,000 to relocate us, we had no choice but to hire an attorney."

In early 2010, the city ended up paying a legal settlement of $735,000 to relocate the restaurant to Boston – an amount Zhu says was more than he initially requested. "It would have been cheaper if the city had helped us relocate in Quincy, where the rent and the cost of renovations would have been cheaper," Zhu said. "Everyone is always asking what the Q in Little Q refers to: Q is for Quincy. We miss Quincy and we miss so many of our customers who live in Quincy. We would love to come back to Quincy, but not until the city changes the way it treats local businesses."

Meeting On YMCA Project Wednesday

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest scheduled a neighborhood meeting yesterday (Wednesday) at 7 p.m. in the second floor conference room of the YMCA, 79 Coddington St., Quincy, regarding the Y's proposal to consturct a new facility to replace the existing facility.

The City of Quincy Planning Board, Zoning Board of Appeals and the Conservation Commission will hold hold public hearings on this matter.

The YMCA has requested an opportunity to show the project to the neighbors prior to filing with the planning board, zoning board and conservation.

For more information, contact Laforest at 617-376-1351.

Track Construction Moves Forward, Judge Dismisses Injunction

The long-awaited construction of a regulation running track for Quincy's young people is moving full-speed ahead after a Superior Court Judge refused to halt the project over what the City's chief lawyer called a "questionable" lawsuit filed by a group of individuals, including three School Committee members.

"The winners of this decision are the young people of this City, who for the first time in the history of our community will soon have a full, regulation-sized running track. We are moving forward with this important project," Mayor Thomas Koch said in a statement Tuesday.

The lawsuit, filed by long-time opponents of the track and School Committee members Anne Mahoney, David McCarthy, and Elaine Dwyer, uses a different strategy than several previous unsuccessful challenges to the track plans by claiming that a 2008 vote of the School Committee controls the fate of the Faxon Field track site.

The lawsuit claims that the site is part of the Quincy High School campus and therefore controlled by the School Committee, while City Solicitor James Timmins argues that the site, while near the high school, has always been used as a public park under the jurisdiction of the Mayor and Park and Recreation Board similar to more than two dozen similar parks across the City. He noted that the site is separated from the high school by a huge, six-acre wetland and the City's municipal tennis courts.

In 2009, the School Committee asked for an independent opinion on the subject from the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, which advised that the City had authority to build a track at the site. The issue had not been raised publicly again until the lawsuit was filed this spring, when plans for the track were already moving forward.

"It's disappointing that a small group of people have tried again and again, using whatever means possible, to stop a project with such broad community support. It's especially disappointing in this case because we have three elected officials essentially suing the City they represent with a questionable lawsuit," said Timmins. "Like all of the previously dismissed issues, I am confident that the facts are on the City's side."

Construction of the track is now underway with site work being performed by the Park Department. The bid for the installation of the new track is expected to be issued later this year, officials said.

The plaintiffs in the lawsuit had sought an injunction to stop construction, but Superior Court Judge Kenneth Fishman denied that motion after a court hearing last week. As part of the hearing, Quincy Track Club director Geoff Hennessy submitted an affidavit in support of the City's plans.

The matter is scheduled for trial in the fall.

"We are working hard together to build this City up, and we are now going to have a first-class track facility for the entire community to enjoy," said Koch.

Parade, Picnic, Concert Celebrate Houghs Neck's 375th

By TOM TIMCOE

The 375th Anniversary Celebration of Houghs Neck came to an amazing conclusion July 16 with the community holding a parade, picnic and a concert.

The Celebrations began in November with the committee hosting a whist/cribbage party on a Sunday afternoon. In January we held our Birthday celebration at the St Thomas Aquinas Hall where various groups from the area set up tables with information about their programs that they offer to the community. Fratelli's Pastry Shop of Broad Street donated a cake that served the over 300 people in attendance.

Other events included a Pasta Dinner Dance, a Toll Booth on Sea Street and a Historical Scavenger Hunt for the families. But July 16th's event topped them all where the weather could not have been better.

Over 20 groups and floats marched through the streets of the neck including the Past Presidents of the Houghs Neck Community Council who saw residents lining the sidewalks to cheer the marchers on.

The Parade ended at the LaBrecque Field where the Norfolk County Sherriff's Office Community Relations Department set up a Barbeque for the marchers and all that came by. They did a remarkable job in serving over 350 people hot dogs, cheeseburgers, chips and ice cold water.

We finished off the picnic with a concert by two local bands began around 4:30 p.m. The first band was The Irresponsibles and later in the evening we had OHM. The event was over by 8 p.m.

Everyone who participated or attended had a great time. So much so that there was talk of having another picnic and concert next year, stay tuned.

The Committee wishes to thank everyone who took part in our celebration including Fratelli's Pastry Shop, Norfolk County Sherriff Mike Bellotti and his crew, all the local businesses that made donations during the year.

Quincy Yacht Club, Houghs Neck Congregational Church and the Holy Trinity Parish for the use of their halls, The Mayor's Office, Quincy Police Department and Honor Guard, the DPW, Parks Department and the Fire Department for their assistance in making all of our events possible.

A Job Well Done

On Monday, July 18 at approximately 11:05 p.m., Officer William Lanergan was dispatched to the Quincy Medical Center for a report of a man who just walked into the emergency room with stab wounds. Initial reports from the emergency room indicated that the assault took place somewhere near the Wollaston Center train station, but the exact location was unknown and at that time there was no suspect information.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, as the on duty Physician led the officer to the victim, he stated that the victim had two slash wounds, one on upper left arm, the second on his upper right arm. Both wounds were still bleeding and the victim had a good amount of blood on his arms, hand, and feet, as well as his shirt, shorts, and hat.

When Officer Lanergan asked the victim what happened, the victim said he did not want to "rat" anyone out. The officer then told the victim that this was a serious incident and someone was responsible for the wounds. The victim then confided that his girlfriend of four years "was the one who cut me."

Officer Lanergan contacted communications requesting that Officers respond to the address in Wollaston in an attempt to locate and detain the suspect. Officers' Dan Francis, Matt Tobin, Bruce Trieu, and Keith Wilbur responded to the address, while Officer Brian Flaherty brought a digital camera to the hospital to take photos for evidence purposes. Detective Wash and Lieutenant Burrell also responded to the crime scene.

As the victim was being treated, Officer Lanergan attempted to gather more information. The victim said that he picked up his girlfriend at 5:30 p.m. and they went to her house to "hang out." He said that they had a few drinks and then got into an argument, which escalated rapidly to the point where the suspect retrieved a large butcher knife from a drawer and then started chasing him with the knife.

The victim said he was "scared to death she was going to stab me." He was pleading with her to stop but she just kept slashing at him. The victim said that he was slashed on both arms and he started "bleeding all over the place." The suspect then pushed the victim out of the house, locked the door and told him to leave. The victim yelled to the suspect to call the police or take him to the hospital, but she responded by telling him to "@#$% off."

The victim said he knew the second floor window was open so he got a ladder, put it against the house and started to climb up the ladder. When the suspect noticed the victim using the ladder, she adamantly asked him what he was doing. The victim told her that he was trying to get back into the house to call for a ride to the hospital. The victim said, "I don't want you in my house - I will drive you home - to the hospital, wherever. Just don't come in my house."

The suspect drove the victim to Quincy Medical Center, dropped him off at the E.R. entrance and stated to him, "Get the @#$% out and don't come back to my house. I'm going home to clean up." The victim said he walked into the hospital on his own as the suspect sped off. The suspect never called the police to report the incident nor did she speak with anyone at the hospital. Officers at the residence located the suspect, a 53 year old Quincy resident, placed her under arrest and charged her with "Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon (knife)."

The victim was treated for a three-inch slash wound to his left arm that required twelve stitches to close. The wound to the right arm was seven inches long and required ten stitches to close. The victim was explained his rights under the domestic violence laws but declined assistance in seeking an emergency protection order. Upon being released from the hospital, Officer Lanergan drove the victim to another residence, where the victim willingly turned over his clothes (1 tee shirt, 1 pair of shorts, 1 hat, all covered in blood) as evidence.

Nice Work!

TWO MORE SCAMS: A Quincy resident received a letter from "Grand Financial Services" informing her that she won the "Market Survey Sweepstakes Lottery." Attached was a check for $4450.00 from "Cimarex Energy Co" which is an actual U.S. company. The resident knew this was a scam and wanted all readers alerted. The first question you must ask yourself is, "Did I enter this sweepstakes?" and secondly, if I won a market survey sweepstakes, why is an energy company sending me a check? There are many more questions; why am I required to pay the lottery the taxes, why wouldn't they just take it out of the winnings? Why is this company in the United Kingdom? Why is the area code out of Canada? Remember, they do this because there are enough victims to make it profitable.

The second scam involves copying Facebook photos, then using it in a letter form, telling a grandparent that their grandchild (in the photo) is in trouble and needs money wired to get them out of jail. This is just a new twist on the old way of the telephone scam.

A Job Well Done

On Monday, July 18 at approximately 11:05 p.m., Officer William Lanergan was dispatched to the Quincy Medical Center for a report of a man who just walked into the emergency room with stab wounds. Initial reports from the emergency room indicated that the assault took place somewhere near the Wollaston Center train station, but the exact location was unknown and at that time there was no suspect information.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, as the on duty Physician led the officer to the victim, he stated that the victim had two slash wounds, one on upper left arm, the second on his upper right arm. Both wounds were still bleeding and the victim had a good amount of blood on his arms, hand, and feet, as well as his shirt, shorts, and hat.

When Officer Lanergan asked the victim what happened, the victim said he did not want to "rat" anyone out. The officer then told the victim that this was a serious incident and someone was responsible for the wounds. The victim then confided that his girlfriend of four years "was the one who cut me."

Officer Lanergan contacted communications requesting that Officers respond to the address in Wollaston in an attempt to locate and detain the suspect. Officers' Dan Francis, Matt Tobin, Bruce Trieu, and Keith Wilbur responded to the address, while Officer Brian Flaherty brought a digital camera to the hospital to take photos for evidence purposes. Detective Wash and Lieutenant Burrell also responded to the crime scene.

As the victim was being treated, Officer Lanergan attempted to gather more information. The victim said that he picked up his girlfriend at 5:30 p.m. and they went to her house to "hang out." He said that they had a few drinks and then got into an argument, which escalated rapidly to the point where the suspect retrieved a large butcher knife from a drawer and then started chasing him with the knife.

The victim said he was "scared to death she was going to stab me." He was pleading with her to stop but she just kept slashing at him. The victim said that he was slashed on both arms and he started "bleeding all over the place." The suspect then pushed the victim out of the house, locked the door and told him to leave. The victim yelled to the suspect to call the police or take him to the hospital, but she responded by telling him to "@#$% off."

The victim said he knew the second floor window was open so he got a ladder, put it against the house and started to climb up the ladder. When the suspect noticed the victim using the ladder, she adamantly asked him what he was doing. The victim told her that he was trying to get back into the house to call for a ride to the hospital. The victim said, "I don't want you in my house - I will drive you home - to the hospital, wherever. Just don't come in my house."

The suspect drove the victim to Quincy Medical Center, dropped him off at the E.R. entrance and stated to him, "Get the @#$% out and don't come back to my house. I'm going home to clean up." The victim said he walked into the hospital on his own as the suspect sped off. The suspect never called the police to report the incident nor did she speak with anyone at the hospital. Officers at the residence located the suspect, a 53 year old Quincy resident; placed her under arrest and charged her with "Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon (knife)."

The victim was treated for a three-inch slash wound to his left arm that required twelve stitches to close. The wound to the right arm was seven inches long and required ten stitches to close. The victim was explained his rights under the domestic violence laws but declined assistance in seeking an emergency protection order. Upon being released from the hospital, Officer Lanergan drove the victim to another residence, where the victim willingly turned over his clothes (1 tee shirt, 1 pair of shorts, 1 hat, all covered in blood) as evidence.

Nice Work!

TWO MORE SCAMS: A Quincy resident received a letter from "Grand Financial Services" informing her that she won the "Market Survey Sweepstakes Lottery." Attached was a check for $4450.00 from "Cimarex Energy Co" which is an actual U.S. company. The resident knew this was a scam and wanted all readers alerted. The first question you must ask yourself is, "Did I enter this sweepstakes?" and secondly, if I won a market survey sweepstakes, why is an energy company sending me a check? There are many more questions; why am I required to pay the lottery the taxes, why wouldn't they just take it out of the winnings? Why is this company in the United Kingdom? Why is the area code out of Canada? Remember, they do this because there are enough victims to make it profitable.

The second scam involves copying Facebook photos, then using it in a letter form, telling a grandparent that their grandchild (in the photo) is in trouble and needs money wired to get them out of jail. This is just a new twist on the old way of the telephone scam.

Tips to Stay Healthy During Extreme Heat

The extreme heat experienced in the Quincy and Greater Boston area laset week raised concern among those who care for homebound individuals.

The Visiting Nurse Association of Boston (VNAB), the oldest and one of the largest home health care and hospice services in the city, warns that while children and the elderly are particularly vulnerable to heat-related illnesses and injury, everyone should take precautions during hot weather.

Infants and young children are especially sensitive to the effects of extreme heat, and must rely on other people to keep them cool and hydrated. As we grow older, our senses that distinguish hot and cold temperatures change, as does our ability to perspire which helps regulate body temperature, in turn making the elderly more susceptible to heat exhaustion and sunstroke. In response to the forecast, the VNAB has issued the following heat tips*:

Stay Cool

Keep your body temperature cool to avoid heat-related illness.

• Stay in air-conditioned buildings as much as possible.

• Find an air-conditioned shelter.

• When at all possible, do not rely on a fan as your primary cooling device.

• Avoid direct sunlight.

• Wear loose, lightweight, light-colored clothing.

• Take cool showers or baths.

• Check on those most at-risk twice a day.

• Never leave infants or children in a parked car.

Stay Hydrated

Because your body loses fluids through sweat, you can become dehydrated during times of extreme heat.

• Drink more water than usual.

• Don't wait until you're thirsty to drink more fluids.

• Drink from two to four cups of water every hour while working or exercising outside.

• Avoid alcohol or liquids containing high amounts of sugar.

• Remind others to drink enough water.

Stay Informed

Stay updated on local weather forecasts so you can plan activities safely when it's hot outside.

• Check local news for extreme heat alerts and safety tips.

• Learn the symptoms of heat-related illness.

Symptoms Of Heat-Related Illness

Heat rashes and muscle cramping are usually the first signs of heat-related illness, and may lead to heat exhaustion or stroke. Here is how you can recognize heat exhaustion and heat stroke and what to do:

• Heat Exhaustion

• Heavy sweating

• Weakness

• Cold, pale, and clammy skin

• Fast, weak pulse

• Nausea or vomiting

• Fainting

• What you should do:

• Move to a cooler location

• Lie down and loosen your clothing

• Apply cool, wet cloths to as much of your body as possible

• Sip water

• If you have vomited and it continues, seek medical attention immediately

Heat Stroke

• High body temperature (above 103°F)*

• Hot, red, dry or moist skin

• Rapid and strong pulse

• Possible unconsciousness

• What you should do:

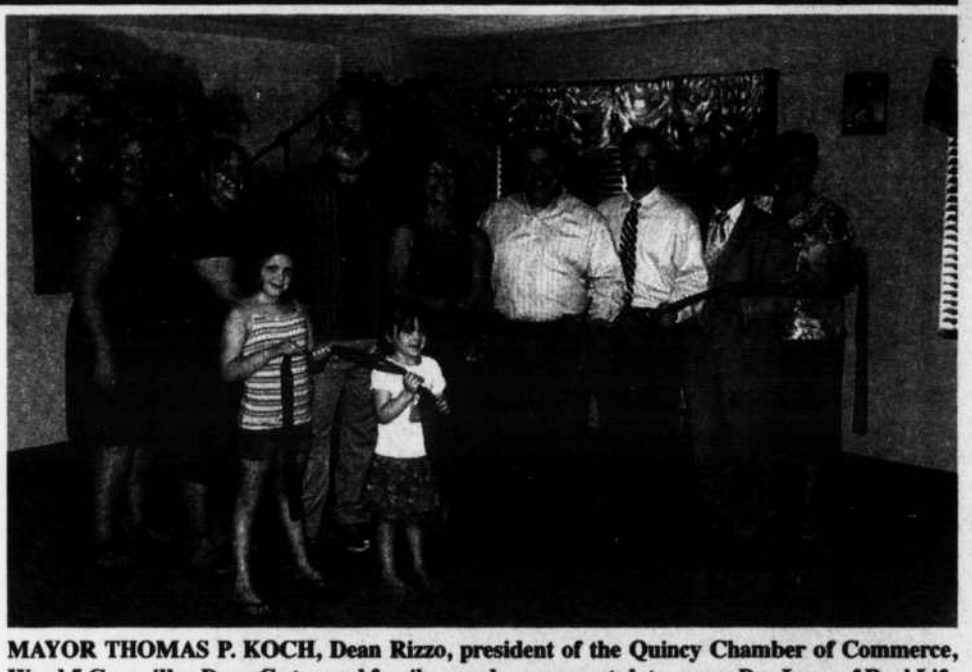

• Call 911 immediately — this is a medical emergency.

• Move the person to a cooler environment.

• Reduce the person's body temperature with cool cloths or even a bath.

• Do NOT give fluids.

Hot Weather Raises Health Risks For Kids Left In Cars

The Children's Trust Fund (CTF) reminds parents and the public that children left alone in a vehicle are at greater risk of heat stroke which can result in death.

On a 90-degree day, the temperature inside a car can exceed 109 degrees in 10 minutes. At that temperature, it does not take long for children to suffer heat-related illnesses, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

"These injuries can be prevented," says CTF Executive Director Suzin Bartley. "Parents and care-givers can take simple steps to anticipate situations that might cause a child be to be left unattended or have access to a vehicle."

CTF recommends that parents follow these tips to prevent children from being alone in vehicles:

• Never leave infants or children in a parked car, even for a quick errand and even if the windows are cracked open.

• To remember that a child is in the car, keep a stuffed animal in the child's safety seat. When the child is buckled in, the stuffed animal should be moved to the front with the driver to remind him or her that the child seat is occupied.

• When leaving a vehicle, check to be sure everyone is out of the car. Do not overlook any children who have fallen asleep in the car.

• Always lock a car, even at home, and remind friends and neighbors to do the same. Always put keys in a safe place, out of the reach of young children.

• Make a plan with your daycare provider to always call if you keep your child at home for the day. If your child does not arrive at daycare as expected, your provider should get in touch immediately to ensure the child is not forgotten in a vehicle.

The public can help protect children from heat-related illness and injuries by reporting a child left unattended in a car to local police or other security officials.

Each year, several dozen young children across the United States die in parked motor vehicles from heat-related causes. At least 15 children died this way during the first half of the year.

CTF conducts a public awareness campaign title "Not Even for A Minute" to remind parents and the public of these dangers and provide helpful safety tips. For more information, visit CTF's online parenting resource OneToughJob.org.

SMILE MAKEOVER

Because your smile is one of the first things that people notice about you, it makes sense to have your teeth, gums, and lips carefully assessed by the dentist. To begin with, tooth-whitening can improve the color of yellowed and stained teeth, and replacement of amalgam (silver) fillings with tooth-colored composite materials can further whiten smiles. If necessary, composite bonding or porcelain veneers can be used to cover damaged teeth, while bridges, crowns, or implants fill in the gaps left by missing teeth. Irregularities in tooth length and shape can be addressed with tooth-contouring procedures so that the smile line formed by the edges of the upper teeth follows the curvature of the lower lip. These changes get noticed!

Everybody loves a bright while smile, and there are a variety of products and procedures available to help you improve the look of yours. If you have any further questions about tooth whitening, please ask us. Our goal is to help preserve your smile throughout a lifetime, and whitening can help make that possible. We welcome you to modern dentistry and to an unparalleled level of service in your search for a beautiful smile. Call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. Our office is located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincy-dentist.com.

P.S. Most people recognize a pleasing smile as one in which the two central front teeth have a width-to-length ratio of 4-to-5.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

by Dr. Gabrielle Freedman

Chiropractor

LETS NOT SIT THIS ONE OUT

Research shows that sitting most of the day increases the risk of dying of a heart attack by 54%. What makes this study, involving more than 17,000 men and women over 13 years, even more surprising is that the risk persisted whether or not participants smoked or exercised. Why? Well, to begin with, we burn 60 more calories per hour standing than sitting; therefore, sitting adds weight. And not only do the largest muscles in the body, the gluteal muscles ("glutes"), burn fewer calories, but they also push the pelvis forward, which chiropractors have long warned places stress on the spine. So, you can add higher heart attack risk to low back pain as a potential undesirable consequence of sitting.

We can help identify where your pain originates. Let us at the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC help you perform your personal best. Could you benefit from professional, gentle, and safe chiropractic care without the use of drugs or surgery? Chiropractic care has helped millions of people. Give us a call at 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. When a person stays in one position too long, the fascia (which connect individual muscles into a full-body network) begin to set, causing stiffness. Chiropractic treatment counteracts that effect by increasing flexibility.

Post 294 Eliminated From State Finals; Lost to Lowell Post 87 and South Attleboro Post 312

Lights Out For Morrisette In State Tournament

By SEAN BRENNAN

HUDSON - It was as if someone just turned off the lights.

Everyone go home.

There will be no more baseball this summer for Morrisette Post 294. The storybook season of Quincy's talented collection of 16-to-19-year-old ballplayers came to a sudden conclusion last weekend at the Massachusetts American Legion State Finals held in Hudson at Riverside Park.

Morrisette, playing in the state's exclusive final eight-team double-elimination tournament for the first time since 1995, came into Saturday's game against Lowell Post 87 having won five straight legion playoff games. There was excitement for a serious run at a state crown and the prize that comes with that honor: an all-expense paid trip to the American Legion Northeast Regional next week at Old Orchard Beach, Maine.

It didn't materialize the way anyone had hoped.

Post 294's potent bats were quieted by the outstanding starting pitching of Lowell's Costas Tingas and South Attleboro's Pete Cassidy and, two can-we-play-those-again innings; a five-run bottom of the seventh versus Lowell on Saturday and a three-run top of the fifth against South Attleboro on Sunday, doomed Morrisette.

Post 294 lost a seventh inning 3-1 lead against Lowell and fell 7-3 and South Attleboro's three-run fifth, which carried Post 312 to a 5-2 triumph, put the kibosh on one of the best season's in Morrisette's long and storied American Legion baseball history.

The disappointment of being so close to a state championship will eventually wash away. But right now it hurts and it should hurt. Since early June Morrisette has played some of the best and inspired baseball the city of Quincy has ever seen. The team rolled through the regular season in District 6 East, swept Franklin 2-0 in the district round and defeated, handily, Hawkeye Post, Hyde Park, and Somerset in the sectional round to earn its spot in the state finals.

"It (stinks) when it is over," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze following Sunday's elimination loss to South Attleboro. "You can look back and say 'well we could have done this, we should have done that,' and things could have been different. The bottom line is we made it to the final eight teams in the state and we did a great job doing it."

"These kids played their hearts out for me everyday and I couldn't ask for a better group of kids or a better coaching staff," Maze continued. "These kids are great and we'll take this experience and learn how to get here again and what we need to do to get to the next level next time.

"We made the final right; I'll take it. There are 158 teams at the beginning of the year in legion baseball in the state of Massachusetts - there are eight now and we were one of them."

After being shutdown by Tingas and Lowell in the early game Saturday, Morrisette was forced to play early Sunday morning against South Attleboro and Cassidy. This game marked the first time all season that Post 294 was playing in an elimination format; win and move on, lose and enjoy the month of August at the beach.

Starting pitcher Tim Liuzzo (eight innings, ten hits, three earned runs) escaped a top of the first two-out scoring threat. After getting Max Landcaster and Paul DiMascio on lazy fly outs to centerfielder Chris Connolly, Liuzzo allowed base hits to Skip Flanagan and Zach George before plunking Cassidy to load the bases. The lanky right-hander got Ed Fitzpatrick to ground out to second to the delight of the dedicated Morrisette fan base.

Looking to jump out to an early lead – a trait of Post 294 all season – in its half of the first, Morrisette's Greg Nelson and Colin Ryan (RBI) flew out and struck out before Matt Goreham (2-for-3) beat out an infield single. An infield error allowed Joe Alibrandi (1-for-3, SB) to reach and a walk to Malcolm Kelly (1-for-3, run) loaded the bases for Bob Kozlowski (1-for-3). Cassidy (eight innings, six hits), using a devastating curve ball to go along with a sneaky sharp fastball, fanned Kozlowski on three pitches.

An early scoring opportunity went by the wayside for Morrisette.

Liuzzo breezed through the second getting Ryan Geehan (strikeout), James Connolly and Keith Drucker 1-2-3 but Post 294 could muster only a two-out bunt single by Connolly (1-for-2, BB, run) off Cassidy in its half.

Liuzzo gave up a one-out single to Flanagan in the top of the third but got out of the inning unscathed. Ryan, who was a force both offensively and defensively during these legion playoffs, led off the bottom of the third by flying out to center. Goreham went down swinging (another curveball from Cassidy) but Alibrandi ignited the dugout by singling and stealing second. However, Cassidy baffled Kelly with off-speed to pick up his sixth strikeout.

A strikeout of Connolly and batter interference on Drucker negated an earlier walk to Geehan as Liuzzo continued to battle through a talented South Attleboro lineup in the fourth. Cassidy never wavered, though. After giving up a leadoff single to Kozlowski to start the bottom of the fourth, he struck out Mike Stille and got Leroy Wallace to ground into a double play to send the game into the decisive fifth frame scoreless.

Like it had against Lowell the day before, the game got away from Post 294 with one inning of bad hops, seeing-eye hits and just plain tough luck. Landcaster opened it with a free pass and DiMascio reached on a bad hop off of Ryan at shortstop. With one out George singled to load the bases and Cassidy looped a flare behind the first base bag, which scored Landcaster with the first run. Alibrandi cut down DiMascio at the plate for the second out but then Geehan came up with the at-bat of the game. His two-out single scored George and Cassidy – 3-0 South Attleboro.

Morrisette finally got on the scoreboard in the bottom of the fifth. Connolly walked and took second on an errant pick-off attempt. Nelson's right-side groundout advanced Connolly to third and Ryan's fielder's choice grounder plated the Quincy High standout. Goreham followed with single but Cassidy induced Alibrandi to tap out to first.

Post 294 would send the minimum number of batters to the plate during innings six through eight, as Cassidy got stronger when the game reached the late stages. He fanned Kelly in the sixth and Connolly in the seventh before finally allowing a runner (Goreham) to reach with one out in the eighth. Cassidy started an eighth-inning ending double play by snagging a rocket off the bat of Alibrandi.

South Attleboro scored two insurance runs off Liuzzo in the top of the eighth on a two-out triple by DiMascio.

Morrisette didn't go out without a fight. Kelly singled to lead off the bottom of the ninth before Liuzzo reached on an error. Cassidy was relieved by Fitzpatrick who got pinch hitter Jason Pekkinen to ground into a double play. Post 294's season ended with a strikeout of Wallace.

"It was a tough loss," said a disappointed but proud Ryan who made three outstanding defensive plays at shortstop, which had kept Morrisette within striking distance, "but the regular season itself and leading up to here was an amazing run. It was awesome, probably the best team I've played for in Quincy, ever. I wouldn't look back and have any regrets."

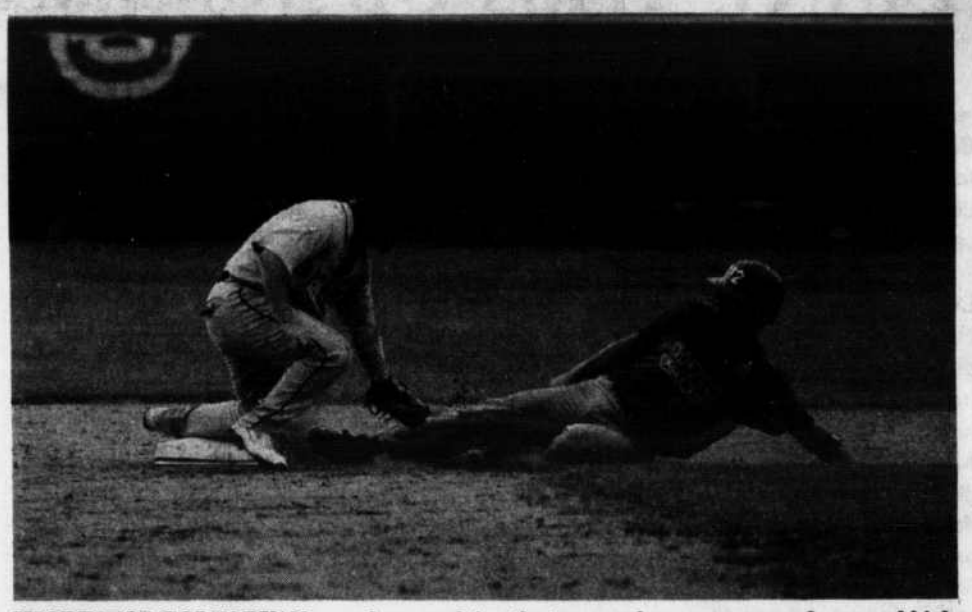

"I am going to miss all these guys but it was a fun season," he said.

All good things must come to an end. Morrisette Post learned that the hard way in the state finals, but that doesn't mean Post 294 is about to rest on its laurels. That wouldn't be the Morrisette way. This team will pick itself up and look to come back next season on a mission to finish the job.

"The off-season starts (Monday)," stated Maze who now holds a career record of 84-69-3 as coach of Post 294. "We start looking at who we have coming back and who is not coming (back). We will see what we need to fill and go down and look at kids playing for teams and for different leagues and just start putting it together for next year."

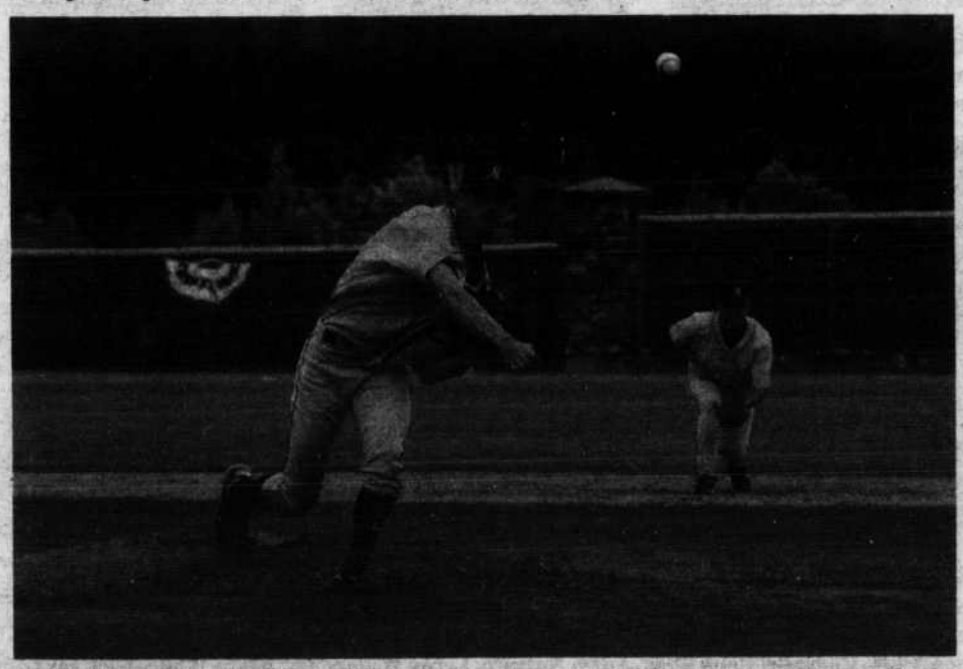

"The guys that are gone obviously will be missed. They are a great group of guys leaving but every year you lose players and you get some back. That is how it works."

It is already time to turn those lights back on.

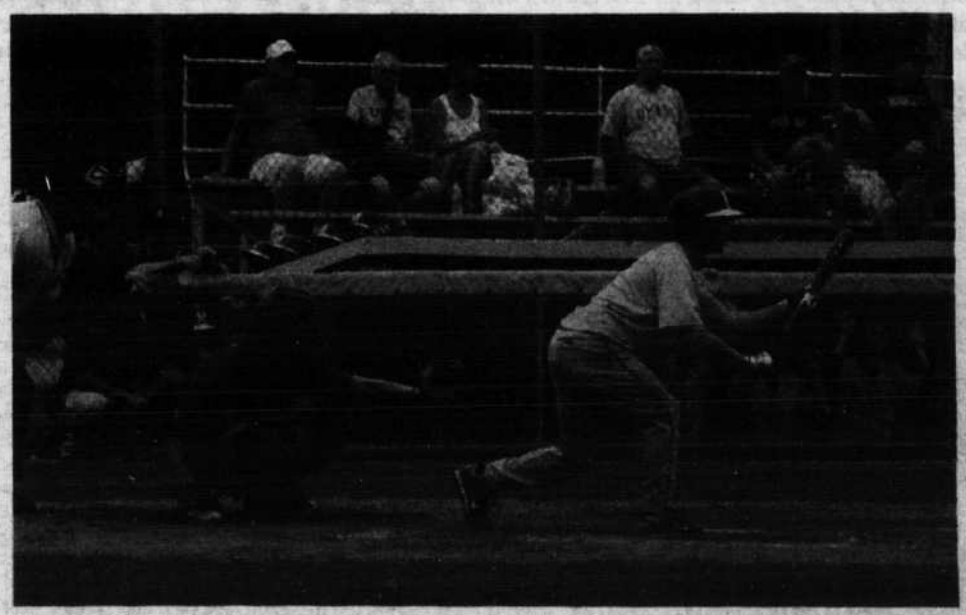

SHORTSTOP COLIN RYAN, seen here applying the tag on a base runner, made several highlight reel plays during this past weekend's American Legion MA State Finals. Ryan and Morrisette were eliminated following losses to Lowell and South Attleboro.

STARTING PITCHER TIM LIUZZO threw eight innings against South Attleboro, allowing three earned runs. Liuzzo also played in the outfield for Morrisette and contributed clutch hits throughout the season. He'll be a senior this fall at NQHS.

CHRIS CONNOLLY prepares to lay down a perfect bunt for a base hit against South Attleboro. Connolly had a great weekend in the state finals. The speedy centerfielder reached base four times – two hits and two walks – and made several plays in the outfield.

Lowell Trips Up Morrisette At Legion State Finals

By SEAN BRENNAN

HUDSON - Aces were wild Saturday morning at Riverside Park in Hudson in the opening game of the 2011 Massachusetts American Legion State Finals.

Morrisette Post 294's Donny Murray and Lowell Post 87's Costas Tingas played the part of the smoking aces, turning opposing hitters into puddles in the batter's box. Murray (six-plus innings, nine strikeouts) dominated early and often until fatigue and incredibly hot weather wore him down in the seventh inning while Tingas (seven innings, five strikeouts) dominated late after allowing Morrisette two runs in the top of the first.

The difference in the game, which was won 7-3 by Post 87, was that when Lowell needed a clutch hit it or a big defensive play it got it while Morrisette after getting three hits – and two runs – in the opening frame mustered just four more base knocks the rest of the way off of Tingas and relief pitcher Nick Goodin (two innings, four strikeouts).

The loss was a kick in the shins for Morrisette. This was a game that Post 294 had in its clutches only to watch as Lowell snatched it away during an error-filled five-run bottom of the seventh.

Credit goes to Tingas and Goodin. Come playoff time solid pitching can dominate prolific offenses and that is exactly what happened to Morrisette.

"Donny pitched great. We didn't hit the ball," said Post 294 coach Steve Maze. "We hit it early and then we fell asleep and then we had another shot late in the game and we didn't put (runs) across."

"Tingas pitched very well. It was a battle of number ones and we didn't prevail."

The contest between the top team from District 6 East (Morrisette) and the top team from District 5A (Lowell) was delayed over an hour due to heavy rain that soaked Riverside Park. After a wonderful job by the grounds crew to get the field playable, Morrisette got the early jump on Post 87 and Tingas. With one out, shortstop Colin Ryan (1-for-5, run) singled and advanced to third on a double from third baseman Joe Alibrandi (1-for-4, run). Cleanup batter Malcolm Kelly (1-for-3, BB, SB, RBI) drove home Ryan with a sharp single (1-0).

Alibrandi then trotted home on a wild pitch by Tingas (2-0); first baseman Bobby Kozlowski walked and both him and Kelly advanced into scoring position on another wild pitch from the Lowell right-hander. The opportunity to blow the state final game wide open fizzled as right fielder Tim Liuzzo (double, BB) struck out and designated hitter Jason Pekkinen (BB, run) grounded out to shortstop.

The Holy Cross-bound Murray allowed a lead off single to Post 87's Padraic Donovan before getting Derek Reed (fielder's choice) and Jim Ricoy on strikes. A Rory O'Connor single amped up the heat on Murray, but the powerful right-hander mowed down Chad Gens with gas to end the threat.

Tingas began to find his groove in the second. Second baseman Leroy Wallace (single) popped to short and centerfielder Chris Connolly (1-for-3, BB) grounded out. Leftfielder Greg Nelson (1-for-4, RBI) connected for a single but Tingas got Ryan to fly out to left.

Two quick outs (ground out, strikeout) by Murray in the second were followed by a base hit from Pat Florence and a walk to Andrew Donahue but the BC High standout got Donovan to hit into a two-hoper to Ryan at shortstop.

A one-out walk to Kelly gave Morrisette life in the top of the third, but Tingas bore down and got Kozlowski to ground into a 4-6-3 double play. Not to be outdone, Murray started his third frame with a three-pitch strikeout of Reed. Murray then woke up the weary crowd by blowing smoke by both Ricoy and O'Connor before jumping off the mound with authority.

As the early wet morning weather gave way to a searing heat, Tingas almost seemed rejuvenated entering fourth inning. He did walk Liuzzo to start the frame but quickly got Pekkinen and Wallace on groundouts before sitting down Connolly swinging.

Murray dominated to start the bottom of the fourth. He struck out Gens and Sam McCarthy (five consecutive strikeouts), but a two-out single by RJ Noel was a backbreaker. Noel swiped second and scored on another two-out single by Florence (2-1).

Nelson led off the fifth for Post 294 with a walk only to be picked off (missed call by first base umpire) by Tingas; Ryan bounced out to the mound and Alibrandi struck out. Murray cruised through his half of the fifth as he picked up his final punch-out on a wicked fastball to Reed.

An uneventful top and bottom of the sixth paved the path to the pivotal seventh inning. Morrisette struck first. Pekkinen walked on four pitches and advanced into scoring position on a single by Wallace. A perfect bunt from Connolly loaded the bases with nobody out. All season long Post 294 has capitalized on these types of situations but Morrisette hadn't seen a pitcher of Tingas' caliber playing this season in District 6 East.

Nelson did drive in Pekkinen with a productive out (sac fly, 3-1) but Ryan and Alibrandi grounded out leaving the bases loaded. This missed opportunity immediately came back to bite Post 294 as momentum shifted to Lowell's side of the field.

Florence singled to start the bottom of the seventh and Donahue walked. A bobble by Wallace at second and an error by Murray on a pickoff attempt allowed the tying run to cross the plate (3-3). That was the day for Murray. On came reliever Jack Higgins who was greeted by a Reed single, a Ricoy single and an O'Connor single. Gens drove in the inning's fifth run on a 5-4-3 double play (6-3).

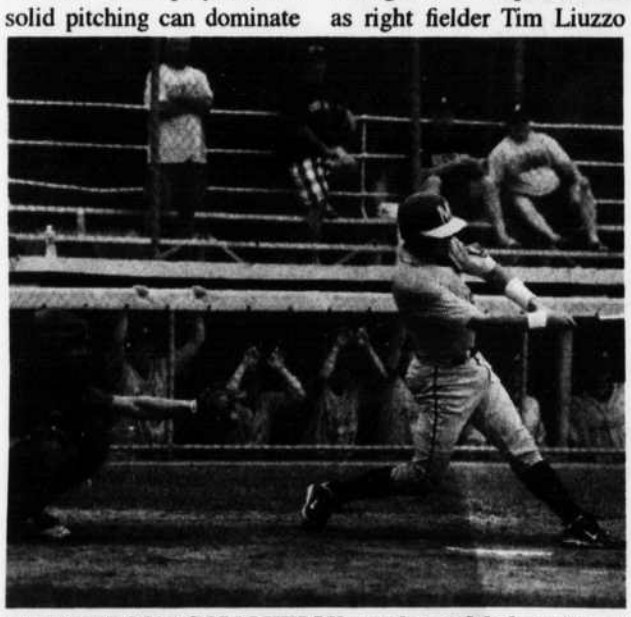

Lowell's final line in an inning to forget for Post 294: four hits, two walks, two errors, and five runs.

"Defensively we didn't play the game we usually play," said a frustrated Maze. "They had a bunt for a hit that we threw away; they took the lead on a pickoff move that wasn't even close. They didn't beat us by hitting the ball, they beat us by us beating ourselves. We didn't help because we didn't hit it."

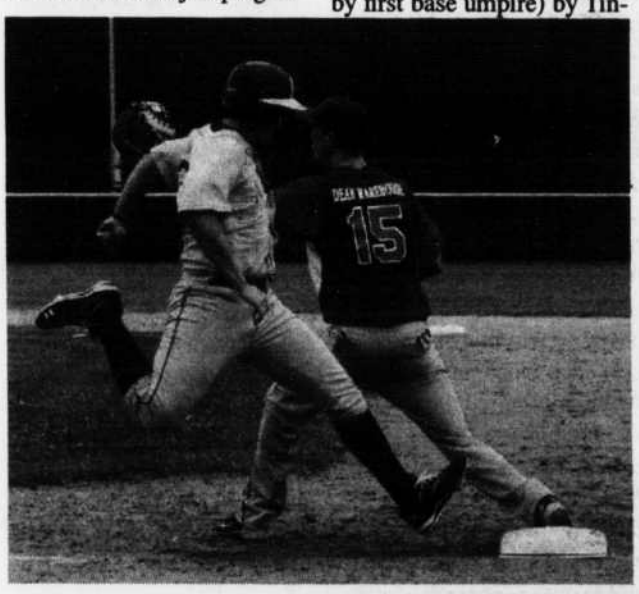

Trailing 6-3, Morrisette could not mount a comeback against reliever Goodin in the eighth. The hard-throwing righty struck out Kelly and Kozlowski before Liuzzo doubled only to be left stranded at second as Goodin completed the hat-trick with a strikeout of Pekkinen.

Lowell added an insurance run off Higgins in the bottom of the inning and Goodin fanned Ryan for the final out of the game to send Morrisette into the loser's bracket on Sunday.

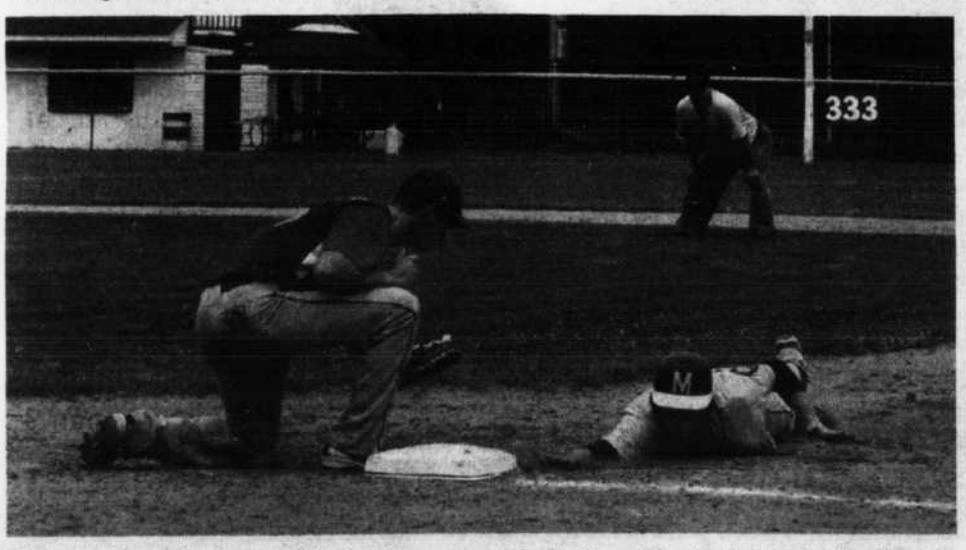

"I told the guys that we are 20-4, you only lost one," Maze said. "It is the first time they are going to play with their backs against the wall. There hasn't been any situation that we have had all year where it has been elimination time. It is going to have to be one inning at a time and one batter at a time and we'll go from there."

CATCHER MALCOLM KELLY was the model of consistency behind the plate this season for Morrisette Post 294. A graduate of The Dexter School (Brookline), Kelly brought a quiet leadership and loud bat to the team this summer.

BOBBY KOZLOWSKI lunges for the first base bag versus South Attleboro. He was out on a bang-bang play. Morrisette was eliminated from the state finals following a 5-2 loss to Post 312.

MORRISETTE POST 294 made it all the way to the 2011 Massachusetts American Legion State Finals. Local Player Given 2nd Look For NE Revolution U16 Team

Bjorn Armiri, a 15-year-old Quincy soccer player, was asked to train with the New England Revolution Academy Under-16 team in November after he attended a team tryout last Thursday.

The Academy is a Major League Soccer (MLS) managed youth soccer developmental program designed to groom future MLS players and feed into the national youth team system. Three such programs currently exist in New England but the Revolution Academy is the only tuition-free program so it is more selective.

Armiri will be a sophomore in the fall at Quincy High School. He played on the school's varsity soccer team as a freshman. According to his America FC coach of two years, Charles DyBaud, also a former QHS standout, "Bjorn was very nervous during the tryout." Even still, he explains, "Bjorn's technical skills stood out when he played against these players."

The players he tried out against were training one last time this season before they shipped out to either the US national U16 team training camp in Carson, CA or to Texas for the Generation Adidas Cup, a tournament for youth teams of MLS clubs. "It was a very tough group of players to go up against on your first tryout," DyBaud added.

Bryan Scales, the Director of Youth Development for the Revolution gave Bjorn a fair shake. After the tryout he said to Bjorn, "It is kind of hard to assess a player in one session but I see something here." He then offered him an opportunity to train with the U16 team on Sundays, beginning in early November when the team regroups after a two-month break.

Coach Conrad White, the head skills trainer at America FC, who was also in attendance felt Bjorn had more technical skills than many of the players but could not play at the pace they were playing at. He said, "It is something we can fix in training before his next visit. He is a fundamentally sound player so this is just an adjustment we need to make."

Armiri, who was critical about his performance, was also excited to be invited back to train. "I'll be better prepared in November," he said recognizing that he only has his foot in the door.

"There is no one more worthy of this opportunity in our club," stated James Abundis, America FC president. "I don't know of any local kid that works on his skills more than Bjorn does. If he gets on the team it will only be because he worked hard to get there – he will earn his way in."

We are often disappointed when we expect other persons to follow our ideas of how they should live their lives. We area disappointed because we are forgetting that each person lives life according to his or her own inner light.

Couldn't it be said that if we want to be happy and at peace in our human relationships, we must try to give other persons the same freedom of expression that we desire for ourselves? Then we find that most persons are interesting and enjoyable as they are. We come to appreciate the distinctive traits of character that different persons possess. And, most importantly, we are free from the tensions that would come if we tried to make others confirm to our ideals. . .

Contests – But No Preliminary Election For Mayor, Councillor At-Large, School Committee

23 Candidates File Papers

Four Ward Races Include Preliminaries In Wards 2 And 6

No Opposition In Wards 1 And 4

There will be contested races – but no city-wide preliminary election – for mayor, councillor at-large and school committee this fall after Tuesday's 5 p.m. deadline for nomination papers passed.

However, voters in Wards 2 and 6 will head to the polls Tuesday, Sept. 20 to cast ballots in preliminary elections for ward councillor.

The city's final election Tuesday, Nov. 8 will also feature contested races for councillor in Ward 3 and Ward 5 – the latter is an open seat that attracted two first-time candidates.

A total of 23 candidates filed their nomination papers with the city's Election Department.

Report: Old City Hall In Dire Condition

167-Year-Old Building Needs $6-8 Million In Renovations; Koch Seeks Community Preservation Funds, Historic Grants

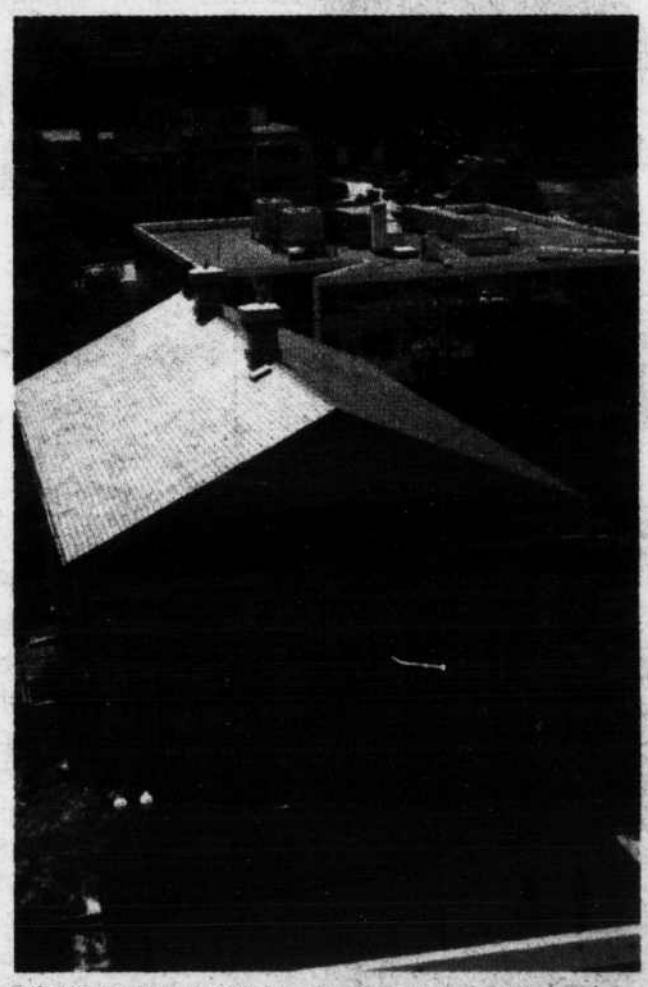

A final architectural study of Old City Hall – also known as the Mayor James R. McIntyre Government Center – details a litany of structural and safety issues in the 167-year-old building that will form the foundation of a major renovation project and the temporary relocation of some City offices.

The report, written by the Quincy architectural firm Holmes and Edwards, Inc. concludes that the building is in "very poor condition in almost every imaginable way," including inadequate fire protection, termite and beetle infested support beams, ceilings heavily damaged by leaks, poor heating and cooling systems, non-code compliant electrical and wiring systems, nonexistent handicapped access, asbestos and mold in several areas, and "emergency egress from all levels of the building (that) is inadequate and illegal by current building code standards."

No significant work has been done to the building in more than 100 years.

The building, one of the oldest functioning City Halls in America, will need between $6 million to $8 million in repairs. In the meantime, the City Council, City Clerk and other offices

Chan, Ayers, Keenan Working With Morrissey

Legislators, D.A. Target Internet Predators

The Sex Offender Registry stops at the door to the internet.

But Norfolk District Attorney Michael Morrissey, Rep. Tackey Chan, Rep. Bruce Ayers, Sen. John Keenan and a dozen other legislators are teaming up to try to change that.

"Registering as a sex offender means giving police your name, home and work address, and any alias you have used," said Norfolk DA Michael W. Morrissey. "But sex offenders aren't required to give their screen names, online aliases, email addresses or web addresses – and that is a dangerous omission."

That means that predators can pretend to be anyone they want in chat rooms, on social networking sites and in email correspondence without violating the sex offender registry. "The registry was designed before electronic communication became so much of everyday life," Morrissey said. "It is time for the registry to reflect the realities of this generation."

"The legislation expands the way we protect our families from potential danger by sex offenders," Chan said. "So much of our lives are connected through the Internet and identities we created. We must update our laws to reflect the high technology world we live in."

"This legislation creates an additional barrier to known sex offenders who want to start communicating with children under false pretenses, and eventually gain access to them," Ayers said. "The information will be useful for police, it will create a disincentive for creating misleading online identities and it will crimi-

Post-Mortem Report Cites Massive Bruising

567-Pound Turtle Died Entangled In Buoy Ropes

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The television cameras rolled and flashbulbs flickered Monday near Fore River when the body of a 567-pound Leatherback turtle, a sea creature dating back to the prehistoric earth, arrived by van at the New England Aquarium's Animal Care Center in Quincy.

Five hours later, a post-mortem or necropsy determined that the male turtle, roughly seven to ten-years-old, died a gruesome death entangled in buoy ropes in Falmouth Harbor over the past weekend, according to the Aquarium's spokesman Tony LaCasse.

"He died of marine entanglement with massive bruising around the flippers and the neck," LaCasse said Tuesday.

LaCasse, also, reported that this was the third Leatherback entangled in ropes in Cape waters in less than a week. A fourth Leatherback was found dead of injuries from a motorboat's propeller during the same period.

"For the second time in less than a week, a giant, endangered sea turtle has been found dead in the waters off of Falmouth," LaCasse reported that the two other giant sea turtles were untangled and set loose.

While such a sea turtle is an awesome sight, their survival is also important to the public as they live on jellyfish, keeping those numbers stable.

"They follow the jellyfish," said Rescue and Rehabilitation Coordinator Connie Merigo, emphasizing the Leatherbacks live only on jellyfish. Merigo headed the necropsy team.

Merigo, accompanied by Kate Sardi, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), transported the dead turtle from Falmouth Harbor to Quincy.

On arrival and after riding over 65 miles with the dead creature, Merigo warned the press, "The flies and smell are going to be overwhelming."

Merigo properly described the rancorous odor enveloping the scene when the massive body, whose paddle-like flippers were already yellowing in death, was moved to the center's doors.

At the same time, Merigo warned that no description or pictures of the buoy attached to the turtle could be used, "We have a law enforcement issue."

Leatherback turtles have been deemed an Endangered Species and any deliberate attack would be subject to, at minimum, a $50,000 fine, according to Sardi.

Survival is tough for the Leatherback whose dark topcoat makes it difficult for boaters to spot and whose cumbersome physique and massive flippers are easily caught in roping laid for traps and anchors

"They're not the quickest of turtles," said Kurt Hood, a biologist at the Aquarium center, adding that there have been a number of other strandings of the turtles.

Since arriving in Quincy, Merigo, Hood and other members of the Aquarium team, have worked to aid other species of injured and sick turtles that have been rescued and brought to the Aquarium's Quincy center.

Over 100 have been released this year, according to Merigo and an additional 13 rehabilitated turtles will be released shortly. None have been Leatherbacks, which also die from eating plastic dumped in the oceans as they mistake the plastic for jellyfish.

According to Wikipedia, the Leatherback is the last remnant of a turtle family dating back 100 million years. Full-grown Leatherbacks can weigh over 2,000 pounds and exceed seven feet in length.

Despite their ungainly appearance, Leatherbacks can dive 4,200 feet to the ocean floor and stay underwater for over an hour. They are the largest of all living sea turtles and the fourth largest reptiles outsized only by three strands of crocodiles.

State Sets Tax-Free Weekend Aug. 13-14 To Boost Businesses

Quincy's State House delegation – state Reps. Ronald Mariano, Bruce Ayers and Tackey Chan and state Sen. John Keenan – announces the Legislature has approved a state sales tax holiday on the weekend of Aug. 13th and 14th to encourage consumers to shop at local businesses across the state.

"With folks across the Commonwealth continuing to struggle through the economic downturn, the sales tax holiday will provide relief to consumers while supporting local merchants," Mariano said.

"This provision targets local business and helps keep jobs in Massachusetts," Chan added.

"Citizens of the Commonwealth deserve this Sales Tax Holiday which will provide modest relief for consumers," Ayers said.

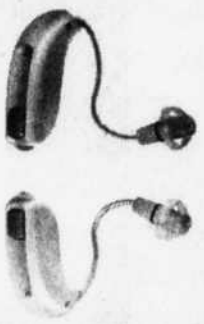

"This is a way to help working families during these tough economic times," Keenan added.

The legislation requires that the commissioner of revenue certify the amount of sales tax forgone as well as the amount of revenue lost from specific government funds into which the weekend's sales tax revenue would have been deposited. The commissioner must also certify the amount of new revenue raised from personal and corporate income taxes and other sources as a result of the sales tax holiday. These certifications must come by the end of this calendar year.

The sales tax holiday applies to retail sales excluding any single item priced higher than $2,500. The sales tax holiday does not apply to telecommunications or tobacco products as well as gas, steam, electricity, motor vehicles, motorboats or meals.

COMING UP ROSES!

With modern diamond cuts so focused on obtaining every last drop of fire and brilliance from the "forever" gemstone, it is interesting to note that rose-cut diamonds have come back in fashion. Deriving its name from the fact that its shape resembles the petals of a rosebud, the rose cut features 3 to 24 facets arranged in a domed honeycomb that meets at a point in the center. This type of cut, which was the preeminent diamond style in Europe from the 1500s to the late 1800s, possesses abundant charm, a fact that is not lost on designers using vintage diamonds in their retro-look and neo-classical pieces. The demand has even revived interest in new rose-cut diamonds.

The romance and spledor of a rose is portrayed flawlessly in the layered features of a rose cut diamond, creating an alluring ring with a very exclusive background. Ask our jewelers to show you several of our rose cut diamonds. You will find dazzling these diamonds of all shapes and sizes displayed in our showcases at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. If you have any questions about the exquisite pieces we offer please feel free to contact us at 617-773-3636.

Quincy College Governors Eye Downtown Home

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy College will likely move lock, stock and students back to Quincy Center and one main campus by 2016, according to President Peter Tsaffaris.

"It's our natural home," said Tsaffaris, adding that college officials will work with Street-Works, the Quincy Center redevelopment team, to review options and prepare definitive proposals by the end of October.

With that goal, the College's Board of Governors last week appointed a 13-member committee to meet with Street-Works representatives. Members of the committee include seven governors and six college administrators, including Tsaffaris. The members are listed below.

The 52-year old Quincy College appears to be in a solid bargaining position as its May 31 financial report details an $18.1 million balance in cash and investments. Those records show an increase in cash but a loss in the college's investments over the past year. The year's final report is not available at this time.

"Our finances are very solid. We've been very prudent," Tsaffaris said Tuesday. "We're in a favorable financial position."

Tsaffaris said the governors have made no decision on whether to lease or purchase property for one major structure which will house all departments except physical education and performing arts.

If the college purchases the new site, that would "take the property off the tax rolls," noted Tsaffaris who said the college would then enter into a PILOT (payment in lieu of taxes) agreement with the city to balance the loss.

The choice of a new campus will "establish the footprint of the institution for the next generation," according to William Grindlay, chairman of the Board of Governors.

Governor Thomas Feenan predicted Quincy College's full return to Quincy Center "will bring life back to the city" and be a major factor in its revitalization.

Both spoke as a member of the Governors' Finance and Facilities Sub-Committee on July 26 after a unanimous vote on a recommendation to appoint an exploratory committee to meet with the Street-Works team.

At that meeting, the Governors appeared to be working in harmony in contrast to the upheaval at board meetings twelve months ago when the members split over the choice for a new president. A majority of the Public Hearing Aug. 9 On QMC Transfer

Attorney General Martha Coakley's Office, in conjunction with the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (DPH), will hold a public hearing regarding the proposed transfer of Quincy Medical Center to a wholly owned indirect subsidiary of Steward Health Care System, LLC.

New First Parish Swinging Bell Has A Nice Ring To It

In a few months, the bell tower at United First Parish Church will look virtually new again.

New mahogany columns, restored column capitals and a fresh coat of gold leafing gilded to the copper cupola and weather vane will adorn the top of the historic "Church of the Presidents" by the end of October thanks to a $600,000 restoration which began last week.

The project – supported by grants from three different sources including Community Preservation funds – marks the first significant restoration to the bell tower in 47 years.

But, there's more to be done.

And hopefully it will be.

The clock that appears on the four sides of the church below the bell tower needs work. The gilding to the clock's Roman numerals, the hands and the black circular background have faded. Officials are looking into doing that work while scaffolding is up during the restoration project.

They're also studying the feasibility to doing something that hasn't happened in 152 years: install a new bell in the tower.

That's because the current 3,012-pound bronze bell – nearly 1,000 pounds heavier than the famed Liberty Bell – has a 28-inch crack extending vertically from its shoulder. It can still be struck but there is wide concern it could fail.

The bell – a "fine 54 ½ inch Hooper Cast Bronze Bell" – was cast by Henry N. Hooper of Boston in 1859 – some 29 years before Quincy became a city. Hooper was an apprentice of Paul Revere. He later purchased Revere's foundry and established his own company.

Today, Hooper's bells can be found in universities, court houses and churches throughout New England, including Arlington Street Church in Boston and of course, the one hung at United First Parish in Quincy.

Originally, the United First Parish bell was hung in a cast-iron, counterweighted headstock, to be swing-tolled by rope and wheel. A clock hammer to strike the hours was fitted to the timber base on one side of the bell.

In 1979, an 18-inch crack was documented by Massco (Machinery & Steel Service Co., Inc., East Weymouth.) Last week, Bennett inspected the bell again and measured the crack. It extends another 9 or 10 inches.

It also is permanently mounted in the belfry – meaning it can't be rung by swinging a rope like it did when it was first hung in 1859.

"It would be wonderful if the bell could be replaced or restored to full sound and be able to swing again," said Rev. Sheldon Bennett, the church minister since December 1986. He will retire next June.

"Imagine the joy in pulling on the rope to set the bell ringing in celebration of special occasions. What a wonderful way to celebrate the dedication of the new Adams Green on its completion."

And what better location would there be to display the current bell: prominently in the green space of the Adams Green project encompassing the James R. McIntyre Government Center, a portion of Hancock Street and United First Parish Church.

That's if a new bell can be installed. One estimate puts a new bell at $75,000.

That price-tag should not prohibit any efforts to replace the bell.

REV. SHELDON BENNETT, minister of United First Parish Church, points to the crack in the 152-year old bell that extends about 28 inches from its shoulder.

Less important things have cost more.

The bell tower may be the physical focal point of the historic church – the only location in the United States where two U.S. presidents are entombed (John Adams and John Quincy Adams.)

But it's the bell's distinct pitch that would sound a renewed sense of community in a revitalized Quincy Center.

When proposals for bell repairs were submitted in the early 1980's, one company – Goodsell Church Goods, North American representative for Finkenbeiner Quartz Bells, wrote: "Believe it or not, when a bell is struck by a clapper (with bell stationary) instead of being struck while swinging, the sound is totally different. It is quite apparent to the listener that something has changed and they'll think that perhaps the bell is out of tune.

"The simple act of swinging gives the bell a tone that sounds lighter, freer, while the stationary striking gives it a more solemn, tolling, sound."

Bennett agrees.

"The current striking mechanism does give a solemn, tolling, sound instead of a brighter, pealing ring," he says.

He also envisions other occasions for bell-swinging and ringing: the birthday anniversaries of Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams; and the 200th anniversary of the Signing of the Treaty of Ghent in 1814. Signed on Christmas Eve that year, the treaty ended the War of 1812 between the U.S. and Great Britain. John Quincy Adams helped draw up the treaty.

The last time the bell was rung by swinging was in 1980 to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the Massachusetts Constitution that was written by John Adams.

The bell also has hammer marks on the side of it. One day during the nation's bicentennial in 1976, a church sexton struck the bell with a hammer 50 times, symbolizing one hit for each state. The bell could not be swung during that observance and striking it was the only way the church could participate in other bell ringings throughout the land.

In 1983, Linda Woodford, a church bell-hanger in Boston, inspected the bell and issued a report with recommendations for repairs.

Four years later, rotted timbers that had supported the bell were removed and a new housing support for the bell was installed using pressure-treated wood. The bell was also re-hung in a fixed position because swinging it could cause it to break.

The work also included outfitting the bell with an electromagnetic hammer mechanism to strike the hours and controlled by a small electric switch operated by the old 1869 Howard clock mechanism, itself driven by electric motors since 1951.

The bell can also be struck manually by means of push button at the main floor level.

Because of the bell's condition, Bennett said the church set the hammer mechanism so that it's barely audible to passers-by.

"We don't strike it very loudly. It could be louder. You can hear it if you're listening for it or if the traffic is quiet," Bennett says. "We deliberately set the electro magnets and the spacing so that we wouldn't strike the bell too loudly. That was to prevent the crack from becoming any worse than it is."

Bennett has turned the mechanism off so the bell will be silent while work is being done to the tower.

There are historical reasons why the city owns the bell and the clock.

As for the clock – in 1844 – the city selectmen petitioned to the Board of First Parish to grant permission to install in the belfry of the church one steeple clock, donated to the town by one Daniel Greenleaf, Esq. On March 11 of that year, it was voted unanimously by the Board of the Church that they give their consent to have the clock presented to the town by Daniel Greenleaf, placed in the tower of their meeting house.

There are historical reasons why the city owns the bell, too.

"At the time of the third meeting house – the Hancock Meeting House – which stood on the same site and was built in 1732 (the church still has the weather vane from that meeting house) . . . at that time the meeting house was also the town meeting house and it was owned by the town or the parish which was everybody in the town whether they were members of the church or not." Bennett explains.

So, at this time, there was another bell hanging in the tower and it was owned by the town.

"The bell was a means of summoning the town for emergencies, fires or important meetings," Bennett continues. "It was a public bell for public purposes."

The congregation separated from the town in 1824 and the present-day church was built in 1828.

"The church became an independent, religious society separate from the town and responsible for our own affairs. The town was relieved from supporting the church from taxation. That was the way things worked in Massachusetts up until 1833 when the Constitution was amended no longer requiring each town to support a public minister of religion, piety and morality and the town meeting house," Bennett said.

"So, in 1824, in Quincy, First Parish separated from the town and became independent and the town deeded part of the training field – part of the current church site – was given to the church. We own the building and the land but the city owns the bell and the clock."

Some may also find it interesting that town reports from the 1860s show an individual – "J. Hall" – was paid $45 to ring the bell for one year. Another person – Alden French – received $1.55 to repair the bell.

Today, repairing that same bell may be another option.

"The bell has a hairline crack. It may be possible to repair it," Bennett said, noting a bell specialist will inspect the bell soon. "We'll find out what needs to be done."

When this current restoration project is finished this fall, Bennett says, "The bell tower will look brand new – like it did when it was built in 1828."

It would be nice if the bell sounded new, too.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1915 real photo postcard view of the Wollaston Yacht Club. This view was taken at low tide from the mud flats showing the boardwalk extending out on the left to the Boulevard at the end of Beach Street. This building was originally located on land near the end of Vassall Street, but when the Boulevard was built it was floated out to rest on the pilings shown here. In the 1920's the clubhouse was expanded by about 50 percent on the boardwalk end. Then in 1948 the whole building was destroyed by fire except the lower level of the expansion, which is all that remains today. Founded in 1898, when it separated from the Squantum Yacht Club, the club's first Commodore was Frank Burgess, the owner of the Boston Gear Works. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Cemetery Land Needs Filled For 50 Years

By FRANK McCAULEY

This Week
49 Years Ago

The 43-acre tract in the Blue Hills Reservation, which the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) gave the city of Quincy under recently approved legislation will provide for Quincy's cemetery requirements for the next half a century, Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa estimated.

"If managed correctly there is no reason why it should not be self-supporting," said Della Chiesa.

The MDC, at the request of the mayor, was expediting the transfer of the title to this big tract near the Braintree line to Quincy. At the present rate of $175 per lot, the new cemetery will bring in about $4.2 million for perpetual care and about $1.8 million for the sale of lots during the next 50 years.

Under the bill filed by the mayor and recently signed by Governor John Volpe, the city is getting the land free from the MDC.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT PROPOSES ADAMS HISTORIC SITE EXPANSION

The Interior Department has asked Congressional authority to enlarge the Adams National Historic Site in Quincy by an addition of about five acres.

The present site totals 4.77 acres and includes the Adams Mansion, the home of four generations of the Adams family.

The land in question was a vacant lot at the corner of Adams Street and Presidents Lane across the street from the Adams Mansion.

Mrs. Frank Harris, superintendent of the site, said that she didn't know what use would be made of the Beale property, which included the Beale Homestead built in 1792.

The department said that it is urgent that additional lands be made a part of the historic site to protect and preserve its historic integrity. The present site was donated by the Adams Historical Society.

Mahoney's 'Buzzwords, Hyperbole And Inaccuracies'

I was befuddled to read School Committee member Anne Mahoney's most recent negative, misleading attack on Mayor Tom Koch in last week's Quincy Sun.

I, and I imagine most people in Quincy, would be happy to see an honest airing issues facing our city. But when a candidate struggling to gain attention resorts to buzzwords, hyperbole and outright inaccuracies, I feel compelled to respond.

In her press release printed in The Sun, Mrs. Mahoney suggests that the "Little Q Hot Pot" was displaced in the "Koch administration's zeal to appease" downtown developer, Street-Works. This was surprising to me because the eminent domain takings needed for the road – which ultimately included Little Q's landlord – were set in motion prior to Mayor Koch taking office.

It stretches credibility to suggest that the Mayor, who wasn't Mayor when the city started eminent domain proceedings, is somehow responsible for whatever issues Little Q had with its landlord, and whether or not is was properly informed of a road plan that was already publicly known when the store opened in 2006.

Little Q's apparent surprise and opposition to the eminent domain taking was noted in early 2007, nearly a full year prior to Mayor Koch taking office.

Mrs. Mahoney also used the popular catch-phrase "transparency" in an attempt to undercut the city's Quincy Center development agreement, hoping readers would suspect that something secret was happening behind closed doors. She fails to mention that the full agreement has always been available for the public via the city's website, at the Quincy Public Library, or to anyone who simply asks City Hall for a copy. She states that she wants "public availability of project timelines, deliverables and costs." Each one of those is actually included in the document readily available for the public. I know, because I have read it.

With so much negativity in this country right now, our city actually has a historic economic development program that has the potential to be an incredible positive for Quincy, the region, and the state, and has been cited by The New York Times and The Boston Globe as a national model for urban revitalization. As a resident of Quincy, that's something that makes me quite proud.

Mrs. Mahoney is entitled to her opinion, and she's entitled to do whatever she feels appropriate to garner attention.

But, please stick to the facts.

City Council Meetings And The Library

Dear Council President Coughlin and others,

I read with interest the article in The Quincy Sun about using the library for City Council meetings while the old city hall is renovated. I have to agree with Mrs. McCauley.

On Monday this week I was in the 2nd floor reference area of the new library and noticed the ceiling peeling. After asking the librarian, I was told the roof is leaking in our new library for quite a while.

I would hope the City would want to immediately fix the roof and repair the peeling ceiling. Also I would hope the City would agree not keep the library closed both Saturdays and Sundays where they would be using space used by the public as a public meeting space. There is a need for more library hours, not more cuts in hours, staffing and lack of upkeep as the presently leaky roof.

Who would pay the additional custodial fees and other expenses of using the library?

If the City is paying a huge rent in other facilities during the renovation, the Thomas Crane Library should not have to absorb the additional costs as well as have a leaky roof if the board allows the City Council to meet there.

I think the new high school auditorium with adequate parking is a better location for City Council meetings and all the other committee meetings and public hearings, etc.

Wollaston Garden Club Visits Gardens At Quincy Homestead

Members of the Wollaston Garden Club recently enjoyed a visit to the gardens at the Dorothy Quincy Homestead located in Quincy.

Rebecca Dinsmore, a Wollaston Garden Club member and Master Gardener, was the hostess for this summer garden stroll. Dinsmore has been working on planning, designing and maintaining the gardens at the Quincy Homestead since 2001.

Dinsmore was eager to open the formal gardens for the enjoyment of garden club members. July at the homestead finds orange butterfly weed, lavender, and coneflower in full bloom. But it was the kitchen garden, full of herbs that fascinated most of the club members. The New England Herbal Society initially mapped out the design for the herb garden in 1994 and Dinsmore has worked to keep to that design plan.

Dinsmore set up an educational exhibit, which helped garden club members identify the numerous herbs and determine their uses: medicinal, culinary, aromatic, and/or useful in the household.

A National Historic Landmark, the Quincy Homestead is significant for its role in early American history, for its architecture, and for its Quincy family association.

The property, located at the corner of Hancock Street and Butler Road, is part of the original land that Edmund Quincy acquired for a farm in the 1630s. The present house, dating from 1686, was enlarged and enhanced over a period of more than 200 years. Its majestic Georgian frontispiece and gambrel roof, with distinctive dormer windows, give the building a stately and substantial appearance.

The Wollaston Garden Club schedules two formal garden strolls to members' gardens during the summer months. The idea is that the best way to learn about designing a garden is to study and enjoy other gardens.

The next stroll will be held in August at Pete Horsford's garden.

The Wollaston Garden Club is a member of the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts and the National Garden Clubs, Inc.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Jed's Surprise Ravioli Sauce

While at the Cape for a few days, we usually grilled food outside with a couple of sides made inside.

But recently there was a day of rain falling sporadically most of the day.

My daughter Nancy kept the little ones busy making bracelets out of colorful threads and wax candles.

As the day went on and it got to be dinner time, my son-in-law Jed decided to prepare dinner. And it was such a different sauce for raviolis that I was happy to gather one more recipe for today.

The raviolis were spinach and ricotta filled, and enhanced the sauce to perfection.

2 pounds ravioli

1 package frozen chopped spinach (or 2 cups raw spinach)

2 cups of 2% milk

2 small tomatoes cut in small pieces

1 small onion

2 cloves garlic

3 tablespoons olive oil plus a tablespoon butter

Parmesan cheeses for top

While cooking the raviolis according to directions, in a large skillet, and in the hot oil and butter, sauté the onion, garlic. Add the thawed spinach and the tomatoes and milk and cook until bubbly.

Pour over the raviolis and top it with Parmesan cheese. It was the most delicious entrée, and needless to say there weren't any leftovers.

When I told Jed I wanted to put it in the paper, he didn't think it was that good, but when he sees it in print, he will change his mind, I hope.

will be moved from the old building to either the existing City Hall Annex or a temporary location in the Munroe Building directly next door to City Hall.

"This report confirms what we've suspected since we began reviewing the conditions of the building: Something has to be done, and it has to be done soon for the building, our employees, and our residents. If we wait much longer, it is only going to cost more; or worse, we will lose this treasure entirely," said Mayor Thomas Koch, who appointed a special committee to facilitate renovations. "This is one of the most historically significant government offices still functioning in the Country – and it will be preserved."

In addition to detailing the current conditions of the building, the report offers a first draft of potential renovations to the building, both inside and out. The Mayor and the renovation committee will be working in coming months on a more detailed scope of work that will be part of a $200,000 design study paid for the by the City's Community Preservation Fund.

Koch also noted that he has no plans to use money from the City's general fund to pay for the project, saying he will propose Community Preservation Act financing and related historic grants to pay for the work. The building is on the National Register of Historic Places and the work will require collaboration with the Massachusetts Historical Society.

City Clerk Joseph Shea is heading the renovation committee. His office – and a library of historic City records – are in the old building.

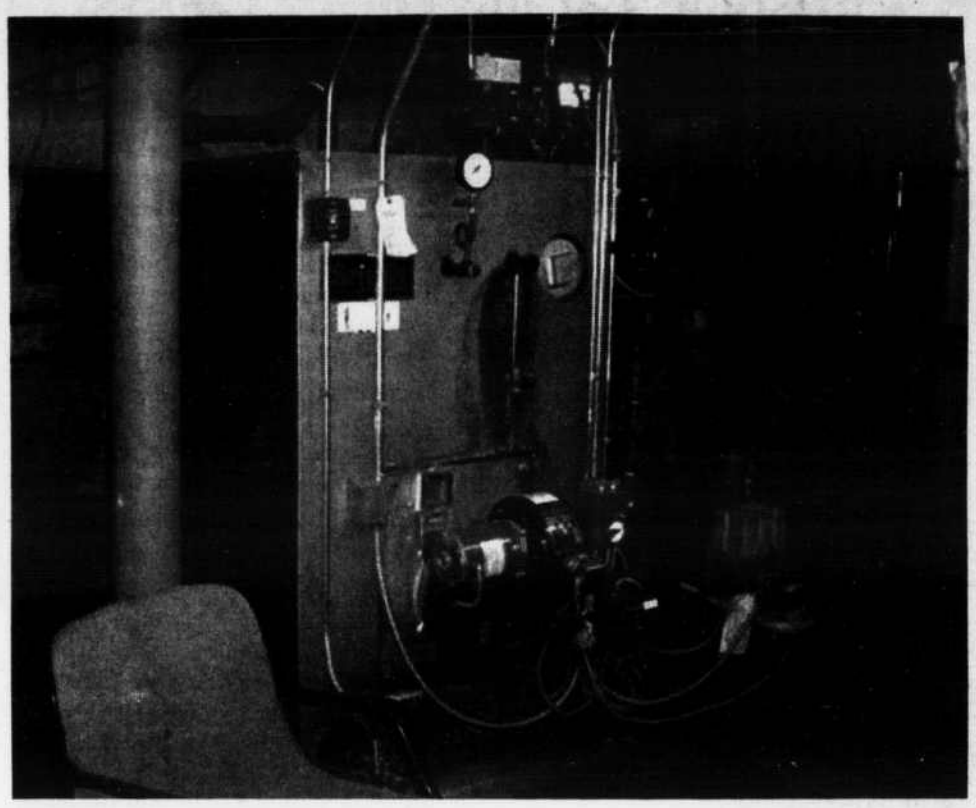

"This is a tremendously important historic landmark and it is tremendously important to the people of this City. We have a responsibility to care for our records, our workers and the public who use this building a daily basis," Shea said.

CHAMBER LEAK – Three containers were placed at each of the Council Chamber windows to catch water leaks after an ice dam this past winter caused water to back up over the frozen eaves and right into the building. A report issued Tuesday calls for signficant renovation of the building – both inside and out – to preserve the building and bring it up to current building codes.

Plans to move City Hall offices out the old building began months ago as information and draft reports began detailing the series of problems with the building, and the move is expected to be completed this month.

The Holmes and Edwards report relies on a series of outside reports by specialty consultants, including structural engineers, systems specialists, and hazardous materials experts. The report was funded by an initial $75,000 grant from the Community Preservation Act.

GAS-FIRED STEAM BOILER in the basement of City Hall is approximately 40 years old and should be replaced, according to consultants who recently examined the exterior and interior of the 167-year-old building. There is rust at the base of the boiler.

In its preliminary scope of work for the renovations, the report essentially calls for a complete structural renovation of the building to preserve the building and bring it up to current building codes.

No decisions on design elements will be made until the formal design and architectural process begins in earnest. Still, the report suggests a number of ideas, such as creating new exhibit space in the existing basement of City Hall as well as transforming some existing offices into meeting space and a permanent relocation of the City Clerk's Office out of the old building.

"This is an important first step, and we will be working with the committee going forward on the specific details and plans for the renovated building. Whatever the final design, I fully expect that this building will become a historic centerpiece open to the public that will fit perfectly with the broader efforts to highlight our history that are part of our Quincy Center plans," Koch said.

Theresa Hughes Winner Of Christmas Parade Theme Contest

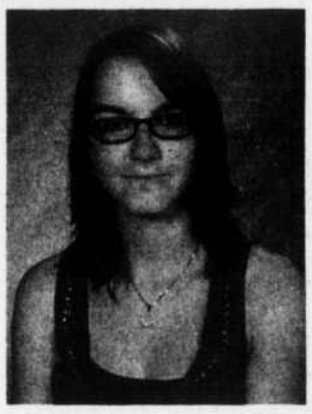

'A Storybook Christmas' Nov. 27

Theresa Hughes, a senior at Quincy High School, is the winner of this year's Quincy Christmas Parade theme contest.

Hughes, age 17, submitted the winning theme – "A Storybook Christmas" – for the 59th annual parade scheduled for Sunday, Nov. 27. The parade will step off at 12:30 p.m.

In the event of inclement weather, the parade will be held Dec. 4.

The theme was selected by the Christmas Festival Committee from numerous entries received. This was the 43rd year the public was invited to submit themes for consideration.

THERESA HUGHES

"'A Storybook Christmas'" came from the concept that Christmas was always made out to be for children," Hughes said. "From a child perspective, stories have always been a source for creativity from Mother Goose rhymes to a novel an adult might be reading to their child at night. Each story tells a tale that could be magical adventure as much as Christmas should be for a child."

Hughes will be riding in a convertible along the three-mile Parade Route. She will also receive a gift of appreciation from the Christmas Festival Committee.

"We thank everyone who participated and we seek your future involvement as the Christmas Festival Committee sets its sights to the 60th Annual Christmas Parade," said Jack Nigro, chairman of the Christmas Festival Committee.

Open House Aug. 13 At Dorothy Quincy Homestead

The Dorothy Quincy Homestead, a National Historic Landmark, will be open for public tours Saturday, Aug. 13 between 1 and 4 p.m.

Tours will start on the hour and half hour beginning at 1 p.m. Last tour starts at 3:30 p.m.

All tours are free of charge, but a voluntary contribution is suggested.

The homestead is located on Butler Road at the corner of Hancock Street, Quincy.

Dating from 1686, the house is 325 years old. During the 17th and 18th centuries, this mansion was considered the grandest estates in Quincy. During the Revolutionary War era, it was a meeting place for such patriots as Josiah Quincy, John Hancock and John Adams. It was the childhood home of Dorothy Quincy Hancock, the wife of John Hancock.

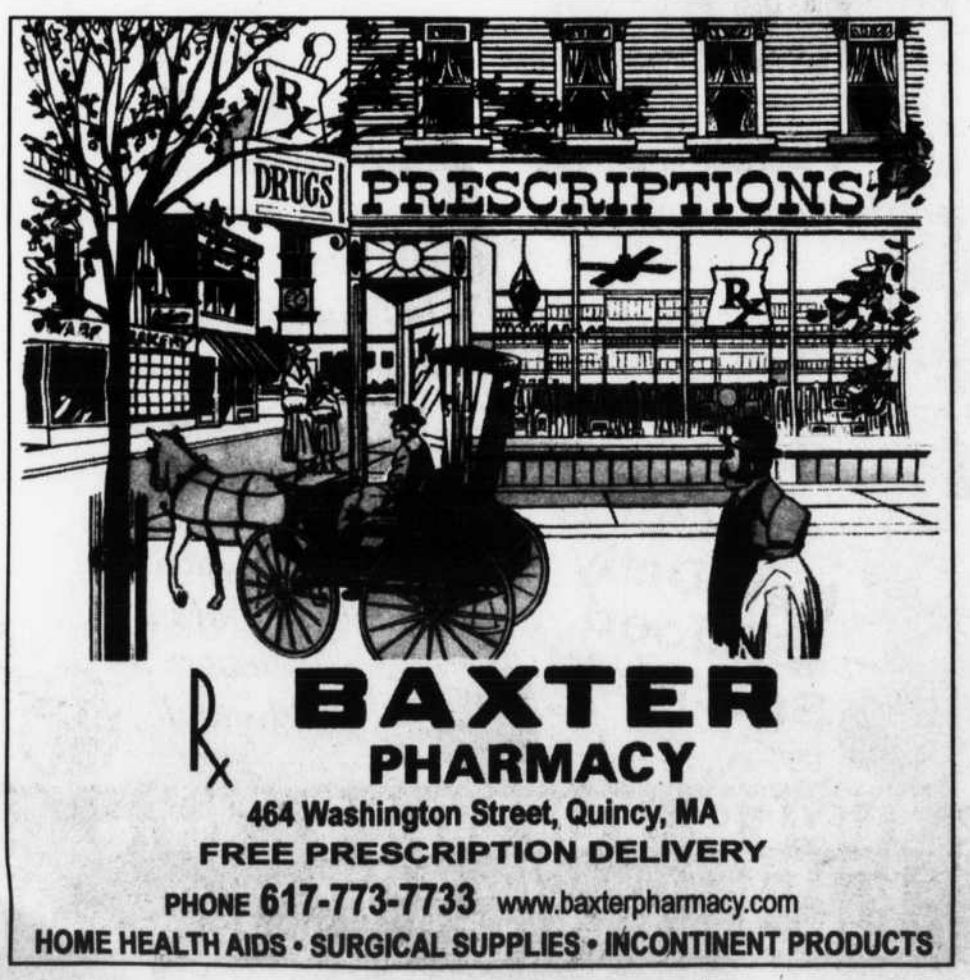

The Homestead is operated by the Colonial Dames of Massachusetts in conjunction with the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR).

Groups may request a private tour by calling 617-742-3190.

Breakfast Reception Aug. 11 At Neighborhood Club

Robert, Gloria Noble To Receive Elizabeth Swanton Community Service Award From Manet Health

Quincy residents Robert (Bob) and Gloria Noble will be honored for their combined decades of community service with the Elizabeth A. Swanton Community Service Award from Manet Community Health Center at a breakfast reception on Thursday, Aug. 11.

ROBERT and GLORIA NOBLE

The public is invited to attend the breakfast from 8 to 10 a.m. at the Neighborhood Club of Quincy, 27 Glendale Rd. The event will be a highlight of Manet's recognition of National Community Health Center Week, Aug. 8-12.

"Bob and Gloria Noble are known throughout Quincy as true local heroes, and they have created a legacy of community service on the South Shore that will be hard to match and surely never forgotten," said Cong. Bill Keating. "When I think of them, the words that come to mind include devoted, selfless, caring and committed. Our communities are all better thanks to their tireless activism. They are, without a doubt, a perfect choice for the first-ever Elizabeth A. Swanton Community Service Award."

Elizabeth Swanton died in January at the age of 69. She volunteered at Manet for more than 30 years, including as president of its Board of Directors. In addition, she was active in Quincy Public Schools and other local organizations.

The Manet Board of Directors voted unanimously to honor Swanton by recognizing other individuals or groups who have "demonstrated a significant commitment to volunteerism and community service."

Both born in Boston, the Nobles married in 1950 and moved to Quincy a year later, immediately immersing themselves in civic life—a tradition they maintain to this day.

Bob, a member of the U.S. Army Air Corps and U.S. Army 87th Infantry Division in World War II, was a German prisoner of war. That experience prompted his involvement in various veterans' organizations, including the American Ex-Prisoners of War, which he twice served as Massachusetts Commander.

Bob forged a career as an industrial engineer, and also worked for the U.S. Postal Service to support their growing family. Three of their four children—Robert, Jr., Alicia Gardner and Andrea White—still live in Quincy; the fourth, Nancy Noble, resides on Cape Cod. Bob and Gloria Noble also have 10 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren.

Gloria's many involvements include the South Shore Women's Democratic Political Caucus, where she is Past President, along with other Democratic Party affiliations. She served as Commander of the Southeast Chapter of American Ex-Prisoners of War, as well as on the Board of Director of the Sisters of Good Shepherd-Maria Droste Agency. Together, she and Bob helped organize Quincy holiday celebrations as members of the Quincy Christmas Festival Committee, she for 25 years and he 35 years.

Bob also has been active on the Quincy First Night Committee and on the board of Quincy Access T.V. Before he retired as an engineer in 1986, he took up photography and found a new vocation. He has been a photographer for The Quincy Sun—and Manet's unofficial photographer—for many years.

In 2008, the Nobles received The Quincy Sun's "Citizen of the Year" award, which, like this latest honor, they shared.

"Gloria and Bob Noble are wonderful examples of what it means to be of service to one's neighbors. The time, talent and treasure they have generously offered our community have touched the lives of so many," said Joseph Reardon, president of the Manet Board of Directors. "Their selection for this honor is a tribute to their selflessness and to the memory of Betty Swanton."

Tickets for the reception are $30 for a single ticket, $55 for two tickets, and $250 for a table of 10. Sponsorship opportunities are available, ranging from $500 to $3,000, each including tickets to the event and various recognitions. All monies go to support Manet Community Health Center's programs along the South Shore.

For more information, contact events@manetchc.org or 857-403-0424.

For more than three decades, Manet Community Health Center has served South Shore residents with an integrated program of preventive and primary care, including patient education, supportive social services and health and wellness programs. In 2010, Manet provided 51,193 visits to 13,712 patients at its five locations. Manet has been accredited by The Joint Commission since 1999, demonstrating it meets the highest standards of quality health care.

Why 50% Of Homes Listed For Sale Don't Sell The First Time And What to Do About It

Quincy - If your home has just come off the market and hasn't sold, don't get discouraged. The reason your home did not sell may have nothing to do with your home or the market. In reality, your home may have been one of the more desirable properties for sale.

So Why Didn't Your Home Sell?

Last year almost half of the homes listed for sale never sold at all, and many sellers found that there was a tremendous amount a homeowner needed to be educated on to sell their home for top dollar in the shortest time period.

Don't risk making the wrong choices and losing both time and money on your investment. Before you hire a realtor, know the right questions to ask to save you time and money.

Industry experts have prepared a free special report called "How to SellaHouse that Didn't Sell" which educates you on the issues involved.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your free copy of this report call 800-611-0351 and enter ID#1012. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Call now to make sure your home sells next time you list it for sale. www.QuincyHomeExpired.com

Sheriff's 'Are You Okay' Program Helps Quincy Woman

A 67-year-old Quincy woman was evaluated at Quincy Medical Center after she received medical help at the request of the "Are You OK?" program run by Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti and Fallon Ambulance Service.

The woman was admitted to an intensive care unit at the hospital after an emergency medical team went to her home and found her conscious but unresponsive to their questions.

"We're grateful for the quick work of the emergency responders," Sheriff Bellotti said. "This woman is in good hands and can receive the medical care she needs."

The "Are You OK?" officer placed a call to the woman at 9 a.m. Monday (7/25) and received no answer. The officer called the maintenance supervisor at the woman's apartment building and asked him to check on the woman. He called for an ambulance after seeing the woman's condition.

"By checking on people with a phone call each and every day, the "Are You OK?" program is able to make sure that people do not languish simply because nobody knows they need help," Sheriff Bellotti said.

The case involving the 67-year-old woman marked the 82nd time that "Are You OK?" has summoned help for people in need since Sheriff Bellotti introduced the program into Norfolk County in 2001.

Each morning, 365 days a years, an "Are You OK?" officer places a phone call to every program participant. If the participant does not answer the phone or indicates in some other way that he or she is in need of medical attention, the officer takes quick action to get them help.

Fallon Ambulance service became an important partner in "Are You OK?" in 2009 after budgetary constraints threatened the program's survival.

"The highly professional management and staff of Fallon Ambulance have been a great addition to the program. We are lucky to such a civic-oriented partner in our community," Sheriff Bellotti said.

To sign up for the program or learn more about it, call the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 1-866-900-RUOK (7865).

Information is also available at the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office website at www.norfolksheriff.com and click on the Programs for the Community heading.

Chinese Brush Painting Exhibit, Free Workshops At Crane Library

Artist Xiao Yong Liu and his students will display their paintings throughout the month of August at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

The exhibit will include paintings of animals, flowers and landscapes created in a traditional brush painting style. Mr. Liu's students, who range in age from 8 to 80, paint to appreciate their love of nature, express their emotions, exchange ideas with each other, and tell their stories. Chinese painting practice is both creative expression and stress relief, and can also be a communication tool between people.

Xiao Yong Liu is a professional painter and a member of the artists' association of An Hui state in China. He has been living in the U.S. since 2008 and began giving painting lessons at Quincy Asian Resources, Inc. in 2009. His goal is to introduce the art of painting to all who are interested in learning.

Liu will be offering six free Chinese painting workshops at the Main Library and the North Quincy Branch Library throughout the month of August. The workshops are for everyone aged 8 and over and no artistic experience is expected. Participants will paint a panda bear with a bamboo leaf or goldfish swimming in a pond in less than 30 minutes. Take home your creation with instructions to practice more on your own. Space is limited and pre-registration is required.

For more information about the exhibit or the painting workshops, call 617-376-1301.

The exhibit and workshop is sponsored by Quincy Asian Resources, Inc. and South Shore Elder Services.

Water Meter Replacement and Automated Meter Reading System Project

Information for Residents

The Quincy Department of Public Works is updating 24,000 water meters throughout the city. The project includes the replacement of both the water meters and external reading system. The completed project will greatly improve the reliability and accuracy of water meter reading operations and will increase the efficiency of the DPW. The city has contracted with Easton Winwater Services, who will be performing the installations. Easton WinWater Services will need access to each water customer's house or business for this work. Please be aware that Easton WinWater Services will contact customers directly via U.S. mail. Residents of Quincy are reminded not to respond to unsolicited phone calls or home visits. All personnel installing water meters are issued identification and will arrive in uniform and in marked vehicles. A link to names and pictures of each installer can be found on the DPW website. If you believe you have been contacted by someone other than Easton Winwater or the city, please call the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

The meter replacement work will begin in September in the North Quincy/Squantum area, and will progress throughout the city by water meter reading route over the course of a two-year period. There is a systematic implementation plan for this project and therefore customers are asked to not contact Easton Winwater Service or Public Works for their meter replacement until they have received a notification letter from Easton Winwater. For a current update on this program please visit the DPW website at http://www.quincyma.gov/Government/PWD/WaterMeterRepacement.cfm

SOCIAL SECURITY:

The Safety Net For Aged, Blind, Disabled People With Limited Income, Resources

By KRISTEN ALBERINO

Social Security Public Affairs Specialist in Quincy

There's a safety net out there for those who might otherwise slip through the cracks. It's called Supplemental Security Income (SSI). Administered by Social Security, SSI makes payments to people with limited income and few resources who are age 65 or older, blind, or have a disability.

Funding for the SSI program comes from the general revenues of the U.S. Treasury, not from Social Security payroll taxes.

When we consider people's income, we count things such as wages, Social Security benefits and pensions. However, Social Security does not count all of your income when it decides whether you qualify for SSI. For example, we don't count food stamps or most home energy assistance.

Resources we count in deciding whether you qualify for SSI include real estate (other than the home you live in), bank accounts, cash, stocks, and bonds. A person with resources worth no more than $2,000 may be able to get SSI. That resource limit is $3,000 for couples.

To qualify for SSI, you must live in the United States or the Northern Mariana Islands and be a U.S. citizen or national. In rare cases, noncitizen residents can qualify for SSI. If you live in certain types of institutions or live in a shelter for the homeless, you may qualify for SSI.

People with blindness or disability who apply for SSI may be able to get free special services to help them work. These services may include counseling, job training, and help finding work.

The monthly maximum Federal SSI payment is the same nationwide and amounts to $674 for a person and $1,011 for a married couple. However, the amount you receive depends on factors such as where you live, your living arrangements, and income. Some states also supplement or add money to the Federal payment.

To learn more about SSI, read the online publication, You May Be Able To Get Supplemental Security Income (SSI) at www.socialsecurity.gov/pubs/11069.html or visit the SSI page at www.socialsecurity.gov/ssi. Or call us toll-free at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY, 1-800-325-0778).

If you're too disabled to work but haven't paid enough into Social Security to qualify for benefits on your record, SSI may be the program to help you.

Youth Urge MBTA To Ban Alcohol Advertising

By STACY CARRUTH

IMPACT Quincy Advisory Board

"Please stop exposing underage Boston youth to alcohol ads on the T," members of the SAFE-MA (Supporting an Alcohol Ad-Free Environment in Massachusetts) Collaborative and the Allston-Brighton Substance Abuse Task Force recently told MBTA general manager Richard Davey at a public "meet and greet" at Ashmont Station in Dorchester.

IMPACT Quincy, the local community coalition whose primary goals are to reduce underage drinking and substance abuse problems, supports this effort.

This is an issue that is especially important to Quincy where there are many buses and three T stops near schools and colleges filled with young people.

When young people are attracted to alcohol advertisements, they are more likely to have positive expectancies about alcohol use and to intend to drink. In short, the more alcohol ads a young person sees, the more likely they are to drink and drink to excess.

This is why most major cities in the US have banned alcohol advertisements on public transportation. Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington DC, San Diego, Philadelphia and San Francisco are some of the cities that have banned alcohol ads on transit. In fact a poll conducted by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 80% of the general public believed "that alcohol advertising influences young people to drink alcoholic beverages."

Each day thousands of young people in Greater Boston ride the T to school and work.

On June 23, youth ages 15 to 19 talked with MBTA General Manager Davey about how they and their peers bear the brunt of exposure to alcohol ads on the T on their way to school and work. One youth member said that it was "unfair" that city-dwellers are exposed because kids in the suburbs do not see alcohol ads on their yellow school buses. The youth presented Davey with nearly 300 postcards from supporters of a ban on alcohol advertising.

Davey said the T receives approximately ten percent, or $1.7 million, of its advertising revenue from alcohol, a number SAFE-MA members feel isn't worth Massachusetts kids' lives. In 2007, underage drinking cost MA residents 1.5 billion dollars in medical care, work loss and pain and suffering due to youth violence, traffic crashes high-risk sexual behavior, injury and other alcohol-related injuries. SAFE-MA members, including IMPACT Quincy, support the petition for the T not to renew its alcohol advertising contract when it expires in 2015, and until then, remove alcohol ads on its lines that are most heavily used by young riders. There is a pending bill (HB 851), sponsored by Representative Martin Walsh, that if passed would prohibit alcohol ads on state property, including the MBTA.

Prohibiting alcohol advertisements on state property would mean a healthier environment for everyone. Research shows that improving our physical environment through policy change is a powerful and sustainability way to achieve public health goals. This effort complements IMPACT Quincy's use of marketing to promote healthy messages. One message that IMPACT Quincy has recently promoted is the fact that most youth in Quincy do not drink alcohol or buy alcohol for those who are underage.

We all need to work together to create safe and healthy environment for all Massachusetts citizens.

College Eyes Downtown Home

current board was appointed late last summer.

While choosing a new location is a major concern, Tsaffaris said the college must now renew the lease for its current quarters in Quincy on Newport Avenue and focus on current issues in college operations.

Enrollment is solid at both the college's Quincy and Plymouth campuses as reported in 2010 with 1686 full-time and 2296 part-time students in Quincy and the Plymouth campus registering 155 full-time students and 403 part-time students.

"We're growing in Plymouth. We're very well received there," Tsaffaris said of the 20-year old Quincy College satellite campus.

Contacted by phone Monday, Tsaffaris said the administration is targeting major improvements in the college's technology and infrastructure and, specifically, Allied Health. Tsaffaris said the goal is to improve faculty and facilities in the health education department.

"There have been some weaknesses," Tsaffaris said of the health program which offers students the opportunity for nursing studies and related medical fields.

"We're hiring five new faculty members. We want our nursing program to be top rate," said Tsaffaris. Three of the new hires will fill positions open due to retirements or departures and two new positions have been approved.

As one example of new technology, Tsaffaris said the college will invest in mannequins that simulate symptoms of diseases and medical disorders and physical conditions, "even one that gives birth."

As for operational expenses, Tsaffaris told the finance committee that his administration had reduced individual stipends by $145,000 in the past year. The remaining $70,000 in stipends is required by contract or covers such expenses as travel.

That committee unanimously approved $12,000 for an administrative expense account despite Tsaffaris' objections.

At this time, Quincy College remains an agency of the City of Quincy and its current budget lists $0 or a zero set aside for its "Independence" account. The college's independence from the city was a major goal of the college's past administration and has been strongly recommended in accreditation reports.

Tsaffaris said the college is waiting for action by the City Council.

Late this spring, councillors said they were waiting for the appraisal report from the mayor's office. City Councillors sought the appraisal in 2010 when college administrators made the first official bid for independence.

The Quincy College Board of Governors appointed a committee to work with Street-Works officials to designate a new location for Quincy College in Quincy Center. Appointed were President Tsaffaris and the following members of the Board of Governors; Chairman William Grindlay; Frank Byrne, Second Vice Chairman of the Board; Attorneys Fred Doyle and Paul Barbadoro; Christopher Bell; Thomas Feenan and Mary Jo Brogna.

Staff members include Anna B. Williams, Vice President Academic Affairs; Pushap Kapoor, Vice President of Administration; Registrar Paula Smith; Susan Bossa, Associate Vice President Student Development, and Tom Pham, Associate Vice President, Communications and Information Technology.

Candlelight Vigil Planned Friday For Loved Ones Lost To Drugs

A candlelight vigil will be held on City Hall Plaza Friday at 6:30 p.m. to remember those lost to drug addiction and to support family members and friends impacted by lost loved ones.

For those left behind, the deaths of their loved ones can be devastating as evidenced by a quote on a website memorial, "If love could have saved you, you would never have died."

At Friday's vigil, Police Chief Paul Keenan will read each name submitted for the memorial and a ship's bell will ring for each person.

Sara Smith who lost her mother and brother to addiction and John Miller, an addict in recovery, will provide the tributes at the ceremony.

Kathy Deady, a Quincy parent who has long been working to create awareness and find solutions for families and addicts will welcome the gathering.

This will be the fifth area group to sponsor such a vigil, according to Arlene Goldstein, Program Director at Impact Quincy. The first vigils were held in Brockton seven years ago.

Goldstein said there is no way of estimating the turnout for Quincy's memorial service, but she has had over 650 responses on a website.

"I have 500 candles," said Goldstein who credited local volunteers, Deady and Lisa Freeman, Mayor Thomas Koch, her own staff and many other groups with supporting the project and with planning the details.

The program will begin at 6:30 p.m. with the collection of the names of those to be remembered.

Vocalist Megan Ward will sing "Let It Be," accompanied by Guitarist Scott Wahlberg and Quincy parent Lisa Freeman will say the Serenity Prayer.

Goldstein described current efforts by Impact Quincy and volunteer groups to aid families of addicts and active addicts. These include the dispensing of Narcan which, Goldstein said, has saved 30 Quincy residents this year.

In addition, the police department is operating Med Return Kiosks for the safe disposal of drugs and affected families can expect a Learn To Cope chapter will be started in Quincy in the fall. Learn To Cope helps train parents to help other parents.

Officials Target Internet Predators

nalize creating identities that aren't shared with police."

"In addition to protecting children, this legislation will also discourage sexual predators from using the anonymity of the Internet to create a false online identity that can be used to probe for potential victims of all ages," Keenan said. "With the growth in online dating sites, online personal ads, and other Internet-based forums, Email addresses and log-in handles are becoming just as important pieces of personal data as residential addresses and cell phone numbers."

Morrissey, who served as state senator from Quincy for more than a decade before his election as district attorney last fall, reached out to Keenan, Chan and Ayers and other Norfolk County legislators to create support for the change.

"We go into the schools reminding kids to be safe on line," Morrissey said. "This is something we can do to make that environment safer. It is a common-sense modernization that should bolster public safety while costing virtually nothing to implement."

The Joint Committee on the Judiciary should hold a public hearing on the bill, House Bill No. 3587, this fall, according to Rep. Chan.

For Bell Tower, It's Been 47 Years Since Last Restoration

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

The bell tower restoration at historic United First Parish Church marks the first significant repair project to the structure since 1964.

Forty-seven years ago, the entire tower including the dome that is being worked on now was lifted off the building and placed on some "cribbing" on the lawn.

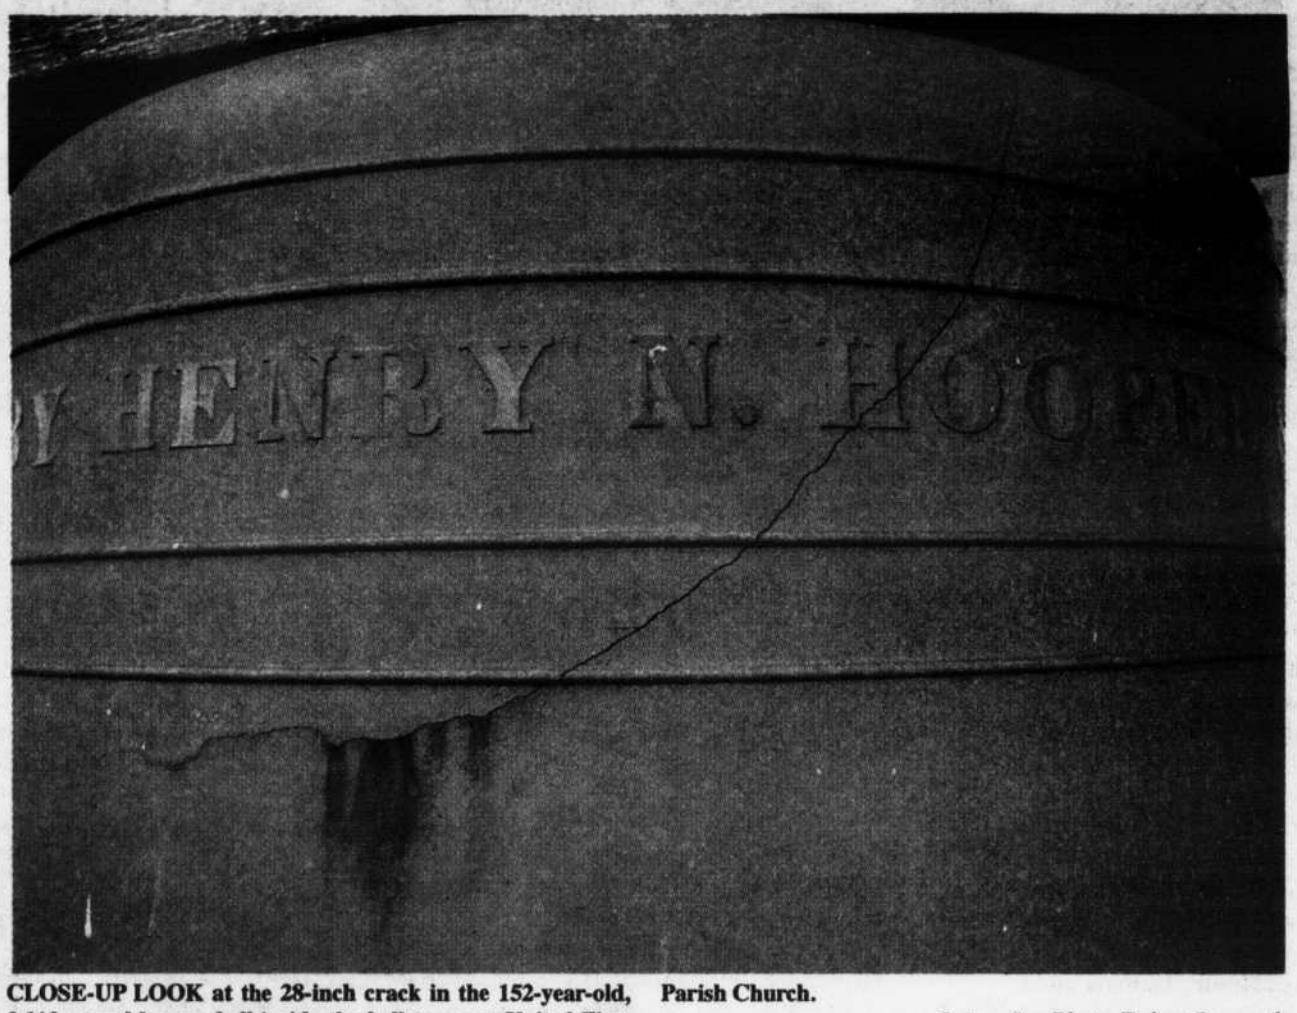

"At that time, the old columns were solid wood, they were rotted out," said church minister Rev. Sheldon Bennett. "A steel structure was installed so the columns that are up there now actually have steel beams or steel columns to carry the dome and the wood that you see were wooden architectural enclosures.

"The problem was a soft wood was used. It was pine. So after 47 years that wood is now dry-rotting and failing. The column capitals at the top of the columns right below the dome are original and they are in good shape. They were installed in 1828 as far as we know," Bennett says.

The capitals were designed by the architect Alexander Parris, an early pioneer of the American Greek revival style architecture. "He was using Greek design motifs so those column capitals are Corinthian type," Bennett said.

COLUMN CAPITALS atop the eight wooden columns in the bell tower at United First Parish Church will be restored.

"Some of the wood trim that circles the dome needs to be replaced and repaired because that wood was put in in 1964.

"We think the dome was re-coppered in 1864 which is gilded gold. The copper itself is supported by a wooden dome structure and there's a little water deterioration there which can be easily repaired."

The copper needs to be repaired or entirely replaced.

The tower is structurally sound because of the steel but it will be checked for any corrosion.

What will passers-by see when the project is completed in October?

"You'll see the bell tower cupola – everything above the top of the stone – the eight wooden columns will be replaced with mahogany which is a much more durable wood. The wooden railing at the base of the cupola will be replaced. The column capitals will be taken down and restored. They're in good condition but they need restoration and preservation," Bennett said.

In addition, the ceiling of the base dome will be restored or replaced, the dome re-gilded and the weathervane restored and re-gilded, too, so that they "glean brightly in the sun," Bennett adds.

The 1964 project was overseen by Rev. Bradford Gale who served as church minister from 1959 to 1971. He was an active leader in the community and helped establish Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc.

The dome was re-gilded in the early 1980s for about $13,000.

MIKE CHENEY, secretary of Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club, receives a donation from a representative of AMVETS.

JOHN URBANUS, president of Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club, said this year's disabled veterans fishing outing hauled in a "record catch:" 32 flounder and two blue fish.

ONE OF THE 221 disabled veterans who took part in this-year's fishing outing is assisted by some of the 100 volunteers who helped make this year's event a success.

55th Annual Disabled Veterans Fishing Day A Success

'A Record Catch' For Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club's Outing

HARVEY'S SALT WATER Fishing Club hosted 221 disabled veterans from six veterans hospitals and two disabled veterans organizations at its 55th annual Veterans Day Fishing Outing.

Veterans boarded 20 lobster boasts at Quincy Yacht Club on Sea Street in Houghs Neck.

Harvey's Salt Water Fishing Club's Annual Disabled Vet's Day Fishing Outing held recently was an overwhelming success, according to Michael Cheney, secretary of Harvey's.

A total of 221 disabled veterans from six Veterans Hospitals and two Disabled Veterans organizations boarded 20 lobster boats at Quincy Yacht Club located on Sea Street in the Houghs Neck section of Quincy. The boats, provided by local lobstermen set out at 9:30 a.m. and headed out for a day of fishing in Quincy Bay.

Veterans caught 32 flounders and two Bluefish which is "a record year's catch," said John Urbanus, President of Harvey's.

"This year marks the 55th year of the 'Vet's Day' Event. It turned out to be the largest attended event to date."

Fishing boats returned to Quincy Yacht Club at 2 p.m. Disabled veteran enjoyed a sitdown meal provided by the Quincy Lodge of Elks and Liberty Bay Credit Union.

For some Disabled Veterans this was the only day out of the hospital on an outing.

"We have veterans that look forward to this day all year long. They start calling me in January," Urbanus said.

Over 100 volunteers from the local community took the day off from work to help out.

Volunteers assist with the meals and provide the muscle power to help wheelchair bound vets get down the gangway and onto the boats.

Summing up this year's outing, Urbanus said, "This year is special, not only because it marks the 55th anniversary of this great event but because we are at war and unfortunately, every day we add another disabled veteran to the rolls. This is the very least we can do to show our disabled veterans we appreciate the sacrifices they have made to keep us a free nation."

The event is sponsored by several individuals, unions, local business, Liberty Bay Credit Union and the Quincy Lodge of Elks.

Only two incumbents – Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest and Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci – will be unopposed on the ballot this fall.

The cost for the preliminary elections for councillor in Wards 2 and 6 will cost the city approximately $30,000, according to City Clerk Joseph Shea. A city-wide preliminary election would have cost about $80,000, Shea said.

Here's a look at who filed and what political races have been created this fall:

MAYOR

Incumbent Tom Koch will face one challenge – from School Committee Vice Chairwoman Anne Mahoney. Koch, age 48, of 249 Newbury Ave., is seeking a third two-year term. He unseated then Mayor William Phelan in 2007 and defeated Phelan for a second term in a mayoral rematch two years ago.

Mahoney, age 46, of 12 Ferriter St., was first elected to the School Committee in 2005 and was re-elected to a four-year term in 2009. She does not have to give up her school seat to challenge Koch this year since she is at the mid-point of her second four-year term.

Two other potential candidates took out nominations papers for mayor but did not return them.

Joseph O'Malley of Houghs Neck, who ran for mayor two years ago, did not submit papers before the 5 p.m. deadline.

Kevin Clapp took papers out Monday but did not return them. The city's Election Office also determined that Clapp is not a resident of Quincy but lives – and has voted – in Brockton.

COUNCILLOR AT-LARGE:

The councillor at-large field had a late entry to bring the total to four candidates seeking three seats.

The four-way field includes two incumbents, one current ward councillor and a first-time candidate.

Those filing papers for councillor at-large are:

Incumbents Joseph Finn, Michael McFarland, current Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro and political newcomer John Rodophele, Sr.

Finn, age 55, of 15 Williams St., is seeking his sixth term. He won his first term in 2001.

McFarland, age 57, of 140 Summit Ave., is seeking his fourth term as a councillor at-large. The former school committeeman was elected to the council in 2005.

The third seat – being vacated by John Keenan who was elected state senator last fall – attracted two candidates: Gutro and Rodophele.

Gutro, 46, of 230 Marlboro St., is vacating his ward seat to run for councillor at-large. Gutro was elected Ward 5 councillor in 2001.

Rodophele, age 70, of 62 Grenwold Rd., had taken out papers for Ward 5 councillor but withdrew to run for councillor at-large.

WARD COUNCILLOR

There will be contests in four of the city's six wards for councillor – including preliminary elections in Wards 2 and 6.

Ward 1:

Incumbent Margaret Laforest will be unopposed as she seeks a second two-year term. Laforest, 35, of 236 Rock Island Rd., was elected two years ago.

Paul Williams, age 34, of 65 Utica St., pulled papers but did not file them.

Ward 2:

Three candidates filed papers to succeed longtime Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymondi who was appointed Public Works commissioner in July.

The three candidates vying for two nominations in the preliminary election Tuesday, Sept. 20 are:

Stephen Kozlowski, 49, of 14 Berkeley St.; Steve Perdios, 43, of 86 Ruggles St.; and Brad Croall, age 31, of 53 Summer St.

The two nominated Sept. 20 will square off in the final election Nov. 8.

A fourth potential candidate – Christopher Eleey, 61, of 19 North Payne St. – did not file papers.

WARD 3:

Incumbent Councillor Kevin Coughlin, 56, of 19 Small St., will be challenged by John C. Cain, Jr., 65, of 192 South Central Ave. Coughlin is seeking his sixth term. Cain was among four candidates for the Ward 3 seat in 2001 that was won by Coughlin.

Ward 4:

Incumbent Brian Palmucci, age 33, of 138 Willard St., will be unopposed for a second two-year term this fall.

David E. Comerford, age 28, of 13 Station St., pulled papers but did not return them.

Ward 5:

Two first-time candidates filed papers to seek the Ward 5 councillor seat being vacated by Gutro.

They are:

Kirsten Hughes, age 34, of 148 Phillps St.; and Neil McCole, 39, of 79 West Elm Ave.

Ward 6:

Incumbent Brian McNamee is being challenged by two first-time candidates: Brian Randell, age 30, of 21 Standish Rd.; and Michael Miller, age 71, of 38 Warwick St.

McNamee, age 54, of 133 Commander Shea Blvd., is seeking a fourth two-year term. He first won election in 2005.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Three seats on the school committee – including two that are open – drew five candidates including an incumbent, a former city councillor and three first-time candidates.

Incumbent Dave McCarthy is running for re-election while current members Elaine Dwyer and Jo-Ann Bragg are stepping down this fall. McCarthy, age 50, of 48 Whitney Rd., is seeking a third four-year term. He was first elected in 2003.

The other four candidates filing papers for school committee:

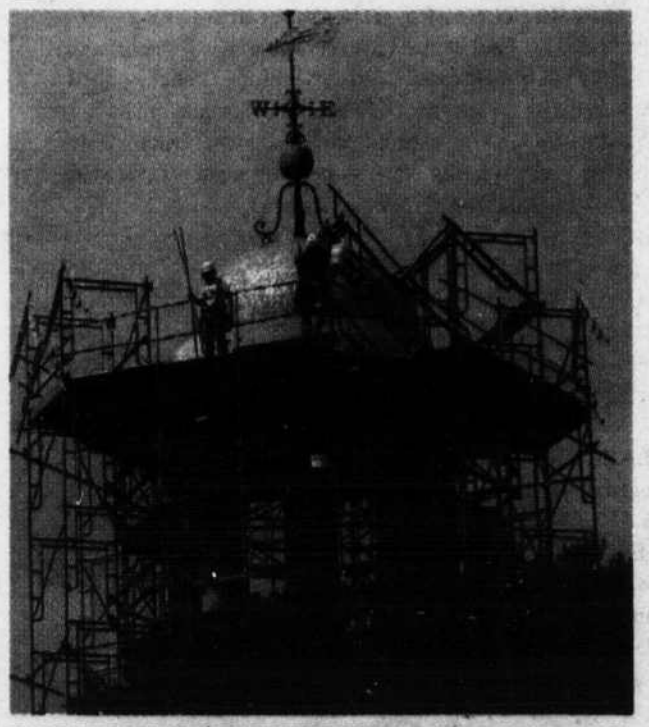

Paul Bregoli, age 62, of 80 Willow Ave.

Kathryn Hubley, age 40, of 44 Marion St.

Linda Perry, age 57, of 181 West St.

Stan Underwood, age 43, of 91 Clay St., filed papers with only 39 signatures – 11 short to qualify for the ballot.

The bell tower is undergoing a $600,000 restoration project that will include new mahogany wood columns, restored column capitals and gilding to the copper cupola. The project – the first significant restoration to the bell tower in 47 years – is expected to be completed by October. A Job Well Done

On Tuesday, July 26, at approximately 3:15 a.m., Officers Thomas Gaeta, Jr. and Dan Church were dispatched to Tinson Road on a report of two males removing hubcaps off of vehicles.

LT. DAN MINTON

K-9 Officer Dave Cooper also assisted. While in route, communications said that the caller later saw the two males flee towards Suomi Road. Upon arrival, Officer Gaeta's attention was drawn to a pick-up truck on Buckley Street. Right after passing the vehicle, the Officer was approached by a witness, who stated he witnessed and described two males stealing hubcaps from two vehicles in the area. The witness said he lost sight of the suspects on Suomi Road, so he looked at the vehicle they were adjacent to and discovered that the hubcaps were gone.

Moments later, Officer Cooper made a motor vehicle stop of two males matching the description given, in a pick-up truck that left the scene. Officer Gaeta joined Officer Cooper as they questioned the two suspects. Officer Cooper asked the driver/suspect #1, where he was coming from and he said "Braintree."

When asked if he had been on Buckley Street, suspect #1 replied, "Oh yeah - I was on Buckley." The Officers now knew that the suspects met the description given by witnesses and they admitted to being in the area of the crime scene. Officer Gaeta asked suspect #1 for consent to search his vehicle and permission was granted. A search of the vehicle was conducted, but the hubcaps were not found.

Officer Gaeta brought the witness to the suspect's location and the witness said, "I'm 90% sure that's them - maybe more." Both suspects were detained while the search of the pick-up truck continued. Officer Cooper found a plastic bag containing jewelry on the dashboard of the suspect vehicle. Suspect #1 said that the jewelry belonged to his girlfriend, so Officer Cooper contacted suspect #1's girlfriend, who denied that the jewelry was hers.

Inside the bag were numerous necklaces, earrings, bracelets, watches and a remote entry key to a vehicle. The vehicle matching the remote entry key was not located. Officer Gaeta returned to the area of Buckley Street and Suomi Road, where the suspects were first seen. On the ground, where the suspect vehicle was parked, were two flathead screwdrivers that were dry, even though there were showers that night. Flathead screwdrivers are a commonly used tool to remove hubcaps from motor vehicles.

Officer Gaeta made contact with the victim of the hubcap larceny and she said that she had just purchased one recently and it was $70.

The jewelry was placed into evidence along with the screwdrivers. A criminal record check of the two suspects showed that they had extensive histories of larcenies. Suspect #1, an 18-year-old Quincy resident, and suspect #2, a 23-year-old Quincy resident, were arrested and charged with "Larceny Over $250 and Receiving Stolen Property valued over $250."

Nice Work!

The victim of the jewelry theft has not come forward. If you believe the jewelry belongs to you, contact Lieutenant John Steele at 617-745-5780, and be sure to have a specific description of your property.

Smart, Safe Questions When Mortgage Shopping

Although people often live with their mortgage decision for 30 years, research shows that Americans spend more time considering a car purchase than evaluating a home mortgage. Taking time to prepare, and asking the right questions of your lender, can help you make a financially prudent decision. Here are some questions to consider:

• How much can I afford? By entering income, debt and down payment information, home affordability calculators can help estimate how much home you can afford and what your monthly payments need to be. Be sure to consider monthly expenses such as association fees, utilities and property taxes.

• How much should I consider for a down payment? A minimum down payment of 3 to 5 percent is generally required. If you put less than 20 percent down, government or private mortgage insurance may be needed. Private mortgage insurance can help you own a home sooner, and can generally be canceled when you reach 20 percent equity.

WHEN HUNTING for a mortgage, it's not only about finding the one with the lowest monthly payment.

• What is the interest rate and is it fixed? Shop around among several lenders to ensure the best rate. Be clear about whether the rate is fixed or adjustable. A rate lock protects you if interest rates rise while the loan is being processed.

• Will my loan have any type of borrower assistance program or job loss protection? Mortgage insurance companies, such as Genworth Financial, offer no-cost borrower assistance programs and job loss protection that provides some peace of mind when you purchase a home.

• Should I get prequalified? Yes. Your lender can informally qualify you for a loan by obtaining basic information on your income, debts and credit. Prequalifying means you can estimate how much you can borrow and make a realistic buying decision.

• Does my credit score matter? It's a good idea to review your credit report and clear up any old debts or inaccuracies before meeting with a lender. This may improve your score, which could improve the interest rate your lender offers. Keep in mind that the changes can take time to clear as well as reflect on the revised report.

• What documents do I need to apply for a loan? The process is easier if you bring full documentation of personal finances, assets, employment history, current loan amounts and payments, credit card account numbers and income tax returns.

Electrical Safety

Q: What is a GFCI? A contractor we're considering to renovate our kitchen and bathroom keeps mentioning them. – Gayle S., Wheeling, W.Va.

A: The letters GFCI stand for "Ground Fault Circuit Interrupter," a safety feature found in power receptacles (outlets). GFCI receptacles are required in bathrooms and kitchens by law.

GFCI receptacles detect when electricity is "leaking" and immediately interrupt the electrical circuit (e.g., shut off the power). This is an extremely important safety feature when operating electrical appliances like hairdryers or toasters near water. Even a tiny amount of excess electrical current will trip the circuit.

The receptacles are reset by pressing a button, usually set between the two outlets.

Q: How can I know for sure that a circuit has been turned off to a room or larger area? – Jay S., via email

A: Plug a lamp or a radio into an outlet in the room, or turn the overhead light or fan on. Have a helper stay in the area and tell you when the light or radio turns off. If you aren't sure or are unable to check for power for any reason, turn off power to the entire home by flipping the main switch or circuit breaker. If you're unsure the power is completely off (for example, power supplied from a source outside the home) or not confident you can make the repair, contact a licensed electrician.

HOME TIP: Veteran electricians know to never grab a wire -- touch it with the back of your hand first. If electrical shock occurs, your fist could close involuntarily, increasing injury if it closes around the wire.

Send your questions, tips or comments to ask@thisisahammer.com, or write This Is a Hammer, c/o King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. When in doubt as to whether you can safely or effectively complete a project, consult a professional contractor.

Use Color To Revamp The Look Of Your Home

YOU CAN have a new home at the old address with paint and perhaps some shingles.

(NAPSA) – Choosing a new look for your home can be a liberating, rejuvenating change that will pay off in the future. By choosing the right color, you can express yourself, freshen up an old look and increase the value of your home. According to a recent Cost vs. Value Report conducted by Hanley Wood, LLC, an exterior makeover -such as installing fiber cement siding-can be a great investment, returning more than 83 percent of the project cost upon resale.

Here are several tips to help you increase the value of your home while boosting curb appeal:

• Go Green. Color choice can affect the energy efficiency of your home. Darker colors absorb the sun and therefore warm the home, while lighter colors reflect the sun's rays, keeping the home cooler. This is an important consideration depending on the amount of sunlight your home is exposed to on an average day.

• Get Back to Nature. Look to your natural surroundings for inspiration. For example, in a wooded area, vivid greens and browns can help blend the style of a home with its environment. In an urban setting, bright, eye-catching colors can help to offset the sometimes drab hues associated with city living.

• Go Back in History. If your home is from a certain historical period, play off that history. Find old pictures of your house or neighborhood to use a historically accurate color scheme. Try to select shades that were used at the time your home was built. This will add character and a certain amount of authenticity to your own little historical treasure.

• Visualize the Finished Product. The ColorView free online tool at www.certainteed.com lets homeowners picture their home complete with new color. You can even mix and match colors of roofing, siding, trim, rail and deck to choose the perfect style and look.

• Make a Lasting Impression. The darker the hue, the more likely it is to fade over time, especially with homes exposed to direct sunlight. CertainTeed's Monogram vinyl siding offers consistent quality and variety with over 40 colors and woodtone blends.

• Look Up. The roof accounts for roughly 40 percent of the exterior appearance of the home, so it's important to consider roofing shingles. CertainTeed's Presidential Shake Shingles deliver the charm and character of hand-split wood shakes with the durability and strength that preside over wood in virtually every surrounding. From aged bark and charcoal black to weathered wood and chestnut, the shingles are available in a wide array of dynamic color options and textures to match your home's unique style.

Ensuring Sound Real Estate Purchases

Owner's title insurance can offer homeowners protection against many legal hazards (incorrect notary acknowledgements, previously undisclosed heirs to the property and even counterfeit land deeds) that can emerge, usually after the completion of a real estate purchase.

Most lenders require home-buyers to purchase lender's title insurance when they obtain a loan, but this only protects the lender's investment when problems occur. Owner's title insurance provides coverage to homebuyers for as long as they or their heirs own the property. For a one-time fee, it gives the insured the best possible chance for avoiding title claim and loss.

After your sales contract has been accepted, a title professional will search the public records to look for any problems with the home's title. This search typically involves a review of land records and title problems that are fixed before you go to closing. Owner's title insurance comes into play after settlement when previously undisclosed problems arise.

Lawn Growing And Mowing Made Easier

(NAPSA) - When your yard is saying "I want to be a lawn," six tips can help the grass grow greener on your side of the fence:

1. Water rarely but thoroughly. Most lawns need a good soaking to a depth of six to eight inches.

2. Water early, generally before 10 a.m., so that the grass gets to dry before the sun gets too hot.

3. Mow weekly: Regular mowing makes your lawn healthier and easier to cut.

4. Keep the mower blade sharp for a clean cut and to reduce lawn disease.

5. When you mow, cut only a third of the height of the lawn to encourage strong roots. Cutting too short stresses the lawn, creating an environment ideal for weed growth and disease.

6. Get a good mower. To help, leading engine manufacturers are incorporating unique new features into their products that deliver professional results and make cutting the lawn a much easier and more enjoyable experience.

When selecting a walk-behind mower, it's wise to look at the engine. Select a reputable engine brand and consider these questions:

• Is it easy to start? With some engines today, priming and choking are a thing of the past. Smart-Choke technology automatically manages the start-up pro_cess so there's no risk of flooding the engine. Simply pull the cord and go.

• Is it easy to fill? Filling the fuel tank on many mowers can be a challenge. Engines with Accu-Fill, however, incorporate a unique angled neck as well as an opening that is 45 percent larger than those in most mowers. This translates to easier filling and less spilling of fuel, which is better for the environment.

•Will it perform? Look for an engine with Consistent-Cut technology. This system delivers more power to the mower in extreme load conditions for a great-looking cut every time-even in thick, wet grass that can stall other mowers.

• Is it well constructed? A cool-running OHV (overhead valve) design with cast-iron cylinder bore will help your mower stand up in harsh conditions-letting you mow longer and avoid costly trips to the repair shop.

SPOTLIGHT on HEALTH and FITNESS

QMC Magnetic Resonance Imaging Services Awarded Accreditation

Quincy Medical Center has been awarded a three-year term of accreditation in magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) as the result of a recent review by the American College of Radiology (ACR).

MRI is a noninvasive medical test that utilizes magnetic fields to produce anatomical images if internal body parts to help physicians diagnose and treat medical conditions.

The QMC accreditation includes head, spine, body, MSK, MRA and cardiac MRI.

The ACR gold seal of accreditation represents the highest level of image quality and patient safety. It is awarded to facilities meeting ACR Practice Guidelines and Technical Standards after a peer-review evaluation by board-certified physicians and medical physicists who are experts in the field.

Image quality, personnel qualifications, adequacy of facility equipment, quality control procedures and quality assurance programs are assessed. The findings are reported to the ACR Committee on Accreditation, which subsequently provides the practice with a comprehensive report they can use for continuous improvement.

Quincy Medical Center offers a full range of accredited diagnostic imaging services and it is one of only a few hospitals in the area to offer cardiac MRI.

"Cardiac MRI is a state-of-the-art imaging modality that enables us to define cardiac structure, morphology and function with superior resolution compared to an echo," says QMC cardiologist Leon Shturman, MD, of Granite Medical Group, who is fellowship trained in cardiac MRI and CT.

"Cardiac MRI can help us better identify patients who would benefit from procedures such as angioplasty, and aid in the diagnosis of a host of heart problems, such as cardiomyopathy, myocarditis, pericarditis, cardiac masses and more.

"The excellent team of radiologists and technologists at Quincy Medical Center deserve high marks for spearheading this program."

Tips On Managing Good Cholesterol

(NAPSA)-When it comes to managing your cholesterol, low isn't always the goal. Higher levels of "good," or HDL (high-density lipoprotein), cholesterol may help protect against heart disease, while having low levels (less than 40 mg/dL) may increase the risk.

Medical experts think HDL carries cholesterol away from the arteries and back to the liver, where it's passed from the body and protects from heart disease. Some experts believe that HDL removes excess cholesterol from arterial plaque, slowing its buildup.

Dr. Richard Karas, Director of Preventive Cardiology and Co-Director of the Women's Heart Center at Tufts Medical Center, says women in particular need to pay attention to HDL levels as it's typically 10 points higher in women than in men. Furthermore, low HDL is a more significant risk factor for heart disease than high LDL ("bad") cholesterol in women.

Although women may not be diagnosed as aggressively as men, more women die of heart disease each year. In fact, in the U.S., heart disease is the leading cause of death in women and 38.2 million women (34 percent) are living with the disease. The population at risk is even larger.

Fortunately, even small changes to daily habits can help both men and women increase their HDL. Here are some tips:

• Aerobic exercise. Regular exercise that raises your heart rate (walking, jogging or bike riding) is one of the most effective ways to increase HDL levels.

• Lose weight. Obesity can both increase LDL and lower HDL cholesterol. If you're overweight, losing even a few pounds can improve your HDL.

• Stop smoking. Giving up tobacco can increase your HDL cholesterol by up to 10 percent.

• Eliminate trans-fatty acids. Trans-fatty acids are present in many prepared foods-anything with "partially hydrogenated vegetable oils" on the nutrition label. Removing them from your diet, while not easy, will almost certainly raise HDL.

• Increase monounsaturated fats. Monounsaturated fats-such as canola oil, avocado oil and olive oil, and fats found in peanut butter-can increase HDL without increasing your total cholesterol.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

RIGHT OUT OF THE GAIT!

The chiropractor can tell quite a bit about people simply by watching them walk. Foot pain and dysfunction that arise from illness or injury can force an alteration in the way a person walks, which can exert a reverberation effect on the joints of the legs, hips, and lower spine. Even when there is no experience of pain, foot dysfunction can cause the whole body to overcompensate. This can lead to back pain and limited movement. By examining gait and foot function, as well as palpating feet and ankles and measuring any limitations in range of motion, the chiropractor can identify the cause of pain and determine the best course of treatment that helps rebalance the body.

At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we have a number of tools for determining "where" and "to what extent" the bones of your spine have become misaligned. It's important to realize that your body can "tell" us exactly where the problem areas are. Chiropractic care can help anyone become healthier. Call our office at 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Gait analysis may prove particularly advantageous in helping athletes and dancers avoid injury and improve performance.

Exercising Isn't Enough

Many of us exercise for an hour a few times a week and assume that takes care of all our heart needs. Not so, apparently, according to a long-term study. Researchers wanted to know the correlation, if any, between the hours spent watching television and heart disease. A second part of the study looked at the correlation between those TV hours and higher Body Mass Index (BMI) and high cholesterol.

What they found is enough to make you toss away the television remote control: Sitting too long is tied to risk of obesity, cancer, heart disease and diabetes. It's the equivalent of smoking cigarettes in a lot of ways.

And even if we get regular exercise, it doesn't counteract the effects of sitting for long hours.

Cardiologist Dr. David Cohen described prolonged sitting as the body going into "storage mode." The longer you sit, the worse the risks. For those still working at desk jobs, he suggested delivering messages down the hall instead of sending email, and in general moving as much as possible.

Some of Cohen's suggestions also can apply to those of us who don't work outside the home: standing up when talking on the telephone, taking stairs when possible, going for walks.

Being up and about is good for weight bearing on long bones and building up bone strength. Moving, even just walking, increases blood flow to limbs, brain and heart.

As a start, I'm still in favor of taking the batteries out of the television remote control. There would be no idle channel surfing, skimming for programs to watch. Instead we'd consult the show listings, get up, walk across the room and change the channel by hand. And who knows, while we're up, we might even decide not to sit back down again.

Heat and the Elderly

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My mother is 92 and lives by herself. She's quite independent and does well. A neighbor takes her grocery shopping, and we take her to other places she has to go. She is extremely set in her ways.

I offered to have her home air-conditioned. She won't hear of it. She says she's used a fan all her life, and she likes to keep the windows open.

I worry about someone her age tolerating heat, and it gets very hot here. Can you provide some arguments that would change her mind? – D.A.

ANSWER: Your offer to air-condition your mother's home is a kind gesture and has lots of merit. I'm not about to challenge your mother. She has successfully lived a long life, and I could learn from her. People in the past lived comfortably without air conditioning.

Your mother does have to be on guard for dehydration and heat sickness.

During hot summers, everyone has to stay well hydrated. Older people's sense of thirst is not as reliable an indicator of fluid needs as is younger people's thirst sense. She should sip water all day long, or she can choose any beverage she likes, including tea. Cooled drinks help keep the body cooled.

Evaporation is the chief means the body has for staying cool. Not only is an older person's thirst sensation blunted, but so is the ability to sweat. Evaporation of sweat cools the body. I don't mean visible sweat; the sweating I mean is imperceptible but constant. Her fan helps evaporate that imperceptible sweat. However, with a reduced capacity to sweat, older people are at greater risk of suffering from a heat injury.

Increased body heat increases the body's need for oxygen, and that stresses the heart.

On very hot days, how about inviting your mother over to your house until the hot spell breaks?

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have a problem that I am reluctant to talk to the doctor about. It's a rectal itch. I have tried many preparations, but they haven't worked. What would you suggest? – L.F.

ANSWER: I'll mention a few self-remedies, but if the itch doesn't leave promptly, see a doctor. Too many conditions are responsible for such an itch, and each one has a different treatment. Psoriasis, pinworms, eczema and Bowen's disease are a few of the conditions causing a rectal itch. The doctor isn't going to faint when you mention this problem. It's a very common complaint.

Make a couple of diet changes. Stop taking anything that has caffeine. The same goes for citrus fruits, tomatoes and chocolate. If these are the culprits, two weeks away from them should break the itch.

Use moist cotton balls in place of toilet paper. Or you can use commercial products like Tucks.

Take an antihistamine before going to bed. Itching usually worsens at night.

Those are enough home remedies.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: What is Proteus mirabilis, and how does it affect a person? And how is it treated? – P.P.

ANSWER: Proteus mirabilis is the name of a bacterium, a germ. It's often implicated in urinary tract infections, but it can cause infections elsewhere, too. Antibiotics eliminate it.

13/14-Year-Olds, 15/16-Year-Olds Advance To Regional Tournament In New Jersey

Quincy Sweeps Baseball State Championships

By SEAN BRENNAN

Maybe we should rename Quincy "The City of (Baseball) Champions."

Following in the base paths of Morrisette Legion's successful summer season, which ended last month in the American Legion Massachusetts state finals, two Quincy programs – a 15/16 Senior League (Little League) and 13/14 Junior League (Little League) team carried the Quincy baseball momentum all the way to a state title this past weekend at beautiful LeLacheur Park in Lowell.

The 15/16-year-olds, coached by Mark Jaehnig, Mike Joyce and Mario Gallotto, earned a spot in the East Regional in West Deptford, New Jersey by defeating Gloucester in a best-of-three series, 2-1. The ten-team, double elimination Regional tournament begins Friday when Quincy will play against the New York state champion at 5 p.m.

This team is made up of many of the same ball players who advanced into the Regional round two years ago. The majority of these kids, according to Jaehnig, have played over 100 games together since the age of ten and this familiarity with one another was a major factor in this year's run through the local district and sectional rounds.

Quincy began its state title run by knocking back a strong Scituate team in the district playoffs (two games to one) before rolling undefeated through the sectional round with wins over Somerset, Brockton and Auburn (twice).

At LeLacheur Park, Quincy's 15/16-year-olds, behind the starting pitching of Tommy McDonald and clutch hitting from Pat Verhault, Jason Pekkinen and Andrew Jaehnig, beat Gloucester, 4-1, in the opening game of the finals. Gloucester outplayed Quincy in Game Two, winning 9-4 to set up the win-or-go-home third game.

With top pitcher Tom Garland on the mound, Quincy jumped out to a 2-0, which included a RBI base hit from Andrew Currie, before Gloucester stormed back to go ahead 6-3 in the middle innings. Quincy cut into the lead in the sixth inning and began the top of the seventh trailing 6-4.

Finally in seventh Quincy's baseball luck showed its face. Big hits by Dave Joyce, Robbie Monroe (RBI), Garland and Verhault highlighted a five-run inning (9-4) and Quincy closed out Gloucester in the bottom of the frame to punch its ticket to the Regional round.

"This was an improbable comeback victory," said an elated Jaehnig on Monday. "It just goes to show you the quality of baseball in Quincy right now. We were down in the dumps late in that third game against Gloucester but then finally after 20 innings of baseball, balls starting finding gaps. It was an incredible swing of emotion; what a fabulous victory for us and a crushing defeat for Gloucester."

"The majority of these kids have played together with the AAU Quincy Redstockings against top competition since they were ten," continued Jaehnig. "It really speaks volumes about the sacrifice of the kids and their parents."

The Quincy 13/14 Junior League team, not to be outdone, claimed its spot in the Junior League Regional Tournament, which begins Saturday in Freehold, New Jersey with a commanding 2-0 series victory over East Boston at LeLacheur Park.

Quincy will play the winner of the New York/New Jersey game on Saturday.

The road to the state finals began with Quincy rolling through the district round. Wins over Rockland (13-3), Scituate (13-4), and Rockland (11-0) advanced Quincy into the sectional round against Oxford (3-1 win), East Bridgewater (13-1 win) and, one more time, Oxford (11-10).

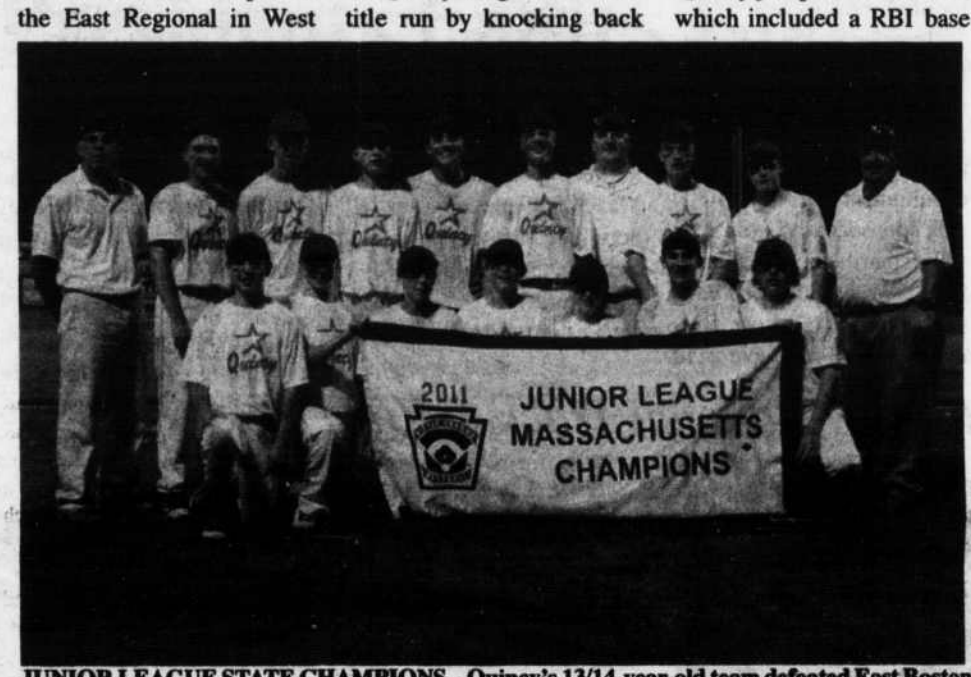

Against East Boston, Quincy dominated Game One, winning 10-0 before claiming the state crown with a 13-6 win in Game Two.

Manager Rick Beach was assisted on the bench by Dave Suslowicz and Jack Paulo.

O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament

The 6th Annual O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament will be held on Aug. 20-21 at the Fenno Street basketball courts in Quincy.

The event is held in memory of John O'Connell and Dennis Thomson, two standout athletes who graduated from North Quincy High School in 2002 and had their lives cut tragically short in the past seven years.

Their families have set up memorial scholarships in their names to benefit North Quincy HS graduates and the tournament serves to raise funds for these scholarships.

The weekend will feature a 16-team men's tournament and a four-team women's tournament, featuring a number of local college basketball players, as well as many of the top former and current high school players from Quincy. Games begin at 10 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday and will run throughout both days.

The event has been a great success in the past thanks to the generous donations of local businesses and Quincy residents. Anyone interested in making a donation can write a check to the John "Okie" O'Connell Fund and send it to Dan Duggan, 61 Bedford St., Quincy 02169. (The donations will be split between the two funds.)

ENC Baseball Showcase

The Eastern Nazarene College Baseball Showcase will be held on Saturday, Sept. 10.

The baseball event will provide participants with an opportunity to showcase their abilities to the ENC staff as well as other baseball programs of your choice. The ENC Showcase is open to all high school players but for juniors and seniors the event is the one and only showcase that ensures that the school of his choice will see each player's performance.

The ENC coaching staff will do professional evaluations and send those evaluations directly to the three schools that each participant is interested in.

For more information, contact Coach Bryan Hampton at bryan.hampton@enc.edu or visit www.enc.edu.

McDermott Brothers— 20 Years Fighting Cancer Riding The Pan Mass Challenge

Norfolk County Register of Probate Patrick McDermott and his brother, Quincy Police Officer Chris McDermott will once again ride in the Pan Mass Challenge, August 6th and 7th; this marks Patrick's 20th and Chris' 18th year participating in the annual fundraiser.

The McDermott brothers join more than 5,000 cyclists from 34 states and six countries to ride in the 32nd annual Pan Mass Challenge, all pedaling to raise $34 million and surpass an overall fundraising total of $303 million.

Cycling and cancer research have been connected in New England since 1980 when 36 cyclists rode 220 miles across Massachusetts to raise funds for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through its Jimmy Fund. Their first effort garnered more than $10,000 and the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC), the nation's original fundraising cycling event, was born.

The PMC is a pioneer of the athletic fundraising industry that today raises more money for charity than any other single event in the country. While the PMC has grown to offer 11 different routes, the McDermott brothers will ride the "traditional" route from Sturbridge to Provincetown (approximately 190 miles). A physical, mental, financial, and emotional challenge, the PMC serves as the largest single fundraiser for the Jimmy Fund of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, donating 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar to the cause. In 2010, the PMC generated 60 percent of the Jimmy Fund's annual revenue, and it was Dana Farber's single largest contributor with over 230,000 individual contributions. These efforts have saved untold lives and resulted in innumerable cancer research breakthroughs.

The McDermott brothers' participation in the PMC serves especially as a way to honor the memory of their late mother, Patricia, who died from cancer in December 1989 at the age of 55. "Our mother inspired us in so many ways to never take life for granted and to look for ways to help others in need. Even though she lost her personal battle with cancer, her faith served as a beacon of hope for so many others who wait for a cure. We look forward to the day when we can refer to cancer as a disease of the past," remarked Patrick.

Register McDermott also pays a personal tribute each year to his friend and political mentor, Paul Harold, former State senator, City Council President, and Norfolk County Register of Deeds who lost his own battle with the disease in 2002 after having been a patient at Dana Farber. McDermott recalls one of his last visits with Paul, "He was tired but full of faith and words of wisdom. Then he presented me with a check for the PMC and told me I was doing a great service for the people of Dana Farber and the Jimmy Fund. I'm proud to dedicate a portion of my ride each year to Paul."

Chris McDermott says he is mindful of other friends and family members who have fought or are fighting the battle against cancer. "Cancer does not discriminate. It affects people of all ages, races, and socio-economic scales. I unfortunately have seen firsthand the devastating effect this disease has on families. I just want to try to do my part to see the day when we can declare a full victory over this disease."

This year, the McDermott Brothers will honor in a special way the life of Todd Fournier, who sadly passed away in December 2010 after a courageous two-year battle with cancer. Todd was freshman roommate at Merrimack College with Chris McDermott. Chris remembers how Todd was always there for him that first year after his mother died of cancer. "Todd was always there to lend an ear, to offer support and encouragement, and to boost me up when I needed it. We reconnected through Facebook a few years ago. When he was diagnosed with cancer, we were all devastated. He was exceptionally optimistic and courageous throughout his treatments and never lost his sense of humor and his zeal for life," recalls Chris.

Together, the McDermott brothers have raised over $120,000 through the Pan Mass Challenge. Both acknowledge the ongoing commitment of their 300 plus sponsors who year after year contribute to their efforts. "We are humbled each and every year by our family and friends who join us in this event through their financial generosity," said Patrick. "Chris and I carry a list of names from our sponsors of cancer victims and survivors and dedicate a portion of the ride to each of them. Their fight gives us the inspiration to keep pedaling. The Pan Mass Challenge offers us all hope that together we can find a cure in the near future."

PATRICK (left) and CHRIS (right) McDERMOTT will be riding in the Pan Mass Challenge Aug. 6-7. The McDermott brothers have combined to ride in 38 PMC and have raised over $120,000 for cancer research and treatment at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute.

In order to participate, each rider must raise a minimum of $4,200. If you would like to join the PMC team in its battle against cancer by sponsoring the McDermott brothers, visit the PMC's web site at www.pmc.org to make an on-line gift (eGifts) or checks can be made payable to "PMC/Jimmy Fund" and forwarded to Patrick McDermott at 55 Dixwell Avenue, Quincy, MA 02169.

14-Year-Old Making His Second Trip To The Hershey National Track & Field Finals

Quincy's Mike Mullaney Was Born To Run

By SEAN BRENNAN

Some people are just born to run.

The soon-to-be freshman at North Quincy High School, Mullaney has been running his whole life. He started as a youngster with Geoff Hennessy's Quincy Track Club and continued his (running) pace as a student at Central Middle School under the tutelage of Ricardo Cordero.

Mullaney didn't stop there. He consistently runs five days a week working on both his endurance and his speed. Take a walk along Wollaston Beach some day this month and you may watch as he runs past you always striving for a faster spilt.

His favorite race is the one-mile - although once he suits up for the combined QHS/NQHS cross country team next month he has his sights on running the two-mile as well – and, not unexpectedly, Mullaney, for a second time, will be representing Quincy and Massachusetts in the mile event at this weekend's Hershey National Track & Field Meet in Hershey, Pennsylvania.

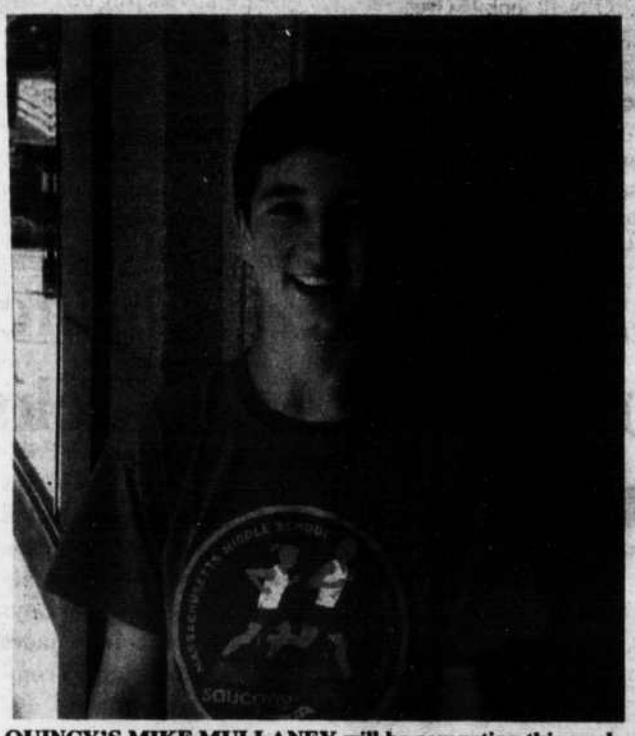

Mullaney's journey to the nationals began back in mid-June at the Quincy Recreation Department's Hershey National Track & Field local qualifier meet. His mile time earned him a spot at the State Meet held at Nashoba Regional High School in Bolton on June 25 where he proceeded to eviscerate his competition with a time of 4:57.75 on his way to a state crown.

His time and distance were then submitted to the Regional Director of District 6, which includes the six New England states and four Canadian Provinces. Not surprisingly, Mullaney's mile time stood up – the next closet time was run in 5:03 by a boy from New Brunswick, Canada - and he was invited to represent the district in the North American Field Meet this weekend.

For Mullaney, his time of 4:57.75 was a personal best but he knows that to win at Hershey he will have to rear back and run even faster.

"After the Quincy qualifier, I went to Bolton (where he ran the 4:57.75) and then I had to wait," he said in an interview at The Quincy Sun last week. "Then they just compared the times from my region. I was the top one-miler in the region but when you go nationally kids are going to run around 4:30."

"I go the first weekend in August," Mullaney continued. "It is just one race. I did the 800-meter the last time I was there (running it in 2:35). I am looking to improve on this personal best time."

QUINCY'S MIKE MULLANEY will be competing this weekend on a national stage in the one-mile race at the 2011 Hershey National Track & Field Meet in Pennsylvania. Mullaney ran a personal best time of 4:57.75 at the state meet back in June.

For Mullaney running runs in the family. His mother Carolyn was an All-American at Norwich University, his older brother Jake ran in high school and his sisters; Briana and Danielle are running now as juniors for NQHS. He knew at a young age that running was for him and thanks to outlets such as the QTC and the running program at Central; Mullaney has been able to improve every step of the way. It has been hard work but the payoff has been rewarding.

"My parents signed us up for the Quincy Track Club when we were little. Geoff was a huge impact," Mike said. "I then did track in school with Mr. Cordero at Central through his running club, which was when we ran in the morning before school. Mr. Cordero was a huge influence."

"I normally run five days a week and I do different things – some days I do speed and some days I do distance," Mullaney continued. "I am planning on running cross country and spring track in high school and I am going to do the one-mile and two-mile. I want to keep running in college and I want to keep running road races when I am older.

"The mile in high school is always under five minutes so I have to run more sprints because you need to be better at endurance."

The Hershey National Track & Field North American Meet brings the best tracksters from the United States and Canada together for four days of competition. Mullaney will be running against the best-of-the-best in the one mile but the weekend is not only about the competition, it is also about meeting and forming new friendships and developing a better understanding of how to become a better runner.

Mullaney will be treated like a champion regardless of how the one mile race pans out.

"They have a separate trip for (the participants)," he said. "Our families get to go to the dinners and stuff but everything else we do on our own. You go down a few days before and there is a carnival, the opening ceremonies and this year we get to meet Rafer Johnson (1960 Olympic Gold Medalist – Decathlon) and Carl Lewis (nine-time Olympic Gold Medalist), they are this year's guest speakers. We also get to take a tour of the Hershey factory and get to go to the amusement park."

Win or lose, Mullaney's running future, according to Hennessy, is bright. The longtime Quincy track guru is excited about what Mullaney could potentially accomplish running for QHS/NQHS over the next four years mainly because Mullaney is dedicated to the sport.

"Mike is such a hard worker," said Hennessy. "It is no surprise that he qualified for Hershey. He is as good as it gets. I expect him to make an immediate impact at the high school level."

Mullaney already has his sights set on making an immediate impact in high school, but like every great runner he is only focused on the next race.

"I try and win every race I am in," he said. "That is the goal. It should be fun."

Hershey Track & Field say hello to Mike Mullaney.

SUMMER OF DOMINANCE – Members of the North Quincy HS boys' basketball team have joined forces this summer to dominate several local, student-run basketball tournaments. North Quincy went 4-0 over the weekend at a tournament in Hull, defeating Cohasset, Seekonk, and Marshfield to advance to the championship game against Cohasset. North Quincy won 55-48 in the final. Earlier last month, NQ participated in a tournament at UMass-Lowell and swept the series with wins over Concord/Carlisle, Branford, CT, and Littleton before defeating Concord/Carlisle in the championship game, 69-60. QYB Junior League Declares Co-Champions

In the spirit of fairness and ultimately good sportsmanship, Quincy Youth Baseball's 2011 Junior Farm League baseball championship ended with co-champions.

The final two teams vying for the boys' 8-9 age group title were Egan's Sunoco and the McDermott Club but, due to bad weather and scheduling conflicts, the best-of-three championship series was halted tied at 1-1. And the final result was recognition from Quincy Youth Baseball that this summer there would be two champions.

Last Thursday at Pageant Field, players from both Egan's Sunoco and the McDermott Club got together for an awards ceremony and pizza party celebrating the successful seasons of both programs.

Organized by Ward 5 City Councillor Doug Gutro – whose son Brian played on the Egan's Sunoco team – the players enjoyed the awards ceremony and pizza party and were excited to get together for one last time. The coaching staffs for both teams stated how pleased they were with their players' efforts throughout the season and although everyone was disappointed that a deciding Game Three never was played they were proud of the dedication and sportsmanship that all the boys displayed throughout the season.

In the championship games that were played Egan's Sunoco defeated the McDermott Club 9-0 in Game One before the McDermott Club responded with a 13-9 victory in Game Two. After an emotional week of waiting for the weather to clear and trying to work around various schedules, Quincy Youth Baseball decided to declare a tie and award both teams the honor of co-champions.

When the 2011 playoffs began, Egan's Sunoco was the top team following a 9-1-1 regular season. Egan's Sunoco defeated South Shore Cooperative Bank 18-2 in the preliminary round; knocked off Sean's Barber Shop, 9-0, in the first round and then squeaked by Attorney Jack Greene, 9-3, to advance to the best-of-three championship round.

The McDermott Club's run to the finals began with a 9-6 victory over Team Sullivan in the preliminary round. A 5-1 victory over Ayers Collision in the first round advanced the McDermott Club into the semifinals versus the Heritage Company; a game that the McDermott Club won 6-3 to set up their series with Egan's Sunoco.

The regular season concluded with the following standings:

Egan's Sunoco (9-1-1); Heritage Company (10-3-1); Atty. Jack Greene (10-3-1); Ayers Collision (10-4); Donovan Brothers (10-4-1); Marty Aikens Club (8-5); McDermott Club (8-5-1); Team Timmins (7-6); Sean's Barber Shop (7-6-1); Team Sullivan (5-7-1); Bellotti Club (5-9); Tobin Club (4-8); Quincy Car Wash (4-9); McDonald Insurance (2-8-1); Yellow Cab (2-10); South Shore Cooperative Bank (0-13).

The following are a list of the winners and MVPs of the All-Star Game and Skills Competition:

Zach Hatfield of Egan's Sunoco – American MVP

Scott McMahon of McDonald Insurance – National MVP

Colby St. Marie of Ayers Collision – Fastest Pitch

Dave Ryan of the McDermott Club – Fastest Run

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A more harmonious aspect favors all relationships. Family ties with mates and children are strengthened. Libra is Cupid's choice to win the amorous Aries' heart.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The bold Bull is ready to take on fresh challenges. Expect some opposition as you plow new ground – but supporters will outnumber detractors.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) An upcoming job change could mean uprooting your family to a far-distant location. Weigh all considerations carefully before making a decision one way or the other.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A long-standing problem is resolved by a mutually agreed upon compromise. You can now focus on getting the facts you'll need for a decision you'll soon be asked to make.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) The Big Cat needs to be wary of what appears to be a golden investment opportunity. That "sure thing" could turn out to be nothing more than a sack of Kitty Glitter.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You give of yourself generously to help others, but right now you must allow people to help you. Confide your problems to family and trusted friends.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Relationships benefit from a strong harmonious aspect. Things go more smoothly at work. Someone you thought you'd never see again asks for a reconciliation.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A minor distraction interferes with travel plans, but the delay is temporary. Meanwhile, expect to play peacemaker once again for feuding family members.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Keep that positive momentum going on the home front. Arrange your schedule to spend more time with your family. You'll soon have news about that job change.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Control that possessive tendency that sometimes goads you into an unnecessary display of jealousy. You could be creating problems where none currently exist.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A new project holds some challenges you hadn't expected. But don't be discouraged; you'll find you're more prepared to deal with them than you realized.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Yours is the sign of the celestial Chemist, so don't be surprised if you experience a pleasant "chemistry" betwixt yourself and that new Leo in your life.

BORN THIS WEEK: You enjoy being fussed over, as befits your "royal" Leonine nature. You also have a strong loyalty to family and friends.

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

No funeral director in the country would dispute the right of a family to specify "no visitation" – if that is the way the family desires it. But, if asked, we are sure every funeral director would suggest visitation in most cases.

It has been proved through the years that visitation at the funeral home HELPS the family face the reality of death. It has been proved a family's grief is lessened by the visit of friends who show concern for the family at a time of death. It is only human to want to express feelings. And this applies to most people. It has been proved that shock and surprise, emotional release, loneliness, distress and anxiety are emotional moods that can be HELPED by the appearance of friends. Words are not necessary. Personal appearance is sufficient. Visitation is an act of kindness . . . These are only a few of the reason why funeral directors welcome visitation prior to and during a funeral service . . .

TRIBUTES TO LOST loved ones laid amongst the flowers at City Hall Plaza at last Friday's candlelight vigil to remember friends and family lost to drug overdoses.

500 Remember Loved Ones Lost To Drug Overdose

By MIRIAM JOSEPH

When Kathy Deady's adult son woke her one morning and asked to be taken to the hospital, she thought he was having an asthma attack. What he knew, and what she didn't, was that he had overdosed on heroin.

Last Friday evening, Deady was one of nearly five hundred people who crowded City Hall Plaza to participate in a candlelight vigil to remember loved ones lost to drug overdose.

Volunteers from several community groups, including the office of Mayor Thomas Koch, Impact Quincy and Bay State Community Services, approached a podium and read off 348 names of loved ones whose deaths were drug-related.

Deady's son is now in recovery. She says she had no knowledge of drug use,

Police Search For 23-Year-Old Woman

By LAURA GRIFFIN

It's been four weeks and no major clues have surfaced in the search for 23-year-old Evelin Valibayova who disappeared after midnight July 16, according to Quincy Police Detective Jason MacIsaac.

MacIsaac said Monday there's been no activity on Evelin's credit card or bank account since she finished her waitress shift that Friday at Area 4 Restaurant, Cambridge.

"That raises a suspicion level absolutely," MacIsaac said, referring to the woman's idle bank account and credit card.

MacIsaac and Detective Rick Wash are heading the Missing Person investigation and working in conjunction with Cambridge and Boston

St. John's School Razing Signals End Of An Era

Demolition crews crushed the walls of the St. John's School building this week signaling the final chapter for the century-old structure where thousands of Quincy residents were once educated and where Father Bill's Homeless Shelter was first established.

Where hundreds of young girls and boys in green uniforms, starched white shirts, green beanies and string ties once played at recess, now stacks of crumbling brick and wood fill the schoolyard.

St. John's School which served over 450 youngsters from Grade One to Grade 8 in its peak years, opened in the early 1900's and closed in 1974. The building located on Phipps Street was subsequently used as a parish center and for classes in religious education,

Wards 2, 6 Ballot Positions Drawn For Preliminary Election

STEVEN PERDIOS

STEPHEN KOZLOWSKI

BRIAN RADELL

BRIAN McNAMEE

It's Perdios, Kozlowski And Croall In Ward 2; Miller, Radell And McNamee In Ward 6

Steven Perdios and Michael Miller will have their names atop the Sept. 20 preliminary election ballots for Ward 2 and Ward 6 councillor respectively after a drawing for ballot position was held Monday at City Hall.

Here's how the Ward 2 city councillor ballot will be listed by position:

Steven Perdios, 86 Rugles St.; Stephen M. Kozlowski, 14 Berkeley St.; and Brad Croall, 53 Summer St.

In the Ward 6 councillor preliminary election, the ballot names will be listed this way:

Michael J. Miller, 38 Warwick St.; Brian T. Radell, 21 Standish Ave.; and Brian F. McNamee, 133 Commander Shea Blvd. Because he is an incumbent, McNamee will also have the designation: "candidate for re-nomination."

Sept. 20 is not a city-wide preliminary election. Only voters in Ward 2 will cast ballots for Ward 2 councillor and only voters in Ward 6 will cast ballots for Ward 6 councillor. The top two finishers in the Ward 2 and Ward 6 races will face one another in the city's final election Nov. 8.

The Nov. 8 election also features contested races for mayor, councillor at-large, Ward 3 and Ward 5 city councillor and school committee. Incumbent councillors in Wards 1 and Ward 4 are unopposed.

The Ward 2 council seat is open because longtime councillor Dan Raymondi was appointed commissioner of the Department of Public Works in July. There are three candidates vying to succeed him. They are: Perdios, age 43, a civil engineer; Kozlowski, age 49, employed by the Quincy Sewer and Water Department; and Croall, age 31, who works in financial services.

In Ward 6, incumbent Brian McNamee, age 54, an accounting and finance director, is seeking a fourth two-year term. He is challenged by Miller, age 71, a retired pipefitter; and Radell, age 30, is an insurance agent.

and today is adamant that parents be aware of drug-use symptoms and behavior. "I didn't find out my son used drugs until he OD'd – I wasn't educated – I didn't know what to look for."

One of the founders of a group called End Drug Abuse Now, or EDAN, the group began when 10 mothers and fathers, sitting around a kitchen table, decided to create a group which could support parents who have children who have been affected by drug use—"parents who don't know what to do."

Deady said, "We started a website, we get phone calls, we receive referrals, sometimes from Parole Officer Jo Rothman at the Quincy Court, and sometimes we attend court with a parent who has to section a kid.

"The stigma to this is so huge, people are afraid to talk about it, but if they don't talk about it, then people die. And that is the hard part about it. Talking about it saves lives. These kids don't want to be addicts.

"Our goal is awareness, doesn't matter who you are, how much money you have or don't have, it can happen to anybody's family. We need education and treatment."

The group would like to target not only children of elementary age, but their parents, to educate them in what to look for in children's at-risk behavior.

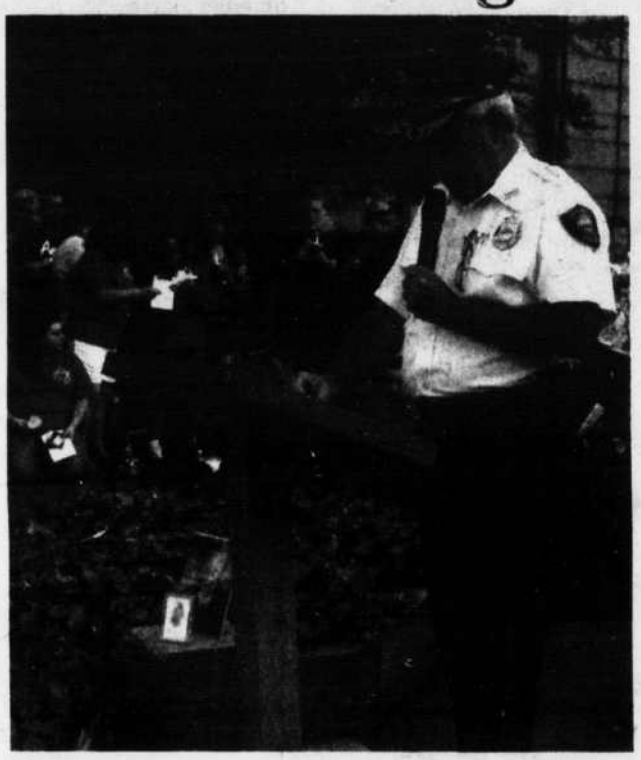

Another of the event's volunteers was Jackie Gutierrez, an Addiction Specialist for South Shore Mental Health who herself lost a family member to drug overdose. Gutierrez also runs the Narcan Program for Bay State Community Services and works closely with the Quincy Police Dept.

"Narcan is a medication, funded by the state, to help a person reverse an overdose, and Quincy is one of eight cities which support this program through the Department of Public Health," she says.

Since last October, when officers of the QPD began carrying and using Narcan, an impressive thirty-two lives have been saved by this nasal spray which is effective in one to three minutes and lasts from 30 to 90 minutes.

The medication works by knocking the opiate off the opiate receptor, and only temporarily, takes away the 'high,' allowing the drug-user a chance to breathe.

As an outreach coordinator for the Narcan Program, Gutierrez says that Bay State Community Services received federal and state funding and offers many programs, including after-school programs for children with drug addiction in their families.

QUINCY POLICE CHIEF Paul Keenan reads the names of those lost to drug overdose. Quincy police officers to date have saved the lives of 32 overdose victims through the administering of medications called Narcan, which reverses opioid overdoses. Quincy Sun Photo/Miriam Joseph

"I started in the HIV field and I just watched so many people die, not only from HIV, but they were dying from overdoses before HIV could even get to them. So, then I got the passion to prevent this."

In her opening and closing remarks, event committee member Deady thanked the City of Quincy for hosting the event, as well as Mayor Koch, who was in attendance with other city officials and councilors who support this cause. Also acknowledged were State Sen. John Keenan, Cong. Bill Keating, Norfolk County District Attorney Michael Morrissey, and retired Cong. Bill Delahunt, all of whom have supported substance abuse issues.

Hundreds of candles were issued to participants of the event and photos of loved ones were placed among the flowers at City Hall Plaza.

SUMMER GREEN
Few gemstones exude the lush, verdant feel of a summer's day in the way that peridot does. This makes this gem variety of olivine a perfect choice as the August birthstone, as well as an ideal gemstone to wear with a summer wardrobe. This very modern gemstone can trace its popularity at least back to the time of the ancient Romans, who admired the gemstone's ability to radiate a green shine in any light. For this reason, they called peridot the "emerald of the evening." Peridot is also one of the only gemstones to come in only one color—vivid green with just a hint of gold, which can vary in shades of yellowish green and olive.
The vibrant green of the peridot, with just a small trace of gold, is the perfect gemstone color to go with that weightless summer wardrobe. Infrastructure Projects Underway Across City

Engineers, surveyors and construction contractors are now working on major flood relief projects, infrastructure overhauls, school roofs, and emergency seawall repairs around Quincy as Mayor Thomas Koch's Capital Improvement moves into full swing, the Mayor said today.

"We are moving aggressively forward on these vital infrastructure projects, and work is underway or in the important design stages on many of the flood-relief, water main, road reconstruction and school repairs that are part of this necessary, affordable program," Koch said. "Our infrastructure needs will not be resolved overnight, but we are making an unprecedented commitment with this plan to protect our City's future."

Engineers and surveyors are well into construction design for a new pumping station and drainage system on Alrick Road; a new flood control structure for the Miller Street, Cross Street and Furnace Avenue area in West Quincy, and an upgraded pump station in the John and Division streets area. The projects mark the first phase of a broader flood-relief package for many areas that is part of the $25 million Captial Improvement Plan.

"Many of these neighborhoods have been affected year-in and year-out for generations by these severe flooding conditions, and I am proud that we have come together collectively as a community to say 'We are not waiting any longer – we are taking action now,'" said Ward 4 City Councillor Brian Palmucci.

JM Lynch Corp. was awarded an emergency contract to repair seawalls most heavily damaged by the fierce winter, with work underway to fix sections of the Shelton Road seawall. The contractor will be moving to two more emergency repair sites when that work is completed.

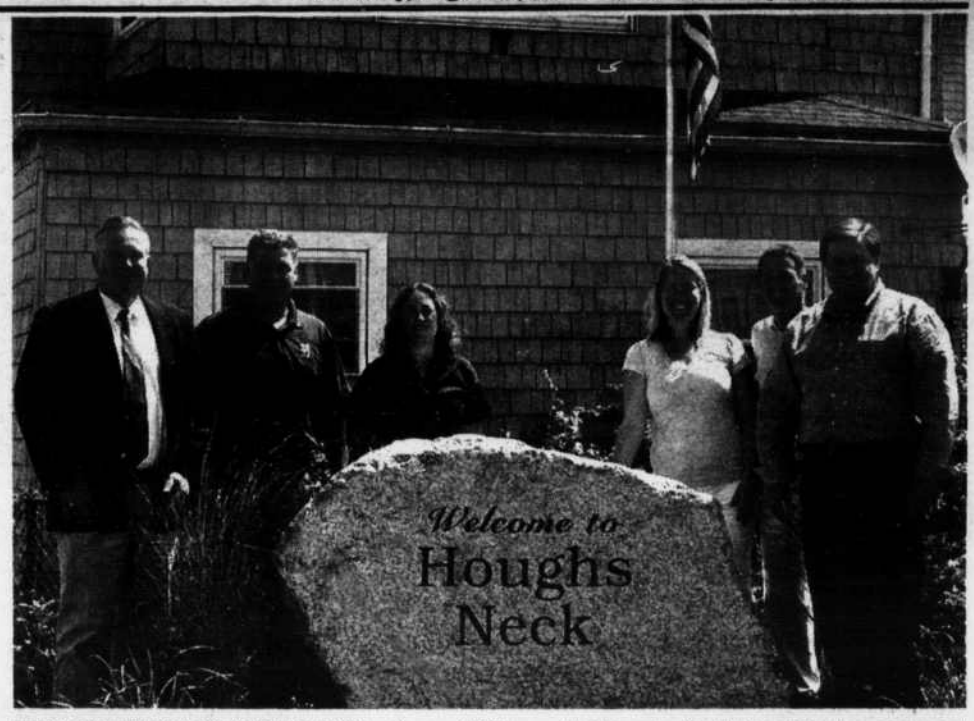

The emergency repairs will dovetail into a $5 million component of the capital plan that calls for the first full assessment of the condition of more than 7 miles of City-owned seawalls in many years and a first phase of repairs expected to be situated in the Edgewater Drive area of Houghs Neck, which is generally considered to be in the most serious condition.

"This is a first step. Our seawall needs are immense and will not be resolved overnight. But this initial investment shows a commitment by the City to control its own destiny when it comes to seawall repairs and not simply stand still and wait for state or federal assistance," Koch said.

Water main replacements and road reconstruction contracts are being awarded on almost a weekly basis as the program moves forward, and contracts and specifications for $2.5 million in school roof repairs at 16 schools are also moving forward, Koch said.

An analysis by the City's Municipal Finance Department showed that under even the most conservative projection, the capital plan will add only $1.3 million to the City's annual budget line

WELCOME TO HOUGHS NECK – A new "Welcome To Houghs Neck" boulder has replaced its aging original at The Willows near the corner of Sea and Babcock Streets. It weighs about 1.5 tons. • On Aug. 18, 1590, John White, the governor of the Roanoke Island colony in present-day North Carolina, returns from a supply trip to England to find no trace of the 100 colonists he left behind. The only clue to their disappearance was the word "CROATOAN" carved into the palisade around the settlement.

• On Aug. 17, 1877, William "Billy the Kid" Bonney kills his first man, an Arizona blacksmith. Just how many men Billy the Kid killed is uncertain. He reportedly once claimed he had killed 21 men, "one for every year of my life."

• On Aug. 15, 1914, the Panama Canal, the American-built waterway across the Isthmus of Panama connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, is inaugurated. U.S. engineers moved nearly 240 million cubic yards of earth and spent close to $400 million in constructing the 40-mile-long canal.

• On Aug. 21, 1920, Daphne Milne, wife of English writer A.A. Milne, gives birth to a son, Christopher Robin Milne. When Christopher Robin received a stuffed bear as a present, his father began writing a series of stories about the bear. Christopher Robin was immortalized in A.A. Milne's books "Winnie-the-Pooh" and "The House at Pooh Corner."

Open Seats Losing Their Appeal

It used to be open city council and school committee seats were as coveted as a Willy Wonka "golden ticket."

But based on this year's election it appears those political opportunities have lost some of their appeal.

Only nine candidates submitted nomination papers for the three open city council seats this fall.

Compare that to 10 years ago when one open seat for councillor at-large precipitated a nine-candidate field for the three at-large seats. There were two incumbents (Tim Cahill and Frank McCauley both re-elected) and seven candidates vying for one open seat: Joseph Finn (winner), Denis Tardo, John F. Keenan, Brian McNamee, Robert Boussy, Julie Berberan and Jimmy Liang.

This year, there's another open seat because John Keenan, who was elected state senator last fall, is not running to keep his council seat. So, even though would-be candidates knew back in November that Keenan's seat would be open, only two candidates – Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro and political newcomer John Rodophele, Sr. were interested enough to file nomination papers for it. They join incumbents Michael McFarland and Joseph Finn on the final ballot Nov. 8 when voters will elect three councillors at-large.

In 2001, there was also an open seat for Ward 3 city councillor. That opening drew four candidates and a preliminary election. The candidates that year were Kevin Coughlin (winner), John Cain, David McGillicuddy and John Garland.

This year, there are two open ward council seats. But in both cases, there are fewer than four candidates seeking those seats.

In Ward 2, there's a three-candidate field and in Ward 5, there's two people running to succeed Gutro who is vacating his seat to run for councillor at-large.

Running for Ward 2 councillor are first-time candidates Stephen Kozlowski, Steve Perdios and Brad Croall.

In Ward 5, it's a two-candidate race with newcomers Kirsten Hughes and Neil McCole.

The school committee apparently is experiencing the same downward trend.

Two years, there were two open seats on the School Committee. Eight candidates filed papers requiring a preliminary election with the top six advancing to the November final. The top three voter-getters won seats.

This year, there are two open seats again. But only five candidates are running for the three seats on the School Committee. The candidates are incumbent David McCarthy, political newcomers Paul Bregoli, Linda Perry and Kathryn Hubley and former Ward 4 councillor Jay Davis.

Here's another reference point: In 2005, there were three open School Committee seats. A total of 12 candidates vied for those three seats.

Why the decline in the number of candidates for open seats?

Some will point to today's hectic lifestyle that leaves little – if any – time for public office pursuits.

Others will suggest public service has a negative connotation and is a general turn-off for the general public. Many are so cynical they don't even vote. Potential candidates motivated to "make a difference" are apparently scarcer.

Then there's the "blog factor" and the advent of electronic media. This format allows some mean-spirited people to criticize public officials and candidates with rhetoric rife with ridicule. These folks remain anonymous on the blogs with a cleverly disguised screen name.

We're not saying all cyberspace chatter is insulting. There are many informed citizens who convey insightful points to a public discussion on various issues. We also think the public has the right to hold a public official accountable if they're not doing the job they were elected to do. And ditto for candidates who make campaign promises.

But some remarks clearly cross the line. And may be the reason some well-intentioned citizens are unwilling to "stick their necks out" as candidates in the public arena.

Perhaps "the blog factor" is not the main reason people are shying away from public life.

But it may be one of them.

SPEAKING OF the number of candidates, political historians will be quick to note the election of 1959. That year there were 57 candidates: two for mayor, eight for school committee, 11 for councillor at-large and 36 for six ward council seats – including 10 in Ward 2.

IT'S BEEN 30 YEARS since a councillor at-large has springboarded from his council seat to the mayor's office.

Which begs the question: has councillor at-large lost some of its luster?

It was once considered a political stepping-stone for those who sought the mayor's office some day.

But not recently.

The last three mayors – Tom Koch, William Phelan and Jim Sheets – never held a councillor at-large seat before becoming mayor. Sheets was a Ward 4 councillor, Phelan a school committeeman and Koch served as executive director of the Park, Forestry and Cemetery Department before becoming the city's chief executive.

But of the city's six mayors before Sheets, five had served as a councillor at-large and four of them went directly from councillor at-large to mayor.

They are:

• Frank McCauley – councillor at-large 1978-1981 – before being elected mayor in 1981.

• Arthur Tobin – councillor at-large for 10 years – before elected mayor in 1977.

• Joseph LaRaia – served four years as a councillor at-large – before being elected mayor in 1975.

• James McIntyre was elected mayor in 1965 but served as a councillor at-large from 1956 to 1959. At the time he was elected mayor, McIntyre was a state senator.

• Amelio Della Chiesa was a councillor at-large for eight years before he was elected mayor in 1957.

(Walter Hannon was Ward 5 councillor for eight years before he was elected mayor in 1971.)

Of course, serving as a councillor at-large has also launched other loftier political aspirations.

Here are a few examples:

Tim Cahill was a councillor at-large when he was elected Norfolk County treasurer and state treasurer.

John Keenan is wrapping up his term as a councillor at-large this year after being elected state senator last fall.

Paul Harold served as a councillor at-large when he was elected a state senator in 1978. He was also a councillor at-large when he was elected Register of Deeds in 2000.

George Burke was a councillor at-large (1964-1967) when he was elected Norfolk County district attorney in 1966.

THE TOP-THREE VOTE getters in this year's councillor-at-large race will win two-year terms. And the first-runner-up – or fourth-place finisher – will also receive an unofficial title: interim councillor in-waiting.

That's because an amendment to the city's charter calls for a councillor at-large vacancy to be filled by the candidate who received the highest number of votes in the most recent election.

So, if one of the three at-large councillors elected this fall vacates his seat before the 2013 city election, the fourth place finisher would be appointed by the council to fill the unexpired term.

GOT A NEW nickname for Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee.

How about "Marathon McNamee?"

Or "Magnet."

Seems every election he's running.

And challengers are drawn to him.

McNAMEE

Of the last eight municipal elections, McNamee's name has appeared on seven ballots – including some preliminary contests.

In 1997, he won a nomination in the Ward 6 council preliminary election but lost in the final to incumbent Bruce Ayers.

In 2001, he was among nine candidates running for councillor at-large.

In 2003, McNamee ran for Ward 6 councillor – losing to Alicia Gardner by 26 votes.

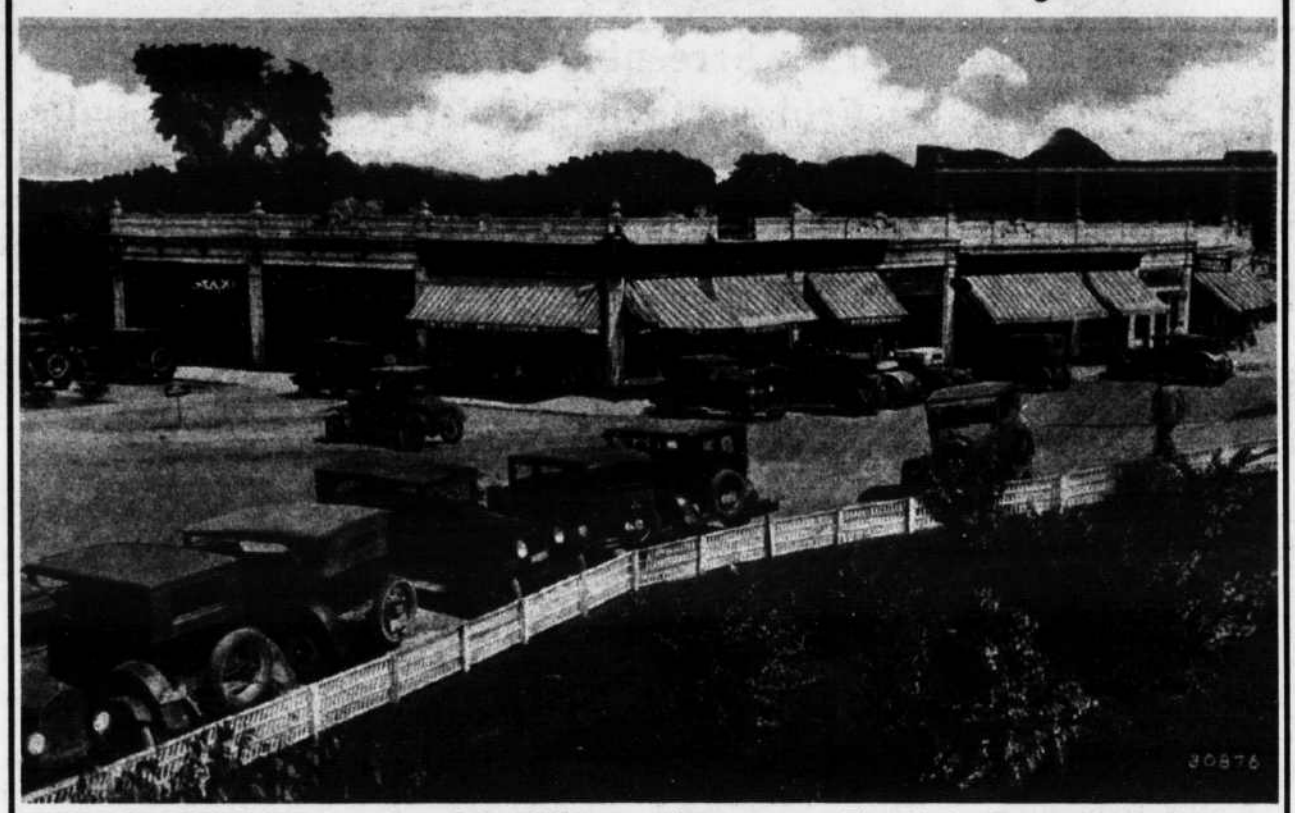

In 2005, he was elected Ward 6 councillor (defeating Mark Bracken).

McNamee won re-election in 2007 and 2009, defeating Jimmy Liang and Maureen Glynn respectively.

This fall, McNamee, of 133 Commander Shea Blvd., has two opponents: Brian Radell of 21 Standish Ave. and Michael Miller, 38 Warwick St.

The two candidates nominated in the Sept. 20 preliminary will square off in the final Nov. 8.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS 1930 POSTCARD is a view of the Wollaston business block where the first Howard Johnson's store opened in 1925. The store is on the corner in the center with the large black sign and stripped awnings. This view is from the old Beale Street bridge looking east. The parking area, which was adjacent to the old Wollaston railroad depot, was known as Depot Square. On the left was Ray's Checker Cab. Also here was Michael McGrath's Taxi Service, which began here before 1900 with horse drawn hacks. McGrath's name still appears on taxicabs here in Quincy. On the right the other black sign was over a First National grocery store that later moved to a new large building across the street, now the CVS. There was a bowling alley under the old First National. Several other stores extended down to Greenwood Avenue. This large business block was demolished in the late 1960's when the MBTA built a new Wollaston T Station and parking lot here. This postcard was published and sold by the Howard D. Johnson, Co. Quincy's Yesterdays

Site Issues Delay Community College

By FRANK McCAULEY

This Week
1969
42 Years Ago

The timetable for the proposed $15 million South Shore Community College to be built in Quincy has been set back by approximately one year.

"It will mean," said disappointed Mayor James R. McIntyre, "that the College will not become a reality until at least three years from now."

The 3,500-student two-year college, which would accommodate residents from Quincy and other South Shore communities, is planned for a 100-plus acre site in the Echo Lake area in Quincy near the Braintree line. It would be built with state funds.

The State Board of Community Colleges said it needs more information regarding rock and ledge in the area and the cost feasibility to develop the site.'

McIntyre said it would take "weeks more and possibly months" to complete the site study requested by the Board of Colleges. (Editor's note: The proposed school was never built on this site.)

MAYOR ACCEPTS SHEEHAN RESIGNATION

Mayor James R. McIntyre accepted "with sincere regret" the resignation by John F. Sheehan, executive director of the Quincy Council on Aging.

Sheehan, who was appointed to the $12,000 post in April 1967 –the first man to hold the job –, was leaving August 29 to return to teaching. He will teach American History at Scituate High School.

"I think Mr. Sheehan did a tremendous job," said McIntyre. "He is an outstanding, dedicated individual and I accept his resignation with sincere regret."

McIntyre noted that Sheehan had initiated and coordinated many worthwhile programs for Quincy's senior citizens who number 15,400 in the 60-plus-age bracket.

RUTH GORDON DAY CELEBRATED IN QUINCY

Mayor James R. McIntyre presented Quincy-born Oscar winning actress Ruth Gordon with an Honorary Quincy Citizenship Certificate on her visit to City Hall.

Miss Gordon was a member of the Quincy High Class of 1914 – the famed so-called "worst class" because no one in the class made the honor roll.

Wonders Why No Councillor Attended ConCom Hearing

Dear Council President Coughlin:

It is unfortunate in a city the size of Quincy, that again, not one City Councillor was present tonight for the Quincy Conservation Commission final public hearing and vote on the Town Brook tonight. All of you were notified.

Is every city councillor afraid of voicing an opinion different the mayor? The silence by this city council is deafening.

I feel I have no representation as a resident who happens to live in Quincy Center. Did you inform your colleagues, especially the councillors at large of their responsibilities when a ward councillor is unable to represent his or her constituents? As you know, Councillor Gutro works for the EPA and cannot take part in the permitting process.

There was one candidate for Ward 2 councillor there. That was Steve Perdios who requested that they do not vote tonight because they only received the written report from the Peer Review engineer, Horsely Witten a few hours before the meeting. Are you all knowledgeable of what was voted tonight as it relates to the Town Brook Relocation? When you all voted for the LDA, this plan was not included at the time.

The public hearing was closed and a vote was taken pending a few minor items and the DDA finding, not giving Candidate Perdios the courtesy of voting at their next meeting. They never had time to review the information of the Peer Review that the Conservation Commission hired to give them information and the opportunity to ask questions so they understand this complex project better. Is everything in this city now a "done deal" and being rushed through in the middle of summer?

We see and hear from you when you want our votes. How about seeing you when we need you?

Thank you for your response.

Thank You from John 'Okie' O'Connell's Family

We would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have been so generous over the past five years in helping us raise money for the scholarships in honor of our son John.

Without the love and support from John's family and friends, this would not be possible. As we see his family and friends come together on this remembrance day, we continue to be in awe by everyone's presence in attending his Annual Golf Tournament as well as the community coming to the 'Fun'raiser at the Waterclub.

Over the past five years. we have been honored to have been able to present (16) $1,000 scholarships to graduating seniors from NQHS as well as monies to the Learning Center and graduating seniors in their program, in John's name.

This year's recipients are Richard Long, John Green, Jimmy Scribi and Robert Bennett. We wish them great success!

We have also been honored to donate toward the batting cages at Adams Field in memory of Okie, Dennis Thomson, Patrick White and Joseph Conte, all who have been taken away too young.

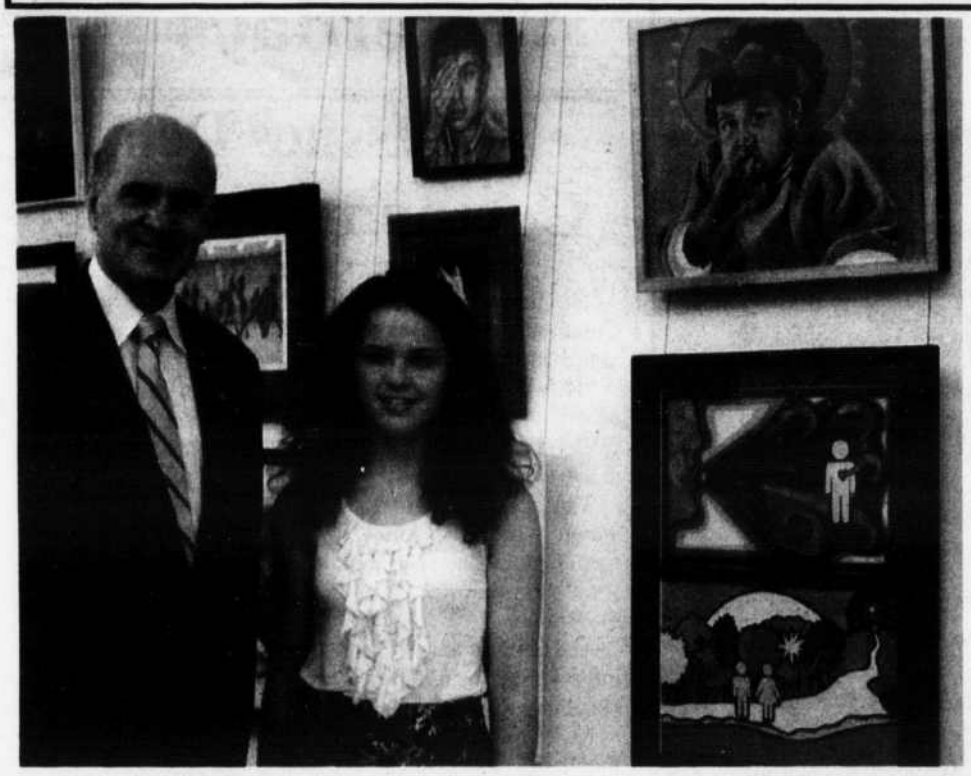

A special thank you to Brian Radell and Katie Marchard for organizing the golf tournament as well as Will O'Connell and Ginny Barry from the Waterclub. Thank you to our sponsors and those who donated gifts for the fundraiser.

"The wine and beer tasting is a popular affair and the Shelter's principal annual fundraiser," said Board Representative Sandra Morse. "In addition to vital financial contributions, it raises awareness about animal welfare and the benefits of adopting."

Morse also said the shelter is delighted to have Frozen Freddies as the official sponsor of the event again this year.

"Their generous contribution, and that of other donors, allows us to continue to care for displaced animals in the area," she added.

Frozen Freddies is proud to underwrite this fundraiser for the Quincy Animal Shelter, said Proprietor Dawn Gaffney. "The volunteers do an amazing job nurturing animals and finding homes for them."

The fundraiser will be held at the Kennedy Center, located on East Squantum Street, off Quincy Shore Drive near Marina Bay. There is free parking and handicap accessibility.

Tickets may be purchased in advance – through Sept. 9 – for pick-up at the will call table. Contact shelter volunteers at 56 Broad St.

They may also be purchased at the door on the night of the event; cash or check only.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Elise's Asian Cole Slaw

We were all having dinner at my daughter Ann Marie and Dave's house and some of us baked or brought something. But when you eat at their house, no other food is necessary.

Anyway, my niece Elise brought an Asian Cole Slaw that was very different from the norm. Last week she brought me the recipe. I hope you will enjoy it as much as we did. It's quick and light for a summer treat.

ASIAN COLE SLAW

2 packages Ramen beef noodle soup
3 bunches scallions
1 pound fresh slaw (sold in markets)
1 cup sliced almonds
1 cup sunflower seeds
1 cup vegetable or canola oil
¾ cup white or cider vinegar
2 packets beef soup mix
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup low sodium soy sauce

Break up the noodles and pour in a rectangular container. Layer the slaw over the uncooked noodles.

Chop the scallions, and layer them on top of slaw. Layer the almonds and the sunflower seeds and don't mix.

Mix the oil, vinegar, soy sauce, beef soup mix and the sugar until well blended.

Pour evenly over the top. Do not mix. Leave in the refrigerator 12 – 24 hours , and then mix and serve. It's worth all the steps and an unbelievable flavor.

24th Annual Quincy August Moon Festival Aug. 21

Quincy Asian Resources Inc. (QARI) is organizing the 24th Annual Quincy August Moon Festival.

The festival will take place Sunday, Aug. 21, at 1400 to 1600 Hancock St. from 11a.m. to 5 p.m.

It is billed as the largest outdoor cultural event in the South Shore, with attendance of over 10,000.

At 11 a.m. there will be a festive and coloful opening ceremony of Dragon and Lion dances parading through Hancock Street to the Main Stage. Over 20 cultural performances are scheduled for the two stages throughout the day.

There are interactive activities for all ages.

This year's event features an Asian Cultural Area with activities and exhibits from China, Taiwan, Thailand and the Philippines.

"The Asian Cultural Area celebrates the idea of a 'diverse and yet unified community,' always a goal of the festival and our organization," said Yau Chong, co-chairperson of the event.

"The venues this year will share the rich history of Asian cultures, and our activities and exhibits are built around the theme of Love, Hope and Community," said Kim Chan, co-chairperson of Festival.

An international food court is also an addition to the festival. Festival-goers will have the opportunity to sit down and taste various Asian cuisines prepared by local ethnic restaurants.

Quincy Asian Resources Inc. is a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting multiculturalism and community understanding to the South Shore community.

The festival is made possible by Grand Sponsors State Street and the City of Quincy, other sponsors, institutional members, and the support of more than 150 volunteers.

The Festival site is a 5 minute walk from the Quincy Center T station, and free parking will be available in municipal lots on either side of Hancock Street.

Cut-A-Thon Sunday At Allure Spa

Back-To-School Haircuts To Help Orphans In Bangladesh Learn A Trade

Allure Spa, 15 Quincy Ave., Quincy, will hold a "cut-a-thon" Sunday, Aug. 14 from 1 to 4 p.m. to benefit Friends of the World Charitable Trust, a vocational training ministry co-founded by Sandra Ishmael, the spa's 17-year-owner.

All proceeds from the event will support the Trust's first project: a cosmetology school for orphaned young women at the Home of Joy Orphanage in Khulna, Bangladesh.

Ishmael began the Trust to help the young adult orphans at Home of Joy learn the skills they need to support themselves. After a visit to the orphanage in Bangladesh in February of 2010 with her church, First Presbyterian Church in Quincy, Ishmael realized that as a beauty industry professional, she is uniquely positioned to train the orphaned young women in cosmetology. Her mission is to provide these young women with the skills they need to get a job in the beauty industry, which is actually growing in South Asia and is a good source of employment for women.

"I just knew I had to do something to help the young people," says Ishmael. "I have been so blessed with my family and my business, and I feel called by God to share these blessings with the orphans in Bangladesh."

Ishmael invited other beauty professionals to join her and this September and October, eight local women from Quincy businesses Allure Spa, Aura Salon and Hairplace One will be volunteering their professional talents and two weeks of their time to travel to Khulna, Bangladesh, to teach the orphans hair care, skin care, manicures and pedicures, proper sanitary practices and salon management.

SANDRA ISHMAEL

Each volunteer trainer will do a two-week piece of the six-week training course. By sharing their professional skills, they are giving these orphaned young women an invaluable gift: a safe way to support themselves in an extremely poor country, where women are especially vulnerable.

"This is an amazing opportunity. I am so grateful to have the chance to share my knowledge and experience with these young women in Bangladesh. Especially since it means they will have a safe way to support themselves using what we teach them," says Molly Coyle, an Allure Spa hairdresser and esthetician going to Bangladesh.

The Trust has already made great progress toward opening the school next month.

The classrooms have been prepared and the equipment has been purchased and installed by a young man, Sohel Willard, who grew up at Home of Joy and is now employed in Bangladesh by the Trust. Twenty young women from the orphanage are eagerly awaiting the trainers' arrival and the start of the course.

During Sunday's "cut-a-thon," Allure Spa staff will be provide a wash and cut for $25, a mini-facial for $25 and a student special $15 wash and cut. All the money raised will go toward defraying the traveling costs of the volunteer trainers, which will be approximately $2,000 per person; purchasing the equipment and supplies used in the training; and providing the graduating students with a start-up kit of professional tools to help them begin a productive career.

Anyone unable to attend Sunday's event but interested in supporting the cause can make a donation. Checks – made payable to Friends of the World Charitable Trust – can be mailed c/o Sandra Ishmael, Allure Spa, 15 Quincy Ave., Quincy, MA 02169.

A Thank You From The Ivil Family

It's been over six months since we lost our loving angel, April Marie. We love her and miss her so much.

We pray to God that no parents have to endure the pain of loving a child as we are experiencing now. We are surviving, but life will never be the same without our precious April.

However, the main reason for this letter is to thank so many people, too numerous to mention them all, starting with our families who were always there with love and support. Words alone cannot express our gratitude.

Also to our friends and April's friends for the loving support and comfort they have given us during this difficult time. To all the wonderful people who spent hours waiting in line to pay their final respects to April and for those who came and were not able to stay, we thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

To all those thoughtful people who sent beautiful flowers, fruit arrangements and heartwarming letters, they will never be forgotten. (April would have loved them all.)

To Joe and Katie from the Chowder House, we thank you for the buffet you provided and to the Elks for the use of the hall.

To the Weymouth Police, Chief Grimes and all his officers, and the Quincy Police, we thank you for the stately send-off you gave our April. We cannot thank you enough. Your warmth and professional courtesy during those trying days was outstanding.

For the generous donations we received for the April Marie Ivil Memorial Fund and to Erica, Jeff and Mammoth Media for the much appreciated art work, we are extremely thankful.

In closing, we wish we could mention everyone who was by our side comforting us and helping us through our grieving, we appreciate everything everyone has done.

May God bless you all.

Says Koch Should Have Helped Q Hot Pot Relocate Here

I am writing you out of concern that the residents of our city are continuously being misled by Mayor Koch's administration as well as the City Council as came forward in Mr. John Downey's Quincy Sun Forum letter last week.

Mr. Downey accused Anne Mahoney of not having her facts straight about the Little Q Hot Pot, saying the Little Q eminent domain taking occurred prior to Mayor Koch taking office.

The reality here is that Mayor Koch took office in January 2008 -- two years before Little Q Hot Pot finally was forced to leave Quincy. The Koch administration had two years to assist the restaurant in finding a new location in Quincy. It is my understanding that, as reported, the city had a relocation specialist that was supposed to assist businesses in finding new locations, but did nothing to help this restaurant stay in Quincy. Due to Mayor Koch's inaction, the city had to pay a $735,000 settlement to relocate the restaurant to Boston -- more than it would have cost if they'd help Little Q find a new Quincy location.

Mayor Koch seems to find it very convenient to take credit for downtown development plans that were already in the making long before he took office, while at the same time blaming his predecessor for things that have occurred since he himself became mayor.

Tom Koch has been mayor for three and a half years; it's time for him to stop blaming all the city's problems on his predecessor and accept responsibility for his own administration's handling of city finances and the downtown redevelopment project.

I'm in agreement with Mr. Downey that I'm looking forward to an "honest airing" of the issues. My hope is that more people pay attention to these matters and that the facts are in fact presented.

Open House At Dorothy Quincy Homestead

The Dorothy Quincy Homestead, a National Historic Landmark, will be open for public tours Saturday, Aug. 13 between 1 and 4 p.m.

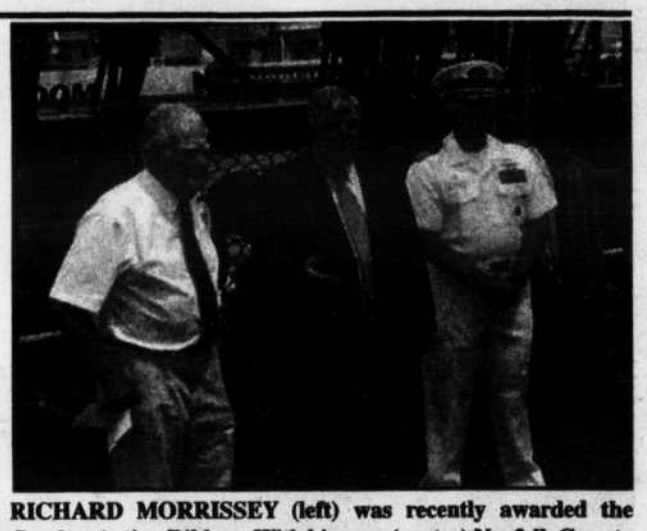

Tours will start on the hour and half hour beginning at 1 p.m. Last tour starts at 3:30 p.m.

All tours are free of charge, but a voluntary contribution is suggested.

The homestead is located on Butler Road at the corner of Hancock Street, Quincy.

Dating from 1686, the house is 325 years old. During the 17th and 18th centuries, this mansion was considered the grandest estates in Quincy. During the Revolutionary War era, it was a meeting place for such patriots as Josiah Quincy, John Hancock and John Adams. It was the childhood home of Dorothy Quincy Hancock, the wife of John Hancock.

The Homestead is operated by the Colonial Dames of Massachusetts in conjunction with the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR).

Keating Procures Ribbon For Richard Morrissey

Quincy World War II Vet Receives Long-Awaited Combat Action Ribbon

Rep. Bill Keating recently awarded a Combat Action Ribbon to a long-deserving veteran – lifelong Quincy resident Richard Morrissey.

Morrissey, who is uncle to Norfolk DA Michael Morrissey and Federal Judge Evan Wallach, served in the Navy during World War II. Judge Wallach contacted Rep. Keating's office with his uncle's Navy discharge papers and military records regarding Morrissey's eligibility for a Combat Action Ribbon.

When Rep. Keating's office contacted the Navy, they discovered that Morrissey earned Eight Combat Battle Stars, including combat during D-Day and the invasions of Iwo Jima and Okinawa.

"Mr. Morrissey's service embodies the values of our greatest generation who heroically fought to protect our freedoms, then returned home to work, raise a family and build up this country," said Rep. Keating.

"We owe so much to these veterans, but few receive the recognition they deserve because they have never boasted about their service. They viewed it as a duty. I view it as a selfless sacrifice, and am honored to have been able to procure the Combat Action Ribbon for Mr. Morrissey. It is never too late to recognize the service of our dedicated veterans and members of our Armed Forces."

To honor Morrissey's service, Rep. Keating arranged for a formal presentation of the Combat Action Ribbon on the USS Constitution, which is the nearest active Navy ship in the area. Unfortunately, Rep. Keating was called to Washington early due to scheduling changes precipitated by the debt ceiling negotiations and could not personally award Morrissey with the Ribbon.

Koch: Refinancing Plan Will Save City Over $200,000

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday that the City successfully refinanced more than $3 million in 9-year-old borrowing at a lower interest rate that will trigger $263,000 in savings, including more than $100,000 in the current fiscal year.

"Our financing position is strong and our total debt very low compared to almost every other City of our size in Massachusetts: That helps to create an atmosphere where these kinds of savings can be realized," Koch said.

The refinanced municipal bonds, totaling $3.6 million and originally issued for capital projects in 2002, were resold on July 27 at a lower interest rate than they were originally issued. As part of the refinancing, the City maintained its AA3 credit rating, which is among the strongest positions.

"These are the kinds of opportunities we are constantly pursuing working together with our City Hall team and our outside advisors," said Director of Municipal Finance Mark Cavanagh.

The City's total debt budget for Fiscal Year 2012 is $12.9 million, about 5 percent of the City's total budget and the lowest debt per capita of any of the 10 largest cities in Massachusetts, officials said.

The City's long-term financing goals include keeping its debt levels at roughly the same percentage of the total budget, a number that is recommended by the City's financial advisors.

Mayor Koch said the recent financing packages for major capital improvements and the new Central Middle School fit into that plan in part because of other borrowing coming off the books and because of other revenue sources – such as sewer fee paid developers – that will be used to pay for infrastructure improvements.

"We have been tremendously cautious with borrowing since taking office, which has given us the opportunity to make necessary investments in our infrastructure while not subjecting our taxpayers to the risk of dramatic increases in our total debt," he said.

police, but strands of the case lead to Maine, Washington, D.C., and across the ocean to Evelin's native country of Azerbaijan.

The 23-year-old is described as a beautiful young woman with dark eyes and straight black hair worn to her mid-back. She is approximately five-feet-six inches tall, slender at 105 pounds, and fluent in seven languages including English, Russian, Chinese and her native Azerbaijan.

Evelin's last known address was in North Quincy on Hodges Avenue but that was a temporary home. Evelyn planned a move to Brighton where she'd signed a lease and deposited over $3,000 to hold a new unit starting Sept. 1.

MacIsaac said most of her belongings were already moved from Hodges Avenue when Evelin's boyfriend, Duncan Boyd of Maine, reported her missing on July 19.

"He'd talked to her and made plans with her," said MacIsaac, describing Boyd's fears when he could not reach her for several days.

When police checked, the apartment looked empty and there were no signs of criminal activity, according to MacIsaac. However, Evelin's passport, cell phone charger and laptop charger were left behind. MacIsaac said the team is currently examining Evelin's cell phone records.

"We're trying hard to find her. There are a lot of folks trying to help," Boyd said Monday night when contacted in Maine. Boyd said he and Evelin knew each other for several years before they became a couple and their friends in Maine, Martha's Vineyard and Boston are all anxious and concerned. They have opened a Facebook page to aid in the search.

Boyd said Evelin's parents in Azerbaijan are distraught, as he has been communicating with them by e-mail through the Azerbaijan Embassy in Washington, D.C.

"It's extremely difficult," Boyd said, describing the parents whose confusion and heartache is compounded by distance and the language barrier. Evelin has one younger brother.

A native of Azerbaijan, Evelin was previously married to an American and came to the United States about three years ago to pursue a career in business.

The Republic of Azerbaijan lies between Eastern Europe and Western Asia and is bordered by the Caspian Sea, Georgia, Armenia, Iran and Turkey.

for debt payments, a little more than one half of one percent of the City's roughly $240 million budget. The goal, Koch said, is a measured approach to borrowing that keeps debt levels to a total of 5 or 6 percent of total spending, a number recommended by the City's financial advisors.

Morrisette Post Attends 'Armed Forces Night' At Pawtucket Red Sox

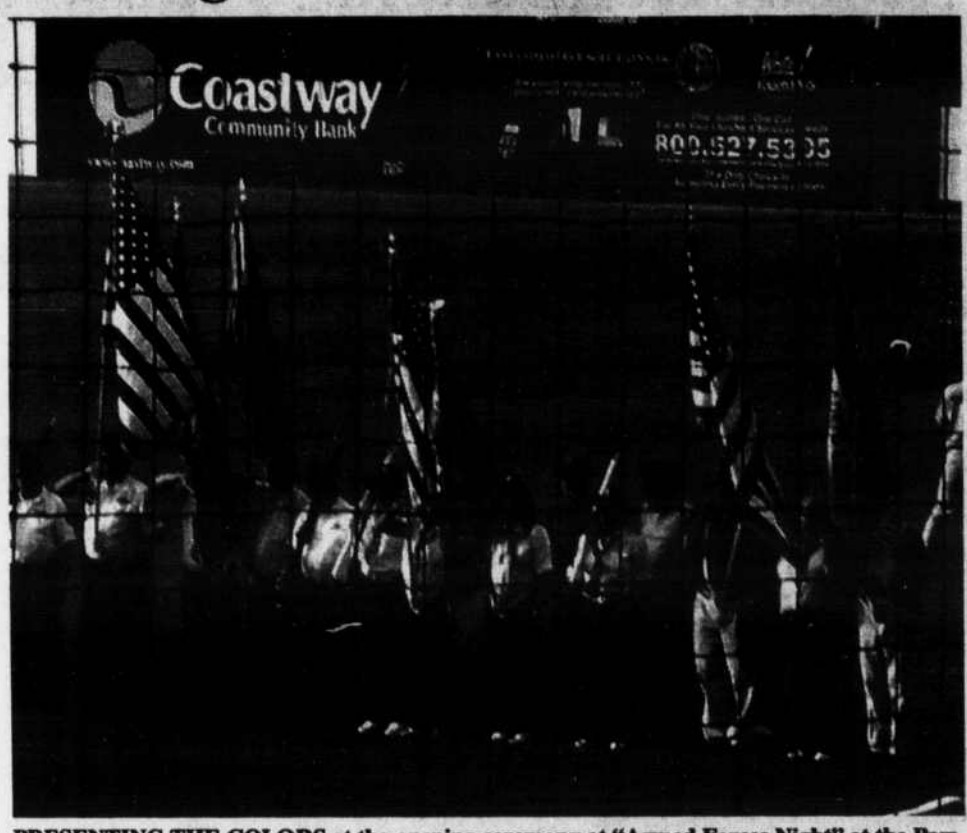

The Cyril P. Morrisette Post No. 294 of the American Legion, West Quincy, Massachusetts dispatched "an army" to help the Pawtucket Red Sox honor our men and women in uniform at their annual "Armed Forces Night" at McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, R.I.

The combined color guard of the Post and Sons of the American Legion, Squadron 294, together with the Morrisette Ladies Auxiliary color guard, was accompanied by color bearers from the William R. Caddy Detachment of the Marine Corps League from North Quincy.

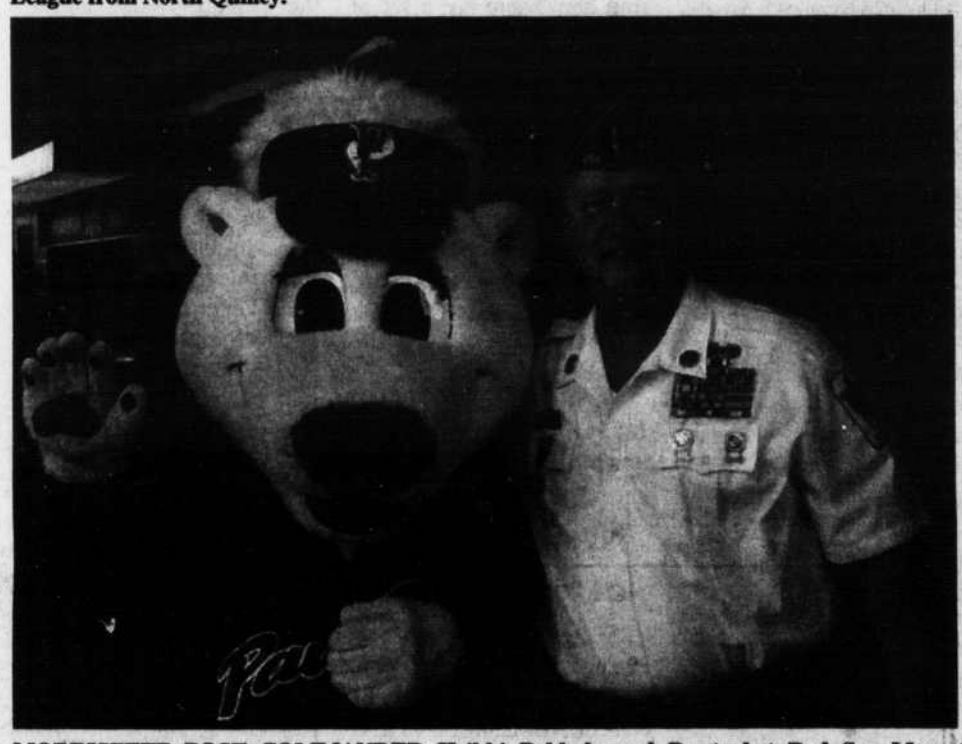

Combined, the Morrisette family and guests comprised the largest marching contingent on the field for the pregame ceremonies that also featured a 105mm Howitzer salute, a Rhode Island Air National Guard C-130 flyover, and greetings on the jumbotron from RI National Guard soldiers and airmen stationed in Afghanistan.

Capping off the evening's excitement, the Pawsox, clad in brand-new camouflage uniforms, rallied late in the game to overcome a 6-0 early deficit and defeat the Minnesota Twins affiliated Rochester Red Wings by a final score of 8-6.

Kudos to the Mondor family, the Pawtucket Red Sox, and Community Events Director Jeff Bradley for staging this event. Plans for next year's event are already in the works for an even more impressive presentation by Quincy's veterans and guests at this fantastic salute to America's service men and women.

Firefighter Levins To Be Honored With Liberty Mutual Mark Award

Officials of Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. chose to honor Quincy Firefighter Nicholas Levins this week with the 2011 Liberty Mutual Fire Mark Award due to his work at the July 9 fire at Faxon Park Apartments.

"He sustained injuries while working to supply water to the Falls Boulevard (location)," said Deputy Fire Chief Joseph Jackson who announced the award.

Deputy Chief Jackson said that Liberty Mutual officials planned this week's ceremony and presentation at Fire Department headquarters on Quincy Avenue.

Levins who joined the Quincy Fire Department in June, 2003, worked the water supply and hoses in the darkness on the rocky ledges behind the burning apartment building on July 9.

The water had to be forced through connections from the Walmart store location behind Faxon Park apartments. On one of those trips, Levins fell from a ten-foot cliff to the rocks and was subsequently hospitalized.

Despite those injuries, Deputy Chief Jackson said Levins returned to work within two weeks.

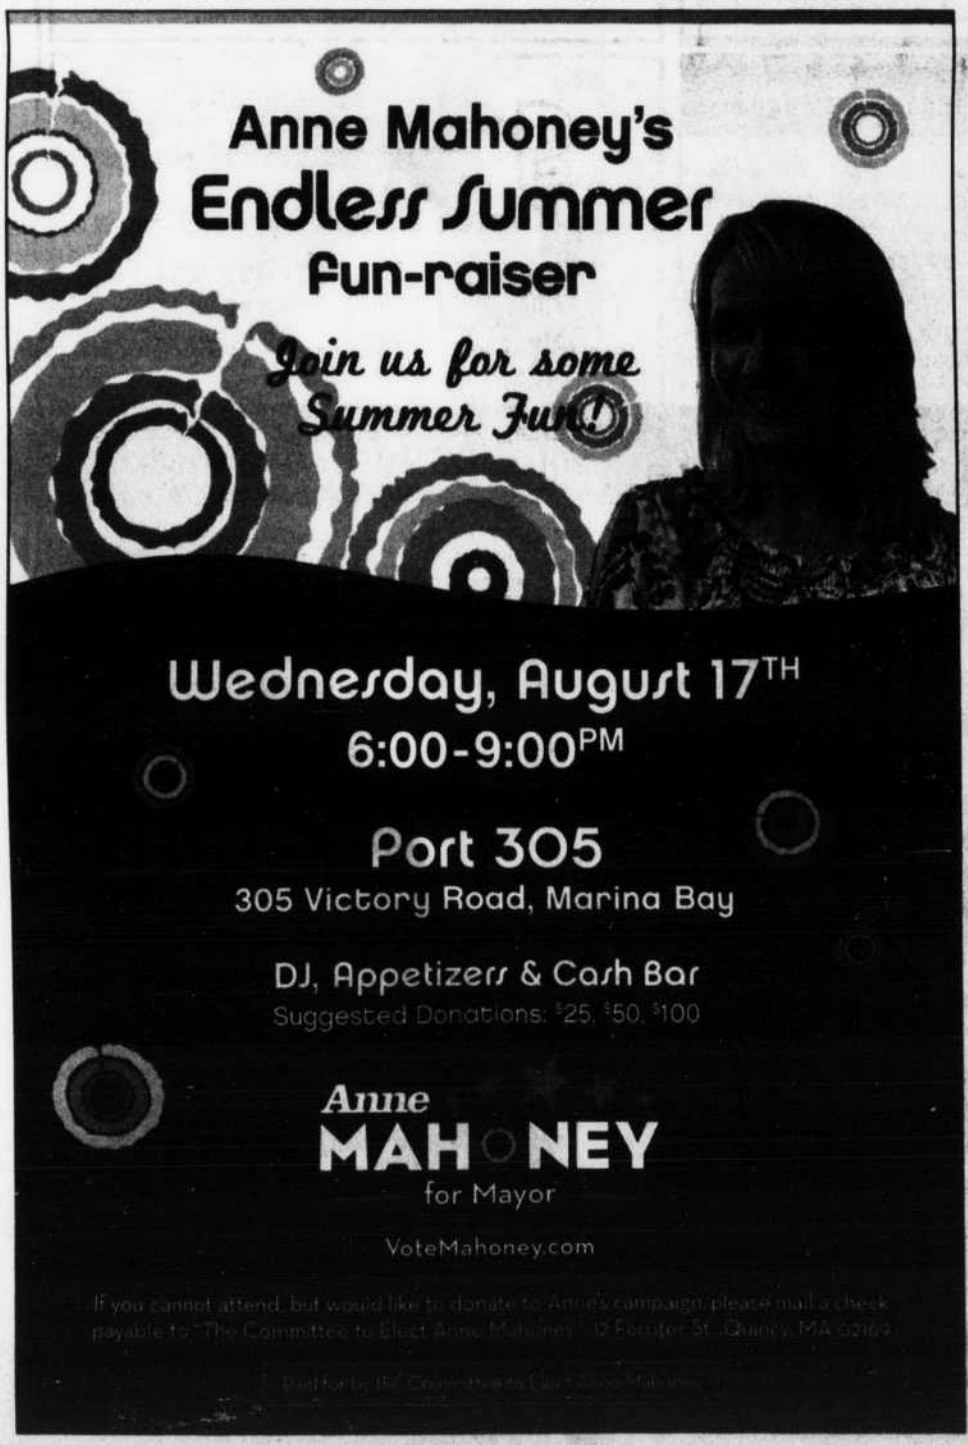

Sparks from a charcoal grill on a balcony caused the fire which destroyed an entire building in the Faxon park development. The fire caused $4 to $6 million damage, according to Terrence Burke, a spokesman for Riverstone Management Co.

The structure was one of seven apartment buildings at 500 Falls Blvd. The entire building which formerly housed 24 units, had to be demolished. The property owners, SPUSVS Faxon Park LLC of Texas, plan to rebuild on the site, according to Burke.

While the cause of the fire was never in doubt, the state's fire marshal is still reviewing information regarding fire prevention equipment at the complex.

A report is expected this month.

St. John's School Razed But Fond Memories For Many Remain

In the winter of 1984, St. John's pastor, Rev. Bill McCarthy, set up some cots for the homeless in conjunction with the Salvation Army and "Father Bill's Shelter" became a reality. The shelter moved to its present location on Broad Street in 1988.

"It's sad to see. It took people so long to build this," said Brona Coogan-Coyne, a parishioner who watched the cranes removing wood pilings Tuesday.

Also on hand at the site was Morgan O'Shea, a longtime parishioner and volunteer at St. John's Church. O'Shea graduated from St. John's as did his oldest daughter Ruth.

O'Shea recalled his schooldays at St. John's beginning in 1937 and, like several other alumni, had very special memories of Sr. Mary Anthony, his first grade teacher.

"We did have all nuns. They were great teachers," said former City Auditor Robert Foy, an alumni from the mid-1930's who was contacted at his home.

"It was an old building," said Foy. "I don't think, at the present time, they were getting anything out of it."

Other alumni were contacted and, repeatedly, cited Sr. Anthony, their first grade teacher, as one of their fondest memories.

Near the church, Eleanor and Brenda Villard recalled their days in the 1950's and 1960's at St. John's Elementary School and, also, brought up their very special teacher, again it was Sr. Anthony.

"She taught mother and my aunt in the 30's and 40's," said Eleanor Villard.

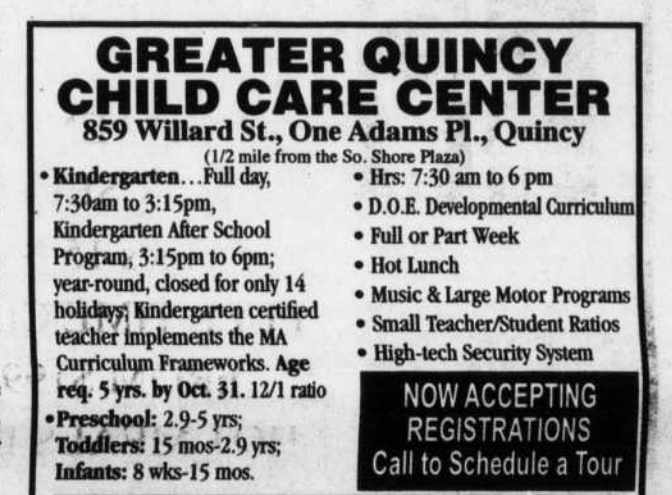

"She just ruled it," said Quincy Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen, who graduated from the school in the late 1960's. Hallsen said Sr. Anthony, her favorite nun, taught them so much and brought them into the church

As for any unruly boys, they soon learned proper behavior from Sr. Anthony who was really tiny, "a little peanut," according to Hallsen. At that time, nuns wore full black habits and head coverings.

"It's sad it's coming down," said Hallsen. "Last year's weather did a job on it."

Similarly, Coogan-Coyne said, "Nobody was interested in buying it. It's a sign of the times."

Actual demolition started several weeks ago and asbestos removal was underway in the previous month, according to Brian Beaulieu, an employee of the demolition company, Franklin Crane Demolition.

TWO CRANES WORKED in tandem this week at the site of the former St. John's Elementary School on Phipps Street. The century-old building is being demolished. There are no current plans for the property, according to Deacon Paul Lewis.

Beaulieu who expects that the demolition will be completed this week pointed to the separate piles of brick and wood. "Everything is recycled."

Sisters of Charity of Halifax are currently living in the yellow brick convent adjacent to the school. The convent was built in the 1960's.

Rev. Richard Cannon is pastor of St. John the Baptist Church which is located at 44 School St. and Deacon Paul Lewis is Business Manager.

Deacon Lewis said the building had deteriorated and become an extraordinary expense to the parish.

"We're not going to sell the property," said Deacon Lewis, adding, "We're trying to be as flexible as we can."

Mayor Koch Guest Speaker At St. Chrysostom's Job Club

Talking about jobs, jobs and jobs Mayor Tom Koch was the guest speaker at the Thursday morning Job Club hosted by St. Chrysostom's.

Job Club provides an important support network for job seekers as well as a connection to the Quincy Career Center that provides services and programs to job seekers.

"Our job club has grown significantly since we began over two months ago," said Evie Shore Job Club Coordinator. "Our job club is beginning to make a difference for those individuals that participate," said Shore.

Mayor Koch addressed both short and long term opportunities for employment with 35 job seekers.

"We are honored to host these weekly meetings at our church and consider this an important part of our ministry to serve the local community," said Rev. Eric Hillegas, Rector of St. Chrysostom Church.

Mayor Koch's long term job prospects focused on the $1.6 billion urban renewal of downtown Quincy that will create approximately 6,000 permanent jobs in retail and service industries. "We will encourage employers to work with the Quincy Career Center to meet their employment needs," said Mayor Koch. A recent example of how this works was the new Lowe's in Quincy that collaborated with Quincy Career Center Business Service Representative Laura Hoitt to fill 86 out of over 100 jobs in their new store.

"Making these connections between job seekers and employers is critical especially during these difficult times with our economy. We are grateful to Mayor Koch for the leadership he provides in bringing new jobs to our City as well as his ongoing administration of the Quincy Career Center," said Shore.

'Artists Must Paint From Life'

Tatiana Yanovskaya-Sink Wins Oil, Acrylic Category At Annual Arts Affair

By SCOTT JACKSON

"Artists must paint from life" was the message Tatiana Yanovskaya-Sink had after winning the oil and acrylic category at Saturday's 16th annual Arts Affair at Marina Bay.

Life, in this case, was her friend's 24-year-old daughter, who posed in her wedding dress for the artist's The Last Adjustment.

The Quincy Center resident and Ukraine native was one of the local artists honored at the event.

Other winners included Quincy's Valerie Mine in the sculpture category for Spirit of the Raven, Bill Beyer for his watercolor Boats Retiring, Alice Donaldson's Fishing Ropes for photography, Dan Meyers III of Quincy for his drawing Pan Comforting Psyche and Carol Chisholm's Lunar Waterfall won for mixed media.

Professional judges were brought in for each category, and then they all voted for the best in show. This year's top prize went to Catherine Caddigan for her acrylic Then There Were Three. Winners in each category received a cash prize.

Yanovskaya-Sink wasn't upset she didn't win best in show.

Speaking outside while painting a bouquet, she said she paints what she likes "and not for any other purpose, including money." She has an engineering degree from her homeland and worked an office job briefly after moving to the United States but she's always painted consistently.

WILLIAM BEYER'S water color painting "Boats Retiring" was a first-place winner at the 16th annual Arts Affair at Marina Bay. Beyer is a member of the Milton Art Museum.

She's attended the Arts Affair for the last five years, and in past years she painted portraits for attendees. She paints images she sees as opposed to painting from photographs because "photos lack temperature, you can't separate the warm colors from the cool ones." She painted her winning entry in a three-hour session with minor touchups the next day. Yanovskaya-Sink also entered Flowers and Pumpkins, a still life of the two, into the oil and acrylic category.

Nearly 200 pieces of art were on display at the event that spanned Saturday and Sunday. Artists from 17 local arts organizations were present. A silent action and a raffle were also held.

One of the event's attendees was Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch. After the awards ceremony Saturday he said having events like the Arts Affair "adds to the vitality and livability in the city and we're very lucky to have organizations that share their talents with the community." The mayor added he "painted when I was younger but nothing like the ones on display.

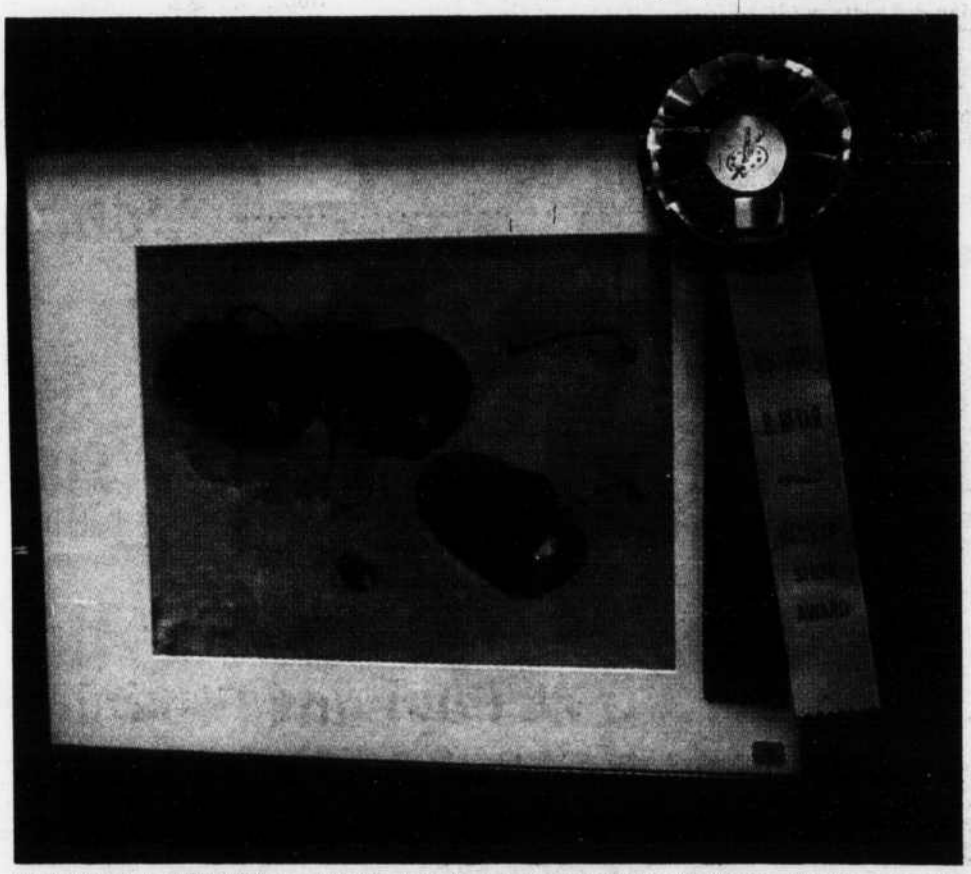

"Some day when I'm out of public life I'll get back into it," he went on to say, before quickly adding "but hopefully that isn't any time soon."

The Arts Affair Committee is chaired by Ellyn Moller, event chairman; and Dan Meyers, co-chairman. Committee members are Janice Beyer, William Beyer, Marylou Fishman, Donald Heath, Kris Kreitman, Linda Kreitman, Anet Paglierani, Elva Proctor, Marilyn Reisberg, Donna Teed and Rita Walsh.

TATIANA YANOVSKAYA-SINK, a member of the Quincy Art Association, won first prize at the 16th annual Arts Affair at Marina Bay for her painting entitled "The Last Adjustment."

WILLIAM E. BEYER Award for Best in Show was awarded to Catherine Caddigan for the acrylic "Then There Were Three." Caddigan is a member of the Independent South Shore Artists' Circle.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, July 30, at approximately 10 p.m., Officer Paul Holland was dispatched to the area of Ingram and Sea Street for a report of suspicious activity, possibly a theft.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, the officer interviewed the caller, who stated that she was walking her dog on Sea Street when she encountered a male dragging a coverless trash barrel with copper piping in it. She stated that she believed that the suspect removed copper from a house because he dragged the barrel up the boardwalk to the dike away from the houses.

The caller said she engaged the suspect in conversation and learned that the suspect works in demolition and told her that if she needed work done, to call him. She asked him how to get in touch with him and he gave her his address. The caller said she then said goodbye, walked the opposite direction as the suspect disappeared on the dike. As the caller was walking, she again saw the suspect, who was now waiting at the bus stop at Sea Street near Ingram Street. She saw the suspect get on the 216 MBTA bus towards Quincy Center. The caller then contacted Officer Rich Gibbons, who is familiar with the area and its residents, and they determined the name of the suspect.

Officers were dispatched to locate the suspect on the bus but he was not found. Officer Holland showed the caller a Registry of Motor Vehicles photo of the suspect from his cruiser laptop, and she positively identified it as the male she encountered on Sea Street.

Recently, the city has seen a rash of B&E's where copper has been stolen from homes, so Officer Holland walked the area where the suspect was seen. He came across a house for sale, with several lights on, and no cars in the driveway. Although the doors were locked, the officer observed a bulkhead door, with a light coming from it. This door had been destroyed to gain access into the basement's crawl space, where most of the copper had been removed from the home.

Officer Holland contacted the caller to meet him at the address, where she confirmed that the barrel that the suspect had matched the barrels remaining in the driveway.

Officer Dave Zupkofska joined Officer Holland in searching the area for the barrel or the copper, but could not find it. During this time, Officers Lauren Lambert, and Barry DeFranco went to the suspect's last known address on Centre Street. When the suspect opened the door, the officers observed that the suspect was in his underwear, so they told him to get dressed. The suspect put on a shirt and shorts that matched the clothing description given of the suspect carrying away the barrel.

When told why he was being arrested, the suspect said he was not in Houghs Neck and was home all night. The suspect, a 28 year-old Quincy resident, was charged with, "Breaking and Entering in the Night for a Felony, Larceny over $250 and Wanton Destruction of Property."

The suspect's clothing was seized as evidence and submitted along with a disk of photos of the damage to the home.

Nice Work!

ANOTHER "COPPER" CAPER: On Thursday, July 21, at approximately 2:25 p.m., Officer Paul Holland was dispatched to Common Street for a report of a party removing copper from the house. Upon arrival, the Officer spotted a male suspect exiting the garage on the lower level of the home, carrying several pieces of metal and placing them in the rear of a vehicle. Officer Holland questioned the suspect, who said that he is a contractor who did some work on the home, but the owner stopped paying due to foreclosure.

The suspect said he dropped by to pick up his tools and supplies from inside the home.

Officer Holland observed used copper and other metals to be in the suspect's vehicle. The suspect said he took the metals because they belonged to him. The suspect could not provide the Officer with the name of the owner who employed him. At this time, Officer Mark Millane arrived on scene. A search of the home showed many of the metal fixtures and copper piping had been removed. This was consistent with the objects observed in the suspect's vehicle. Many walls had been destroyed in order to remove copper piping. After a check with the owner of the property, it was determined that the owner did not know the suspect and that the suspect had no reason to be there. The suspect, a 23 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Breaking and Entering in the Daytime for a Felony, Larceny over $250 and Malicious Destruction of Property over $250." The items were removed from his vehicle and returned to the garage.

Nice Work again!

SUN SPORTS

3-0 Record at E. Regional; First Team In 21 Years To Record Consecutive Shutouts At Tournament

QYB Senior League Team Is Two Wins Away From A Regional Title

By SEAN BRENNAN

Move over Bruce Springsteen. Take a seat Pauly D, Snooki and The Situation.

The New Jersey spotlight belongs now to Quincy. More specifically the Garden State belongs to nineteen 15-16-year-old ballplayers representing Quincy Youth Baseball's Senior League who as of press time Tuesday were just two victories away from winning the 2011 Senior League Baseball Eastern Regional championship and the prize that comes with that: An all-expense paid trip to the Senior League World Series in Bangor, Maine starting on Aug. 14.

The New Jersey journey is not yet finished but if early results are any indication, Quincy may very well become the first Massachusetts entrant to win a Regional crown since 1991. Through three games at Union Field in West Deptford, Quincy is sitting at 3-0 overall. Quincy shutout Stony Point, New York, 6-0, last Friday in the series opener and followed that victory up with a 10-0 mercy-rule blanking of Waldo County, Maine on Saturday to become the first Senior League team to record back-to-back shutouts in the 21 years this tournament has been held in West Deptford.

The Massachusetts champion remained unbeaten following an 8-3 triumph over Felton-Harrington, Delaware on Sunday night to punch a spot in the winner's bracket of the double-elimination tournament. On Tuesday night Quincy was scheduled to play Talbot, Maryland. The winner of this game would need to win one more game to claim the championship; the loser will need to regroup and win three straight games to claim the top spot.

No matter how the rest of the Eastern Regional plays out Quincy has made its presence known with authority, which is exactly what Manager Mark Jaehnig had hoped for after Quincy qualified for the Regional following a state title win over Gloucester late last week.

"We are playing some great baseball," Jaehnig said in a phone interview Monday with the Sun. "We are assured of making it to the final three (teams) and we are now just two wins away from jumping on a plane and heading to Bangor, Maine to play in the World Series."

"There is no question that this team's experience playing in this tournament two years ago has helped," he continued reflecting on his team's trip to the Junior League World Series in 2009 when ten of the current players on the roster played on the big stage in a Regional tournament. "It is also obvious that playing together on the Redstockings (an AAU travel team) since most of them were ten has been invaluable. They all know each other so well because most of them have played hundreds of games together."

Despite steamrolling the first three challengers by a combined score of 24-3, Jaehnig is not looking too far ahead. Tuesday's opponent in Talbot, Maryland is loaded with players who are quick and fast. Quincy will be up against it against Talbot but with a pitching staff that is lined up perfectly for the home stretch the stars seem to be aligned for another victory.

"The rules of Little League (if a starter throws 60+ pitches he cannot pitch for three days) shouldn't hurt us pitching-wise," Jaehnig stated. "Our top-three starters (Tom McDonald, Dan Cobban and Tom Garland) are good to go because we have been able to limit their pitch counts thanks to having such big leads and because we have had guys come in and throw some innings for us late in games. McDonald is ready to pitch on Tuesday."

With a staff that is set up to continue to be lights out, Quincy's offense should continue to pound opposing pitchers into the dirt. Led by Garland (5-for-10, seven runs), Patrick Verhault (6-for-7), Josh Hayward (two hits) and Andrew Jaehnig (5-for-8, two doubles, HR, seven RBI), Quincy has been relentless in the batter's box.

Championships are won with great pitching. But having a murder's row-type offense doesn't hurt the cause.

"Garland, Verhault and Jaehnig have been playing great," said Jaehnig whose son is Andrew. "We have taken advantage of mistakes and we hope to keep it going offensively."

"Things couldn't be better," he continued. "Today (Monday) is an off-day so right now some of the kids are at Six Flags and some of them are at the Jersey Shore enjoying the beach. We are due back at 8 p.m. to practice under the lights. I can't say enough about the hospitality of the folks running this tournament. We just have to keep it going."

Quincy vs. Stony Point (NY)

The boys from Quincy jumped out to an early 5-0 lead and then relied on its defense to earn an opening round win over Stony Point, 6-0.

Quincy took advantage of some sloppy play from Stony Point to jump out big early. The locals scored twice in the first inning thanks to an error and a misplayed line drive that turned into a double off the bat of Andrew Jaehnig; Jaehnig's hit plated the first run and he later came around to score on a sacrifice fly by Mike Gallotto.

Pat Verhault's RBI double highlighted a three-run second inning. Tom Garland finished the game 2-for-4 with three runs scored.

Madison Barnwell earned the win on the mound throwing 2-2/3 innings in relief of McDonald. In the sixth inning, Barnwell got out of a bases loaded jam by inducing a 4-6-3 double play.

Quincy vs. Waldo County (ME)

Quincy became the first team in 21 years of Regional play at West Deptford to record consecutive shutouts as it blanked Waldo County, 10-0, in five innings.

Dan Cobban and Andrew Currie combined on the two-hit shutout as Quincy advanced to a winner's bracket game on Sunday. Cobban struck out five and walked one in 3-1/2 innings of work, while Currie worked the final 1-2/3 to earn the victory.

Quincy struck first (and often), putting up four runs in the second inning. Verhault and Jason Pekkinen finished with two hits and Quincy walked ten times.

Quincy vs. Felton-Harrington (DE)

Andrew Jaehnig set the tone with a two-run home run in the first inning and Quincy's pitchers did the rest once again as the team remained unbeaten with a 8-3 win over Felton-Harrington.

Tom Garland worked the first four innings, allowing one hit, and Currie earned his second victory with three innings of relief.

Jaehnig and Verhault each had three hits with Verhault, a North Quincy product, slugging a two-run double as part of a four-run fourth that gave Quincy a commanding 7-0 lead.

Quincy Faced Elimination Game Tuesday; Opening Game Was A Two-Day Affair

QYB Junior League Still Alive At Eastern Regional

By SEAN BRENNAN

Quincy Youth Baseball's Junior League representatives – ages 13-14 – are having a ball and playing great baseball down in Freehold, New Jersey at the 2011 Junior League Eastern Regional Tournament.

As of press time Tuesday, Quincy was sitting with a 1-1 record in the double-elimination format. Manager Rick Beach's squad was set to play an elimination game at 1 p.m. on Tuesday versus Stony Point, New York. The winner of that game moved on in the loser's bracket while the losing team collected its gear and headed home.

Quincy needed four straight victories to claim its spot in the 2011 Junior League World Series being held in Taylor, Michigan beginning later this week.

Having earned its position in the Eastern Regional following a 2-0 series win over East Boston in the Massachusetts state finals, Quincy left for New Jersey late last week. As one of the top seeded teams in the tournament Quincy was given a bye in the first round meaning the team did not step onto the field at Michael J. Tighe Park to play a competitive game until late Sunday night versus North Wall, New Jersey.

And when that opening game eventually started (9 p.m. due to a two-hour rain delay) it turned into a two-day affair, which in the end resulted in a 10-inning 8-7 victory for Quincy. According to Beach, the game got underway a little after 9 p.m. with Aaron Clancy (six innings) toeing the rubber. The game went back-and-forth until, in the eighth inning tied at 5-5, officials informed both teams that they had reached the midnight deadline and the game would have to be continued early Monday morning.

When play resumed at 9 a.m. Monday, Quincy, behind the pitching of Sean Holleran, escaped with an 8-7 win.

"The kids are having a ball down here," said Beach in a phone interview with the Sun on Tuesday morning. "Having that bye meant that we didn't play our first game until late Sunday night. So having that bye was not that great but the kids did get to enjoy themselves at the beach over the weekend.

TEAM MEMBERS OF QUINCY YOUTH BASEBALL'S 15-16-Year-Old Senior League team and its 13-14-Year-Old Junior League team get together at Adams Field last Wednesday evening for a celebratory sendoff before both teams made the trip to New Jersey to represent the city in their respective Eastern Regional tournaments. Quincy Sun photos/Lisa Aimola

"When we did get started (late Sunday) we ended up playing until midnight and then we had to come back early Monday to finish it off. I think that 10-inning game hurt us in our second game on Monday."

After dispatching New Jersey, Quincy almost immediately had to play a tough Brandywine, Delaware team at 4 p.m. The result was a 7-2 defeat that placed Quincy one loss away from elimination and four wins away from capturing the title.

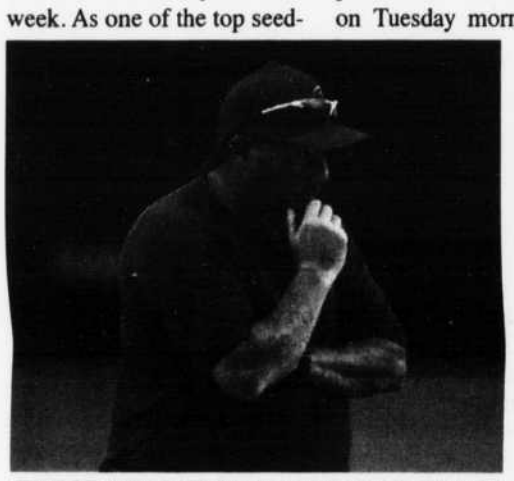

The lack of rest and quick turnaround were factors not in Quincy's favor.

"The kids were exhausted," added Beach. "Sunday night we didn't get to bed until 1:30 a.m. and then we had to be at the field at 8 a.m. to finish Sunday's game. Then we had to play again right away but now we get to play every day instead of waiting around like we did all weekend."

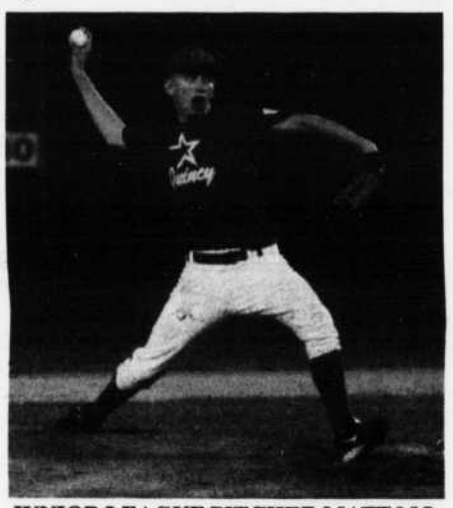

"But the kids are having fun playing against some good competition," Beach continued. "I am proud of these guys and that is what it really is all about."

Eastern Regional Notes: State representatives include Quincy (MA), Burlington (CT), Brandywine (DE), Bangor East/West (ME), Davidsonville (MD), North Wall (NJ), Freehold (NJ), Stony Point (NY), Perkasie (PA), and Johnston (RI)... Freehold, NJ is the defending Eastern Regional champion... The last Massachusetts' team to win the Eastern Regional was Canton back in 2008.

Wollaston Black Eliminated From S.S. League Playoffs

After a successful 15-7-1 season Wollaston Black (Morrisette Senior Babe Ruth) was eliminated from South Shore League postseason play in the semifinal best-of-three round by South Boston, two-games-to-one.

In Game One of the semifinals, Wollaston led off getting its only run on a Josue Ordonez double and a single by John O'Callaghan. South Boston then mounted a ten-hit attack to win 10-1.

Game Two saw Shaun Conner start off slow in the opening frame giving up three hits, walking one and hitting a batter to give South Boston a 3-0 lead. Wollaston stormed back with four runs in the bottom of the first with Billy Campbell, Ryan O'Connell, Ordonez, O'Callaghan, Alex Heffernan and Conner all getting hits to take a 4-3 lead.

Wollaston broke the game open in the bottom of the third with Dennis Toparov (two hits), Kevin Mullin, Campbell, O'Connell, Ordonez (two hits), Heffernan (two hits) and Tim Martin all collecting hits to give Wollaston a 9-3 lead; Wollaston held on to win Game Two and even the series with a 12-8 victory.

The decisive Game Three started out with South Boston jumping out to a 4-2 lead. Wollaston's first two runs came via a double by Connor (three hits), a single by Mullin, a walk to Ordonez and a double by Eddie McDonough. Trailing 4-2 entering the fifth inning, Keenan Daniels led-off with a single and O'Connell, Ordonez and O'Callaghan all walked allowing Daniels to score. Eddie McDonough then blasted a mammoth grand slam to give Wollaston a 7-4 lead.

South Boston answered right back scoring three runs to tie the game at 7-7. South Boston took an 8-7 lead with a single run in the last of the sixth inning.

Wollaston led off the seventh with hits from Ordonez and O'Callaghan before McDonough walked. At this point heavy rain delayed the conclusion of the Game Three – it was picked up at the same point the next day. With the bases loaded and no outs, Wollaston could only muster up one run as Conner smacked a RBI base hit to tie the game at 8-8.

South Boston led off the bottom of the seventh with a double and scored the winning run on a sacrifice flyout.

Against Braintree in the quarterfinal round, Ordonez pitched a complete-game, two-hit shutout for a 2-0 win in Game One. Ordonez finished with eight strikeouts and a walk. With the game tied in the fourth inning McDonough led off with a single, Conner walked and Heffernan, Daniels and O'Callaghan connected on base hits scoring the only two runs of the game.

HeffernanandO'Callaghan made defensive gems to help seal the victory for Wollaston.

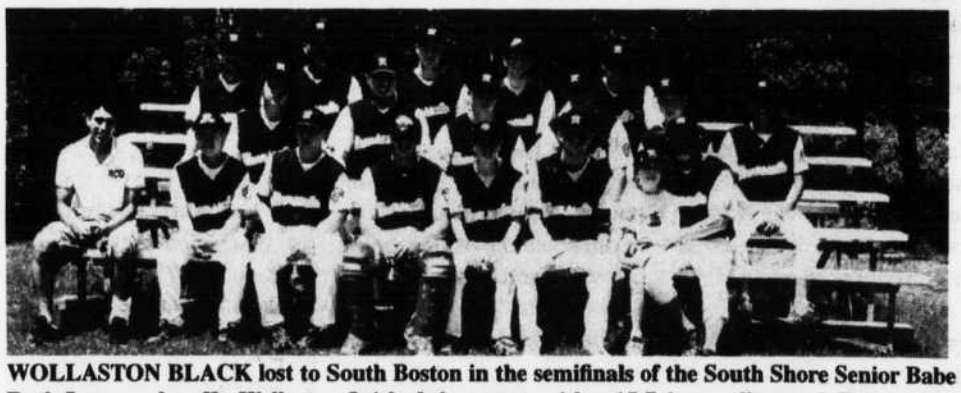

In Game Two, led by the starting pitching of Conner and a 16-hit attack, Wollaston defeated Braintree 16-5.

Wollaston spotted Braintree a 4-0 lead in the third as Conner walked three but he settled down after that and struck out six batters during the final four innings. Conner's teammates picked him up with four runs in the fourth as Toparov, Ordonez, Campbell and Heffernan all singled in a run and Tim Martin tripled. Wollaston broke the game open in the fifth and sixth innings scoring 12 runs total.

The hitting attack was led by O'Callaghan (four hits), Heffernan (three hits), Ordonez (two hits), Tim Martin (two hits), Conner (two hits), Ben Martin (hit), McDonough (hit) and Joe Barton (hit).

Wollaston Black would like to extend a special thanks to the players and parents for a great season. A thanks also goes out to the Quincy Park Department for all their help and to batboy Nicholas Keane for a job well done.

Get well's go out to starters Scott Knight (third base) and Dennis Sullivan (second base) who were lost midway through the season due to injuries.

WOLLASTON BLACK lost to South Boston in the semifinals of the South Shore Senior Babe Ruth League playoffs. Wollaston finished the season with a 15-7-1 overall record. Team members included Josue Ordonez, Eddie McDonough, Shaun Conner, Alex Heffernan, Keenan Daniels, John O'Callaghan, Dennis Toparov, Billy Campbell, Tim Martin, Ben Martin, Joe Barton, Ryan O'Connell, Kevin Mullin, Scott Knight and Dennis Sullivan. Manager Stephen Reardon coached Wollaston Black. Photo courtesy of Wollaston Black

Keep It Moving: Healthy Summer Travel Tips

(NAPSA)-Napoleon is believed to have said "An army travels on its stomach." When you travel, however, your stomach may slow you down if you don't look out for it. Here are tips that can help digestion while traveling from health and diet expert Tara Gidus MS, RD, LD/N:

• If you'll be sitting for awhile in a car or airplane, take a break whenever you can. Getting up and moving your legs can help keep your digestive system moving, too.

• Plan ahead and pack healthful snacks to add fiber to your diet while traveling.

• Stay hydrated. Make sure to drink plenty of water and don't wait until you're thirsty to reach for some. Thirst suggests you're already partially dehydrated. On a plane, don't be afraid to ask for more water!

• Try not to stray too far from your normal diet. Fattening, rich or exotic cuisine can cause constipation.

• Get plenty of rest. Lack of sleep and a poor diet can increase your chances of getting sick.

• Make sure to include some exercise and "active"ities in your itinerary. Go for a daily sunrise run, swim laps in the hotel pool or sign up for a local dance class.

• Dress comfortably. Tight clothes can make you feel bloated and who needs that on a vacation!

• Consider taking a probiotic supplement. To maintain digestive health, you need to maintain a healthy balance in your colon. Travel can put stress on our bodies from a change in diet, altitude and time zones.

Probiotics are live microorganisms that are similar to the good bacteria already inside the body. When taken daily, probiotics support a healthy immune system and overall digestive health, helping defend against occasional constipation, diarrhea, gas and bloating, which can be a real bummer when traveling or on vacation.

While many probiotic supplements only have one strain of good bacteria, Phillips' Colon Health is specifically formulated with three strains of the most clinically studied probiotic bacteria that works to help balance your colon. Furthermore, this daily supplement doesn't need refrigeration, making it easy to take daily, even when traveling. Throw it in your bag and enjoy your vacation!

Take Time Each Day To Manage Diabetes And Free Up More Time To Live Your Life

(NAPSA) – Nearly 26 million Americans have diabetes, and each year, approximately 2 million more are diagnosed. It's not uncommon for people new to diabetes to feel confused, overwhelmed or fearful about how to manage and live with this chronic condition, but with the right support from a trusted health care team, which includes a certified diabetes educator, people can learn strategies for controlling their diabetes so that it doesn't take over their lives.

Diane Kress, a certified diabetes educator, author of "The Metabolism Miracle" and the upcoming "The Diabetes Miracle," and someone who herself has diabetes, provides various tips to her patients, including a concept called "DTime(tm)." DTime is a time she recommends people set aside each day to focus on their diabetes. It's when they test their blood sugar, log their results and plan for healthy eating and exercise. "DTime helps patients focus on the important things they need to do each day to manage their diabetes, and, as a result, it frees up time so they can live their lives," says Kress.

To help patients make the most of their DTime, a free five-video series has been created that simulates a one-on-one, on-demand coaching session with a certified diabetes educator. Thanks to interactive digital capabilities, viewers of these DTime videos have the ability to customize their sessions based on their interested topics and personalize their learning journey. Tips from Kress in these videos include:

• Regular blood sugar testing. Testing is a key to gaining control of diabetes. Regular testing reveals whether blood sugar levels are within a normal range and provides physicians the data necessary to make appropriate decisions about treatment. It also keeps patients "honest," since blood sugar levels are impacted by food choices, medication and exercise. "Not testing isn't an option," says Kress, "because when it comes to blood sugar control and our long-term health, what we don't know can hurt us!"

• Food. Having diabetes doesn't have to prevent you from enjoying a variety of delicious foods, as long as you make smart food choices. In the DTime series, Kress takes viewers to a supermarket to shop along various grocery aisles to educate about healthy food choices, and she gives tips on how to incorporate the occasional indulgence in a healthy diet for diabetes patients.

Kress also notes that understanding appropriate serving sizes can help. She says it helps to visually draw lines on our plate and eat only as much as fills each section. She suggests dividing the plate into three sections-with the left section as half the plate and the right side divided into two smaller halves. Nonstarchy vegetables, such as broccoli or carrots, can fill the entire left side. Whole grains, such as pasta, brown rice or sweet potatoes, can take up one-half on the right, while the remaining half can hold heart-healthy lean meat, fish, poultry or meat substitute. Understanding appropriate serving sizes makes it easier to put together healthy meals at home and when dining out.

• Exercise. Staying active is important in maintaining good blood sugar control. Before beginning, Kress recommends taking a few minutes to prepare and make sure you have all the tools you need-such as a blood glucose meter, drink and a snack. Any activity will work, as long as it's enjoyable and fits into a daily schedule. Kress suggests trying to find something enjoyable that you can do for 30 minutes every day.

Broken Heart Not Just Figure of Speech

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Last December, my husband called the paramedics when I did not respond to him. They rushed me to the hospital when I began convulsing. I have no recollection of any of this. When I woke one week later, I was in the ICU. I was told that I had broken-heart syndrome. I also was told it has to do with blood pressure. Can you confirm that there is such a thing? – A.

ANSWER: Broken-heart syndrome is for real. It's a recent addition to the catalog of illnesses. Japanese doctors first described it, and called it Takotsubo cardiomyopathy. Cardiomyopathy is a heart illness that affects the heart muscle, not the heart arteries or heart valves.

The classical case is one where a person develops severe chest discomfort preceded by physical or emotional stress. The emotional stress could be the unexpected death of a loved one. An EKG shows a pattern that replicates the pattern of a heart attack. The heart's function is greatly compromised. It doesn't pump blood like it should, and that can lower blood pressure. Seizures are not included in the list of symptoms. However, a drop in blood pressure also drops the flow of blood to the brain. That can trigger seizures.

The explanation for this is a surge in the body's stress chemicals that affect heart function. Damage to the heart muscle isn't permanent. The heart returns to good health in a matter of weeks.

You didn't mention any prior stress. Do you recollect any?

On the plus side, your heart arteries are in good shape, and you ought not to suffer a recurrence.

The booklet on congestive heart failure does not address broken-heart syndrome specifically, but it does detail a more common condition, its treatment and its prognosis. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue – No. 103W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$5 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have weak kidneys due to type 1 diabetes. My doctor has me eating three fruits a day and four vegetables. He limited my meat to 6 ounces daily. Does this limitation of meat benefit my kidneys? – E.L.

ANSWER: Many times, when the kidneys aren't working up to par (weak kidneys), doctors put their patients on a reduced-protein diet. It slows the decline of kidney function. That's why your doctor limited your meat (protein) intake.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Is distilled water bad for drinking? Can you chew too much gum? My husband chews about four pieces every day. – P.M.

ANSWER: Distilling water involves boiling water and condensing the water vapor by cooling it. Components dissolved in the water are left behind. You can drink distilled water. You will miss out on the minerals contained in most water and on fluoride added to city water, but you can get these elements in other ways.

If you chew too much sugar-containing gum, you promote cavities. Too much sugarless gum can cause diarrhea. Four sticks are not too much.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

SWEET!

Those concerned about both their overall health and oral health should take note of the benefits of the naturally occurring sugar substitute known as "xylitol." First discovered in the late 19th century, and popularized as a safe sweetener for diabetics that would not impact insulin levels, xylitol was later found to have significant dental benefits as well. Their substance, which is found in a variety of fruits and vegetables, is just about as sweet as sucrose (ordinary sugar) but has fewer calories and no aftertaste. More importantly, xylitol prevents decay-causing bacteria from sticking to teeth, thereby reducing plaque formation. Research also shows that xylitol helps repair damaged enamel by stimulating saliva production. Look for xylitol in sugarless gum.

It has long been known that good nutrition and a well-balanced diet is one of the best defenses for oral health. We provide quality dental care in a warm and caring environment to all family members. Call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. Your oral health requirements, from restorative to cosmetic considerations, will be met with the latest available technology by our caring staff. Our office is located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. If you can't conveniently brush your teeth after a meal, rinse your mouth and pop in a piece of gum or mint containing xylitol.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

by Dr. Gabrielle Freedman
Chiropractor

TREATMENT THAT MAY LEAVE YOU HANGING

On the face of it, it may seem like a good idea to use a treatment known as "inversion therapy" to treat back pain. After all, lying on an incline with the head below the feet is a form of traction therapy that stretches the spine in an effort to theoretically increase the space between vertebrae and reduce pressure on intervertebral discs. However, there is little evidence to support the idea that traction's supposed benefits are anything but short-lived. There may even be reason to believe that this form of traction may actually make matters worse. It may be better to place oneself in the hands of a chiropractor, who can realign and loosen spinal joints with precise adjustments.

A continuing schedule of regular chiropractic checkups can help detect, correct, and maintain optimum spinal and nervous system function. Call the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC at 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We can provide you with a care program designed for your age, condition, and lifestyle. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Lying inverted in a traction device can drive up blood pressure to potentially dangerous levels.

There is an old Arab proverb which states, "A secret is your slave if you keep it; your master if you lose it."

Benjamin Franklin once quipped about the art of keeping a secret: "Three may keep a secret, if two of them are dead!" This apt piece of wisdom reflects a simple, logical truism. When you discreetly whisper a 'tidbit' into another one's ear, you violate your own injunction.

The discreet individual may do many things, but, above all, he keeps a secret well, because he knows that a trust once violated is never again regained. Such discretion means many things . . . prudence, tact, restraint and moderation. Certainly it is an art – one of the most important arts we can possess – of knowing how to retain a confidence and how to handle privileged information. Many friendships have been ruined by a loose tongue.

All of us are privy to secrets – about ourselves, about others and about special situations. Sometimes they can be a heavy burden. Sometimes they can force an agonizing choice: to speak out or remain silent. It's simply a matter of thinking about and caring for the needs and trusts of someone else.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You sometimes go to extremes to prove a point. But this time, you won't have to. Supporters are ready, falling over themselves to help you make your case.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Venus might be your ruling planet, but Mars is in the picture as well. So don't be surprised if your romantic relationships are a bit rocky at this time. But they'll soon smooth over.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Geminis might rush into romance and risk being wrong about someone rather than be left with no one. But this is one time when it's wiser to be wary of where your heart takes you.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) With all (or most) of those pesky problems behind you, take time for your family and friends. Travel aspects are favored, with long-distance journeys high on the list.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You might have started to question the wisdom of being open with someone you hoped you could trust. But be assured you won't be disappointed. You'll soon hear good news.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You have a reputation for honesty and integrity, and that will help turn around a situation that was not only disappointing but also quite unfair. Good luck.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A happy event creates a closer tie with a family member who seemed hopelessly estranged. Positive aspects also dominate in important career matters.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your ruling planet, Pluto, helps you adjust to change. So, stop putting off that long-delayed move, and make it with the assurance that you're doing the right thing.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) You have a wonderful capacity to learn quickly and well. This will help you when you are faced with an opportunity to move on to a new path in life.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Good news: You suddenly find that you're not facing that new challenge alone. You now have someone at your side, ready to offer whatever support you might need.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Your versatility -- which is just one of those aspects of yourself that make you so special -- helps you adapt to the challenges of a new and exciting opportunity.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Your sensitive nature picks up on the needs of others. But what about your desires? You need to take more time to assess what your goals are and, if necessary, redirect them.

BORN THIS WEEK: You give your trust openly and easily. People find you easy to be with and enjoy your wit, your good sense, and your capacity to love and be loved.

Nursed Back To Health At N.E. Aquarium's Animal Care Center In Quincy

10 Endangered Sea Turtles Released Off Of Cape Cod

By TONY LaCASSE

Late Friday evening on a lobster boat in Nantucket Sound off Harwichport on Cape Cod, 10 rescued sea turtles that had spent more than eight months in rehabilitation were gently released back into the calm waters of the Atlantic.

With the sun setting on the western horizon and a full moon simultaneously rising in the east during the evening twilight, marine animal rescue staff from Boston's New England Aquarium felt that all was right with the world as they cheerily placed the sea turtles into the lapping waves off the low open back of the fishing boat.

This life-affirming scene had been a long time in coming. Connie Merigo, Kerry McNally and Katie Pugliares, New England Aquarium marine biologists, were filled with joy and relief. They had

State Sen. John Keenan will hold his monthly office hours in Quincy Friday, Aug. 19 from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Kennedy Senior Center, 440 East Squantum St., North Quincy.

Quincy Receives 16th Best Commonwealth Capital Score In State

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has awarded the City of Quincy with a Commonwealth Capital Score of 104 – the 16th best score in the State out of 352 cities and towns, announce Mayor Thomas Koch and Planning Director Dennis Harrington.

"I am extremely grateful to the Planning Department for putting this application together for the City", said Koch, "and I am proud of all of the folks in the Parks Department, Public Works, and Water and Sewer Department for their efforts implementing new policies and best practices that make Quincy a great place to live and work."

The Commonwealth Capital Policy, initiated in 2004, coordinates state capital spending programs in order to invest in projects that are consistent with Administration policy and the Commonwealth's Sustainable Development Principles and to partner with municipalities seeking to advance shared conservation and development interests.

Commonwealth Capital explicitly endorses planning and zoning measures, as well as specific actions and investments, which can provide clean energy and produce more livable communities. It also encourages local implementation by linking state spending programs to municipal practices.

Municipal smart growth/smart energy consistency is assessed through a Commonwealth Capital application that examines municipal implementation of 32 land use planning and regulatory practices. Resulting scores are part of the proposal evaluation process for each grant or loan program. The maximum score a community can receive is 140 points, including bonus points. The Commonwealth Capital score will account for 30% of the possible application points for any of the Commonwealth Capital programs. The other 70% of points are those related to the purpose of the particular program and are used to evaluate the merits of a proposed project against the housing, environmental, transportation, or other goals of that program.

"The Planning Department has submitted the Commonwealth Capital Application each year in which the City was required to do so," Harrington said.

"Fourteen competitive grant programs now count the Commonwealth Capital Score towards thirty percent of the total application. Quincy is in direct competition with every other community in the state for limited grant dollars."

The 14 programs that require a Commonwealth Capital Score are:

- Public Works Economic Development Program
- Transit Oriented Development Bond Program
- Water Transportation Capital Funding Program
- Small Town Road Assistance Program
- Community Development Action Grant Program
- Massachusetts Opportunity Relocation and Expansion (MORE) Jobs Capital Program
- State Revolving Fund
- LAND (formerly Self-Help) Program
- PARC (formerly Urban Self-Help Program)
- Drinking Water Supply Protection Grant Program
- Coastal Pollutant Remediation Grant Program
- Alternative Energy Property Program
- Municipal Sustainability Grant Program (formerly the Solid Waste Management & Recycling Technical Assistance & Regulatory Development Program)
- Off-Street Parking Program

Quincy's Commonwealth Capital score will be valid for one year.

DIAMOND WEDDING BANDS...FOR MEN

Jewelers have noted a significant increase in the popularity of diamond set wedding bands that leads them to speculate that diamonds are no longer just "a girl's best friend." The fact is that diamonds are appealing and attractive to both men and women, as evidenced by increasing numbers of men who are choosing wedding bands set with diamonds over more traditional plain and unadorned bands. Designs may feature wide bands of yellow or white gold or platinum tastefully embellished with bezel-set diamonds spaced at equal intervals, or flashier rings with channel-set diamonds that partially or fully encircle the finger. Many men are equally enthusiastic about designing their own custom diamond wedding bands, which reflect their personal style and taste.

You will love our extraordinary selection of women's and men's diamond wedding rings and bands. A purchase of a fine diamond band from us is one of the best investments you will ever make. We are located at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center where our jewelry professionals will help you select the exact piece for that special someone. Conservation Commission Approves Re-Routing Town Brook For City Plan

Conservation Commissioners recently approved the city's plan to reroute Town Brook as part of the Quincy Center Revitalization plan.

However, commissioners provided ten items in their Order of Conditions which must be met by the city or Street-Works Development, LLC engineers to comply with the commission's regulations. Street-Works is the developer chosen to oversee the Quincy Center revitalization.

The Town Brook proposal must, now, be approved by additional state and federal agencies.

"We met all the requirements of the Marine Fisheries Department," Commissioner John Brennion said Tuesday, referring to the commissioner's Order of Conditions.

Brennion said that all six commissioners present at the Aug. 3 meeting approved the plan.

However, he added that suggestions by opponents of the plan had been considered and some were incorporated.

Members of Quincy Environmental Network and the Wollaston Garden Club who had previously developed an alternate plan to daylight the brook through Quincy Center spoke at the meeting.

To date, the opponents have not announced plans to challenge the Conservation Commission's decision, but that would not surprise Brennion.

"No matter which way we voted, we expected (our decision) to be appealed," said Brennion of the controversial project.

Under the plan developed by Street-Works, Town Brook will no longer run underground beneath the Ross Parking Garage and Hancock Lot acreage, but will be daylighted along the Concourse and a pocket park will be developed at the site of the Quincy American Legion Post 95 at Mechanic Street and Revere Road.

Conservation Commissioners Acting Chair William Keener, and members Brennion, Maureen Glynn, E. James Iorio, Tom Carroll and Stephen Striffler approved the plan. Commissioner Jeff Graeber was absent.

The Commission's Order of Conditions includes such conditions as noted below in abbreviated descriptions. Full text is available at the Building Department.

• The Applicant, the City of Quincy, must submit construction level plans to the Conservation Commission for review and approval.

• The design of the future rain gardens must be submitted to the Conservation Commission which may employ an engineer at the expense of the Applicant.

• The state's Division of Marine Fisheries must approve the final design of the Firefighter Nicholas Levins Honored For Heroic Actions At Falls Blvd. Fire

Quincy Firefighter Nicholas Levins recently received the Liberty Mutual Firemark Award for Heroism for his heroic actions during the July 9th fire at the 500 Falls Boulevard apartment complex, which was completely destroyed by flames.

The award was presented by Liberty Mutual Sales Agent, Rita P. Daddio from the company's Hingham office during a ceremony held at Quincy Fire Headquarters, 40 Quincy Ave.

The Liberty Mutual Firemark Award is presented annually to hundreds of firefighters throughout the country who best represent their communities through courageous acts and who best demonstrate the firefighter's selfless spirit.

As a local Liberty Mutual Firemark Award winner, Levins will be considered for the 2011 Liberty Mutual National Firemark Award. Two national winners – one honored for heroism, the other for community service/public education – will each receive a $10,000 grant from Liberty Mutual for their fire departments.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Aug. 23, 1814, during the war of 1812, first lady Dolley Madison abandoned the couple's personal belongings to save the full-length portrait of former president George Washington from desecration by vengeful British soldiers. The next night, British troops burned the White House.

• On Aug. 24, 1875, Captain Matthew Webb of Great Britain becomes the first man to successfully swim the English Channel without assistance. Webb reached shore in 21 hours and 45 minutes. In 1883, Webb attempted to swim the Niagara River, and drowned in 10 minutes. His body was found four days later.

• On Aug. 28, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson is picketed by woman suffragists in front of the White House, who demand that he support an amendment to the Constitution that would guarantee women the right to vote. Wilson had a history of lukewarm support for women's suffrage even, though he was a former teacher at a women's college and the father of two daughters.

• On Aug. 26, 1939, television station W2XBS in New York City broadcasts a doubleheader between the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Cincinnati Reds from Ebbets Field in Brooklyn. It was the first Major League Baseball game ever aired on television.

• On Aug. 25, 1944, after more than four years of Nazi occupation, Paris is liberated by the French 2nd Armored Division and the U.S. 4th Infantry Division. German General Dietrich von Choltitz defied an order by Adolf Hitler to blow up Paris' landmarks and burn the city to the ground before its liberation.

• On Aug. 27, 1967, Brian Epstein, manager of the Beatles, is found dead of an accidental drug overdose in his Sussex, England, home. The world might never have heard of the Beatles were it not for Epstein. Just a few months after being hired he got them their first recording contract with Parlophone Records.

Three Political Records For The Ages?

All records – the saying goes – are meant to be broken.

But are there certain distinctions in Quincy's political history that will stand the test of time?

Or, in other words, are these records simply untouchable?

Scanning the book Quincy, Massachusetts, A Political History 1889-2000 written by former mayor and political historian Frank McCauley, it seems some distinctions may never be matched – or surpassed.

Here are three – in my own humble opinion. To give them a little context, I've also placed them in categories – borrowing from some professional baseball records.

Joe DiMaggio's 56-Game Hitting Streak
And Jim McIntyre – The All-Time Vote-Getter

The Yankee clipper hit safely in 56 consecutive games during the 1941 baseball season. During this streak, DiMaggio hit .408 with 15 home runs and 55 runs batted in from May 15 to July 17 that season.

McINTYRE

Those are pretty gaudy numbers. And while some batters have come close (Pete Rose's 44-game streak in 1978) many fans believe no one will ever match DiMaggio's mark.

I liken this feat with Jim McIntyre's popular vote total in the 1965 mayoral election. In winning his first of three mayoral terms, McIntyre polled 22,034 votes in the final election. Joseph LaRaia finished second with 7,713 votes.

McIntyre's vote total remains the largest popular vote ever received by a candidate in a city election. This record – nearly 46 years later – still stands today.

Two factors why McIntyre's mark may never been reached.

First, he was an extremely popular and beloved public figure in Quincy. In his book, McCauley notes that McIntyre – who held undergraduate, masters and law degrees – "was the best educated and probably the brightest of Quincy's mayors." McIntyre, who is one of six former mayors in McCauley's "Mayoral Hall of Fame," was also a decorated combat veteran of the Korean War, receiving a Bronze star for bravery and the Purple Heart for being wounded three times during his service as a Marine.

McIntyre – who also served as a councillor at-large, state representative and state senator – may be the "Bobby Orr" of local politics. We may never see another one like him again.

The second reason has to do with sheer numbers – specifically voter turnout.

When McIntyre was elected in 1965, some 30,226 voters went to polls – or 65.3 percent of those registered. However, over the last 30 years, city elections with turnouts higher than 60 percent have been the exception and not the rule.

In 1981 – with an open mayor's seat – turnout was 30,530 voters or 62.9 percent. Frank McCauley (18,037 votes) defeated Dan Raymondi (12,222 votes) for mayor.

In 1989 – another open mayor's seat – turnout was 29,560 voters or 60.6 percent. Jim Sheets (17,557 votes) defeated Peter O'Connell (11,459 votes) for mayor.

No other Quincy municipal election has surpassed 60 percent turnout since.

So, with fewer voters heading to the polls, it makes reaching the 20,000-vote plateau a statistically very tall order.

McIntyre is only one of six individuals to poll more than 20,000 votes in a city election. And it's happened only seven times (one individual did it twice.) Moreover, the last time it occurred was 34 years ago.

The others - besides McIntyre – according to McCauley's research:

• Dr. Charles Djerf, School Committee, 21,852 votes in 1965 and 21,686 votes, also for School Committee, in 1961.

• Paul Harold, Councillor at-Large, 21,243 in 1977.

• George Burke, Councillor at-Large, 20,741 in 1965.

• Arthur Tobin, Councillor at-Large, 20,453 votes in 1975.

• Amelio Della Chiesa, Mayor, 20,131 votes in 1961.

Cal Ripken Jr.'s "Iron-Man" Streak
And Dr. Nathaniel Hunting Longevity Champ

Cal Ripken, Jr. did the unthinkable on Sept. 6, 1995. The longtime Baltimore Oriole and future Hall of Famer played in his 2,131st consecutive game – breaking the "iron-man" mark set by legendary New York Yankee first baseman Lou Gehrig.

Ripken's new consecutive game streak would ultimately reach 2,632 games. It spanned more than 17 seasons – from May 30, 1982 to Sept. 20, 1998.

The undisputed "Iron Man" of Quincy politics is Dr. Nathaniel S. Hunting. Dr. Hunting holds the longevity distinction in local politics serving 36 years on the School Committee from 1899 to 1934.

HUNTING

In second place is McCauley who served a total of 32 years in elected office in Quincy (more on him below). The bronze goes to longtime Ward 2 councillor Dan Raymondi who served 29 and a half years (as a councillor and school committeeman) before resigning last month to become Public Works commissioner.

Thirty years in public life is a long time – heck 20 years is a long time, too. (Besides Hunting, McCauley and Raymondi, only 11 other public officials in city history have served 20 or more years.)

We're willing to go out on a limb and say Dr. Hunting's mark could remain at the top for a very long time – maybe forever.

No one in elective office today appears ready to challenge the 30-year mark.

Right now, the "dean" of Quincy's elected officials is Councillor at-Large Michael McFarland with nearly 14 years of service. McFarland, age 57, served eight years on the school committee (1998-2005) and will complete his sixth year as a councillor at-large this fall. McFarland – if elected to another two-year term Nov. 8 – will have 16 years of elected service once that term is complete. He'd be four years away from joining the 20-year mark . . . but 20 years shy of Dr. Hunting's mark.

Ted Williams' .406 Batting Average
And Frank McCauley's Election To All 4 Offices

Williams is the last major leaguer to hit over .400 in a single season. The Red Sox Hall of Famer accomplished this feat during the 1941 season, batting .406.

The Splendid Splinter cemented his legendary status on the baseball diamond as the 1941 season wound down. Before a game on Sept. 28, Williams was batting .3995, which would have been rounded up to a .400 average.

Instead of sitting the out the season finale, Williams opted – probably insisted – to play a double-header against the then Philadelphia Athletics. Williams reasoned that he didn't really deserve the .400 average unless he played. Number 9 responded going 6-for-8 at the plate – completing a magical .406 season.

The number four is impressive as the first number in a batting average.

It's also impressive because only one Quincy citizen has been elected to all four municipal offices - or "The Quadruple Crown." That individual is Frank McCauley who's been elected ward councillor, councillor at-large, school committeeman and mayor.

McCAULEY

Frank's like the Mount Rushmore of Quincy politics. He served eight years as mayor, 12 years as councillor at-large, four as Ward 1 councillor and eight years on the school committee. McCauley lost his first campaign for councillor at-large in 1959, but four years later won his first election – for Ward 1 councillor – in 1963.

In all, McCauley ran in 18 city elections, winning 15 and "striking out" just three times for an 83.3 winning percentage. Under Plan A and Plan E, no one has won more city elections than McCauley.

McCauley retired from public office in 2005. His last two years as councillor at-large coincided with being council president.

Will another individual ever be elected mayor, school committee member, ward councillor and councillor at-large again? It's certainly possible . . . but the odds are slim looking at today's current office holders.

Of the 16 present public officials, (1 mayor, 9 city councillors and 6 school committee members) only one has served in more than one office (Michael McFarland, school committee and councillor at-large). But there could be more pending this fall's election. Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro is running for councillor at-large; School Committee Vice Chairwoman Anne Mahoney is running for mayor; and former Ward 4 Councillor Jay Davis is seeking a seat on the school committee.

Three Quincy political records. But for the ages?

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS 1912 POSTCARD is a view of the old Washington School in Quincy Point. Designed by a young Quincy architect, Albert H. Wright, this building was erected in 1903 on a large lot between Curtis and Washington Streets diagonally across from the fire station. This red brick building was demolished in the late 1960s and the site is now home to the Constanzo Pagnano Towers Senior Citizens housing complex. The site was originally used for one of Quincy's first public schools early in the 19th century when Quincy Point was known as the Old Fields District.

$1 Million Grant To Provide Transitional, Permanent Housing To Homeless Veterans, Families

The U.S. Department of Veteran's Affairs through the Supportive Services for Veteran Families (SSVF) program recently awarded Volunteers of America Massachusetts (VOAMA) in collaboration with Father Bill's & Mainspring (FBMS) of Quincy a $1 million grant to provide supportive services to at-risk and homeless veterans.

Nationwide the SSVF program will fund 85 new and existing projects in 40 states. The SSVF Program is a new VA initiative that awards grants to private non-profit organizations and consumer cooperatives that will provide supportive services to severely low-income veterans and their families residing in or transitioning to permanent housing.

The partnership between VOAMA and FBMS will serve 195 low-income individuals and families in Norfolk, Plymouth, and Suffolk Counties which includes the Boston Metropolitan Area and southeastern Massachusetts. The goal is to prevent homelessness, increase housing stability, and enhance the independent living skills of at-risk veterans and their families.

The program will complement and enhance existing regional veteran's services which include transitional and permanent housing, mental health and substance abuse services as well as workforce development.

FBMS is an organization dedicated to ending - not simply managing – homelessness in Southeastern Massachusetts. Their primary areas of focus are supportive housing, prevention, emergency shelter and workforce development.

John Yazwinski, FBMS President and CEO said, "We believe that no Veteran, having once fought for our freedom, should be homeless. We are honored to be a part of the VA's plan to prevent and end veteran homelessness in five years"

Recent estimates in Norfolk, Plymouth, and Suffolk Counties estimate that there are over 1,000 homeless veterans and over 7,000 veteran families currently living in poverty and potentially at-risk of becoming homeless.

Att. Henry Tuttle CEO

Dear Mr. Tuttle:

Gloria and I are very appreciative of the honor bestowed on us by Manet Community Health Center by naming us as the first recipients of the Elizabeth A. Swanton Community Service Award.

We did not know Betty personally, but we were aware of her commitment to children. She was a foster mother to nearly 100 children in addition to raising 10 of her own.

Betty served her community in many ways. A very significant way was the 30 years she worked for and supported Manet, including as President of Manet's Board of Directors and Chair of the Human Resource Committee. She was active in Quincy's schools, her church and her neighborhood.

We have been residents of the wonderful city of Quincy for 59 years. Our city has so many diverse activities. It has provided us with the opportunity to become involved and though them to meet so many dedicated people who we are proud to call our friends.

Manet Community Health Care Center is now in its 32nd year of providing for the well being of South Shore residents. Thank you for the honor you have given us and best wishes for a successful future.

Sincerely yours,
Robert and Gloria Noble

DeFalco Contender For Hospital Post

By FRANK McCAULEY

The Board of Managers of Quincy City Hospital planned to meet to appoint a new hospital director succeeding Harlan Paine who still held the position.

This Week
1976
35 Years Ago

The leading candidate to succeed Paine appeared to be Anthony DeFalco, former deputy governor under Governor John A. Volpe.

Edward V. Cronin, chairman of the board of managers, said that Paine had not resigned but "if we vote someone else in then he is a good as fired. He had his chance and he didn't want to play ball with us."

Paine who had been hospital director since 1962, sought a three-year contract at a special meeting of the board, but said Cronin, "he has asked that his request be taken from the agenda."

Cronin said the board was in the process of screening and interviewing some 40 or 50 candidates for the $32,000 post and that a final selection would be made at the Aug. 24 meeting.

NQHS SHOULD OPEN ON TIME, CREEDON SAYS

North Quincy High School probably would open on time (Sept. 8) but it is going to be close.

"I'm not willing to say definitely," said School Superintendent Dr. Lawrence P. Creedon.

The problem is that most of the building's utilities are being moved from the rear of the school to the front to make way for the $13.5 million renovation and addition project.

"We got off to a late start," said Creedon, "because the renovation issue was not resolved until June 11."

If the school misses the Sept. 8 deadline by one day, "we can postpone the opening," according to School Superintendent Creedon.

The state requires that schools be open 185 days a year in order to qualify for full state aid.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Cabbage, Provolone Bake

Cabbage is such a diversified vegetable, used in smoked shoulder and corn beef dinners, stuffed, or just plain boiled, sautéed or the most popular, for coleslaw.

Today's recipe calls for the cabbage to be shredded as though you were making coleslaw, but it is totally different, as you will see.

CABBAGE, PROVOLONE BAKE
1 head of cabbage
1 pound of imported provolone cheese
½ cup grated Parmesan cheese
6 or so slices of crusty Italian bread (for top)
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 cloves of garlic (chopped)

Shred the cabbage. In a large skillet or pan, sauté the garlic in the hot olive oil. Add the cabbage and cook until blended. (It will cook as it is baked). Set aside.

In a casserole dish, line it with a little olive oil. Place a layer of the cabbage. On top of that place the slices of provolone cheese. Add another layer of the cabbage, and keep doing this as though you were preparing lasagna.

On the top layer, add the Italian bread all along the top. Press down and then add the grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle a little olive oil over the top

Bake covered in a 350-degree oven for 40 minutes. Take cover off and bake for another 10 minutes. This dish will get raves!

When 3 Future NBA Hall Of Famers Came To Town

Five Local Teens Face Felony Charges For Bottle Bombs

Detective Lt. Patrick Glynn, head of the Special Investigations Unit whose officers arrested the suspects.

All five suspects will be charged with three felonies: Throwing or Placing an Explosive Device; Possession of An Explosive Device and Destruction of Personal Property over $250.

In addition, four of the five youths, ages 14-16, faced charges of Assault and Battery as last weekend's bottle bomb explosion on Aug. 13 injured a woman on South Street.

The fifth suspect was charged in a separate Aug. 10 incident on Water Street where a bottle bomb was detonated outside the home of a 60 year-old Quincy resident.

Glynn said that the resident never saw the youth but that the victim believes two shadows ran from his house after ringing the doorbell.

Police are still investigating the Water Street incident seeking ties between the incidents at both sites. In addition, police are still investigating an incident on Aug. 10 when bottle bombs exploded on the Sterling Middle School grounds.

"Much of the evidence was destroyed," said Glynn, noting that the weapons are "easily concocted." The bombs are made of readily available household substances placed in the plastic bottle.

"They found remnants of plastic bottles," Glynn said of police officers studying the sites.

However, little is left after an explosion, said Glynn who explained that after the bombs explodes, the plastic pieces shoot into the air as dangerous pieces of plastic shrapnel.

Police Captain John Dougan said a New Jersey woman visiting Quincy, injured by the chemical substance placed in the bottle on South Street, was taken to Quincy Medical Center.

"It's a caustic substance," said Dougan of the effect of contact with the skin.

Police did not identify either the victims or the suspects.

Dougan said that juvenile suspects couldn't be interviewed without their parents' permission.

In addition, the clerk at Quincy Juvenile Court said no information on the status of a juvenile case, bail or judge's decision, can be made public regardless of the severity of the charge.

After Some TLC In Quincy, 10 Endangered Sea Turtles Released Off Of Cape Cod

been part of an Aquarium team that had worked long, grueling hours for months saving more than 120 endangered sea turtles from death's door and slowly nursing them back to health at the Aquarium's Animal Care Center located at the former Fore River shipyard in Quincy.

These five green and five Kemp's Ridley sea turtles were the last large group from the 2010 stranding season to be released. They were among the hardest cases. A couple of the turtles had had major shell fractures that required surgery and casting. Others had pneumonia, and others suffered from exotic and difficult infections. All had stranded last November and December on the north side of Cape Cod due to hypothermia.

With body temperatures in the 40's and 50's, these young turtles had become trapped in Cape Cod Bay and slowly chilled through the autumn. The first northwest winds of the winter created enough wave activity to drive the floating turtles up on to the beaches. There, they were discovered by the hardy staff and volunteers of the Massachusetts Audubon Sanctuary at Wellfleet Bay who walk the beaches in search of what appears to be dead turtles.

Dennis Murley, a warm and grizzled naturalist with Mass Audubon, has personally rescued more than 30 sea turtles off the beaches over the years. He was also on board and held a platter-sized turtle with its front flipper wildly gyrating as it anticipated its big swim. He smiled widely and acknowledged that this activity could never grow old.

Mark Leach and his son Sean, Harwichport lobstermen, guided their neat white working boat seven miles out to sea to a pocket of warm water picked out by Merigo on their charts. The fishermen were kindly donating their time, boat and fuel expense. Interestingly, the elder Leach has been involved in sea turtle conservation efforts for several years. He started by giving rescuers an impromptu ride to an entangled sea turtle. Over the next couple of summers, this same boat with the very low slung back that is open to the water became the ideal platform for sea turtle researchers to capture and haul aboard leatherback sea turtles weighing up to 1000 pounds for brief physicals. Whether giant or young like those being released, sea turtles had benefitted from the sage interest of this fisherman.

Two of the green sea turtles, Ophelia and Cassiopeia, did look somewhat strange, some might even say alien! From a front view of these robust turtles, a small antenna could be seen poking out from behind their heads. It was attached to a small, 2-by-3 inch piece of electronic technology that had been glued onto the back of their shells. Satellite tags have been transforming marine biology over the past two decades.

These expensive GPS-like units can transmit the animal's location to a satellite and then an Aquarium computer. Biologists can follow the animal's seasonal migrations up and down the East Coast. The tags can also be programmed to record dive depths and duration. This can also help biologists and wildlife managers better understand how these endangered animals use particular habitats.

As those two green sea turtles swam away from the stern of the boat, their rescuers wondered would they swim south and begin their migration to warm tropical waters as the summer wanes or would they swim east and hang out in the warm waters of the Gulf Stream in a ridiculously high latitude over the winter.

This unusual migration pattern had been discovered with previously released sea turtles. You can actually follow what these turtles do by logging on to seaturtle.org and follow the next chapter in their amazing journey.

Over 100 endangered and threatened sea turtles were nursed back to health at the Aquarium's Animal Care Center in Quincy and later released back to the wild. This will be the last large batch of the year and were among the hardest cases. Four more sea turtles still remain there.

Ayers Blasts Policy Barring Access To Long Island

$3 million on 'repairing' the Long Island Bridge. Such an expenditure is a misuse of taxpayers' dollars," Ayers said.

"It's time that Mayor Menino takes a comprehensive look in the future planning of Long Island and the Long Island Bridge," added Ayers who responded to Menino's comments regarding his Long Island policy quoted in Monday's Boston Herald.

"We're going to keep it restricted," Menino said of keeping the public off Long Island which is owned by the City of Boston, but is one of the Boston Harbor Islands, National Park Service.

The 225-acre Long Island lies off the coast of Quincy and can only be accessed through Quincy roads and a causeway at Squantum Park. There, Boston staffs a guard-house to prevent unauthorized access to the Moon Island causeway which leads to the 50-year-old Long Island Bridge.

Boston's ownership of Long Island dates back to 1885 when the city purchased the island from a private owner for $140,000. Formerly the site of Boston's poor house and Long Island Hospital, the island is now used for overnight housing for homeless, addiction rehabilitation programs, and as a summer camp for 800 inner city children.

In 2008, Boston welcomed Kevin James and hundreds in his crews to Long Island to film scenes for the movie, "Mall Cop."

The island at nearly two miles long is the longest island in Boston Harbor and little of the space is currently used, according to observers such as Ayers and, in the past by Leo Kelly, chairman of the city's Beaches and Coastal Commission and former Ward 1 city councillor.

Ayers, whose legislative district includes North Quincy and Squantum, said he supports public access.

"I strongly believe that this island has been neglected by Boston officials and should be used for its full potential with recreational, historical and environmental activities and purposes. It should be open to the public for fishing, walking trails, historical stops, camping, hiking and tourism."

Long Island Bridge should come down, according to Ayers who cited state inspectors who found the bridge is deteriorating so badly that chunks of concrete, metal, rust and lead paint are falling into the harbor, endangering harbor life and boaters who can actually see the sky from beneath the bridge.

That state Department of Transportation Structures Inspection Field Report deemed Long Island Bridge "a safety risk and one of the worst bridges in the state," according to Ayers who has repeatedly assailed Menino's plans to funnel millions of dollars in city funds for bridge repair.

"A ferry service is a far safer and more economical means of transportation. 'Investing' millions of dollars in patch-work revamps to the bridge, time and time again, in a useless effort with no long-term sustainable benefit, makes no fiscal sense and only perpetuates an extreme public safety hazard," Ayers said.

Ayers is not the only one who believes the public, particularly Quincy residents, should have access to Long Island which features scenic views of Boston Harbor, remnants of the Civil War Fort Strong, an historic lighthouse and long stretches of waterfront.

Several years ago, Kelly, then Ward 1 city councillor, was turned back at Boston's guardhouse to the islands when he was trying to escort local residents, interested in the lighthouse and historic spots to Long Island. He assailed the policy as unacceptable.

Also, author Jeremy D'Entremont who has written books focusing on historic lighthouses called Long Island Head Light a wonderful asset. That lighthouse, built in 1844, is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and is still operating as a shipping beacon.

"I've heard rumors over the years that there were plans to build a pier at Long Island Head so there could be some access by water," said D'Entremont, acknowledging that the cost in this economy could be prohibitive.

D'Entremont added:

"I understand the issues involved but I just feel it's a shame that people interested in the history of Boston Harbor and its lighthouses and forts can't experience Long Island Head first-hand."

On Tuesday, Menino's spokesperson Dot Joyce reaffirmed Boston's policy of prohibiting public access to Long Island, stating she had been present when Boston's mayor cited the need to protect the campers and those on the island for rehabilitation and job training.

"We have 800 young people from the inner city, taken out of the urban neighborhood where they breath fresh air," said Joyce. "It would be a shame to ruin that experience."

Camp Harbor View is a joint program sponsored by the City of Boston and funded by a private foundation originated by realtor Jack Connors.

While the island is one of the Boston Harbor Islands under the National Park Service, this does not guarantee public access, according to Bruce Jacobson, superintendent of Boston Harbor Islands.

Jacobson said Monday that the two goals of the Boston Harbor Islands are: first, to protect natural resources and, second, to encourage public access and enjoyment.

However, Jacobson said that is not possible in every location.

As for Long Island, Jacobson said his agency has conducted studies of the island which has protected resources, and historic and cultural assets, such as Fort Strong, the salt marshes and the lighthouse.

As for public access to Long Island, Jacobson said that is not possible on every island. "It is not appropriate to mix the general public with the populations that are served."

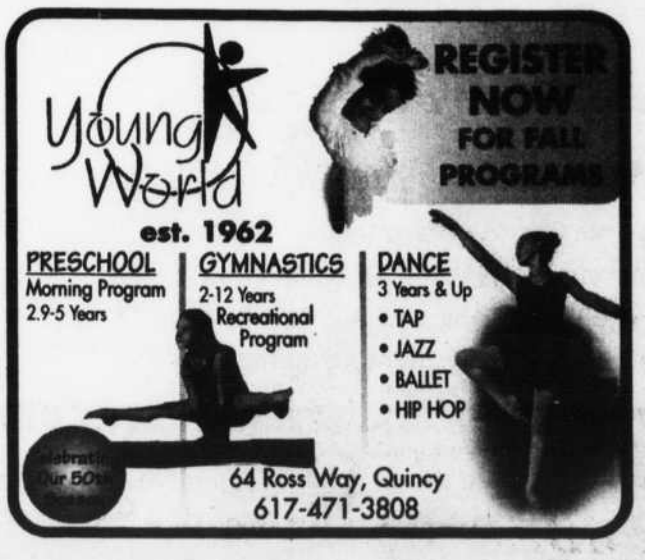

He noted that another island, Thompson's Island, must have restricted public access as a school is operated on that island. Thompson's Island is owned and operated by a non-profit agency.

However, Jacobson said that the public is allowed on Thompson on occasions when the school is not in session and there is no public access at any time to Long Island where the camp operates five days a week.

Support For QMC Ownership Transition At Hearing

But Some Nurses Critical Of Steward's Handling Of Employer Pension Plan

By EMILY TAFT

Residents, goverment officials, nurses, and doctors gathered Aug. 9 in Quincy High School to discuss their thoughts on the proposed transfer of Quincy Medical Center to Steward Health Care System, LLC.

Everyone who spoke at the public hearing agreed that this transfer of ownership was in the best interest of the hospital, its staff, and the city of Quincy. All those who spoke recommended that the Attorney General approve the transfer of ownership, but some asked her to proceed with caution.

Among those speaking in favor of the ownership transition was Mayor Thomas Koch.

"I support Stewards proposal," said Koch. "Quincy Medical provides an important health care resource for this city."

Half of the auditorium was filled with members of the Massachusetts Nurses Association, and a number of them stood up to speak about their opinions of the transfer and their recomendations to the Attorney General. Those who are already under Steward agreed that this is the best move for Quincy Medical Center, and the city, but they all also agreed that there are some flaws in Steward and their promises.

"I whole heartedly endorse the transfer of Quincy Medical Center to Steward," said Betsy Prescott, a nurse for Saint Elizabeth Hospital. "But Steward needs to honor their agreements with the other hospitals they have bought before moving forward."

According to Prescott after the agreements were made and Saint Elizabeths was bought by Steward they have not been able to move forward with their Taft Hartley multi-employer pension plan.

A representative of Steward said that they have tried to sit with the members of the MNA but they have yet to come to an agreement, and because of the economy the original plan they agreed to cannot be met. As the representative spoke, members of the MNA stood up and walked out of the auditorium.

"What he was saying in there was not true," said Prescott. "We have met with Steward numerous times to try and have them sign the papers that we agreed to but that has yet to happen. Why shouldn't nurses be able to get the same pension plan as doctors. They agreed to this and now they want to change it."

Quincy Medical Center is a public charity hospital that requires court approval for a transfer of ownership.

After filing for bankruptcy Quincy Medical held a hearing to allow the public to speak about their concerns and their thoughts on the change of ownership, before the final desicion by the Attorney General is made.

Attorney General Martha Coakley will be looking at a number of deciding factors before making her desicion. Jed M. Nosal, Chief of the Energy and Telecommunications Division in Coakley's office represented the Attorney General at the public hearing.

"The Attorney General will be looking at a number of factors before she makes her desicion," said Nosal. "A strong case must be made to continue with the sale, we must make sure this isn't impossible or impractical."

No matter what challenges may be in the future with the nurses and the potential new owners, one thing was clear at the hearing: Quincy Medical Center is an important part of the city and its residents.

"The creditors are knocking at the door, and we must take action," said state Rep. Ronald Mariano, a Quincy Democrat and the House Majority Leader.

"This is not a new fight for us, this is a fight that is running out of time. I have confidence in Steward and that they will make this a first rate city hospital again."

Planning Board Approves YMCA Project With Conditions

A public hearing was held by the Planning Board Aug. 10 to discuss the plans for the new YMCA building. The YMCA will be investing $30 million in this project.

After hearing the concerns of residents, and the plans of the new YMCA, the board voted unanimously to approve the plan with conditions. Conditions including a surrounding fence, site plan revisions, and improved construction material such as a sponge like concrete that will disperse 90% of water into the soil underneath, reducing flooding.

The plan included a lot of big changes to the land that the YMCA owns, which causes some concern for neighbors of the establishment. Issues brought up from six of the eleven residents that attended the public hearing included drainage and traffic when the new YMCA is built.

"All the drainage systems on the property will be completely new," said Rick Alfonso of Tetra Tech. "The problems will be fixed once the new systems are put in and the new landscaping is added."

The YMCA services 11,000 members and produces $1.2 million in financial assistance throughout Quincy. According to Paul Gorman President and CEO of the YMCA, 80 percent of the members are residents of Quincy and most of those residents are in a three to five mile radius of the YMCA.

"We have been working on the plans for this replacement building for five years," said John Sheskey of Sheskey Architects. "This is more then just a replacement building, this is a building that is going to bring more programming right across from the new (Quincy) high school."

The largest program running at the YMCA now is the child care center they offer, which also includes an outdoor facility where they can play and run around. Plans for the new YMCA will include the same type of child care center but safer when the children are able to go outside, because it will be set further back from the road.

"We understand the needs of the local community," said Gorman. "We are invested in the health and well being of all residents in Quincy. It is a safe place for families and sports teams to come."

The YMCA has planned some eye-pleasing landscapes throughout the property, such as shielding the parking area from the street and planting trees all around the perimeter of the facility. The buildings will be primarily made out store front glass, which will allow a lot of different views into the facility from the street and will also be made out of the same brick to mirror Quincy High School across Coddington Street.

There will be additional parking added in where the old building is, once everything is finished in the new building, and they will be adding even more parking in three residential lots. This will add 107 new parking spaces to the current number of 270 for a total of 377.

Inside the new YMCA will be a number of new and improved features for members to enjoy. The first floor will consist of eight classrooms for the child care center with access right outside to the new play center, along with a locker room, multi purpose gym, and an aquatic center with two indoor pools. The second floor will be dedicated to the health and wellness center and will have weight training, and an indoor track with views of the aquatic center below.

The old building will maintain operations during construction and the future site will be fenced off while work is in progress for safety purposes. Alfonso said that they plan to have the construction time to take about 16 months, and there won't be a significant loss in membership during the construction time.

Pending the approvals needed the YMCA hopes to start construction this winter, and finish in spring 2013.

Morrisette Legion Post Presents Scholarships

The Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post recently presented scholarships to six high school graduates of the Class of 2011.

The scholarship recipients are either the children or grandchildren of paid up members of the Morrisette Post 294, or of deceased members who were paid up at the time of their passing and the family has their loved ones membership card available for submission with the application.

This year's scholarships – including the Paul A.M. Hunt Memorial Scholarship for $1,200 which was presented by his daughter, Patricia Hunt Tanner with an overall total of $5,450 – were awarded to Matthew A. Ives, Andrew Sheridan, Julia Elizabeth White, James Scribi, Mark Louis Assad and Mark Mainini.

Scholarship committee members PC Robert "Bob" LeFleur, Peter Hood, PC George Nicholson, Adjutant; PAP Nancy Connolly and PC Henry Bradley, PNVC Chairman were present for the scholarship presentations. Over the past nine years, a total of $51,650 has been presented in scholarships to many students of those paid up members of the Morrisette Post.

The program was thought up by some of the Post's senior members many years ago and has continued to this day due to the financial support of its current membership and deceased members whose families still support this worthwhile program for the future of those students who will continue with their education after high school.

Any child or grandchild of a paid up member in their senior year of high school may fill out the applications when they are made available starting in February of the year of their graduation and have all information made available to the committee by the cut-off date specified on the application form.

The Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post 294 is located at 81-83 Liberty St., Quincy, MA 02169. Phone 617-770-4876.

Greater Quincy Knights Of Columbus Award $4,000 Charity Fund Grant

The Greater Quincy Knights of Columbus, Council#2259 recently awarded Jack Kunkel of Milton a $4,000 Charity Fund Grant.

Jack is a four-year-old boy who has severe hearing loss in both ears and has developmental delays because of it. Jack is in need of hearing aids that his insurance will not cover and his family cannot afford on their own.

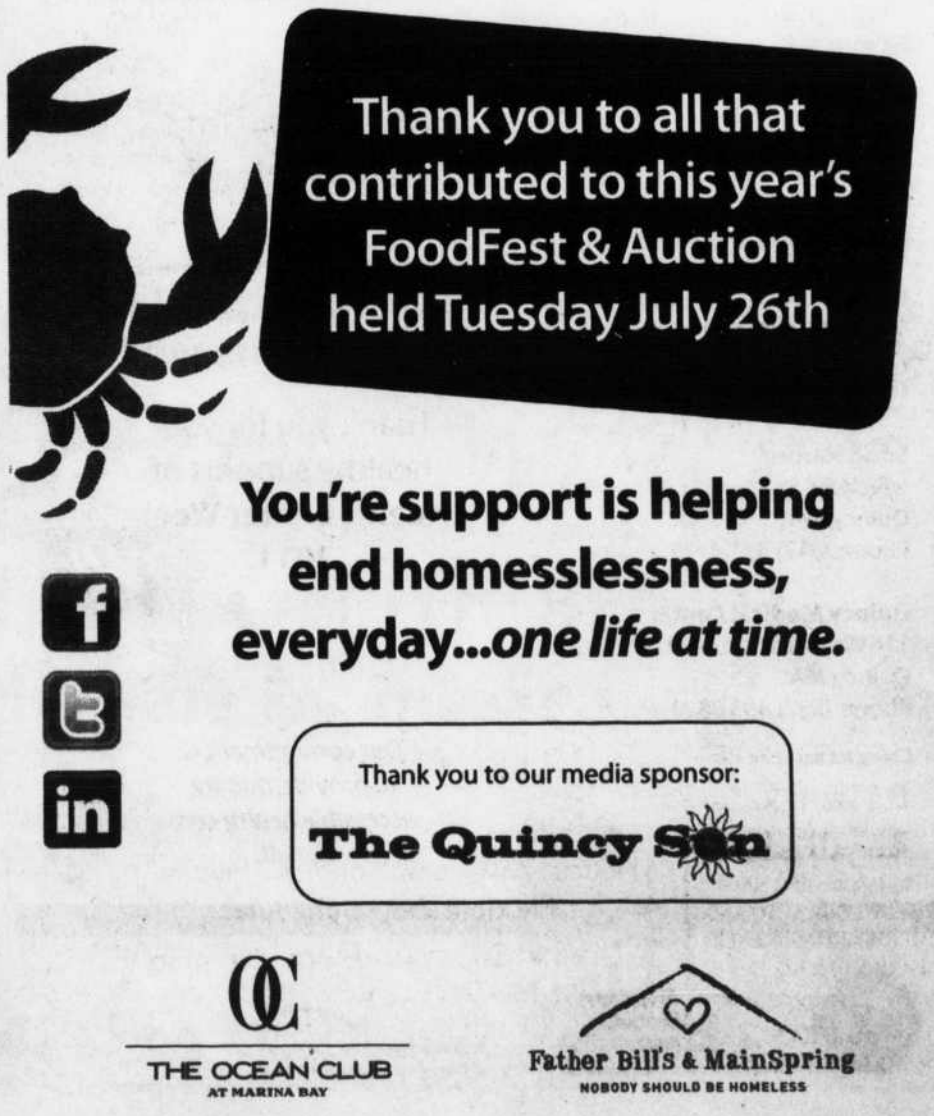

With the help of this grant Jack will be able to get permanent hearing aids that will allow him to catch up to his peers and be successful in school.

The council was able to obtain this grant from the Massachusetts State Council Knights of Columbus through its participation in its annual "Tootsie Roll Drive" that was held this past October. This is when members of the council ask for donations to help "People with Intellectual Disabilities" and in appreciation they receive a tootsie roll.

"The Greater Quincy Council thanks all who have supported the Knights in this appeal," said Grand Knight Stephen Greene.

"Without your help the council would not be able to continue its charitable works for the people in our local community."

Hearts Afire: Couple Sets Love Ablaze With Lydon Chapel 'Drive-Thru Wedding'

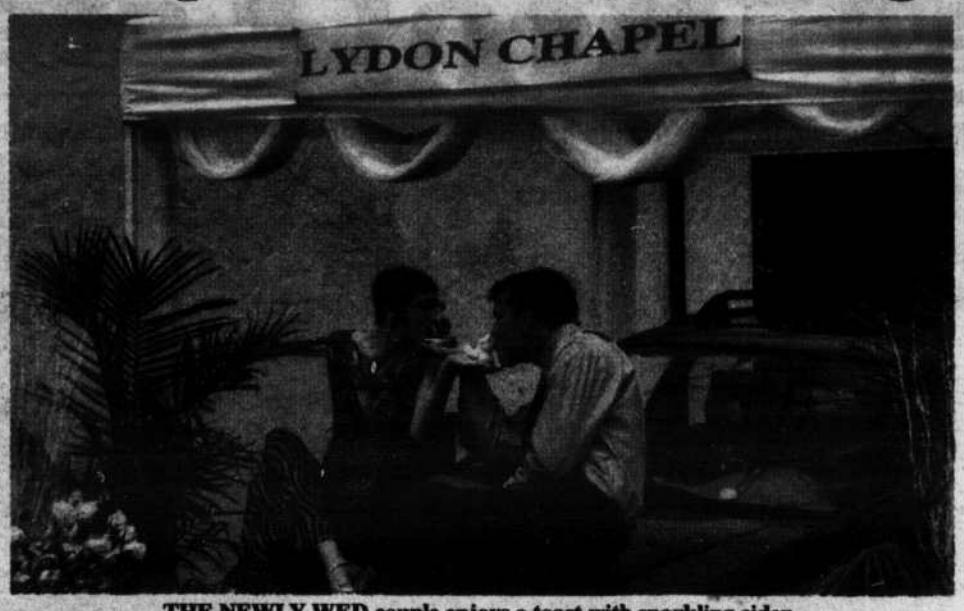

By JENNIFER LOGUE

He's a pool maintenance worker by day and a fire eater by night. She's a Wal-Mart supervisor who performs with a flaming hoop. And when they met at a fire festival, sparks flew.

Stephen Suthowski, 36, and Stacey Laliberte, 27, had been engaged for more than a year but hadn't set a date or made any definite wedding plans – until the Woonsocket, RI couple saw a recent news segment about Quincy Justice of the Peace Michelle Lydon and her "drive-thru weddings."

"We were just watching the news and we both said, 'Wow, that's neat!" said Suthowski, who tied the knot Saturday with Laliberte in the Lydon Chapel parking lot. "We're not very traditional people, and this just seemed to suit us. So we looked (Lydon Chapel) up online and talked to Michelle, and she seemed really fun."

At Saturday's ceremony, the couple – clad in coordinating purple and black outfits – drove their green Subaru Impreza affectionately known as "Beatrice" into the chapel's Hancock St. parking lot, where they were greeted with a wave and a congratulatory whoop by Lydon. After welcoming the couple, the justice of the peace instructed them to drive under a festively decorated white canopy.

"Let's get you guys hitched!" Lydon said.

Suthowski rolled down the driver's side window, and Lydon performed the marriage ceremony while the couple remained in the car. After pronouncing them husband and wife, Lydon produced two wine glasses and the couple enjoyed a celebratory toast with sparkling cider.

"I love my job!" said Lydon, noting that the Suthowski-Laliberte ceremony was one of four wedding ceremonies she performed on Saturday. Three of the services were drive-thru ceremonies, which have become increasingly popular since Lydon Chapel was featured on several recent news broadcasts.

In addition to offering a fun and spontaneous alternative to traditional wedding ceremonies, Lydon said, drive-thru ceremonies are also affordable. While the average cost of a traditional church wedding followed by a catered reception is approximately $25,000, Lydon Chapel's drive-thru ceremony costs just $75.

And for Suthowski and Laliberte, the Massachusetts location was even a bonus.

"From the very beginning, we decided we wanted to get married in a state where everybody can get married," said Suthowski, noting that Rhode Island allows civil unions but not gay marriage. "That was really important to us."

The couple – who planned to honeymoon overnight at a Boston hotel – said they eventually will hold a celebration for family and friends, possibly next spring.

"We decided we wanted to get the legalities taken care of now," Suthowski said. "So, today was just for us."

Do-It-Yourself Credit Repair

If you've been through a rough financial patch, it's likely that your credit has suffered. Late payments, minimum-only payments, credit-card balances that are too high and maybe even auto repossession could have drastic impacts on your credit score. If you're in a better position now, possibly with a new or better job, your credit can be repaired. It will take time, but it can be done. Here's how:

First, find out how bad the damage is. Send for your credit reports from all three of the major credit bureaus. Go over them carefully. Look for mistakes, such as accounts that aren't yours, wrong credit limit listed and accounts that you have already paid off showing a current balance. Notify the credit bureaus in writing (certified mail, not online) about any errors, and ask for an investigation. They have 30 days to respond. If they can't verify the accuracy of the item, they have to remove it. Once the repairs are made, get another batch of credit reports and do a line-by-line comparison.

Next, make a plan to hone down your credit. Determine which of your credit cards has the biggest debt-to-availability ratio. A card with $1,000 availability and a $900 balance is worse than a card with $10,000 availability and only $2,000 owed. The reason is that nearly maxing out a card counts more heavily against you because a larger percentage of your available credit is used.

Don't cancel any cards, for the above reason. When you get a card down to a zero balance, that availability helps your overall percentages. (History helps: Keep old accounts open, if only for the longevity they show.)

Pay more than the minimum on each card, on time, every month, with more money going to the ones with higher percentages of available credit used. Look at the credit report: You'll see a column indicating whether you have been making minimum or better payments. Even $10 extra takes you out of the "minimum only" category.

Don't take on any new credit until the current problems are resolved.

Full credit repair will take time, but it's worth the aggravation. The biggest benefit to taking steps to repair your credit is that future credit will be cheaper. You won't be in the "likely to default" category anymore, saddled with high interest rates.

25 Conway Agents Receive Excellence Awards

Twenty-five Jack Conway Realtor agents recently received the Conway Degree of Excellence (CDE) designation for completing Conway's "Superstar Training Program," a year-long peer education course.

The company's top listers and sellers share their secrets of success with their Conway colleagues during the program.

Conway CEO Carol Bulman honored the graduates at the company's mid-year awards breakfast held recently in Plymouth.

"I congratulate you all for valuing the importance of education for yourselves and your customers," Bulman said. "We created this CDE credential to recognize those agents who make a commitment to excellence and follow through on that commitment by attending courses designed to help them better serve their buyers and sellers every day."

Among the Conway Degree of Excellence recipients were two agents from Conway's Quincy office: Ann Marie Minihan and Helen Shiner.

Each of the Superstar classes is taught by a top Conway agent with expertise in a certain subject area, according to Conway Director of Education Christopher Haraden.

"The courses cover everything from marketing and technology to mastering customer-service skills," said Haraden. "Most importantly, the instructors offer information to their peers that can be applied to 'real-life' situations in today's changing marketplace."

Moving Doesn't Have To Be Stressful

(NAPSA)-The next time you plan to move, you won't be alone. Nearly 20 percent of Americans move each year, with most moves occurring during the summer months. With an average of 60 tasks to do to prepare, important decisions can slip through the cracks in the moving crate.

To help, HGTV designer Lisa LaPorta and new-product journalist David Gregg, senior editor, Behindthebuy.com, recommend a few tips. These experts say that moving doesn't have to be stressful-as long as you incorporate the right technology with the right design elements.

Both Gregg and LaPorta recommend getting the appointment to have cable television, phone and high-speed Internet services connected before the move. Having them installed on your arrival day means you can go online to determine room layouts and shop for furniture, call out for pizza, and entertain the kids while unpacking. There's a website, www.cablemover.com, that makes the process easy. And while you're there, you'll discover additional tech and design tips.

Gregg suggests that moving is a great time for introducing new technologies to organize and de-stress your living environment.

"The average person has five to six remotes sitting around on the coffee table," he said. "Moving is a perfect time to clear out the clutter and get down to one. Upgrading to a universal remote is affordable and newer models are simple to both program and use."

Also, Gregg recommends hiding all your tech equipment be_hind closed doors or in other, less-traveled rooms. Using a radio frequency extender, you can keep your DVD player and other electronics from view and still operate them from up to 100 feet away.

As a designer, LaPorta agrees. "Because technology has become woven into so many different facets of our lives, there's a lot to think about from both a design and technology standpoint when setting up your new home," she said.

Does Your Septic Tank Need Pumpig Out?

Q: How often do I need to have my septic tank pumped out? I keep getting calls and postcards from a local company saying I have to do it every year. – Jim S., via email

A: How often your septic tank actually needs to be pumped out varies depending on the size of the tank, the number of people in your home, and local or state regulations regarding septic tank maintenance.

First things first, however. How long has it been since your tank was last pumped out? If it's been more than six years, or you honestly can't remember, it's probably time.

If you know how long it's been since the last cleaning, the size of the tank will help you figure out when next to have it pumped out. For example, if you have a 500-gallon tank, and your home has four residents, the tank should be cleaned once per year. If there are only two residents in a home with a 500-gallon tank, a cleaning is only needed about every two and a half years. (The attached chart, courtesy of Cruse Wastewater, has more details.)

The purpose of pumping out the tank is to remove solid waste, or sludge, which builds up over time. Too much sludge reduces the efficiency of the septic system and can block or damage drain pipes, causing a backup into your house (ugh!) or damage to the drain field through which liquid waste is safely disbursed.

Even with a cleaning schedule in place, once a year you should have a technician come out and check the sludge level of the tank. If the sludge level is too high -- past the halfway mark -- a cleaning is needed, along with an evaluation of the system to make sure everything is working correctly.

Finally, a check of local and state regulations concerning septic tanks can save you some grief in the long run. Some municipalities mandate more frequent tank cleaning due to groundwater quality issues, and at least one county in Florida is requiring residents to completely replace tanks that are more than 40 years old.

HOME TIP: Avoid flushing chemical products into a septic system. These will kill bacteria that are essential to breaking down waste.

Where to Turn When Your Home Doesn't Sell

Quincy - If your home has just come off the market and hasn't sold, don't get discouraged. The reason your home did not sell may have nothing to do with your home or the market. In reality, your home may have been one of the more desirable properties for sale.

So Why Didn't Your Home Sell?

Last year almost half of the homes listed for sale never sold at all, and many sellers found that there was a tremendous amount a homeowner needed to be educated on to sell their home for top dollar in the shortest time period.

Don't risk making the wrong choices and losing both time and money on your investment. Before you hire a realtor, know the right questions to ask to save you time and money.

Industry experts have prepared a free special report called "How to Sell a House that Didn't Sell" which educates you on the issues involved.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your free copy of this report call 800-611-0351 and enter ID#1012. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Call now to make sure your home sells next time you list it or visit www.QuincyHomeExpired.com

A Job Well Done

On Sunday, Aug. 7, at approximately 12:50 p.m., Officers Mike Brandolini, Jamie Karvelis, Declan Breslin, Terry Downing, Joe McGunigle, Mike Powers, Brian Mahoney, with his K-9 Partner, Shagi, Det. Pieper and Sgt. Sean Duggan responded to a report of "shots fired," involving a suicidal male in West Quincy.

LT. DAN MINTON

Fallon Ambulance was also dispatched to the area. While en route to the call, Quincy Police Communications relayed to responding units that they could hear gun shots over the phone.

As the officers arrived on scene, some took up cover positions to surround and isolate the residence, while other officers led adjacent neighbors away to safety. As Sgt. Duggan attempted to make contact with occupants of the residence, a male and a female walked out the front door and crossed the street to waiting officers. Since it was unknown who had the gun or guns, the people exiting the residence were searched for weapons.

Moments later, a female who identified herself as the suicidal man's daughter, came out of the house holding a nickel plated revolver over her head, by the trigger guard. At the direction of police officers, she placed the revolver on the ground and walked across the street to the officers. As officers questioned her, a male exited the house and walked across the street to awaiting officers.

The situation was very tense because shots were fired and it had yet to be determined who the shooter was and if there were more guns. During this time, several neighbors and on lookers had gathered but kept away at a safe distance and vehicular traffic was stopped or re-routed.

A few seconds later, another male came out from a door on the opposite side of the house and began walking towards Officers Karvelis and Mahoney. He was flailing his arms in an aggressive manner and reaching in the front of his pants as if he had a weapon, yelling at the officers, "Shoot me - put one in my chest."

The officers ordered the suspect several times to stop closing in on them and to raise his hands, but the suspect kept coming. Both officers had their weapons drawn as they attempted to verbally control the suspect.

While continuing to approach the officers, the suspect suddenly tore off his tee shirt, challenging the officers to fight him. Officer Mahoney stepped over to his cruiser and brought out his K-9 partner, Shagi and gave the suspect a series (six) of warnings stating, "Police trained K-9, stop or I'll send my dog and he will bite you."

On the sixth and final warning, Officer Mahoney told the suspect that this was his last warning to stop his approach. The suspect still had his hands in his pants as he verbally threatened the Officers and moved closer to them. Officer Mahoney directed Shagi to apprehend the suspect and in seconds the K-9 brought the suspect to the ground.

After Officer Mahoney restrained Shagi, Officers DesRoche, Karvelis, and Brandolini approached and attempted to handcuff the suspect, who resisted being handcuffed by placing his left arm under his body as he was laying face down on the ground. This concerned the officers because the suspect could have a gun.

After a struggle, the officers were able to handcuff the suspect. There was no gun.

The suspect, a 51 year old Quincy resident, was transported to Quincy Medical Center where he was treated for injuries sustained during the struggle. Now that the situation was under control, Officer Brandolini interviewed the witnesses and learned the following: the suspect had been drinking in the house and suddenly removed a revolver from his waist band, stated he had cancer, and placed the gun to his right temple.

One witness said that he grabbed the gun in an attempt to take it from the suspect, resulting in numerous rounds being discharged until only a clicking noise was heard. This witness said he believed the gun was empty so he left the apartment, where he was greeted by the Police. A second witness said that she heard the gun go off in the house, so she fled after calling the Police. A third witness said that she came into the room after the gun was empty, took the gun from the suspect, walked outside and placed the gun on the ground.

The suspect was charged with Possession of a Firearm with out FID, Discharging a Firearm within 500 feet of a Dwelling, Defacing Property, Disorderly Person and Resisting Arrest.

Two Losses In One Day Eliminates Quincy From Eastern Regional

By SEAN BRENNAN

Call it Black Wednesday.

Just remember that one tough day of baseball does nothing to tarnish the success of Quincy Youth Baseball's Senior League team this summer.

Quincy was officially eliminated from the double-elimination 2011 Senior League Baseball Eastern Regional tournament in West Deptford, New Jersey on Aug. 10 following two straight losses to Talbot, Maryland (6-4) and Wyoming, Pennsylvania (6-4), closing the book on a Regional playoff run that had begun with such promise.

Entering last Wednesday's first game against Talbot, Quincy was a perfect 3-0 in tournament play. Not only had the local nine bested Stony Point (NY), Waldo (ME) and Felton-Harrington (DE) by a combined score of 24-3, Quincy had set an Eastern Regional record with consecutive shutouts of New York (6-0) and Maine (10-0) and were well on their way to becoming the first Massachusetts team to win this prestigious 15-16-year-old tournament since 1991.

But sometimes even the best-laid plans don't pan out.

Against Talbot in the semifinal round, Quincy took a 4-1 lead in the bottom of the fourth inning on a home run by Tommy McDonald, but a four-run, six-hit top of the fifth by Maryland doomed the home team. One bad inning put Quincy one defeat away from elimination and three wins from a championship.

The price of this loss was an early evening win-or-go-home game with Pennsylvania. Again, Quincy held a late game lead and couldn't hold on. A 4-3 advantage – courtesy of McDonald's second home run of the day - entering the bottom of the sixth quickly became a 6-4 deficit and, despite a top of the seventh rally, Quincy could not come up with the clutch hit when it needed it most and the team's dream of advancing to the 2011 Senior League World Series came up just short.

"We were in great shape heading into Wednesday's games having won three straight," said Manager Mark Jaehnig earlier this week. "Looking back at everything now, Maryland and Pennsylvania just out-pitched and out-hit us in those two games but I couldn't be more proud of the way the kids handled themselves on the field and off the field."

"We worked hard and came with a professional approach to the field," he continued. "Overall it was a wonderful experience and we were all proud to represent Quincy and Massachusetts at the tournament. It was a great run."

Quincy's performance, according to Jaehnig, was the most successful run by any team from the Commonwealth in recent history at this prestigious annual baseball tournament.

Quincy vs. Wyoming (PA)

Pennsylvania scored three runs in the bottom of the sixth inning and relief pitcher Nick O'Brien survived a Quincy rally in the top of the seventh as Wyoming LL earned its spot in the championship round of the Senior Eastern Regional and sent Quincy Youth Baseball's Senior League team home empty-handed.

Trailing 4-3 in the sixth, Wyoming's Jack Granteed singled and Eric Walkowiak followed with a double to put runners at second and third. Quincy elected to try and stay out of a big inning and kept the infield back. The strategy worked – at least temporarily. Wyoming's Jordan Zezza grounded out to Patrick Verhault at second scoring Granteed with the tying run.

With the game now tied at 4-4, Quincy brought the infield in and Adam Romanowski (0-for-7 in Regional action up to this at-bat) cracked a single past McDonald at first base scoring Walkowiak with the go-ahead run. Pennsylvania tacked on an insurance run on a bases loaded walk setting up the climatic top of the seventh.

Verhault (2-for-4) struck out swinging to began the frame before Andrew Jaehnig reached on a fielding error. Scott Higgins pinch ran for Jaehnig. Jason Pekkinen then went down on swing-

Morrisette Post 294: Team Always Comes First

By SEAN BRENNAN

It was only four words but the message couldn't have been any clearer.

"Big Team, Little Me," James Walker said to the nine Post 294 ballplayers gathered at the Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post last Wednesday for the team's end-of-the-year banquet dinner.

Walker, a Morrisette alum (1970-1972), a Quincy High School and Northeastern University graduate and the current Vice President of Sales Operations for Boston Scientific, who earlier in the evening had been recognized by longtime Morrisette manager Raymond Cattaneo and head coach Steve Maze for his dedication and support to the program throughout the decades, congratulated the current core of Post 294 players for their successful run to the American Legion state finals before reminding them that donning the Morrisette uniform brought with it a sense of responsibility, not to oneself, but to the teammates, the coaches and the tradition which they play for.

"I figured out two things playing for Morrisette," he said. "One, you have to love baseball. The other thing is you have to love who you are doing it with. You have to care about your teammates; you have to learn to care more about (them) than you care about yourself. That is a really hard thing to do but I see it in you guys."

"What you owe your teammates is to get better," Walker, continued. "You are learning some things here, I can promise you that. You are learning how to work hard and how to care about teammates more than yourself. That is what this is all about – this was instilled in me by Morrisette because I know what it means to be in that uniform and to conduct myself in a certain way with a certain class."

Walker's words resonated with the players. Although it would be remiss to say that this year's Morrisette team hadn't, in some way, already lived up to the "Big Team, Little Me" ideal.

This team was built to win and bound to fail, which is expected when you assemble the best ballplayers from Quincy (and neighboring high schools) onto one team. Preseason expectations were sky high and questions were posed.

Would a collection of kids from seven different schools – six high schools and one college – really be able to come together as teammates and produce at a level many thought and some doubted they would be able to? Could players who started for their high school and college teams accept the roles they were assigned for the good of Morrisette? Would the pressure of expectations be too much to handle?

18 kids answered these questions with authority. Morrisette was the definition of team this summer. There was no learning curve as the program came together, quickly. On the way to a 15-3 record and a first place finish in District 6 East, Morrisette opened its schedule with eight straight victories to earn a spot in the Zone 6 best-of-three playoffs against Franklin (won 2-0) and followed that up by sweeping Hawkeye, Hyde Park, and Somerset in the South Sectionals to advance to the American Legion state finals for the first time since 1995.

There would be no state championship – Post 294 was eliminated following losses to Lowell and South Attleboro – but the early season questions were aced because this team accepted the "Big Team, Little Me" mantra.

"We had a tremendous year," said a proud Maze to the crowded room. "First place in the league in our division. One of our goals was to be in first place and we were. Another one of our goals was to make the state tournament and we did – these kids worked hard every single day."

"This was the first year that we had one legion team in Quincy," he continued, praising the seamless transition of his troops into one cohesive unit. "It was the first time in 15 years that we have been in the state tournament and the guys that came from Quincy Legion stepped right in. There was no feeling out process."

"We can make a lot of noise in the state tournament (next year). You guys who are coming back will keep the tradition going."

Cattaneo, the longtime legendary manager of Post 294, who, according to anyone you talk to regarding Morrisette matters is and always had been the final word, expressed his appreciation for a job well done by the team this season, but like any great leader, Cattaneo was already looking forward to next season when Post 294 has the potential to return 15 of the 18 ballplayers from this year's state final roster.

"Do you realize that we have 15 of 18 that can come back – if they all come back?" he asked to no one in particular. "They better come back. We can do something next year, too. This is a great bunch of kids."

"You guys had a great season," Cattaneo continued, this time directing his words to the table of players leaning on his every word. "This is the best record we've had in a long time, probably since 1975 (Morrisette's one-and-only World Series team). We went 20-5; it was a great year, good job. It is all over, unfortunately, but if you need anything I'll be there for you."

The sense of brotherhood amongst players who pull the Morrisette jersey on does not end when a Post 294 career ends. It is a pedigree (Walker's word) you carry forever - once Morrisette, always Morrisette. Three of this season's standouts: Colin Ryan, Matt Goreham and Leroy Wallace, suited up for a final time this summer for Post 294 and all three of them contributed to the successful season.

Wallace, a QHS and University of Maine-Orono product, was the team's starting second baseman after playing for Quincy Legion last season while Goreham, a Catholic Memorial School standout and soon-to-be Northeastern University ballplayer, was Post 294's No. 1 starting pitcher, occasional first baseman and the team's most dangerous power bat. Both players were instrumental to the state final run.

"The best part of your team is always the older guys," said Maze.

Ryan is a Morrisette veteran. For three years, the North Quincy all-star who will be playing his collegiate ball for Suffolk University epitomized what it means to play for Post 294 all while playing a clean shortstop and racking up the hits as if he was a pop star.

"Colin is an all-around player and an all-around person from an all-around family," praised Maze after calling out Ryan's name last during his recognition of all nine players who were in attendance. "You hit a ground ball to this kid and you were out. He batted second for me for three years and played shortstop for me for three years. I cannot believe that I have to delete this kid's name from the lineup. Saying he did a great job would be an understatement."

Following a dinner catered by Frank Brillo Catering of Quincy and after Walker, Cattaneo and Maze's spoke to those gathered, the team, led by Ryan, presented the coaching staff of Maze, John Sullivan (bench coach), Billy Walker (catcher's coach), Andy Santos (asst. coach/first base coach), John Folino (pitching coach), and Ray Eckbaulm (advanced scout/asst. coach/scorekeeper) with a small gift of thanks, which was a classy touch.

More words of appreciation from Coach Maze to the parents, the volunteers and the Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post members in attendance closed out the evening, but not before Maze – a former Morrisette player in his own right – had these final words for next year's team: "I don't want to just go to the state tournament, I want to win it."

ing strikes for the second out. Josh Hayward (1-for-2, RBI) walked to put runners at second and first but Robbie Munroe popped out to end the game.

McDonald finished 1-for-3 with a home run and Madison Barnwell went 1-for-2 with a walk in the elimination game loss. Quincy finished with five hits.

Dan Cobban (5-2/3 innings), Tom Garland and Pekkinen pitched well for Quincy.

Quincy vs. Talbot (MD)

Tommy McDonald's solo home run in the bottom of the fourth lifted Quincy to a 4-1 advantage but undefeated Maryland scored four runs during the top of the fifth to walk away with a 6-4 victory – setting Talbot in a position where it needed one win to capture the 2011 championship.

Following McDonald's (1-for-2, RBI) blast, which came off starting pitcher Brady Jackson, Talbot turned the game over to reliever Bobby Schultz. It was a good move. Schultz (three strikeouts, two hits) came on to pitch the final 3-2/3 innings, shutting down a strong Quincy lineup when it counted the most.

Against McDonald in the fifth, Maryland recorded six hits, including Tayvon Blake's RBI single that broke a 4-4 tie. Blake added a solo home run to right in the seventh for an insurance run. Quincy threatened in the sixth, but stranded a pair of runners in the frame.

Quincy made a final push in the last of the seventh. Patrick Verhault (1-for-3, run) grounded out to start the inning before Andrew Jaehnig (2-for-4, RBI, run) doubled to right-center. Jason Pekkinen struck out swinging against Schultz but a passed ball allowed him to advance to first and Jaehnig to advance to third. A Josh Hayward ground out moved Pekkinen to second with two outs, but Mike Gallotto's ground out to shortstop ended the threat.

Robbie Munroe (hit) and Madison Barnwell (1-for-2, run, walk) contributed to Quincy's six-hit attack while Tom Garland (strikeout) and Barnwell pitched well in relief of McDonald.

2011 Senior League Eastern Regional Notes

Quincy finished Eastern Regional play with a 3-2 overall record. QYB's Senior League representative ended tournament play at 11-3 overall.

Quincy Cyclists And Volunteers Helped PMC Ride Toward $34 Million Goal

The 32nd annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge was a great success for the quarter million contributors, riders, including 20 from Quincy, and volunteers who participated. More than one million cancer patients around the globe will benefit from the millions of dollars raised for research and treatment.

On Aug. 6-7, cyclists from eight countries and 37 states – including seven-time Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong, Massachusetts Senators John Kerry and Scott Brown, and 350 cancer survivors – rode one of the 11 routes ranging from 25 to 190 miles.

The goal was to raise $34 million for cancer research and treatment at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through its Jimmy Fund and bring the PMC's 32-year contribution to $337 million. In November, the PMC will present its 2011 contribution to Dana-Faber.

"The PMC attracts passionate cyclists and those committed to raising money for cancer research," said PMC Founder and Executive Director Billy Starr. "We were pleased to have Lance Armstrong take his rightful place, as a survivor and fundraiser, on PMC weekend."

The 2011 event ran exceptionally smoothly, despite a rainy second day, according to Starr. "The PMC is a machine built on hard work, passion and integrity. The PMC professional staff, volunteer head staff, and crew of thousands of volunteers are unmatched in the professionalism and grace with which they execute every task. Together we have created a PMC culture that is the gold standard of the athletic fundraising industry."

Volunteers, including a number from Quincy, filled dozens of roles during PMC weekend. From organizing luggage and unloading trucks to cooking meals and manner water stops, volunteers are deeply rooted in the PMC culture.

No single athletic event raises or contributes more money to charity than the PMC. The PMC gives 100% of every rider-raised dollar directly to the Jimmy Fund, a rate of fundraising that is nearly unequaled within the $3 billion athletic fundraising event industry. The PMC generates 60% of the Jimmy Fund's annual revenue and is its largest singe contributor.

The PMC is presented by the Red Sox Foundation and the New Balance Foundation. The 33rd annual PMC is scheduled for Aug. 4-5, 2012. Registration will open in January through www.pmc.org.

TAKING A STAND!

Hunters using tree stands should take precautions that may help them avoid serious injury. The National Bowhunter Education Foundation's Project Stand reports that as many as 30% of hunters who use tree stands experience an incident at some point. More than half of hunters using tree stands do not use a "fall arresting device," which helps explain why about one-quarter of those falling from tree stands suffer serious injuries. Not only do these injuries include bone fractures (most often to the hip or lower extremities) as well as torso, shoulder, and other upper-extremity injuries, but significant head and spinal cord injuries also occur. With this potential for injury in mind, the use of safety harnesses is highly recommended.

41st Annual City of Quincy Tennis Tournament

The Quincy Recreation Department announced last week that the Quincy Credit Union would once again sponsor the Annual City of Quincy Tennis Tournament. This traditional fall classic is scheduled for the 41st consecutive year to crown the best resident tennis players in ten different events.

According to Director of Recreation Barry Welch, this is the 15th year that the Credit Union had provided the financial support that continues to make this event possible. The tournament is believed to be the longest running municipal tournament in New England.

"We are indebted to the Quincy Credit Union for recognizing this unique event that provides enjoyment for the families that make up the Quincy tennis community," Welch stated. "The sponsorship and generosity allows a positive recreational program with great benefit to continue and a new generation of players the opportunity to demonstrate their tennis skills."

The tournament applications will be mailed to past participants and can be picked up at the Recreation Department, the Quincy Credit Union, City Hall or at boxes located at the lighted tennis courts throughout the city.

The deadline for applications is Sept. 9 with matches posted Sept. 14. Matches are played in ten divisions at the Russell Park tennis courts at the rear of Quincy High School starting Sept. 16 and will continue nights and weekends with a championship weekend to be held Sept. 24-25 weather permitting.

Additional information can be obtained at QuincyRec.com or by calling the main office at 617-376-1394.

New Athletic Award For QPS Student-Athletes

Quincy Public School Athletic Director announced this week that beginning this spring (2012) student-athletes will receive a special certificate that honors those who participated in all three sports seasons (fall, winter, spring) at the high school level – regardless of level.

This award will be named after benefactors Attorney George Burke for Quincy High School and Dr. Allan Yacubian for North Quincy High School. Burke has been a tremendous benefactor to QHS athletics and recently had the brand new weight room, located off the end of the year-old gymnasium names after him while Yacubian has likewise donated much to NQHS athletics and in fact is the model for which the Mr. Yakoo mascot was designed.

The award will be presented each spring to athletes of all grades who participate in a sport in the fall, winter and spring seasons.

Recreation Dept. Crowns Pepsi Hot Shot Champions

After being postponed due to torrential downpours, the best young shooters in Quincy came together at the Fenno Street basketball courts to try and earn the title of Pepsi Hot Shots Champion.

There was no shortage of participants, all of which had previously qualified the week before in their respective district finals, and this abundance of talented shooters created stiff competition and parody across the board. The field is broken up into three age divisions, Midgets, Juniors, and Seniors, meaning that all involved compete against those who are alike in age and skill level.

Pepsi Hot Shots is a basketball game that calls for participants to shoot, one person at a time, from multiple designated spots around the hoop, each of which has a different point value. Each shooters is given one minute to complete the task of accumulating as many points as they can and after two rounds of shooting whoever has the highest combined two round score is announced the winner. It is a game the requires both a great deal of shooting proficiency and stamina, not to mention the ability to perform under pressure in a crunch time situation.

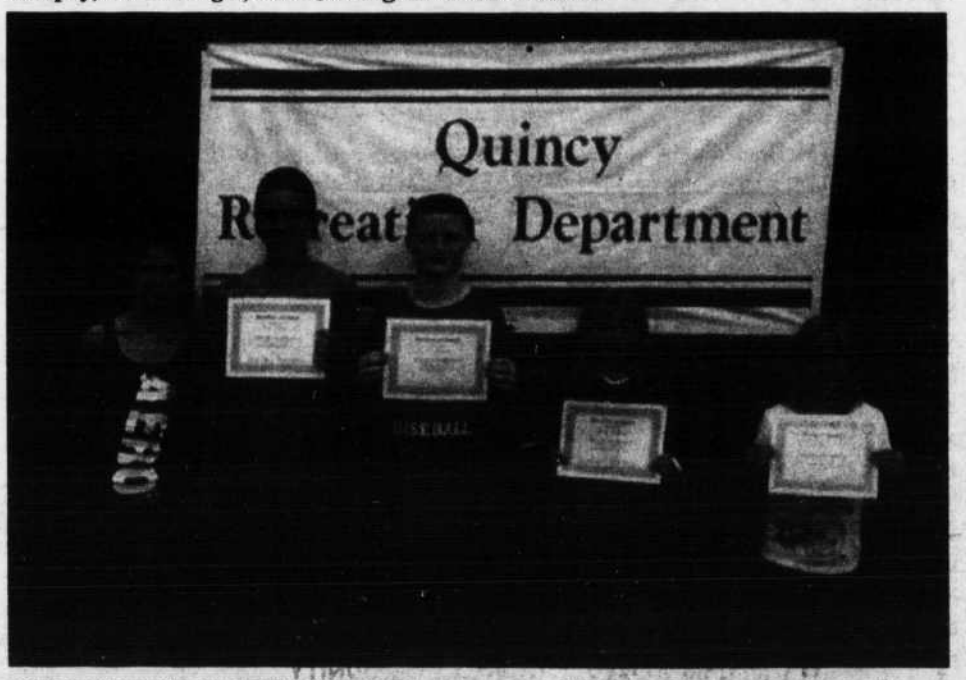

In the Midget boys' division, several players put up big scores but in the end it was Chris Jaehnig who won the title, beating out Franco Calabro. After a tight race through two rounds in the Junior boys' bracket, Aidan Golden hit big shot after big shot to defeat runner-up Thomas Jaehnig, who even in defeat showed a great deal of class and sportsmanship by congratulating Golden and truly appreciating the second place finish. In the Senior boys' division, Kyle Murphy edged Tim Durgin in a competitive final.

Nicole Jorgensen competed uncontested in the Senior girls' division but she showed what a great sport she was by hustling around the court to put up a solid two round score.

In the girls' Junior division, Kerin Coleman and Bridget Durgin battled for championship rights. Durgin was excellent but Coleman was almost perfect and earned the title while in the girls' Midget division Eileen Durgin came away with a first place finish while Melissa and Caitlin Ainsley tied for second place.

A Thought For The Week

SCOTT DEWARE

Have you ever noticed how some people seldom, if ever, make premature decisions? How they do not make decisions that cannot be made effective? How, if pressured for a decision, they often say "No" because they know "No" can later be changed more easily to "Yes;" less easy to change from "Yes" to "No?" How when they make a bad decision, they blame themselves, not others?

Lincoln illustrated a good formula for making good decisions. When he was severely criticized he said, "I do the best I know how; the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me all right, what is said about me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would made no difference."

On that formula there is seldom any need to hesitate, or 'hem or haw.' Base firm decisions on your best judgment, skills and abilities given you by God – and do the best you can . . . People who make good decisions know how true this is..

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A troubling situation takes a positive turn and moves toward a resolution that should please you and your supporters. Meanwhile, make time to deal with new domestic issues.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) It's a good time to reassess your goals and consider shifting directions. Remember to keep an open mind, and be prepared to make changes as new opportunities arise.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Rely on your strong Mercury aspect to help you close that communication gap before it becomes too wide to cross. A sibling or other family member has news.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You're about to get off that emotional roller coaster and start experiencing more stability than you've been used to. This is a good time to let someone new into your life.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Good news: A trusted friend comes through for you. But you still need to shed that last scrap of self-doubt and once more become the cool, confident Cat we all know and love.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Things should be getting back to a less hectic pace. Enjoy the more peaceful atmosphere. You earned it. But don't forget about those still-unresolved issues.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A more positive family relationship develops as misunderstandings are explained away. A job situation appears promising, but check it out before you act on it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Congratulations. That on-the-job situation is working out as you'd hoped. Now's a good time to relax and to enjoy the company of family and close friends.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) You might feel as if you're caught in an emotional tug-of-war. But don't be rushed into a decision on either side. Wait for more facts before you act.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) The Goat's usually high level of self-confidence is brimming over these days. This should help you deal with a situation that you've avoided for far too long. Go for it.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Relationships become more intense. But be careful not to be pushed into decisions you're not comfortable with. Remember: You're the one in charge of your life.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You need to show more confidence in your ability to reach your goals. Make that long-delayed decision, and avoid floundering around in a sea of self-doubt.

BORN THIS WEEK: Although you appear to be strongly opinionated, you can also be open to other ideas -- so long as they are presented with logic and clarity.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Quincy August Moon Festival Showcases Asian Culture

By SCOTT JACKSON

On most days, Hancock Street in Quincy Center is packed with traffic. But Sunday it was packed with people, up to ten thousand of them, for the August Moon Festival.

The event, in its 24th year, was an "excellent opportunity to learn about Asian culture from dance to music to food," said John Brothers, the Executive Director of Quincy Asian Resources (QAR), the organization that hosts the event. "Everybody loves the food," he added.

Brothers was at the center of the festival, both figuratively and literally. He oversaw a team of 150 volunteers who put together the whole event. And his booth was located in the middle of Hancock Street, in front of his organization's office.

Though he runs it now, Brothers, who worked in community development for the YMCA before taking his current post, doesn't take credit for starting it. "August Moon was Tackey Chan's event," he said.

Now a state representative, Chan helped found QAR 10 years ago, and served as

Koch Pleased With Pilot Program

57 School Bus Scofflaws Snared By Camera Patrol

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Scofflaws ignoring the flashing red lights on a school bus in Quincy may face hefty fines and even license loss in the future, thanks to a pilot program approved by Mayor Thomas Koch last spring.

Through that program, Smart Bus of Providence attached a video device to one Quincy school bus last spring and, over a 55-day period, taped 57 drivers ignoring that school bus' flashing red lights that remind motorists to stop.

Jill Mienke of Smart Bus said Quincy actually had the highest numbers of offenders relative to the number of days in the pilot program which was also conducted in Seekonk and Medford.

"Relatively speaking we have seen the most violations on that route," Mienke said of the Quincy camera which was installed in April and operated through the summer.

3-Year-Old Boy Recovering After Nearly Drowning In Pool

A little boy's cries never sounded so sweet as they did last Sunday when those cries announced he was recovering after nearly drowning in a backyard pool in Merrymount.

Quincy Fire Captain Dan Gorman said the little boy cried as he was put in an ambulance and those cries signaled a near-miracle as the three-year-old had not had a pulse and was not breathing just moments earlier.

"I wasn't hopeful," said Gorman who administered CPR to the child who started breathing after about five minutes. Gorman was off-duty at the time.

The miracle contin-

Ross Parking Deck Demolition Underway

ROSS GARAGE EXTENSION parking deck – a key predevelopment activity for the New Quincy Center redevelopment project – is being demolished this week. The street level parking area will remain a surface parking location and continue to be part of the larger Ross Garage parking facility (visible in the background, left.) Demolition and surface lot reconstruction activities are expected to take one month.

Demolition of a little-used parking deck extension on downtown's Ross Garage is now underway in a project that will ultimately save more than $2 million as part of the utility overhaul of a redeveloped Quincy Center, Mayor Thomas Koch's Office said Tuesday.

NASDI, LLC is performing the $400,000 demolition, which will see the Ross Garage Extension leveled and transformed into a surface level parking lot. The demolition is necessary so a major comues, according to Richard Mullens who said Tuesday that he and his wife Susan visited the youngster in a Boston hospital and were "overjoyed with happiness."

"He's doing great and well on the road to recovery," said Mullens who had hosted a Sunday party at his Narraganset Road home for his one-year-old grandchild when the accident occurred.

"My wife was up there," said Gorman, a neighbor of the Mullens. Gorman said his wife called him to the scene.

"They had pulled him out of the pool. There were a couple of nurses there. They were assisting him on the front lawn," said Gorman. "The baby was unresponsive, no pulse, no breathing."

Gorman noted he kept calling the little boy a baby because he was so young, had no pulse, and was not breathing when he took over the CPR.

Firefighters, police and an ambulance arrived within minutes. By that time, Gorman said the little boy had restarted breathing and then there was a pulse.

Then he cried, a happy sound for all.

"Our 911 system worked well," said Gorman of the swift response and Mullens agreed, "Everybody played a role. I'm overjoyed."

munications trunk line can be relocated as part of the new Quincy Center project.

The trunk line relocation is a major undertaking that will take more than a year to complete, prompting City officials and Street-Works Development to develop a plan to fast-track the project. After negotiations with the City, Verizon agreed to pay the $2.4 million construction tab for the new trunk line, while the City agreed to move forward with demolition so the construction footprint could be available as soon as possible, officials said.

"This project is an important and necessary part of the infrastructure renewal of our downtown – we are moving this historic redevelopment forward every day and we are doing it in a way that makes sense logistically and financially," said Mayor Koch.

The City is paying the $400,000 demolition cost up-front from previously existing downtown financings, and the cost will ultimately be added to the cost that Street-Works will pay for the garage property as part of the development agreement with the City, officials said.

NASDI submitted a traffic and construction management plan to the City, but officials do not expect major disruptions because of the demolition.

The Ross Garage Extension provides 199 parking spaces, of which 78 will be replaced after the demolition with a surface-level parking lot. A study of parking availability conducted as part of the downtown redevelopment efforts showed that even at its peak, the Ross Garage used 630 spaces – about 100 more than will still exist after the demolition, officials said.

City Receives $978,300 Grant For Downtown Revitalization

The city's Downtown Development Project has been awarded a $978,300 federal grant by the U.S. Department of Transportation that will be used to plan and design pedestrian and bicycle improvements in the vicinity of the new Adams Green public gathering space.

Keating has been lobbying for support of the project to various federal agencies since taking office eight months ago.

The grant, which is part of the Transportation, Community and System Preservation Program, will go to the Massachusetts Department of Transportation for the design and engineering of the Adams Green public space.

Specifically, the funds will improve the intersections supporting the Green as well as pedestrian and bicycle thruways in the Hancock Street area near City Hall and United First Parish Church.

"The Quincy Downtown Development project is a model for what we should be doing across the country – upgrading our infrastructure while preserving and promoting our heritage," Keating said. "These types of projects improve our communities and local economies. But most importantly, they put people back to work with honest, good-paying jobs that will benefit all residents.

"This grant is a tremendous step forward in the project's progress, and I am happy to celebrate this development with the mayor (Tom Koch) and all our local representatives who have been working hard to bring the downtown project to fruition."

The city will receive the funds under the Federal Highway Administration's Transportation Community System (TCSP) program.

The TSCP grant application was prepared by Kristina Johnson, principal planner of the city's Department of Planning and Community Development under the director of Frank Tramontozzi, engineering manager for the Quincy Center District and Dennis Harrington, planning director.

Traffic and other pertinent information was supplied by Stephen Chrusciel, director of Construction Services for Street-Works Development, LLC and their traffic consultant TED.

Quincy will utilize the TCSP funds to evaluate the sidewalk treatments and the streetscape environment along:

- Hancock Street between Adams Street and Granite Street;
- Washington Street between McGrath Highway and Hancock Street; and along
- Burgin Parkway between Dimmock Street and the west side of the Quincy Center MBTA station.

Further, Quincy will utilize the TCSP funds to complete the design of the pedestrian improvements necessary to support the creation of the Adams Green public space; enhance the livability of the revitalized downtown; and support the overarching goals of the Quincy Center urban revitalization effort.

The project will be carried out in close coordination with the previously approved Adams Green Transportation Improvement. In December 2010, the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization programmed $800,000 of a $6 million earmark to allow Quincy to begin the design of many of the pedestrian, intersection, and transportation improvements needed to support the design of Adams Green public space.

Local leaders labeled the grant an important step toward revitalizing the downtown.

"This grant is an important part of the foundation for what will be the most substantial economic development project in our city's history, creating thousands of new construction and permanent jobs and bringing more than $1 billion in private investment to the heart of our downtown," Mayor Koch said.

"Congressman Keating has brought to Washington a tireless commitment to job creation and economic growth on behalf of our city, and I am grateful for his hard work and the work of Senator (John) Kerry and Senator (Scott) Brown, and I look forward to continuing to work together as this unprecedented project moves forward."

"This is great news," Harrington said. "Adams Green is the highlight of a visionary strategy for reimagining and reinvigorating Downtown Quincy. The project will provide a centerpiece of the downtown urban redevelopment by connecting the historic treasures of the Church of the Presidents and the Hancock Cemetery with transit, the commercial spine of Hancock Street, and the National Park Service attractions," Harrington added.

KEEPING YOUR JEWELRY IN GOOD REPAIR

Diamonds may be "forever," but the settings that hold them in place may require regular tightening or re-tipping. Otherwise, a loose setting may cause an expensive gemstone to be lost forever. Similarly, pearl necklaces must be restrung and knotted so that breakage does not lead to loss. Watches also need repairs and new batteries, while gemstones of any type often require cleaning (utilizing the appropriate method). It is also sometimes necessary to replace a clasp on a necklace or bracelet, add or remove broken links, or resize a ring. In all cases, the expertise of a knowledgeable jeweler is needed to keep jewelry in top shape. The repair services of an experienced jeweler are an integral part of customer satisfaction.

We offer expert repair services for your watches and fine jewelry. Simple beauty or bold splendor, whatever your choice, any of our wide selection of jewelry will look fabulous on you. We offer a variety of jewelry, including rings, pins, bracelets; earrings and necklaces. You will find all of these stunning pieces displayed in our showcases at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. If you have any questions about the exquisite pieces we offer please feel free to contact us at 617-773-3636.

Free Service Notifies Residents Of Public Safety Emergencies

Sheriff Urges Residents To Sign Up For Emergency Notification Program

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti urges residents to register with his Code Red Rapid Alert Notification System (RANS), which directly notifies residents about public safety emergencies via telephone voicemail, email, text message, Twitter or Facebook.

The RANS program – which is free of charge to all county residents – notifies residents about flood warnings, hazardous material dangers, missing person alerts and other situations that local officials deem to be public safety emergencies.

The notification system calls residents' home phones via databases available from the phone company. People wishing to add their cell phone numbers or email addresses must voluntarily register their information with the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office by visiting the NCSO website at www.norfolksheriff.com and clicking on "Rapid Alert Notification System." The NCSO keeps all such information confidential and does not share it with anyone.

To receive alerts through Facebook, search for the "NCSO RANS" page on Facebook and click on the icon to become a friend. People on the Twitter network can search for "norfolkcorans" and then click to follow.

"We have updated the RANS software to allow us to send the alerts to people by whatever means they prefer, such as text message or email or the social media in addition to calling on a household land line," Sheriff Bellotti said. "As people change their methods of communication, we are changing our technology to stay ahead of the curve."

The RANS program is run by Sheriff Bellotti as a public safety service to all of Norfolk County and was originally financed in part through a federal Homeland Security grant. Local public safety officials contact the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office when they determine they need to send out an announcement, and Sheriff Bellotti's RANS officer carries out the task.

The Code Red software is capable of making 1,000 phone calls per minute, and the calls can be made countywide or by municipality or by drawing a boundary around a certain affected area, around a river flood plain, for example.

"This is an exceptional service, and I hope everyone will take advantage of it," Bellotti said.

"We live in one of America's leading technology centers, and this is just one way to make good practical use of the great developments that have occurred around here when it comes to informing about a public safety emergency."

William Ryan Sailing and Boating Facility Renovated

MAYOR THOMAS KOCH is joined by Park Commissioner Kristen Powers and Recreation Director Barry Welch and dozens of participants in the City's youth boating program to officially open the renovated William Ryan Sailing and Boating Facility. The project, funded by an existing park improvement plan through the City's hotel room tax, transformed the Ryan facility behind Pageant Field to an environmentally friendly, safe, and functional home for the City's popular youth boating and sailing program. The new facility includes a new pier, docks, improved parking, and a new public shade pavilion.

Determined to pay off your mortgage as quickly as possible?

This loan is for you!

There are so many good reasons to love the 15-Year Mortgage. For some people, it's about being debt-free. Others want the mortgage paid off by the time the kids go to college or before they retire. Some see paying off their mortgage quickly as a kind of "forced" savings. Here's the simple fact: If you can swing the somewhat-higher monthly payments, a 15-Year Mortgage knocks years off your original loan. Your equity builds very quickly. And you pay thousands less in interest, compared to a longer-term mortgage loan. Rates are still at historic lows. How much longer? Who knows. If a 15-Year sounds good to you, let's talk. Soon! Come see us or call Angela Blanchard or Richard Coleman at 617-471-0750. Or apply at colonialfed.com - click the Loans tab. (Also available for debt consolidation and for new home purchases.)

Long Island: There Must Be A Way

Whenever I hear a news report about Long Island – especially the ongoing disagreement between some Quincy officials and the City of Boston over public access – my thoughts drift to the Tall Ship's Parade of Sail nearly 20 years ago.

I also wonder why both cities can't hammer out an agreement that would provide access to Boston-owned Long Island without jeopardizing public safety.

The Tall Ships episode of July 1992 clearly shows where there's a will, there's a way.

On that warm summer Saturday some 19 years ago, 1,000 Quincy residents – familiar with the great vantage point of Boston Harbor from Long Island – risked police arrest to get to their favorite viewing area for the Tall Ships Parade of Sail. I was among the group, covering the event for The Sun.

The day before the sail, then Boston Mayor Ray Flynn and then Quincy Mayor James Sheets had agreed to allow a limited amount of Quincy residents onto adjacent Moon Island to view the ships from the Boston Fire Academy. Long Island – a much better vantage point to watch the parade of sail because of its closer proximity to Boston Harbor – remained off limits.

That was the plan.

But, it didn't go that way.

In hindsight, letting people onto Moon Island – which is connected to Squantum over a two-lane roadway over the causeway – turned out to be an open door to Long Island.

About an hour before the parade was set to sail, several hundred people showed up at the guard shack at the entrance to Moon Island. The city had prepared for the spectators by bringing in security and medical personnel, fresh drinking water and portable toilets.

Quincy contacted the MBTA that shuttled buses from the guard shack to Moon Island. Thirty minutes later, as many as 1,000 people had gathered at the Fire Academy.

But then the weather changed.

And so did the collective mood.

As the spectators watched the U.S.S. Constitution move into the harbor to lead the parade, thick, dark clouds and fog descended over the water, reducing visibility from Moon Island. The crowd – which could see the Long Island bridge – was not happy with their vantage point.

There were also some people – other than media – rumored on Long Island.

"It was clear people we're not going to be happy viewing the ships from Moon Island, particularly when you could see the Long Island bridge," Sheets told The Sun after the parade.

About 75 to 100 people broke through one police blockade on Moon Island, and marched half-way across the bridge to Long Island where they were met by National Guardsmen.

Several residents crawled under a military Jeep that blocked the bridge. Young children and a woman with a baby carriage squeezed past guardsmen who linked their arms to form a human barricade.

Anticipating a possible confrontation, Sheets notified then Police Chief Francis Mullen who contacted the supervisor for the Boston Police Department.

"I made a decision then that I could not have 200 people blocking the Long Island bridge," Sheets said. "These are my people and when I saw them on the bridge I made a decision that I wasn't going to leave their fate in anyone else's hands."

The mayor then reached the barricade. He informed the guard that he was the mayor of Quincy. Sheets spoke to the ranking Boston police officer at the scene and they decided to let the people through and to reposition the guard and police personnel to the seawall area at Long Island.

Spectators then walked the 2.5-mile route – many toting coolers, cameras and lawn chairs. Water, portable toilets and other supplies were transported from Moon Island to the viewing area on Long Island.

The dark clouds were some kind of omen. As the first spectators arrived at their new viewing spot, the clouds lifted and the sun came out.

Police and the National Guard prevented spectators from climbing the hill near the Light House, a dangerous part of the island because of sinkholes.

The crowd – which could have become unruly under the circumstances – was well behaved. No arrests, problems or injuries were reported.

To transport the people back to Squantum, National Guard vehicles from Boston and Quincy shuttled spectators from Long Island to the end of the bridge. From there, they boarded MBTA buses that brought them to the guard shack.

By 4 p.m., most of the crowd had left the island. A few hours later, the site was free from spectators and litter.

"I think everything worked out well," Sheets said summarizing the day. "I'm glad the story ended happily. It's an occasion no one will ever forget."

In the days leading up to the Parade of Sail, city officials had expressed frustration that Long Island was not going to be accessible for the public to view the event.

AYERS

One of them was then Ward 6 City Councillor Bruce Ayers.

Nearly 20 years later – and now as a state representative – Ayers is still waging a vocal campaign to open Long Island for the public.

"I strongly believe that this island has been neglected by Boston officials and should be used for its full potential with recreational, historical and environmental activities and purposes," Ayers told The Sun last week. "It should be open to the public for fishing, walking trails, historical stops, camping, hiking and tourism."

Ayers also advocates razing the Long Island Bridge and in its place implementing a ferry service. He said estimates to repair the 50-year-old bridge have been pegged at $3 million.

"A ferry service is a far safer and more economical means of transportation. 'Investing' millions of dollars in patch-work revamps to the bridge, time and time again, is a useless effort with no long-term sustainable benefit. It makes no fiscal sense and only perpetuates an extreme public safety hazards," he added.

Today, Long Island continues to be off limits to the public.

Formerly the site of Boston's poor house and Long Island Hospital, the island is now used for overnight housing for homeless, additional rehabilitation programs, and as a summer camp for 800 inner city children from Boston.

Boston officials have shown no willingness to consider even some limited public access to the 225-acre Long Island that is part of the Boston Harbor Islands National Recreation Area. The island is steeped in history. It was originally populated by Native American Indians in the 17th century. During the American Revolutionary War it was occupied by British forces until the evacuation of Boston. Historical buildings and cemeteries dating from the Civil War to the Cold War can be found on the island.

So much to see and experience but for the most part the island remains a mystery.

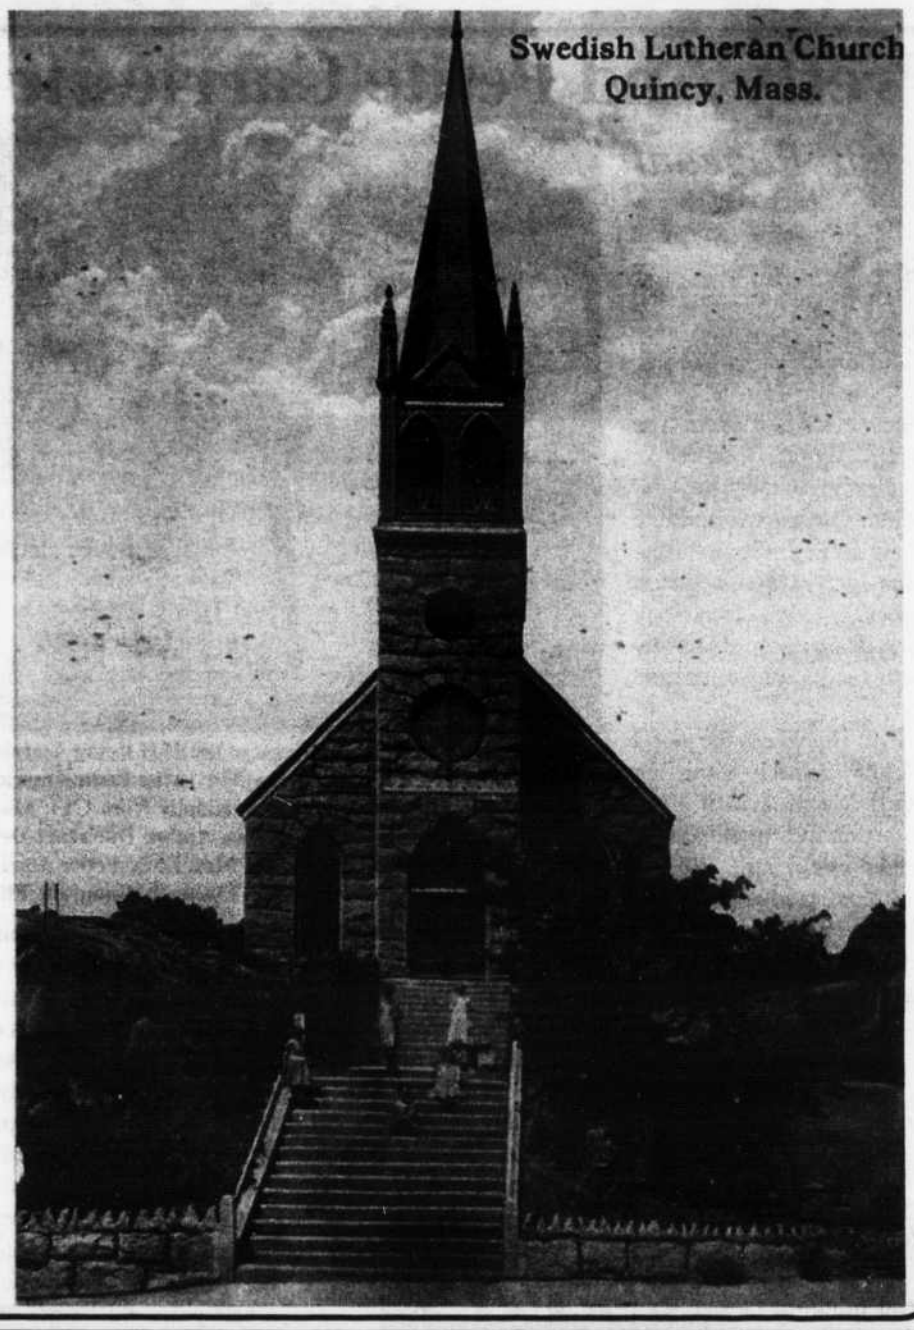

I think the Parade of Sail incident illustrates that Long Island does not have to be a site of conflict. There should be a way to reach a compromise so that the public can visit the island – perhaps on specific Saturdays during the summer.

Where there's a will . . . there's a way.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1911 postcard view of what is now known as the Faith Lutheran Church on Granite Street near Quincy Center. Sometimes known as "The Church on the Rock," it was organized in 1889 as the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Salem Church. The first pastor and church members quarried granite for the church from the ledge it sits on. The quarrymen were available because there was a general strike at all Quincy quarries at the time. The church was completed in 1894 at a total cost of $8,000 including the land. A vestry wing was added in 1914. Over the years granite walls have been built and filled with soil to allow flowers, grass, shrubs and trees to grow on the ledge. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Congratulations And A Thank You For Dan Raymondi

I speak for many residents in the Quincy Point area when I congratulate Dan Raymondi on his recent appointment to the DPW. Those of us who have lived in Quincy Point for many years owe a tip of the hat and a deep bow of thanks to his most dedicated Ward Councillor who so faithfully represented the concerns of his Quincy constituency.

Dan was always there for the individuals and families whose voice and concerns might otherwise have gone unheard.

Whether addressing problems on the street level, consulting with residents on thorny neighborhood issues, or offering advice and support, Dan always stood by the residents of his Ward, even if it sometimes cost him in political capital. In mediating conflict, he always tried to do what was right rather than what was politically expedient – a rare quality of character for politicians these days.

At a time when politics itself is frequently discredited, this neighborhood son always put the greater good of the community first. He understood throughout his political career that service to your constituents supersedes private gain.

No concern among any Ward Two resident was too small for Dan to return a phone call. When you needed him, Dan rolled up his sleeves and helped you. Quincy taxpayers, the elderly, our youth and their schools, as well as others, all know this.

The esteem in which he is held is certainly a respect that has been earned. From many grateful Quincy residents, thank you, Danny.

Quincy's Yesterdays

After 12-Year Wait, Mass Transit Returns

By FRANK McCAULEY

This Week
1971
39 Years Ago

Mass. Transportation returns to Quincy Sept. 1 for the first time in 12 years when the long-awaited MBTA South Shore extension opens officially.

A variety of festivities are planned at the North Quincy, Wollaston and Quincy Center stations to mark the big occasion.

It will be the first time trains have operated between Quincy and Boston since the defunct Old Colony Line shut down in 1959.

The multi-million dollar MBTA line is a "first" for Quincy – its first rapid transit commuter service ever.

On hand to greet the new MBTA trains will be dignitaries headed by Governor Francis W. Sargent, former Governor John A. Volpe, now Secretary of Transportation, Mayor James R. McIntyre and City Council members as well as officials of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

South Shore residents will be re-introduced to trains after a 12-year absence with free rides from Quincy to the "South Portal" interchange near Columbia station as guests of the MBTA.

SARGENT PROCLAIMS SEPT. 1 'SUPPORT TRANSPORTATION DAY'

Governor Francis W. Sargent issued a proclamation declaring Sept. 1 as "Support Public Transportation Day."

Urging all citizens of the Commonwealth to take part in the event, Sargent noted that Sept. 1 marks the inauguration of rapid transit service to the South Shore by the MBTA.

Big Honor For Pretty And Petite Carrie Jie Sunde

Wins 'National Teen Petite America' Pageant

Carrie Jie Sunde was starting to think that winning beauty pageants was only an accomplishment that tall women 5'7" and over could achieve, but that theory quickly changed Aug. 6 when Carrie was crowned Teen Petite America.

Carrie joined the stage in Waterbury, CT with 20 other contestants, 5'6" and under, vying for the title of Teen, Miss, Mrs., and Lady and Classic Petite America. Representing the Teen division from Massachusetts, Carrie wove her way through four different rounds of judging including panel interview (40%), high fashion wear (25%), evening gown (25%), and onstage question (10%). Headed by Kimberly-White Geremia, the Petite America Pageant system offers participants the opportunity to win a national title and promote different causes that they feel passionate about.

THERE SHE IS . . . Carrie Jie Sunde is crowned by last year's Teen Petite America 2010 Christina Caporuscio.

Before receiving her national title Carrie reigned as Teen Massachusetts Petite America volunteering and promoting numerous non-profit organizations. Some of these included: The Alzheimer's Association, The Aids Action Committee, The Jimmy Fund, The ARC of Massachusetts, and the Massachusetts General Hospital for Children-pediatric oncology and hematology unit. Carrie assisted mostly with fundraising walks and events.

No stranger to the world of little women doing big things, Carrie is all of 4'11" and continues to make herself known.

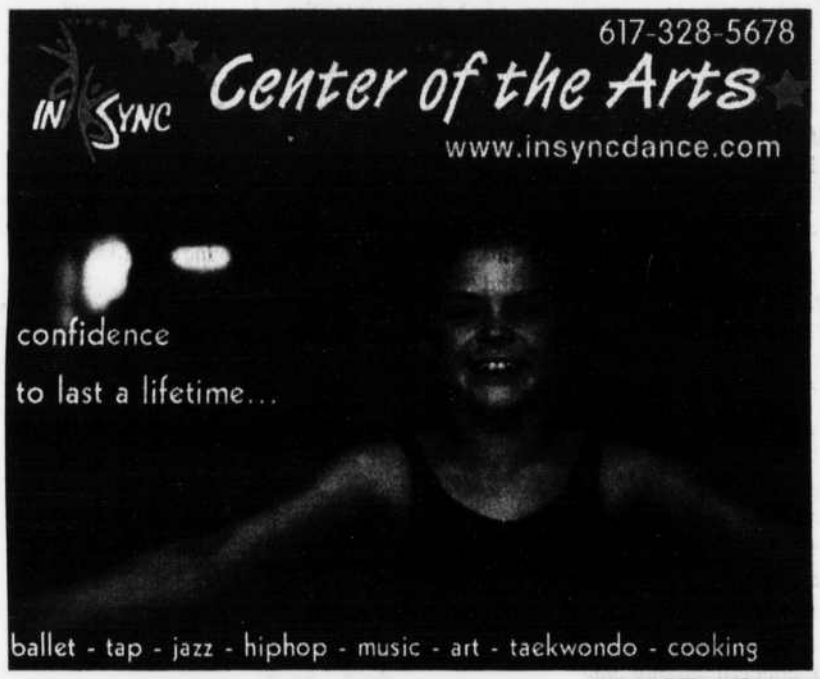

A 2010 graduate of North Quincy High School, Carrie was the president of the Senior Class and president of the Student School. Currently, a dean's list sophomore broadcast and digital journalism student at Syracuse University's S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, Carrie hopes to pursue a career as a health and science reporter and producer for a major broadcasting network. At SU Carrie is a proud member of the Society of Professional Journalists student chapter, where she was the secretary last year. She is also a member of the Alpha Chapter of Gamma Phi Beta Sorority. One of the highlights of Carrie's year has been being offered an internship from NBC Universal to work as an intern for next year's Summer Olympic Games.

CARRIE JIE SUNDE and the rest of the 2011 Petite America Pageant title holders. From left: Teen Petite America, Carrie Sunde (MA); Miss Petite America, Ashley Schoonmaker (MA); Ms. Petite America, Erin Vivero (MT originally from CT); Ms. Woman Petite America, Suzanne Anderson (MS); Mrs. Petite America, Ambre Dunavant-DeVirgilio (NY); Mrs. Woman Petite America, Charlie Alejandro (MA); Mrs. Lady Petite America, Linda Raftery (CA originally from CT) and Lady Petite America, Elisabeth Zamarelli, Ph.D. (NY).

Carrie credits her success to her mother who adopted her when she was one and a half years old. Since she has had a second chance at a better life, Carrie believes it is her duty to give back and help others. Currently, Carrie is promoting adoption awareness through educating others on the benefits of adopting! Carrie hopes to set up a fund to help parents who are trying to adopt, but cannot afford it. She is also going to create a vitamin drive for her orphanage in China, because she knows that vitamins are essential part of growing and maturing correctly. Carrie believes that no matter what size or shape you are if you put your mind, heart, and soul into a goal you want to achieve, than only good can come of it.

Wollaston Garden Club Celebrates The 420th Birthday Of Anne Hutchinson

Anne Hutchinson's 420th birthday was celebrated in three states this past July: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New York – all former colonies where Anne lived during her life time.

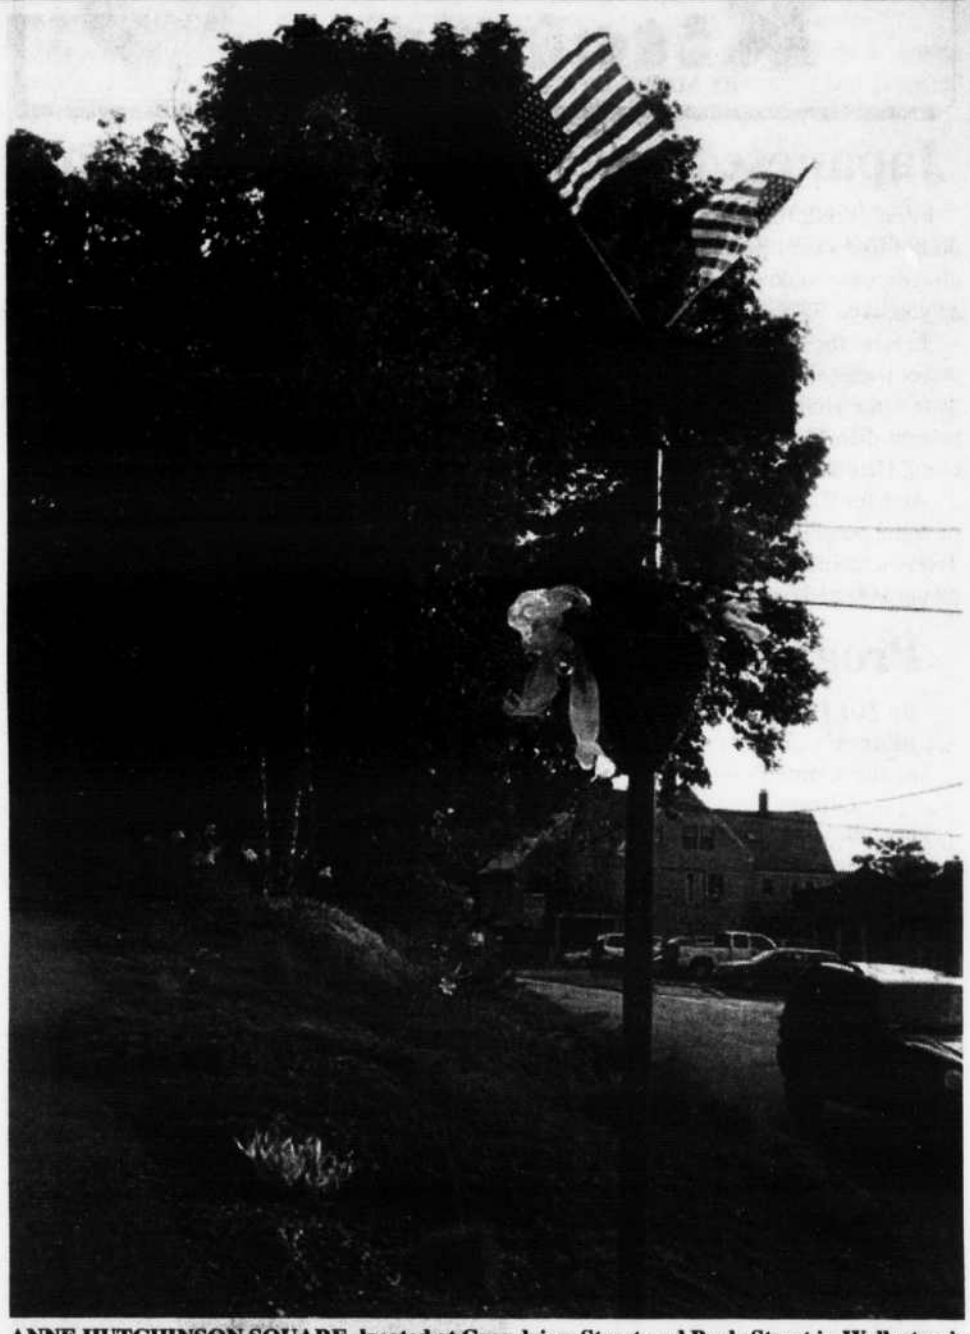

Wollaston Garden Club honored the historical figure by sponsoring a design competition among its members. The winning design was created by club president Pat Artis, and is a beehive style hanging planter – planted with heuchera, gallardia, sedum and sweet potato vine.

Anne Hutchinson Square, the public area at the hillside at Grandview Street and Beale Street in Wollaston, has long held important value in this city full of historic figures and sites.

A Roxbury puddingstone boulder marks the site where Anne Hutchinson "tarried here" – on her exile from Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1618. William Hutchinson, husband of Anne Hutchinson, owned a land grant and had a farm in the Wollaston Hill section of Quincy in early colonial times. The garden club first became interested in Hutchinson because of her connection to Wollaston, her role as a strong and determined woman, and as a midwife gardener with an extensive kitchen and herb garden.

The Quincy Parks Department and the Wollaston Garden Club collaborated to move the stone marker to the hillside, and re-design and landscape the site in 2007. Since then the garden club's civic beautification committee under the direction of its chair and garden club past president, Jo Costello, have diligently worked to improve the plantings at the hillside garden.

Costello commented on "how well both the juniper, snow in summer, and Mary Todd yellow day lilies have filled in on the steep slope." Anne Hutchinson will continue to be remembered each July by the Wollaston Garden Club. The Wollaston Garden Club is a member of the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, Inc. and the National Garden Clubs, Inc.

ANNE HUTCHINSON SQUARE, located at Grandview Street and Beale Street in Wollaston is maintained throughout the year by the Civic Beautification committee of the Wollaston Garden Club. The club sponsored a design competition challenge for garden club members to create a wreath-like floral design with living plant material to commemorate Anne Hutchinson's July birthday.

Japanese Sweet Potatoes With Onion

I don't think there are many people who do not like sweet potatoes. But sometimes, after they are cooked they don't taste as sweet as you like.

I found the best solution. I buy Japanese sweet potatoes. They are always sweet and taste somewhat like a roasted chestnut. I've bought them at Whole Foods Market or the Good Health store.

And for those who can't eat white flour or white potatoes, this is as great alternative. Today's recipe is for them to be sautéed and this time I used onion with it for a distinctive flavor. And so easy.

SWEET POTATOES WITH ONION
1 or 2 Japanese Sweet Potatoes
1 medium sized onion (chopped)
3 tablespoons vegetable oil

Wash the potatoes. Slice them as thinly as possible. In the hot oil, sauté the onion for a couple of minutes. Add the potatoes. I covered them for a while. They cook up real quick.

Then take off the cover and cook until done, turning them as they are cooking. Great for a side dish.

"We felt this was a worthwhile study," said Koch's spokesman Chris Walker, adding the data highlighted "clear issues" and will help the city develop new safety measures.

"The safety of our children on those buses is absolutely critical," said Walker.

"It was welcomed very much by our bus drivers," said Mike Dracchio, director of Safety and Transportation for the Quincy Public Schools.

Dracchio oversees the transportation system for the city's schools. At this time, the city owns and operates its buses. Currently, there are 34 full-size buses, vans and transports operating with several spare vehicles available, according to Dracchio.

Dracchio said the program was initiated by the mayor and overseen by Helen Murphy, the mayor's Director of Operations. Both Murphy and Dracchio worked with the Registry of Motor Vehicles during the installation process.

While Mienke said the cameras clearly identify the offenders, those tapes cannot be used to impose the hefty penalties attached to this offense. Under state law, the testimony of a police officer or a bus driver is required in order to impose the penalties for violating the school bus law.

Quincy police confirmed that those penalties range from a mandatory $250 fine for a first offense to a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1000 for a second offense and not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,000 for a third or subsequent offense.

In addition, the Registry of Motor Vehicles can suspend a license for six months for a second offense and 12 months for a third offense.

At this time, state legislators are currently considering allowing videotaped evidence to be used, according to Heather Friedmann, spokesperson for Rep. William Straus, House Chairman of the Joint Committee on Transportation.

Such a change would be similar to a current law that allows camera evidence to trap toll evaders using the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Friedmann said both the House and the Senate committees are drafting similar bills aimed at penalizing those who violate school bus safety laws and are caught on camera.

Currently, legislators appear interested in inserting a local option for such a change so that each community has a choice.

"We'd have to see the legislation and exactly the language that comes out of Beacon Hill," said Walker when asked if Koch supported allowing video evidence.

Walker said that City Council would have to approve the city's participation. "If it's an opt-in provision. We'd all have to be on the same page."

To date, Meinke said her company's five-year-old program, "Smart Bus Live," has been installed in school buses in eight states.

Generally, there is no cost for installation or operation to these municipalities, according to Meinke who said the company's costs and income are generally based on a percentage of the fines collected.

"We are open to different agreements," said Meinke, adding, "A lot of schools don't have the budget" to cover new programs.

School Buses And The Law

Yellow school buses have flashing red lights and stop signs that fold out from the driver's side. School pupil transport vehicles, like vans, station wagons, or family sedans, have flashing red lights and SCHOOL BUS signs on top. Drivers use these warning signals when letting pupils on and off.

If a school bus or a school pupil transport vehicle has its lights flashing and a stop sign extended, you must stop. It is the law.

It does not matter which side of the road you are traveling on. Remain stopped until the lights stop flashing or the stop sign folds back.

Vehicles on the opposite side of a divided highway are not required to stop.

Applauds Ayers For Advocating Public Access To Long Island

I am very glad to see that state Rep. Bruce Ayers is still advocating the usage of Long Island for recreational, historical and environmental activities.

Currently, the only way to gain access to this harbor gem is via the deteriorating Long Island Bridge built back in 1953-54. I knew when I read the Boston Herald story in which Boston Mayor Thomas Menino vowed to keep this two-mile island off limits to Boston residents never mind Quincy residents who put up with all that traffic between the Boston side of the Neponset Bridge and the Boston-owned Long Island.

I agree with Representative Ayers that spending $3 million to repair this crumbling bridge is "a misuse of taxpayers dollars." Currently, Long Island has basically been turned into a "Shutter's Island" for folks that City Hall has no other place to put. Back when I was a child, I actually remember taking a ferry from Rowe's Wharf to Long Island to visit my father's step-dad at the Long Island Hospital. Even as a five-year-old I recognized the view from the hospital's windows into the harbor and wondered why people didn't want to live there.

I can only assume the only reason to rebuild the bridge is because of the police and fire training areas on nearby Moon Island. You can't be ferrying fore trucks to Moon Island. There is a Boston firehouse out there next to the potter's field burial ground but in case of a large fire, how would that firehouse get additional help?

Mayor Menino apparently supports keeping a large city homeless shelter out there in the middle of the harbor where there are no neighbors to complain. He also likes Camp Harbor View where 800 young people can be taken out of their urban environment to enjoy summertime on an island.

I question the comments by Bruce Johnson, superintendent of the Boston Harbor Islands, when he states it "is not appropriate to mix the general public with the populations that are served." Currently, the island is far underutilized for all its untapped potential.

I was last on Long Island about six years ago when I escorted a DMH client to a program using the old Tobin Building – once part of the old hospital. However, get behind the old hospital are, the place still seems pristine. Too bad that Boston Mayor Menino can't see the beauty on the island and how it can only benefit the entire city to use a part of it for the activities being pushed by Rep. Ayers.

Long Island, by the way, is represented on the Boston City Council by District 1 City Councilor Sal LaMattina who happens to also represent me over in East Boston where I now live. Perhaps, he and Rep. Ayers who has served North Quincy since first getting elected 20 years ago as Ward 6 City Councillor (Quincy) can sit down over the Long Island impasse. There are so many possibilities there that could benefit both the people of Boston and Quincy.

As I viewed the photo of Bruce Ayers standing in Squantum with the bridge behind him, I thought wouldn't it be nice to see Bruce standing on the other side of the bridge viewing the Quincy horizon.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century
by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.
FULL (DENTURE) DISCLOSURE
Patients fitted with full dentures may mistakenly believe that they no longer must worry about scheduling comprehensive oral exams. After all, there are no natural teeth left to examine. However, the mouth and bite change constantly, which means that the dentist must regularly assess denture fit. If that is the case, the dentist will reline full dentures that do not fit as well as they should. Patients should also note that any man-made material will eventually show signs of wear. This is particularly true of plastic that is subjected to the considerable forces exerted by the jaws while biting and chewing. Gum tissue underlying dentures must also be regularly examined for signs of irritation and pre-cancerous lesions.
We can help you decide on the right option for your situation. If you have questions about your dentures, we invite you to call our office. We want to provide you and your family with the best dental care possible in a comfortable, professional environment. Prevention – brushing, flossing, and regular professional cleanings and check-ups – is still the best road to dental health. Our office is located at 44 Greenleaf Street. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincy-dentist.com.
P.S. If a patient is unable to successfully wear full dentures, the dentist may recommend implants or anchoring an overdenture to existing roots.

IS YOUR CHILD PACKING ON TOO MANY POUNDS?
As children and parents get ready for the new school year, it bears mentioning that backpacks that are either too heavy or worn incorrectly pose a risk of injury. In fact, about 6,000 school-age children experience backpack-related injuries in this country annually. To avert such injuries, parents are urged to choose lightweight backpacks that extend no further down than three-quarters the length of their child's back. It should also feature two wide, padded shoulder straps that the child should use to avoid putting too much strain on one side of his or her body. A waist strap also helps better distribute the pack's weight. Most importantly, a loaded backpack should never exceed 15 percent of the child's bodyweight.
How much does your child's backpack weigh? What can chiropractic health care do for your child? Why do millions of parents bring their children to Doctors of Chiropractic every year? Chiropractic's purpose is to remove interferences to the natural healing power running through the body. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we can help you and your children enjoy life without pain. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. For un-surpassed chiropractic care for all members of your family, please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.
P.S. If a child has to lean forward to carry a backpack, it is too heavy. "We carry Airpacks" that take up to 50% of the load off the spine and shoulders. Call for more information.

Earthquake Tremors Felt Here, No Reported Damage

Tremors from a 5.8 magnitude earthquake centered in Virginia on Tuesday were felt here in Quincy.

Employees at City Hall, and other spots around Quincy Center, said they felt the earthquake that was 3.7 miles deep, according to the U.S. Geological Survey. The quake was centered northwest of Richmond, VA and reportedly shook much of Washington, D.C. at about 1:50 p.m. Tuesday.

Chris Walker, spokesman for Mayor Tom Koch, reported the tremors caused no damage.

Quincy Police received several calls from the North Quincy area after the earthquake, including 150 Newport Avenue extension and 175 Quincy Shore Drive. Police also felt the tremors at headquarters on Sea Street.

Chief Paul Keenan originally attributed the building's shakes to nearby construction. "They're doing some construction at the gas station (next to the police station) but they weren't working at the time" of the earthquake, Keenan said.

Fire Chief Joseph Barron reported there were no earthquake-related calls to the fire department.

One City Hall worker described the tremor as a "silent sway" from his third floor office at the City Hall annex.

"All of a sudden, I started to feel a strange back and forth swaying sensation, as if I were on a large boat," described Sean Glennon, a city planner whose third floor office faces the Hancock Cemetery.

"My cubicle wall started to sway, as did a key that was suspended from a chain on my file cabinet." Glennon said a co-worker did not feel the tremor but others on the end of the building felt the shaking.

"It was hit or miss as to who felt it. There was no in-between," Glennon said.

At Squantum's Orchard Beach 7th Annual Causeway Classic

100 Gather For Fishing Contest And Lots Of Fish Stories, Too

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Fish stories resounded last weekend at Squantum's Orchard Beach as 100 locals enjoyed the Seventh Annual Causeway Classic, a 24-hour fishing competition that drew 40 contestants and 12 finalists.

"It was a beautiful day. We've never had better weather," said Sue Gillespie, one of the event's organizers who said the winners declined their prizes as well as photo opportunities.

However, the competitors brought in pretty solid catches ranging from a ten-foot blue shark to blue fish and striped bass. There were only 12 finalists at Saturday's weigh-in.

The winner's blue shark was caught 50 miles from the Quincy shore at the Outer Stellwagen Bank, according to Gillespie.

Those prizes donated by the winners will fatten up the Classic's contribution to Squantum's Annual Fourth of July celebration, according to Gillespie who estimated that last weekend's take was $1,500 to $2,000.

Gillespie said that the weather this year was the best yet as organizers must choose a weekend in August with afternoon tides to accommodate the fishing contest. Regardless of weather, the group cannot reschedule for rain dates.

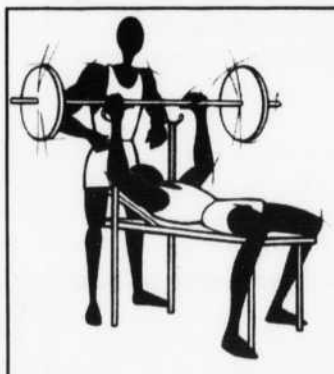

As a rule, the contestants leave on Friday at 2:30 p.m. and must return for a fish weigh-in by 2:30 p.m. on Saturday.

Gillespie said the local group promotes numerous fund-raisers for the Squantum Independence Day celebration. Recently, there was a Hawaiian Luau and there are plans, once again for the group's Turkey Trot and Halloween programs.

MORE FOR YOU HERE AT HOME

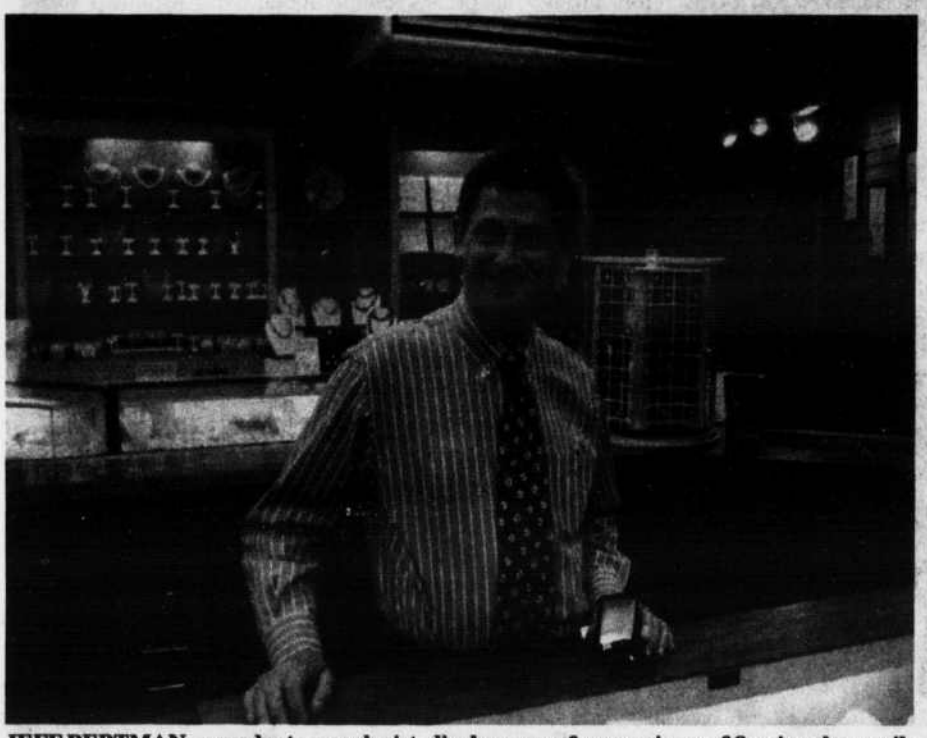

Rogers Jewelry: Family-Owned Since 1960

Rogers Jewelry has been at this location since 1945. The current owners (Isobel, Mark and Jeff Bertman) purchased the store in 1960 and since that time have operated their business at 1402 Hancock Street, in Quincy Center. The signs on the building have changed; South Shore National Bank, Multibank, Baybank, Fleet and now Bank of America but the Rogers' sign has remained stable.

As Quincy Center evolved from "Shopperstown" to an urban area, Rogers adapted to serve an ever changing clientele. While our merchandise mix has changed our basic philosophy has always stayed the same; give value and "treat customers as you want to be treated when you shop." From our no-charge, year- long, lay-a-way program to our money back philosophy we constantly show our customers what to expect from folks that honestly care.

We have installed a complete gem lab, led by our graduate gemologist, Jeff (pictured in this profile) and the only one in Quincy. With Jeff's expertise we are able to identify most gemstones and make accurate appraisals and offers. Rogers is a full service jeweler; we do most repairs, sell at the most competitive prices and provide a loan service for short term collateral loans.

One factor in today's market is the all-time high price of gold ($1,776. per ounce at this writing.) If you have unwanted or broken gold, sterling, platinum, diamonds or other precious gems this is a good time to turn them into cash. However you should be wary of large expensive ads promising big prices for your precious metals and gems. Most of these dealers are around for short periods of time and tend to under pay for your goods. The same could be said for home gold parties that offer the host or hostess a large commission for bringing their friends together to sell their gold at minimum prices. Where and how you sell your treasures is very important with regard to the valuation information shared with you and the payment offers you will receive. We tell our customer to take their merchandise elsewhere for an evaluation first and then come to us for the top offer.

JEFF BERTMAN, a graduate gemologist, displays one of many pieces of fine jewelry available at Rogers Jewelry, located at 1402 Hancock, in Quincy Center.

Our store hours are Monday – Friday 9:30-5:30 and Saturday 9:30-5:00. Our web site features outstanding items that are all pre-owned treasures and therefore all are priced at incredible values. Most items featured are at 25-30% off regular prices. Be sure to visit us at www.rogersjewelry.com

OPENING CEREMONY at Sunday's 24th annual Quincy August Moon Festival featured a dragon and lion dance by Wahlum Kung Food, Woo Ching White Crane and Wong Keung Kong Ching Athletic Academy. Quincy Sun Photos/Robert Noble

HANCOCK STREET in Quincy Center was the center of plenty of activity at Sunday's 24th annual Quincy August Moon Festival. The event was an excellent opportunity to learn about Asian culture from dance to music to food, said John Brothers, executive director of Quincy Asian Resources, the organization that hosts the event.

its first president. Chan said the August Moon fest "went from a little parking lot in Wollaston to one of the (premier) events on the South Shore. It's a full day of entertainment you can't get anywhere else."

The event started at the Wollaston Lutheran Church. It also appeared at North Quincy High's parking lot, the North Quincy MBTA parking lot, and on Billings Road. This year marked the third year at the current location, and Chan doesn't see it going anywhere else.

The event featured over 100 different booths. Various small businesses, churches, non-profits, hospitals, colleges and larger corporate sponsors were there; one business came from Connecticut to attend. There were also two stages for performances: a larger one in the center featuring dancers and a smaller space near the intersection of Hancock and Granite streets for small bands.

One non-profit that attended was the Boston Chinatown Neighborhood Center (BCNC). Norman Eng, the group's operations manager, brought BCNC to the August Moon Festival for the first time. He was thrilled with how the event, which officially opened at 11 am, was going. "Awesome," he said "people starting coming up to us at 10, an hour early."

BCNC was there to see if they could assist any of Quincy's growing Asian community. That's the same goal Brothers has at QAR. He pointed out a woman called his organization the previous week looking for help getting her nieces from China enrolled in school in Quincy.

"People come to us for help. We're about joining together to build a strong community," he said.

Another contingent on hand that aimed to bring help to the community was The Mayor's Asian American Advisory Committee.

Jonathan Tam, a volunteer for the group, manned their tent. He specifically works on the local access show Eye on Quincy. The show, which celebrates its second anniversary in October, provides news updates in Cantonese and Mandarin.

"Building viewership is a big reason I come to these events," he said, referring to August Moon Festival and the Chinese New Year's Celebration at North Quincy High.

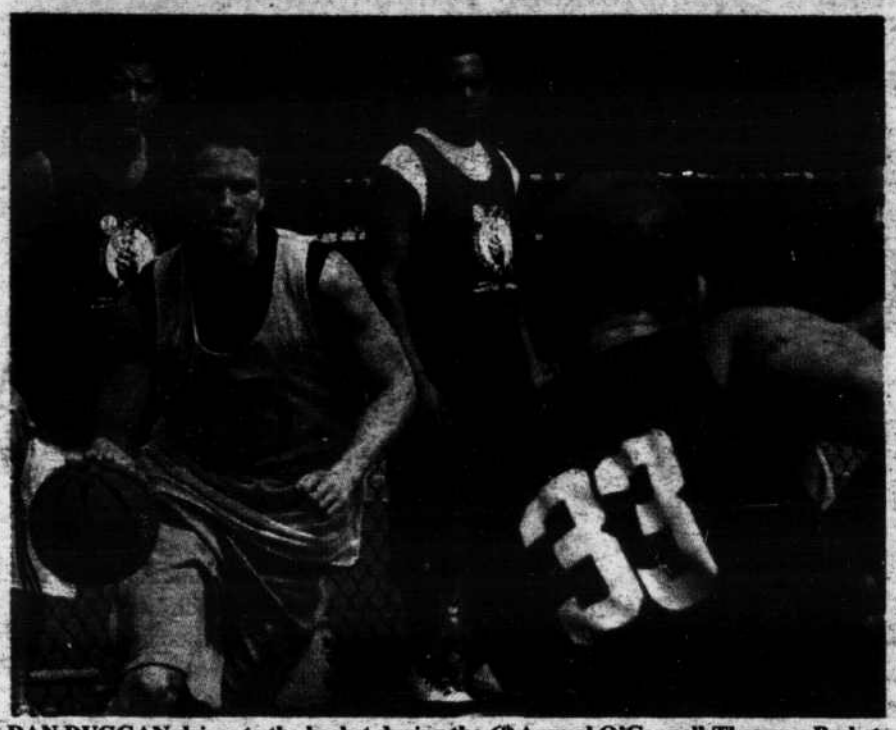

The August Moon Festival is based on celebrations of the harvest that date back thousands of years.

"It's a family event, not like Chinese New Year," Chan said. "The biggest thing is mooncakes, made from a sweet lotus paste with egg yolk. You'll see people sharing them this time of year to mark the occasion."

O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament Best Yet

By SEAN BRENNAN

The courts at Fenno Street were turned into a basketball heaven last weekend for hundreds of local collegiate and high school players who came out to play in rememberence of two Quincy sons.

The sixth edition of the O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament, which has been held every summer in memory of John "Okie" O'Connell and Dennis Thomson, two star athletes who graduated from North Quincy High School in 2002, who had their lives cut tragically short in the past seven years, featured a 16-team men's tournament and a four-team women's tourney.

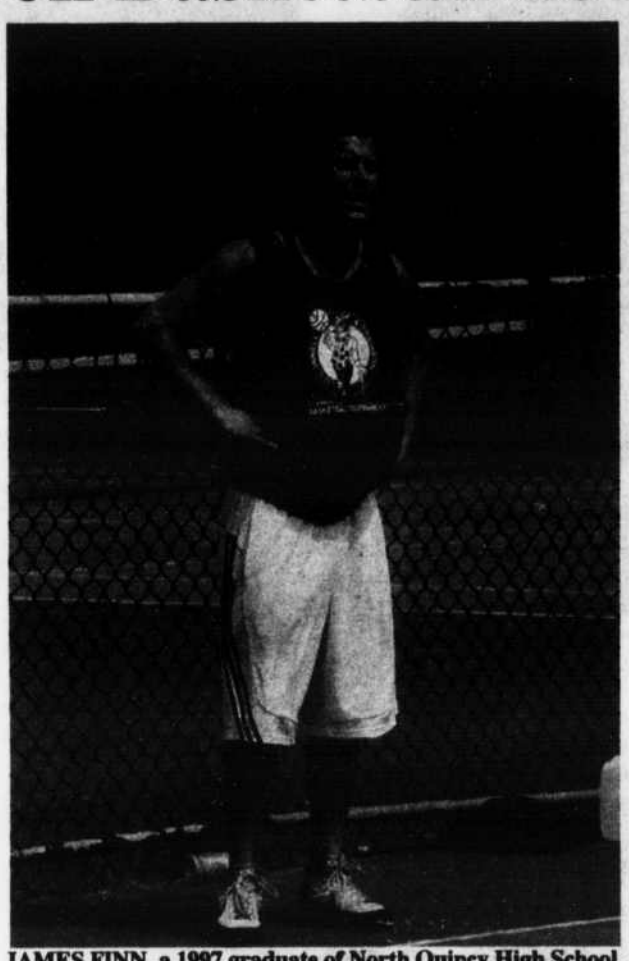

This two-day event, which has become a summer tradition in the city helps to raise funds for memorial scholarships in O'Connell and Thomson's name to benefit recent North Quincy High School graduates and it is through the support of local businesses and residents that O'Connell and Thomson's families, former classmates and friends can continue do their part to keep the memory of both men alive.

The tournament last weekend raised about $2,000 (the tournament has raised over $15,000 in six years) to be split between the scholarship funds each family has created at NQHS, according to Dan Duggan, who along with tournament founder James Finn, began this event six years ago as a way to honor their former teammates and longtime friends.

"There are so many costs involved with running this tournament that we'd never be able to raise a sufficient amount of money for the scholarships if it wasn't for the generosity of local business and residents," Duggan said. "Jimmy Finn and I are extremely grateful for these contributions. We also need to extend a special thank you to all of the volunteers who make the weekend run smoothly."

What began as a simple idea to host a basketball tournament for two friends who loved the sport has turned into a weekend-long event featuring competitive but always-friendly competition. It wasn't always this way. The first couple of times Finn and Duggan held the tournament they struggled to field more than four teams, but as the good word spread, more and more players have shown up with many former Quincy and North Quincy basketball stars now bringing college teammates along with them to compete.

The degree of hoops has increasingly improved and the O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament has turned into a most coveted draw as teams play for the honor of being crowned champions all while continuing to support the families of both men – never to forget for who and why they are really playing.

JAMES FINN, a 1997 graduate of North Quincy High School, began the O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament six years ago as a way to keep his two friends names and spirits alive. Finn and Dan Duggan have been the organizers of this annual two-day event for the past five years.

"The basketball is a lot better than when we first started this tournament," added Duggan. "In the beginning we struggled but this year we had a 16-team men's tournament, which was loaded with some of the best talent from Quincy. The first tournament was probably ninety percent Quincy people, but now we have teams that maybe are made up of one Quincy kid and a bunch of his college teammates or friends. We have a pretty good sampling of some of the best college and high school players in the area."

"It is great to have so many teams, but the real reason we continue to host the tournament is to never forget," continued Duggan. "Over the years sometimes things fade out. The best part of this event is that it is staying strong. To have a weekend where we could all get together and support the families has been great."

In regards to the actual men's results, this year's O'Connell-Thomson tournament was the best to date. A team captained by Quincy native David Jaehnig won the 16-team men's bracket. It marked the third time in six years that the former Boston College High School and Westfield State standout had led his team to the championship.

Jaehnig's team, which went undefeated in the two-day, double-elimination tournament at the Fenno Street courts, included Quincy residents Mark Tobin, Dennis Magaldi, Andrew Jaehnig, Mark Jaehnig and some of David's former Westfield State teammates.

His squad defeated a team lead by Duggan, 44-42, in an exciting final game on Sunday night. Duggan's runner-up team featured five former teammates of O'Connell and Thomson at North Quincy High School – Duggan, Phil McGillcuddy, Matt Donovan, Pat Bregoli and Mark Maher – as well as Quincy High alum Nick Neczypyr.

The tournament, three years ago, added a women's bracket to the schedule and after a one-year hiatus last summer, a four-team women's tournament was back in action. "Okie" O'Connell's sister, Catherine, a former all-star at North Quincy and one of top rebounders in the nation last winter while playing for Newbury College coordinated the women's tourney.

Quincy native Katelyn Mark's team won the women's championship. Diana Mitchell, Julianna Eagles, Stephanie Fox, Jessica Worden, Alysia DiMuzio and Sarah Shea joined Mark, who played collegiately at Newbury College on the winning team. Mark's squad defeated a team led by former North Quincy star Rebecca Goreham in the finals.

The winning teams did not have an easy route to the title. Teams began playing games at 10 a.m. on Saturday and the finals were not held until late Sunday night, which makes for a long weekend of basketball. It is competitive but everyone involved understood that the games were just a small part of what the two-day event is all about.

"This is for a good cause," said Duggan. "It is a competitive tournament but everyone understands that what it is really about is keeping their memory alive."

O'Connell and Thomson were no basketball slouches. Both men starred on the parquet for the Red Raiders. Thomson, a three-sport athlete in football, basketball and baseball, was killed by a drunk driver in 2004 while stationed in Mississippi as a member of the United States Air Force and O'Connell, a basketball and baseball standout in high school, passed away in 2005 after being punched trying to break up a fight during his senior year at Westfield State - following his tragic passing, Westfield State established the John "Okie" O'Connell Award, which is given annually to an outstanding student athlete who best represents O'Connell's well known sportsmanship and athleticism.

Among the main sponsors of the 2011 O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament were local businesses and families who donated money and time to make sure it was the most successful tournament to date.

These sponsors included Jason Fidalgo, Cyr-Farrell Boxing Gym, West Elm Variety, Brian Radell, Malachy's, P.J. Kennedy & Sons, Charles Doherty, Egan's Sunoco, Mignosa's Fruit Basket, Paul Bregoli, the Monaco family, the Seaport Hotel, Whiskey Priest, The Four's, J.J. Foley's, The Playwright, Atlantic Beer Garden, The Chantey, Boston Beer Garden, The Granite Rail, The Waterclub, Balducci's House of Pizza, The Southside Tavern, Atty. George Burke, and Geralyn Page.

If you are interested in supporting and making a donation to the scholarship funds for John "Okie" O'Connell and Dennis Thomson, you may send a check to the John "Okie" O'Connell Fund and send it to Dan Duggan, 61 Bedford St., Quincy, MA 02169. (The donations will be split between the two funds.)

Register Of Deed O'Donnell, Colleagues Meet With State AG

William P. O'Donnell, the Norfolk County Register of Deeds and chairman of the Legislative Committee for the MA Register of Deeds Association and his Register of Deeds colleagues recently met with state Attorney General Martha Coakley to discuss a number of real estate issues.

Register O'Donnell and his colleagues expressed their concerns regarding a number of issues affecting the Commonwealth's Registries of Deeds.

Much of the discussion was concerning issues surrounding the recording practices of Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. (MERS) at the Registries in Massachusetts and the use of robosigners signing documents on behalf of large lending institutions.

The registers also inquired about the impact of the Attorney's General's investigation on the ongoing federal-state negotiations with the large banks. The Attorney General made clear that Massachusetts will not sign on to any global agreement with the banks if it includes a comprehensive liability release regarding securitization and the MERS conduct.

"Our meeting with the Attorney General and her staff was most productive and much appreciated", O'Donnell said. "The MA Register of Deeds Association will continue our dialogue with the Attorney General and her staff regarding these very serious real estate matters.

"The rights of the homeowners of this state and the due diligence of the Registries of Deeds in providing secure and accurate land records are of paramount importance and we look forward to cooperating and working with the attorney general," O'Donnell added.

The Norfolk County Registry of Deeds can be contacted through its Customer Service Center at 781-461-6101 or by email at, registerodonnell@norfolkdeeds.org. The Registry's website is www.norfolkdeeds.org.

A Job Well Done

On Sunday, Aug. 14, at approximately 2:50 p.m., Detective Barkas was conducting surveillance in the Quincy Point section of the city in an unmarked car when she observed a vehicle parked on Beacon Street.

LT. DAN MINTON

The vehicle, with two males inside, had New York plates. Within three minutes of observing this vehicle, a male walked up to it and the driver motioned to him to get in. Detective Barkas observed that the right hand of the male getting into the vehicle was clenched, as if it were holding an item.

In less than 30 seconds, the same male exited the vehicle and immediately placed his right hand into his right front pocket. The suspect vehicle then drove off. Based on training and experience, the Detective believed a drug transaction just occurred. Often times the drug buyer will enter the vehicle of the dealer, where the "deal" is conducted.

At this time, Detective Barkas contacted Quincy Police communications and requested a marked cruiser conduct a motor vehicle stop of the suspect vehicle and attempt to locate the male suspect who walked away. The Detective followed the suspect vehicle from Beacon Street onto Southern Artery, where Officer Declan Breslin pulled behind the vehicle, activated his blue lights and conducted a motor vehicle stop of the vehicle at 995 Southern Artery.

Officer Breslin approached the driver and Detective Barkas approached the passenger's side. Through the open passenger window, Detective Barkas asked the driver where he was coming from and he stated, "around the corner." When asked where he was around the corner, the driver said, "at the store." The driver said that he lived in Weymouth and denied that he met with anyone minutes earlier.

The driver appeared very nervous, with both his hands shaking. Detective Barkas asked both occupants to step from the vehicle and then pat frisked the passenger, finding a folding knife and a cut piece of straw in his front right pocket. The passenger said that the straw was his daughter's and she had been playing with it. At the same time, Officer Breslin, joined by Officer Steve Cleary, searched the driver and checked for license status and warrants. The driver did not have a Massachusetts license.

The driver said that he has been living in Weymouth since March, previously living out of state. Inside the vehicle were several parking tickets from the town of Braintree dated in May 2011. Detective Barkas informed the driver that he was under arrest for "Unlicensed Operation of a Motor Vehicle", due to the fact that he has lived in Massachusetts since March and did not transfer his license to this state.

As Officer Cleary spoke with the passenger, he observed that the passenger appeared to be chewing on something. Officer Cleary instructed the passenger to open his mouth and lift his tongue. Based on his training and experience, Officer Cleary has knowledge that drug dealers will often hide drugs in their mouths to conceal the contraband from Police if stopped.

When the passenger lifted his tongue, Officer Cleary was able to observe several knotted plastic bags under the tongue. Officer Cleary instructed the passenger to "spit them out," but he refused and attempted to turn his head away from Officer Cleary.

Officer Cleary directed the passenger to the ground and repeated his demands to spit them out. The passenger then spat three 3 plastic bags of a green leafy substance from his mouth. Officer Cleary immediately recognized the green leafy substance to be marijuana based on its appearance and packaging.

The passenger was placed into handcuffs. Due to the way the leafy substance was packaged separately and the actions of the driver signaling the unknown white male, the driver denying he had met with anyone, and the fact that the passenger was hiding the marijuana inside his mouth as dealers often due to avoid detection by law enforcement, both the driver, a 41 year old Weymouth resident, and the passenger a 44 year old Weymouth resident, were charged with, "Possession with Intent to Distribute Class D substance (marijuana), Conspiracy to Violate the Controlled Substance Laws and a school zone drug violation," due to the fact that the incident occurred within 1000 feet of the Clifford Marshall Elementary School.

Nice Work!

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Why? Why, why, WHY did this have to happen to me? When misfortune, disaster or tragedy occurs, the question is difficult to try to answer. Even if there is a known answer, and most of the time there is none, it is an unacceptable answer.

If one is presumptuous enough to try to answer; if one resorts to the retort of courage being needed, one knows how futile it can be.

Yet, when bewilderment and grief exist a mortal human being can help. In one such instance, there was an unforgettable scene which will always be remembered.

A close friend of a grief stricken family stopped in, unaware that tragedy had struck. Shocked at the bomb shell news, he stumbled around for words. Then in impromptu and certainly in unrehearsed manner, he replied, "I can't tell you. No one can. I'm not an overly religious man as you know, but I think it will do us all good. Let's pray. I believe it would help."

It was a beautiful prayer. And it helped. It always can...

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) The typically tidy Ram or Ewe might want to butt out until things are settled on the home front. But get involved and let your Ovine sense of order help restore domestic tranquility.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The Bovine's flair for fine-tuning complicated fiscal dealings comes in handy when an unexpected financial problem arises. Stay with it until it's resolved to your satisfaction.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Family aspects remain strong. There might be some unresolved difficulties, but continued attempts to smooth things over eventually prove to be successful. A major purchase looms.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A promise that was made but never kept suddenly re-emerges in your life. You now have to decide if you're still interested in what it offers or if you've moved past it.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Romance comes to unattached Leos and Leonas who have been waiting for Cupid to target them for far too long. Domestic purr-fection is also enhanced for paired Felines.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You need to take a much-needed break from that demanding project before too much energy-draining tension sets in. And don't be ashamed to ask for help.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Change makes demands that you might find unwelcome at this time. But instead of concentrating on the short run, look toward potential benefits down the road.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You have a gift for reviving projects that seem beyond repair. Use that same ability to restore a relationship that seems to have turned from loving to lifeless.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Expect to be asked to use your combined wisdom and humor to resolve a problem. After all, folks not only value your advice, they also like how you give it.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Most people consider you solid and steady. But you also can be quite capricious (which is a Latin word for "describing the behavior of Goats") when it suits your needs.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) People treat you as you wish to be treated. So if you want a change in your relationship, make it happen. Also expect someone to reveal some long-held secrets.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Stay with the decision you made, despite a sudden torrent of advice to the contrary from well-meaning people. Remember: You know your needs better than anyone.

BORN THIS WEEK: You like things tidy, with no loose ends. You also enjoy research and would make an excellent investigative reporter or scientist.

Mean Irene

TROPICAL STORM IRENE uprooted many trees in Quincy during the height of Sunday's storm – including this one on the corner of Beach Street and Billings Road. The tree took a telephone pole and wires down with it, falling against a house.

Federal Aid Sought For Storm Response

Koch: National Grid Storm Response 'Flawed, Unacceptable'
Story On Page 32

With DPW and Parks crews continuing the clean-up from Tropical Storm Irene, Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that the City will apply for federal disaster assistance to defray the costs of the City's storm response.

Officials are now assessing damage and costs related to the City's coordinated response by the Police, Fire and Public Works and Parks departments that handled more than 200 calls for fallen trees and dozens of other emergency calls during the storm. With a disaster declaration already issued, the City will file an application to recover its costs associated with the storm, officials said.

"We were on top of it from the beginning, and I am extremely proud of the work performed by all of our departments in responding to this emergency. The work is going to continue throughout the rest of the week," said Mayor Koch. "The performance of the electric company is a different story entirely, and we will be continuing to address that issue

Clean-Up Continues In Aftermath Of Irene

By EMILY TAFT

The city began the arduous task Monday of cleaning up debris, fallen trees and branches in the wake of Tropical Storm Irene that smacked Quincy with strong wind gusts Sunday.

Department of Public Works crews began the clean-up efforts Sunday and expect the effort to continue the rest of the week.

"We worked all Sunday night, and will be working all day today into tomorrow," DPW worker Mike Burke said Monday.

"Right now we are working on Ward 1 (Adams Shore, Merrymount and Houghs Neck) with small and big crews. The worst things I have seen are trees through houses and garages."

Tony Aimola of Rodman Street in South Quincy had an old oak tree crash onto his house.

"I was shocked for a storm that was down graded (from a hurricane) it did a heck of a lot of damage," said Aimola. "At least to my house it did."

Aimola said that the only tree in his yard started falling around 9:30 a.m. Sunday morning with large branches and leaves all over his yard and then finally fell around 2 p.m. that afternoon, hitting the back of his house and garage.

"The tree is pretty much destroyed, covering the whole back yard, my garage and house," said Aimola. "I am sure it did some significant damage to the roof but we wont know for sure until we get someone up there to take a look."

Bill and Mary Peters of 74 Willow St. in Wollaston had a tree do some damage to their property, when a tree landed on their cars.

"I was not a happy camper when I saw what had happened," said Mary Peters. "I had just had work done to my car not to long ago and now there is more damaged to be fixed."

According to Bill Peters it only took less then four hours for crews to arrive and remove the tree.

"After they took off the tree we found that only one car had damage along with the vinyl siding to the house," said Peters. "Over all we are very happy with the city of Quincy and how quickly they worked."

Unlike Peters and Aimola there were many residents who were fortunate enough to have only a few leaves to pick up.

"We are very blessed," said Grace Brooks of Sea Street. "All we really have is leaves to clean up. I can't really complain."

Even though many didn't have much to clean up after Irene passed, they all prepared for the worst.

Sean Curry, president of Curry Ace Hardware, said preparation for the storm started happening for some as early as Tuesday before the storm.

"We had our early birds that came in late Tuesday and early Wednesday buying D batteries, lamp oils, duct tape and flash lights," said Curry. "Friday ended up being our crazy day where we ran out of a lot of things."

Curry said that he received three truck loads of batteries, hoses, drains, lamp oils, and other products sold out within a few short hours.

"We had to have our general manager drive to our warehouse in New York to pick up more supplies," said Curry. "We had more then 2,500 flash lights on Friday and by Saturday morning they were all gone, and the D batteries we couldn't even try to keep in stock."

Now that things have settled down Curry finds that more of the normal products are being sold.

"We sold some cleaning up stuff such as chain saws, pruners, and leaf bags on Monday," said Curry. "But since then we are back to the normal supplies. It's eerie how normal returns so quickly."

Curry mentioned that his store on Copeland Street was out of power from 11 a.m. on Sunday to 11 a.m. Tuesday.

"I hate to think what would happen if we really had a level three hurricane, what would happen with our power," said Curry. "For the future I think we will be seeing more businesses invest in generators."

Katie O'Connor of Sea Street said she was ready for a big storm.

"There was a lot of build up, but I am glad there was nothing too bad. There is an element of excitement when there is a big storm, but this storm was minor compared to others such as hurricane Bob of 91," O'Connor added.

Near O'Connor and Brooks most of the damage consisted of leaves, large branches and the occasional power lines down.

"Compared to what we are seeing on TV this is minor," said Brooks. "The power never went out, but we had our books ready just in case."

Many residents reported that although there were times the lights flickered and the television went out it never was off for more then a few minutes.

"There are a number of trees down and localized power outages," said Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee, whose ward includes North Quincy and Squantum. "There are also a number of damaged power poles that are in pretty bad shape and are going to have to be replaced."

McNamee said that the poles – located along the East Squantum Street causeway – look like they are going to fall into the water at Marina Bay but over all he is impressed with the work the DPW has done.

According to McNamee, among the hardest hit areas were Squantum and Marina Bay.

"The DPW is well manned and very well prepared," said McNamee. "They have responded very quickly. The story of the day is the fact that the DPW has done such an excellent job, and how well the city was prepared."

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said there was multiple power outages reported by National Grid customers on Sunday.

"We have street closures in every neighborhood with downed limbs, hanging limbs and limbs pulling on power lines," said Laforest. "The city has a lot of work to do."

According to Laforest it is very difficult to predict when the power will be restored for residents and how many are still with out power because National Grid hadn't updated their website as of Monday.

"Communication is key," said Laforest. "Residents are looking for the information and we are working to find the answers for them."

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci said he is concerned that those who need help the most aren't getting it.

"I just want to make sure the people who are most vulnerable are taken care of," said Palmucci, whose ward includes West and South Quincy. "National Grid has a poor response system, I can only imagine what they would be like if this storm had been bigger."

As of Tuesday morning 80% of the southwest part of Quincy was without power according to Palmucci.

"This is getting more and more troublesome as we go into another day without power," said Palmucci. He went on to add that National Grid is not communicating on when the power will return, and that they have sent out automated responses to residents predicting that all power will be up and running by this weekend.

Despite problems with National Grid many agreed the city is doing its job as far as clean up is concerned.

"I am most impressed with the city workers, they are working really well as a team, and they all have great attitudes," said Laforest. "It's all hands on deck, we have to work hard and work fast."

SERPENTINE JEWELRY
What piece of jewelry is more seductive and alluring than the serpentine bypass bracelet? After all, it is the piece of jewelry that conjures up an image of one of history's most famous seductresses—Cleopatra. Such pieces, which wrap around the wrist, upper arm, or finger, seem to possess an animated quality. The snake has been a classic symbol of rebirth and eternity since ancient times. When gold serpentine jewelry studded with gemstones wraps itself around a woman's arm, it also introduces a beguiling sense of sensuality. From a purely functional standpoint, bypass pieces ensure proper fit with their ability to tighten and adapt to any circumference around which they are wrapped. No wonder they have endured so well!
For petite wrists and big smiles, our bypass bracelet makes a noticeable fashion statement. Ask one of our brilliant professionals to show you our bypass bracelets. You will find dazzling jewelry of all shapes and sizes displayed in our showcases at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. City Clerk, License Board, Mailroom, Housing Rehabilitation Re-Located There

City Hall Annex Open At 1259 Hancock Street

By LAURA GRIFFIN

It's bright, it's airy, but, most of all, that musty scent is gone for city hall staffers who on Monday began their first full week in the new City Hall Annex at 1259 Hancock St.

"It's certainly clean and inviting," said Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen who said she doesn't miss much about her office in Old City Hall, formally the James R. McIntrye Government Center.

Hallsen described the musty smell floating through Old City Hall and the discomforts of the staff, particularly in the winter, when the heating system was unpredictable and it was "... either freezing or stifling. It would get hot and then go off. It's just an old building."

Maybe she misses the view a bit, said Hallsen whose office is in the rear of the new annex as are the offices of City Clerk Joseph Shea, and Cindy Manning, Secretary to the License Board.

Hallsen, Shea, and Manning were among the first to move across McIntyre Mall to the new quarters in the Munroe Building last week. Joining them were Denise Marinilli, secretary to the clerk; Marge Colton and Tony Losordo of Housing Rehabilitation, and Jim Aucoin and Bob Flaherty, City Hall Mailroom.

Left behind for the time being are their counterparts who oversee city records and the upcoming elections.

The public enters the office at street level from Hancock Street or from McIntyre Mall. Shea pointed out the security cameras not only at that entrance, but also throughout the new quarters. Once inside, the public is served at bright new counters.

Not everyone has moved. Shea said voter registration will be held in Old City Hall until further notice as the worker's strike at Verizon and Tropical Storm Irene toppled the original moving dates.

In fact, the election department on the first floor of old City Hall was open yesterday (Wednesday) until 8 p.m. to accommodate any new voters who wanted to registered in time to be eligible to cast ballots in the Sept. 20 preliminary election for Ward 2 and Ward 6 city councillor.

For those who happen to the wrong building, it's less than a three minute walk across the Mall.

Plans are underway to totally empty Old City Hall as the first step of Mayor Thomas Koch's plan to repair and renovate the 187-year-old granite landmark in the coming year. The first studies are being developed through a $200,000 Community Preservation grant.

Shea is juggling all the facets of the City Hall project from the construction to the timetable for the staff

Absentee Ballots Available For Wards 2, 6 Preliminary Election

Absentee ballots are available at the city's Election Department for the preliminary election in Wards 2 and 6.

Registered voters in Wards 2 and 6 who are unable to cast a ballot on Tuesday, Sept. 20 may request to vote by absentee ballot. Ballots are available Monday through Friday, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the city's Election Department located on the first floor of the James R. McIntyre Government Center (old City Hall), 1305 Hancock St., Quincy Center.

There are only two races on the preliminary ballot Sept. 20 - for Ward 2 councillor and Ward 6 councillor. Voters in those two wards only can vote Sept. 20.

Absentee ballots may be requested for those who will be absent from the city Sept. 20; if they have a physical disability; or for religious reasons.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 7, 1813, the United States gets its nickname when a New York newspaper refers to "Uncle Sam." The name is linked to meat packer Samuel Wilson, who supplied barrels of beef to the United States Army during the War of 1812. Wilson stamped the barrels with "U.S." for United States, but soldiers began referring to the grub as "Uncle Sam's."

• On Sept. 6, 1847, writer Henry David Thoreau moves in with Ralph Waldo Emerson in Concord, Mass., after living for two years in a shack he built himself on Walden Pond. In 1854, his collection of essays, "Walden, or Life in the Woods," is published.

• On Sept. 10, 1919, almost a year after the end of the First World War, New York City holds a parade to welcome home Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Force, and some 25,000 soldiers who had served on the Western Front.

• On Sept. 11, 1930, Katherine Anne Porter's first collection of short stories, "Flowering Judas," is published. During her lifetime, she published 25 stories and one novel, "Ship of Fools," which took her more than two decades to complete.

• On Sept. 5, 1958, Boris Pasternak's romantic novel "Dr. Zhivago" is published in the United States. The book infuriated Soviet officials, but admirers of Pasternak's work began to smuggle the manuscript out of Russia piece by piece. The book won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1958.

• On Sept. 9, 1965, Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Sandy Koufax hurls the eighth perfect game in major-league history, leading the Dodgers to a 1-0 win over the Chicago Cubs at Dodger Stadium. Koufax retired after the 1966 season at just 30 years old because of arthritis in his elbow.

• On Sept. 8, 1974, President Gerald Ford pardons his disgraced predecessor Richard Nixon for any crimes he may have committed or participated in while in office. The Watergate scandal erupted after it was revealed that Nixon and his aides had engaged in illegal activities. With impeachment proceedings under way, Nixon became the first American president to resign.

'Vacationing' With The President

When it comes to vacations, I don't know who has it better – President Obama or the pool of reporters assigned to cover the chief executive while he and his family enjoy some down time.

OBAMA

The President and First Family wrapped up a nine-day vacation on Martha's Vineyard last Friday – leaving a day early because of Hurricane Irene. During his time on the island, the President managed to go bike riding, play golf, frequent the beach and visit some stores.

I think it's good for anyone to get away – even the President of the United States. And you can bet any presidential candidate who criticized Obama's time away from Washington would take their own vacation if they win the White House next year.

But when you're the commander-n-chief, you never really truly get away.

That's because there's a pool of reporters who issue "news" bulletins updating the public of the President's seemingly every move.

Of course, whatever the President does – and doesn't do – is generally deemed newsworthy. He is, after all, the leader of the free world. So, if he goes into a book store, people want to know what he bought. Or, if he gets an ice cream, what flavor did he chose.

I admit, I found myself reading every one of these bulletins that were e-mailed to me at The Sun. Some how, the White House Press Office has my work e-mail address. And as a news junkie, I enjoy getting correspondence from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Every speech and comment the President gives, I get a copy of it in my in-box.

And when the President goes on vacation . . . well, I feel like I'm right along with him thanks to the updates filed by the press pool.

Before I give some examples, a few notes about acronyms.

POTUS means "President of the United States," FLOTUS is "First Lady of the United States" and WH is obviously "White House."

Bo is the name of the First Family's dog. Yup, even Bo made it into one of these bulletins.

Here's the first bulletin issued after the President first arrived at Martha's Vineyard Airport via Marine One (helicopter).

"POTUS disembarked at 6 p.m. looking casual in white shirt open at the collar and dark khaki slacks. POTUS is also with golf partner and White House Trip Director Marvin Nicholson, and Deputy Press Secretary Josh Ernest. . . . Per WH official, the First Lady and daughters Malia and Sasha are already on the island.

"First dog Bo came over in press helo.

"POTUS got into SUV in motorcade (15 cars long, including ambulance, 2 press vans, and presidential SUV) which rolled at 6:03 p.m. en route to Chilmark." This report was filed by Donovan Slack of The Boston Globe.

On the first full day of their vacation, the President and his two daughters went to the Bunch of Grapes bookstore in Vineyard Haven. "Large crowd is gathering in the street. Your pool is outside waiting, the day has turned very hot." – Mike Seccombe, Vineyard Gazette.

Later that day, we learn the President is playing a round of golf at The Vineyard Golf Club with partners Eric Whittaker, Marvin Nicholson and Michael Brush.

Another term that appears quite frequently on these bulletins is "lid." A lid basically indicates the president is in for the night and he won't be traveling anywhere. I think it's a polite term for "buzz off" – I'd like a little privacy now.

Seriously, the press picks up on everything.

The media pool reported the Obamas ate pizza one night for dinner. Or perhaps you want to know what's on the President's summer reading list. During his trip to the bookstore, POTUS bought The Bayou Trilogy, a collection by Daniel Woodrell; and Rodin's Debutante, by Martha's Vineyard seasonal resident Ward Just.

This is pretty helpful info. Considering Oprah Winfry has abandoned her book club because of her erstwhile TV talk show, the public needs a little guidance for their literary selections.

More books you say? Well, the traveling press reported the President also brought three books with him on this trip: Cutting for Stone, a novel by Abraham Verghese; To the End of the Land, fiction by David Grossman; and The Warmth of Other Suns, the story of African-American migration from the South to Northern cities.

There are times the President can be elusive. One night, POTUS left Blue Heron Farm (where the family was staying) in a 17-car motorcade and arrived on Alpine Street in Oak Bluffs for a social event at the home of Professor Charles Olgetree, a prominent law professor who taught both the President and First Lady while students at Harvard Law School.

Word about the President's visit to the modest Oak Bluffs neighborhood apparently leaked out. One resident put a sign reading "Welcome Mr. President to Alpine Street."

But, according to Martha's Vineyard Times Staff Reporter Steve Myrick, "The press caught nary a fleeting glimpse of the President this evening, or at any other time today, so far."

On another day, the First Family arrived at a beach in Edgartown. After the motorcade split off at the corner of Edgartown West Tisbury Road and Pohaganot Road, the pool reported "no sightings of anyone."

Even when it's a slow news day covering the President's vacation, the press always finds something to report.

For instance, during one motorcade ride back to Blue Heron Farm, a pair of wild turkeys took advantages of the blocked roadway to meander slowly across South Road.

Or during one down time, the press snacked on "some very nice guacamole and chips."

I'm really not poking fun at the press corps that is assigned to follow the President. They serve an essential communication link to the American people. It's got to be one of the best media gigs around if you're a reporter who thrives on politics, too.

So, if Mr. Obama – or any other future President – decides to vacation in Quincy, well I'll be the first in line to volunteer for that media pool.

But hold the guacamole . . . I'm more a salsa guy.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1909 postcard view of the original Quincy YMCA building that was at 61 Washington Street on the corner of Maple Street in Quincy Square. This Y building – built in 1903 and 1904 – served the boys of Quincy for more than 50 years. It featured a large swimming pool on the ground floor. When the present South Shore YMCA was opened on Coddington Street in 1955, this property was sold to the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which has since erected a new building on this corner. Now the Coddington Street Y is going to be replaced with a new $30 million facility. It will be built next to the present building on what was known as Rotary Field. Rotary Field was a baseball field built and donated by the Quincy Rotary Club to the YMCA in the late 1950's. It was fully equipped and featured one of the first electronic scoreboards in New England. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Seek Word Of Wollaston Man On Torpedoed Liner

By FRANK McCAULEY

Approximately 500 of the Athenia's 1,400 passengers were still unaccounted for, a survey of British and Irish ports showed. A preliminary survey indicated 1,000 persons had been accounted for but the survey was still incomplete.

This Week
72 Years Ago

Mr. and Mrs. David Hansen, 240 Everett St., Wollaston, were waiting anxiously for news of their son Gordon Hansen, 35, a commercial artist, believed to have been one of the 1,400 passengers aboard the torpedoed liner Athenia.

Gordon Hansen, a graduate of Quincy High School and the Museum of Fine Arts, had lived in Quincy since childhood and was in charge of the night art department of a Boston newspaper. He had been spending several weeks traveling in the Scandinavian countries.

(Editor's Note: The Athenia, a British passenger liner outbound from the British Isles to the United States, was torpedoed by a German submarine on the opening day of hostilities – Sept. 3 – between Great Britain and France who declared war on Germany as a result of the Sept. 1 German invasion of Poland. A total of 93 passengers and 19 crewmen were lost. Gordon Hansen DID survive the sinking.)

Under the pollution elimination legislation passed by the legislature last month, the governor was authorized to name two members of a five-member commission to supervise the construction of the new sewage treatment plant.

Councillor at-Large McDonald was a member of the Republican State Committee.

Raymondi More Than Capable To Complete DPW Duties

Ever since Mayor Koch appointed former Councilor Daniel Raymondi to a new and needed position in the City of Quincy, there have been many naysayers who have written letters for publication in Quincy's newspapers.

Most of these comments and E-mail responses to articles in published reports have been of a derogatory nature. Many of his critics have called him to task for his actions during Council meetings and accused him of being a roadblock and a knit picker.

True, the establishment of such a high salaried position in these times of fiscal problems seems, on the surface, to be politics and gerrymandering as usual.

However, this city is about to enter into a complex reshaping of the downtown area and this effort will undoubtedly spread into neighboring sections of the city. It may prove to be advantageous to have a fiscal conservative looking at the involvement and expenses of the city work forces in this endeavor. With his past experiences in the political realm and his understanding of legal matters, he will insure that all the I's are dotted and the T's crossed in the correct places to insure that others may not subject their interpretations' of various contracts yet to be issued for the use of Quincy's Public Works, Park, Sewer, Water, and Highway Departments.

The repaving of two "major access" roads into the downtown area, (Newport Avenue and Centre Street) has begun, and I hope Dan gets a chance to look into conditions of the "REAL" access roads leading into Quincy Square.

Washington Street is in shambles from the Weymouth line to Coddington Sreet. Adams Street from the Milton line to Newport Avenue needs attention. The condition of Quincy Avenue from the Braintree line to School Street is a roadway Quincy should be ashamed to have as a major artery to the new downtown area.

Quarry Street from the Furnace Brook Parkway to Common Street is a sad welcome to visitors to Quincy. And most of the residential streets all over the city are in deplorable shape.

Already, there is a legal squabble in process about the re-routing of the Town Brook. This phase alone of the revitalization project is anticipated to cost more than $12 million and it only one of three major projects that must be completed before Street-Works begins its efforts.

Many thanks are due Mr. Raymondi for his past services to the city. He has his work cut out for him in this new job, and I am sure he is more than capable to complete his duties in a manner that will insure the quality of Quincy for many years to come.

Kudos go out for the correspondence of Nick Lahage in the August 25 issue of The Quincy Sun. He could not have described Mr. Raymondi's accomplishments better. It appears from his testimonial, Mr. Raymondi looks into requests and ideas from the citizens of Quincy. I am sure he will continue to do that in his new assignment.

Mahoney's Presentation Most Instructive

I recently heard a presentation by Mrs. Anne Mahoney, candidate for mayor, discussing how the mismanagement of the budget of the Koch administration has cost the citizens of Quincy.

It was most instructive.

Open House Sept. 3, Oct. 1 At Josiah Quincy House

Historic New England's Josiah Quincy House in Wollaston will be open for tours Saturdays, Sept. 3 and Oct. 1, from 1 to 5 p.m.

The house, located at 20 Muirhead St. in Wollaston, also offers school programs and tours by appointment.

Residents of Quincy and members of Historic New England are admitted free. The regular admission charge for adults is $5.

Tours begin on the hour, with the last tour at 4 p.m.

Built as a country estate in 1770, the Quincy House was surrounded by fields and pastures overlooking Quincy Bay. Its elegant architectural details befit the status of the man who built it, the Revolutionary War leader Colonel Josiah Quincy.

Among the house's unusual features is its "monitor" roof. From this prospect Col. Quincy had a clear view of Boston Harbor, where he watched troop movements during the Revolution.

In 1775, he scratched "Governor Gage sail'd for England with a fair wind" into one of the windows of the monitor roof. That pane of glass was carefully preserved by the family, and is on display in the house today.

For generations, the Quincys, like the Adamses, to whom they were related, played important roles in the social and political life of Massachusetts. The family produced three mayors of Boston and a president of Harvard.

Much of the historical information pertaining to the house and family was documented in the early 1880s by Eliza Susan Quincy. She kept journals, inventoried the contents of the house, commissioned photographs of the interior, and persuaded relatives to return heirlooms so that the house could become a repository of Quincy family history.

Keenan Speaker At YouthBuild Graduation

The Training Resources of America, Inc. AmeriCorps/YouthBuild Program graduated 17 students Aug. 25 at the Four's Restaurant function facility at 15 Cottage Ave. in Quincy.

The graduates, ages 17 to 24 include:

James Flynn, Andy Lemus, Anthony Lopez, Mark Luster, Eric Mamaty, and Sean Murray, all of Quincy; Stephen Adonis, Moises Hernandez, Mark Laham, and Eric Stangel, all of Randolph; Gary Christie of Milton; Tommy Dao of Braintree; Ashford Gourgue of Dorchester; Rashawn Graham of Holbrook; Ryan James of Roslindale; Michael Landry of Weymouth; and Troy Stuart of Boston.

Sen. John F. Keenan of Quincy was a keynote speaker at the ceremony.

"I have been very impressed with the work being done at TRA-Quincy," Keenan said. "They are helping at-risk youth earn their GEDs while teaching them critical life skills and enabling them to gain meaningful employment and even continue on to college. Every dollar spent on programs like this reaps a tremendous return on the investment. I wish the graduates all the best."

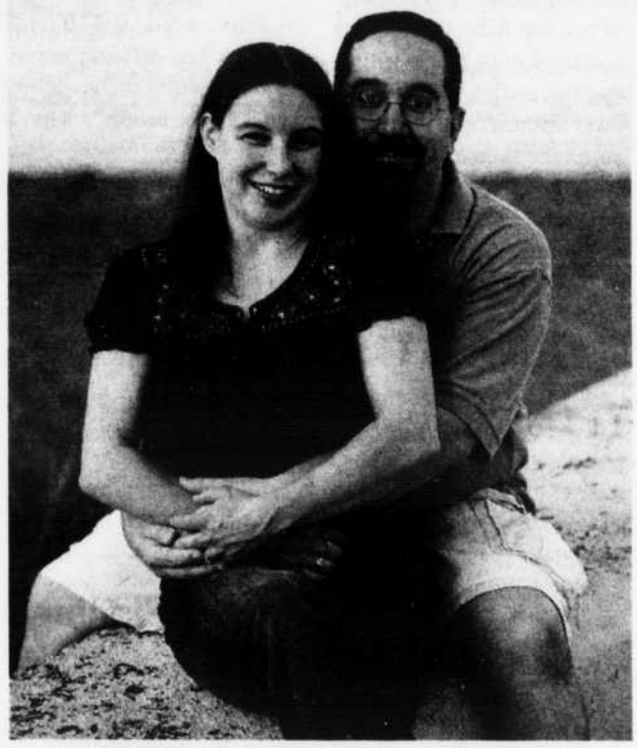

Quincy YouthBuild is part of a nationwide movement of over 270 YouthBuild programs designed to unleash the positive energy of unemployed young people to rebuild their communities and their own lives with a commitment to work, education, responsibility and family.

The program provides comprehensive training to young people ages 16 to 24 that meet low-income guidelines, are not in school, have not received a high school diploma or GED, and demonstrate a willingness to work hard for personal and community change.

Students receive instruction in remediation/ GED preparation, self esteem/ life and leadership skills, and job readiness training. Extensive support services include counseling/ case management, job development and placement assistance, as well as job retention and follow-up services. Construction skills training utilizes a community housing rehabilitation or new construction project which helps create quality low-income housing.

This year's program also integrated Corporation for National Community Service (CNCS) / Massachusetts Service Alliance AmeriCorps programming with YouthBuild. AmeriCorps' support has enabled the program to focus on energy conservation for low-income housing and increased volunteer and community service opportunities for youth and adult residents to benefit the Quincy community. It also enabled the young people to earn AmeriCorps education awards to help pay for college.

Youth members were responsible for helping to recruit a total of 50 community volunteers who assisted in a variety of community service projects including: weatherization (siding, windows and doors) of a low-income Quincy property owned by Neighborhood Housing Services of the South Shore; several painting and landscaping projects at Saint John the Baptist Catholic Church in Quincy; landscaping projects at the Statehouse in Boston, painting a youth residence for Bay State Community Service and sorting donations and preparing orders for Cradles to Crayons. The youth also participated in the annual YouthBuild State House Day as well as the YouthBuild Carpentry Challenge competition and basketball tournament.

The Safety Net For Aged, Blind, Disabled People With Limited Income And Resources

By KRISTEN ALBERINO
Social Security Public Affairs Specialist in Quincy

There's a safety net out there for those who might otherwise slip through the cracks. It's called Supplemental Security Income (SSI). Administered by Social Security, SSI makes payments to people with limited income and few resources and who are age 65 or older, blind, or have a disability.

Social Security Online Services
★ Convenient ★ Secure ★
www.socialsecurity.gov

Funding for the SSI program comes from the general revenues of the U.S. Treasury, not from Social Security payroll taxes.

When we consider people's income, we count things such as wages, Social Security benefits and pensions. However, Social Security does not count all of your income when it decides whether you qualify for SSI. For example, we don't count food stamps or most home energy assistance.

Resources we count in deciding whether you qualify for SSI include real estate (other than the home you live in), bank accounts, cash, stocks, and bonds. A person with resources worth no more than $2,000 may be able to get SSI. That resource limit is $3,000 for couples.

To qualify for SSI, you must live in the United States or the Northern Mariana Islands and be a U.S. citizen or national. In rare cases, noncitizen residents can qualify for SSI. If you live in certain types of institutions or live in a shelter for the homeless, you may qualify for SSI.

People with blindness or disability who apply for SSI may be able to get free special services to help them work. These services may include counseling, job training, and help finding work.

The monthly maximum Federal SSI payment is the same nationwide and amounts to $674 for a person and $1,011 for a married couple. However, the amount you receive depends on factors such as where you live, your living arrangements, and income. Some states also supplement or add money to the Federal payment.

To learn more about SSI, read the online publication, You May Be Able To Get Supplemental Security Income (SSI) at www.socialsecurity.gov/pubs/11069.html or visit the SSI page at www.socialsecurity.gov/ssi. Or call us toll-free at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY, 1-800-325-0778).

If you're too disabled to work but haven't paid enough into Social Security to qualify for benefits on your record, SSI may be the program to help you.

Town Brook Update: Two Sides Of The Issue

Opponents Charge Plan Will Increase Flooding

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Opponents of the current plan to re-route Town Brook as part of Quincy Center's revitalization state they support the city's efforts but believe Street-Works' proposal for the brook is "horrendous" and could increase area flooding.

As a result, 11 residents signed on to challenge the Conservation Commission's recent approval of the Town Brook project through a formal appeal to the state's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

The Conservation Commissioners outlined ten requirements in their formal Order of Conditions filed Aug. 9.

Opponents claim that plan and the Order of Conditions do not include sufficient mitigation, flood storage, park space, or a viable storm-water management plan. They recommend major revisions and more public input.

"We're not intent on stopping the project; we just want to make it better," said Steve Perdios, spokesman for Quincy Environmental Network (QEN).

"The final plan looks nothing like the pretty artist's renderings (presented at public hearings)," according to Perdios who said that engineers preparing the final plan, unlike the artists, had to provide the specific details which impact the brook.

"They couldn't make it look good," said Perdios, charging that public access in the engineers' plans is limited and the two little parks, "absolutely horrendous. Nowhere in the entire country do they treat their waterways like this."

Perdios was joined by Pat Artis, President of the Wollaston Garden Club, and members of both groups in filing the appeal on Aug. 23.

In February, the two local groups presented an alternate plan which would daylight Town Brook through Quincy Center as part of the $1.6 billion revitalization project currently projected by the city's designated developer, Street-Works of White Plains, NY.

City officials and Street-Works engineers said the alternate was unworkable.

Revere Road resident Arline Goodman not only signed the appeal but, also, submitted additional charges in a separate filing.

According to Goodman, Street-Works' relocation plan for the brook will create "more of a flooding potential in a federally designated flood plain."

The group's formal appeal states that the existing flood storage capacity in the project area is 91,800 cubic feet while the proposed flood storage capacity of the re-routed Town Brook is only 84,480 cubic feet.

Goodman also stated that officials refused to provide her with public documents prior to the Conservation Commission August meeting and said, "It was stated

City To Receive $5 Million For Town Brook Project

Gov. Deval Patrick informed Mayor Thomas Koch that he will include a $5 million allocation in a supplemental budget to help jumpstart construction of a restored Town Brook as part of the City's $1.6 billion Quincy Center redevelopment project.

"I am truly grateful for the support of Gov. Patrick and Lt. Gov. Murray for this unprecedented economic development plan. Their commitment – as well as the commitment from our legislators and Federal officials – shows without question that we are moving in the right direction every day," Mayor Koch said.

The appropriation is part of a larger infrastructure plan included in Gov. Patrick's supplemental budget. It will need approval by the state Legislature.

The money will be used to pay for a portion of the Town Brook project, a restoration effort of the long-distressed waterway that will create a new day-lit section, improve fish spawning habitat, and include a new park for residents to enjoy as part of the downtown development.

The Brook culvert, which currently snakes its way underground through much of downtown in a degraded condition, needs to be restored to trigger the $1 billion of private investment at the heart of the Quincy Center plans.

The project is currently moving its way through the state permitting process, and construction is expected to begin next year.

The master development agreement, called a Land Disposition Agreement, sets the legal and financial terms for a plan that calls more than 1.1 million square feet of new office space, more than 1,200 housing units, two hotels, a cinema and entertainment complex, and 750,000 square feet of new retail and restaurant space in Quincy Center.

The project, which will be built to "green" LEED standards, will create several new civic spaces within Quincy Center, includes 500 mature street trees.

The plan calls for nearly $300 million in public infrastructure improvements as part of the project, including new underground utilities and public parking facilities with 4,800 spaces.

The $5 million influx is part $50 million in state and federal grant funds the City and Street-Works are work-and City Council move, to locating space for public meetings, such as City Council and the Planning Board.

Despite having a full plate, Shea agreed to a mini-tour of the new City Hall Annex which features a Colonial and sky blue motif from its walls to its new carpeting all brightened by the great windows and glass doors and protected by cameras.

On the lower level is the new City Hall mailroom already in service and furnished with labeled pigeonhole compartments and tables for Aucoin and Flaherty.

Shea, also, pointed to the enormous solid locked and fireproofed unit which will eventually shelter all the city's records, including birth, marriage and death.

Under the current plan, the city council offices, the city auditor, and the council staff will also be moving before the end of the month.

According to City Council President Kevin Coughlin, the council's new offices will be located on the second floor of City Hall where the Purchasing Department staff is currently located.

The Purchasing Department will move to the rear offices on the second floor and Public Buildings will move to Saville Avenue.

The second floor City Hall Conference Room will be outfitted for future City Council meetings, according to Coughlin who said that public hearings will be scheduled at Quincy High School to accommodate larger attendance.

City Council first debated renovations to Old City Hall in March and in June when they focused on the Munroe lease. The city's rent is $146,250 plus taxes and common area maintenance charges.

The council's first Fall meeting is scheduled Tuesday, Sept. 6 in the Council Chamber in Old City Hall, according to Koch's spokesman, Chris Walker.

READY FOR SERVICE – Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen (left) and Cindy Manning, secretary to the License Board, stand ready to welcome visitors to the City Hall Annex at 1259 Hancock St. in Quincy Center. City records and voting registration will continue at the James R. McIntyre Government Center (old City Hall) until Verizon completes additional wiring.

Sheriff Urges Seniors To Sign Up For 'File Of Life' Program

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti urges senior citizens throughout Norfolk County to take advantage of the "File of Life" program, which provides potentially life-saving information to medical personnel in the event of an emergency.

The "File of Life" folders are available free-of-charge by calling the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 781-751-3516.

"If an elderly person falls ill and is unable to communicate with an ambulance crew, the 'File of Life' folder can save his or her life by providing important information about medical conditions and which prescription medications a person takes," Bellotti said.

"Emergency medical responders tell us the 'Files of Life' are extremely helpful," Sheriff Bellotti continued. "We have given tens of thousands of them to the public since I first took office, and we want to make sure that anyone who wants one is able to get it."

Recipients fill out the "File of Life" card with all the pertinent medical information and then place it inside its bright red vinyl folder. The magnetized folder is then hung on a refrigerator or some other highly visible place so that medical workers can easily notice it.

A much smaller version, designed to fit inside a person's wallet, is also available so that senior citizens may feel the same protection when they are outside their home.

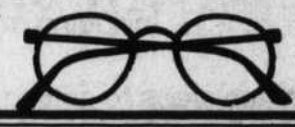

Bellotti distributes the "File of Life" folders through his Triad program, which links elderly people with their local police and fire departments and councils on aging in order to keep seniors aware of important issues and programs available to them.

For more information about Triad call call 781-751-3516.

FIBROMYALGIA
Anyone suffering from fibromyalgia will tell you that the syndrome not only has no definitive cause or cure, it is also difficult to diagnose. The symptoms of this chronic disorder include painful muscles, sleep problems, fatigue, and tender myofascial trigger points at certain parts of the body, all of which vary in experience from person to person. For this reason, fibromyalgia was once thought to be more a matter of hypochondria than a true pathology. Aside from the regional muscle pain that afflicts fibromyalgia sufferers, body-wide symptoms are magnified by the abnormal manner in which the nervous system processes pain. For this reason alone, many fibromyalgia sufferers find chiropractic treatment helpful in normalizing their bodies' perception of pain.
Is the pain of fibromyalgia getting you down? Chiropractic care is becoming increasingly popular among fibromyalgia sufferers because of the pain and stress relief that it offers. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we don't use drugs or surgery to correct your situation; all of our methods are safe, gentle, and recommended for all ages. For the ultimate in chiropractic care, we invite you to call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We want to help you naturally. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where we welcome difficult and unusual cases. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.
P.S. Chiropractic treatment may also prove beneficial in helping fibromyalgia sufferers address the joint and muscle pain that often is a symptom of their condition.

Back-To-School Financial Literacy Tips For Parents

With Massachusetts students from kindergarten to college heading back to school, adding financial literacy to your child's curriculum this fall can teach invaluable skills for today and in the future.

"It's never too early or too late to talk with your kids about personal finances," said New England Collectors Association President David Sands.

As outlined in USA Today's special supplement on youth financial literacy, teaching children about saving, credit, debt, budgeting and discipline in managing their own finances is essential to growth and development. "From the very basic to the complex, parental involvement in helping their children better understand how to value and manage money is essential to helping them make successful financial decisions as they grow older," said Chris Wunder, chair of the ACA International Education Foundation Board of Directors.

Helpful tips for talking to your children about financial management:

• Be a role model. Parents, siblings and grandparents are important role models for teaching financial management to children. Lead by example.

• Be honest. Building and maintaining trust with your child is essential. Admit mistakes and share how you learned from them.

• Be interactive. Effective teaching is a two-way street. Talking and listening with real life examples is important.

• Be patient. Some children may not immediately grasp the concepts you are teaching, but don't give up on your teaching efforts.

• Start with an allowance. For children, an allowance provides hands-on lessons in saving, spending, credit and budgeting.

ACA International Education Foundation is a 501(c) (3) nonprofit organization serving as the philanthropic arm of ACA International, the association of credit and collection professionals. The Foundation exists to promote the goal of increasing financial literacy in the United States. Outreach efforts include www.askdoctordebt.com, which offers free, reliable answers to consumer questions and provides helpful resources.

The New England Collectors Association is a Unit of ACA International representing Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Maine, Vermont and Rhode Island.

Dear World...

My young son starts to school today... It's going to be sort of strange and new to him for awhile, and I wish you would sort of treat him gently.

You see, up to now he's been king of the roost... He's been boss of the backyard... His mother has always been near to soothe his wounds and repair his feelings.

But now things are going to be different.

This morning he's going to walk down the front steps, wave his hand, and start out on the great adventure... It is an adventure that might take him across continents, across oceans... It's an adventure that will probably include wars and tragedy and sorrow... To live his life in the world he will have to live in, will require faith and love and courage.

So, World, I wish you would sort of look after him... Take him by the hand and teach him things he will have to know.

But do it gently, if you can.

He will have to learn, I know, that all men are not just, that all men are not true.

But teach him also that for every scoundrel there is a hero... that for every crooked politician there is a great and dedicated leader.... Teach him that for every enemy there is a friend.

Steer him away from envy, if you can... And teach him the secret of quiet laughter.

In school, World, teach him it is far more honorable to fail than to cheat... Teach him to have faith in his own ideas, even if everyone says they are wrong... Teach him to be gentle with gentle people and tough with tough people.

Try to give my son the strength not to follow the crowd when everyone is getting on the bandwagon... Teach him to listen to all men – but teach him also to filter all he hears on a screen of truth and take just the good that siphons through.

Teach him, if you can, how to laugh when he is sad... Teach him there is no shame in tears.... Teach him there can be glory in failure and despair in success.

Treat him gently, World, if you can, but don't coddle him... Because only the test of fire makes fine steel... Let him have the courage to be impatient... Let him have the patience to be brave.

Let him be no man's man... Teach him always to have sublime faith in himself.

Because then he will always have sublime faith in mankind.

This is quite an order, World, but see what you can do... He's such a nice little fellow, my son! - Dan Valentine

New Academic Programs At Quincy College This Fall

Quincy College announces three new academic programs beginning this fall.

Here are details of the programs and expected outcomes once the programs are completed.

Clinical Laboratory Science

The Associate Degree in Clinical Laboratory Science is offered as a two-year program at the Quincy Campus. Medical Laboratory Technicians (MLT) play a vital role in performing clinical laboratory testing to provide scientific information in the diagnosis, prognosis and treatment of disease.

Medical Laboratory Technicians work in hospitals, clinics, physician's offices and forensic labs.

Upon successful completion of the CLS program, the student will graduate with an Associate of Science Degree. Graduation from the program is not contingent upon student performance on national certification examination. The graduate may also advance in the field to become a technologist or specialist by pursuing additional education and technical experience.

Upon completion of the Clinical Laboratory Science Program, the graduate is prepared to:

- Collect, process and preserve blood and other body fluid samples.
- Perform and report laboratory tests in a variety of laboratory settings.
- Operate laboratory equipment and instruments, performing preventive and corrective maintenance as required.

Biotechnology Program

The Biotechnology Program is designed to prepare students for entry-level positions in the bio manufacturing or biomedical research industries.

Students will develop a broad laboratory science-based background through courses focused in the life and chemical sciences, and will obtain industry-specific knowledge in the areas of quality control (QC), process development (PD), upstream and downstream processing, all while following current, good manufacturing practices (cGMP).

In addition, students will learn valuable laboratory techniques and instrumentation, and develop critical thinking skills. Upon successful completion of the program, students may enter the workforce directly as entry-level laboratory technicians or research assistants, or may transfer to a four-year university to continue their studies at the baccalaureate level.

Upon completion of the Biotechnology and Compliance Program the student should be able to:

- Use appropriate computer software and hardware skills to accomplish biotechnology lab tasks.
- Demonstrate technical knowledge of specialized techniques and instrumentation.
- Communicate thoughts, orally and in writing, in a clear well-organized manner that effectively informs and clarifies scientific principles and lab techniques.
- Use scientific procedures and current and emerging technologies to conduct safe and appropriate laboratory experiments and to collect data that are validated and documented.
- Comply with and adhere to national, state, and local standards, policies, protocols, and regulations for laboratory and manufacturing activity.
- Apply scientific knowledge and principles as well as quantitative methods and relevant technology to think critically and solve complex problems in biotechnology.

Computer Science/ Media Arts

The Computer Science Program is a program that is designed to prepare students for a variety of entry level positions in a networked environment within the computer science industry, and to provide additional training or further advancement to those already employed in the computer science profession.

The program design includes the core curriculum, a general computer science core, skills courses, and courses specific to the computer science areas. Students may choose to concentrate their studies in Computer Science Networking/Transfer, Networking/Career, or Media Arts.

At the conclusion of this concentration, successful students will be able to:

- Develop a concept into a message and communicate that message effectively.
- Create a method, or treatment, to deliver the message through sound, motion, graphics and editing.
- Write an audio/video script and construct a story board.
- Manage a production timeline and create a shoot list for production.
- Analyze equipment and time to budget production needs.
- Make custom music tracks, apply filters for effect and refine the edit process.
- Identify, assemble, and insert editing methods.
- Apply digital effects to create scene-to-scene transitions.
- Create text graphics in roll, crawl and superimpose applications.
- Manage and store digital assets and final programs.
- Create basic animation for video and animated text to complement video programs.
- Construct special effects for multimedia presentations
- Create animation with moving video frames and build 3D objects.
- Use imported layers and devise effects for Web and DVD formats.
- Set-up and operate a video camera, and organize and manage digital assets.
- Use supplementary microphones to capture audio files.
- Assemble a video program using non-linear editing software.

Students who are interested in enrolling in any of the above programs must fill out an application form and obtain an advisor's signature prior to registering.

Water Meter Replacement and Automated Meter Reading System Project

Information for Residents

The Quincy Department of Public Works is updating 24,000 water meters throughout the city. The project includes the replacement of both the water meters and external reading system. The completed project will greatly improve the reliability and accuracy of water meter reading operations and will increase the efficiency of the DPW. The city has contracted with Easton Winwater Services, who will be performing the installations. Easton WinWater Services will need access to each water customer's house or business for this work. Please be aware that Easton WinWater Services will contact customers directly via U.S. mail. Residents of Quincy are reminded not to respond to unsolicited phone calls or home visits. All personnel installing water meters are issued identification and will arrive in uniform and in marked vehicles. A link to names and pictures of each installer can be found on the DPW website. If you believe you have been contacted by someone other than Easton Winwater or the city, please call the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

The meter replacement work will begin in September in the North Quincy/Squantum area, and will progress throughout the city by water meter reading route over the course of a two-year period. There is a systematic implementation plan for this project and therefore customers are asked to not contact Easton Winwater Service or Public Works for their meter replacement until they have received a notification letter from Easton Winwater. For a current update on this program please visit the DPW website at http://www.quincyma.gov/Government/PWD/WaterMeterRepacement.cfm

A Message From School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro

Parental Involvement Essential For A Successful School Experience

It is a pleasure and honor as Superintendent of the Quincy Public Schools to welcome you and your family to another school year.

After we congratulated our award-winning classes of 2011 upon their graduation, we quickly transitioned into a busy summer. Over 700 Quincy students participated in and enjoyed summer learning experiences. Pre-kindergarten and kindergarten children participated, as well as elementary, middle, and high school students.

Dr. RICHARD DeCRISTOFARO

Our professional staff also used the summer break to enhance their teaching skills. Well over 200 Quincy Public Schools staff members participated in Professional Development programs.

As a new academic year approaches, our school system will be prepared for the 2011-2012 opening. The custodians will have our buildings in excellent shape and the maintenance staff has made repairs and renovations.

All of our Principals and their secretarial staff are ready to assist and serve as they returned to the school offices on Monday, Aug.29. The excellent professional staff of the Quincy Public Schools whether academic classroom program, academic support, or student support services, are all excited about the challenges and are confident of a year filled with accomplishments.

In order that we attain our system goals for each and every one of our 9,300 students, we need your involvement. The most meaningful factor in assisting students to have a successful school experience is the concern, participation, and involvement of their parents.

Let me conclude by wishing you much joy and happiness in the last few days of summer vacation. Please never hesitate to call my office or your principal should you have any questions related to the opening of school.

Richard DeCristofaro, Ed.D
Superintendent

School Transportation User Fee Policy In Place For Second Year

Quincy Public Schools reminds parents of elementary school children that a transportation user fee policy is in place for a second consecutive year.

The Transportation User Fee is applicable for Grades K-5 and has been used by several local cities and towns for a number of years. It was implemented in Quincy last year.

The cost of the program is $200 per student with a $400 cap per family. The fee applies to kindergarten through fifth grade students who live within two miles of the elementary school they attend. It also applies to fifth grader who attend the Point Webster and Sterling Middle Schools.

Students who live further than two miles from their respective schools will continue to ride the bus for free.

The transportation fee application also includes a fee waiver under the federal low-income guidelines for free and/or reduced lunches.

For further information including required documentation and online payment options, go to the Quincy Public School website www.quincypublicschools.com/ and/or contact the Transportation Department Office at 617-984-8964 or the Business Department Office at 617-984-8789.

Back-To-School Safety

By LT. DAN MINTON
Quincy Police Crime Prevention Officer

It's that time of year again. Time to send your children back to school. It can be a frightening time for parents, but if you prepare your child for the big world you may help save them from getting into trouble.

• Make sure your children are taking the safest route to school and friends' houses, one that avoids danger spots like alleys, new construction, and wooded areas.

• Encourage your children to walk and play with friends, not alone, and to stay in well-lighted, open areas where others can see them.

• Don't hang a house key around your child's neck. It's a telltale sign that you won't be at home when they return from school. Put it inside a pocket or sock.

• Teach children to walk confidently and stay alert to what's going on around them.

LT. DAN MINTON

• Encourage your children to look out for other kids' safety and report anything they see that doesn't seem right.

• Tell your children to stay away from strangers who hang around playgrounds, public restrooms and empty buildings.

• Rehearse with children their full name, address, and phone number (including area code) and how to make emergency phone calls from home and public phones.

• Tell children never to accept gifts or rides from someone they don't know well.

• Check your neighborhood for areas that threaten children's safety, like brush in woodes areas, overgrown shrubbery, abandoned buildings, bad lighting, vacant lots littered with debris, no sidewalks or bike paths next to busy streets.

• Teach children to go to a store clerk or security guard and ask for help if you become separated in a store or shopping mall. Tell them never to go into the parking lot alone. Accompany your children to public restrooms.

• Teach children no one, not even someone they know, has the right to touch them in a way that makes them feel uncomfortable. Tell them that they have the right to say "No" to any adult in this situation.

If you teach the above tips to your children, they will be better prepared to survive in this great big, sometimes crazy, world.

From: National Crime Prevention Council.

Budgeting For Back-To-School

It's time once again to buy new school supplies, clothes and other necessities your kids need for the school year. This can be a big financial undertaking for many families, making back-to-school shopping a great opportunity to talk to your kids about important money management topics like budgeting and saving.

"This year our annual back-to-school survey found that only 15 percent of parents have created a back-to-school shopping budget with their child," says Shelley Solheim, Director of Financial Education at Capital One. "Back-to-school shopping season is often overlooked as a financial education opportunity, but it's an optimal time for parents to teach teens about budgets and smart spending in a real-world situation."

Here are some tips to help you and your teen budget for back-to-school supplies:

• Make it a family affair: Sit down and compile a list of supplies your child needs. Then see if you have any leftover supplies from last year, such as binders that can be re-used or glue sticks and crayons.

• Do reconnaissance: In addition to contacting the school and visiting their website to find out what supplies your kids will need, consider talking to teachers and parents of older kids to find out what students actually need for each grade level.

• Create a budget: Ask your teens how much they think is reasonable to spend on supplies. Then draft a list and price each item using the Internet or a mobile app. If you or your teen exceeds the projected estimate, work to divide the list into needs and wants, explaining why it's important to prioritize.

• Be flexible: If your teens really want those big-ticket items, work with them to find the money. They can find ways to cut costs by clipping coupons, looking for sales or buying used books. Any extra earnings can be put into a savings account, which lets families work towards savings goals together.

Parents can also help kids develop financial planning skills throughout the year, using methods and tools that resonate with them, such as online and video games. In fact, 76 percent of teens say educational video and online games are a good way to learn, according to the study from Capital One. One such tool is a new kid-friendly website, JA Finance Park Virtual, which tasks kids with meeting real-life needs, such as developing a budget, maintaining a household, supporting a family and pursuing a career through virtual simulation. To learn more, visit www.financepark.ja.org.

After all, 55 percent of teens said they want to learn more about money management skills, according to the study. So take advantage of this opportunity to begin talking to your kids about money today.

Backpacks: Pack Them Light, Wear Them Right

By DR. ELLIOT SUAREZ

With school back in full swing, backpacks are a practical way for children and teens to carry books and supplies back and forth to school. They are designed to distribute the weight of the load among some of the body's strongest muscles, and when used correctly, backpacks can be useful equipment.

Unfortunately, many parents and children are unaware of the potential dangers of improperly worn backpacks. Backpacks can be a leading cause of back and shoulder pain for millions of children and adolescents. Studies show that young children are suffering from back pain much earlier than previous generations, and the use of heavy backpacks is a major factor.

Doctors and physical therapists recommend that kids carry no more than 10% - 15% of their body weight in their backpacks. For example, a child weighing 50 lbs should carry no more than 7.5 lbs in their backpack, and a child weighing 130 lbs should carry no more than 19.5 lbs. However, studies show that over half of all students carry considerably more than these recommendations each day.

Parents may need to adjust their child's backpack and/or reduce how much the child is carrying if they see their child struggling to get the backpack on and off or they lean forward to carry the backpack. Most importantly, parents should never ignore any complaints of back pain from their child.

Here are some additional tips for proper selection and wear of backpacks:

• Use backpacks with two wide, padded shoulder straps. Backpacks with one strap that runs across the body cannot distribute the weight evenly.

• Shoulder straps should also be adjustable so the backpack can be fitted to your child's body. The backpack should be evenly centered in the middle of your child's back.

• School backpacks come in different sizes for different ages. Choose the right size pack for your child's back as well as one with enough room for necessary school items.

• Size is important. The backpack should never be wider or longer than your child's torso, and the pack should not hang more than 4 inches below the waistline.

• Children should use all possible compartments to distribute weight. Heaviest items should go closest to children's backs.

• If possible, encourage your child to make frequent trips to his or her locker between classes to reduce the number of books in the backpack at one time.

It's 'Good Night' – And Good Riddance – Irene

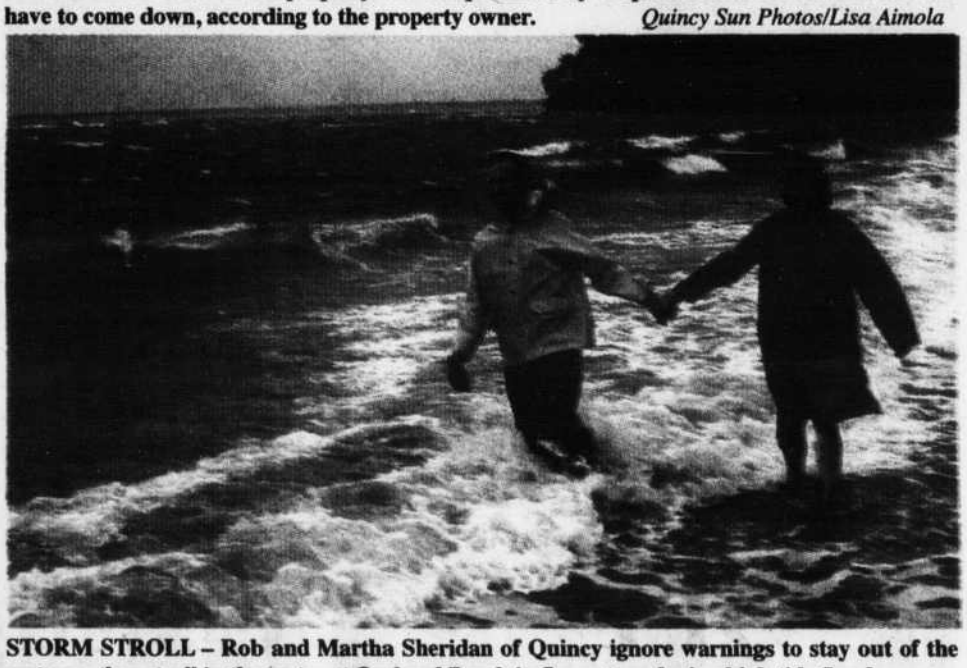

CLEAN-UP CREWS have been removing trees and limbs from local streets and other public places since Tropical Storm Irene hit with gusty winds and heavy rain Sunday. Here tree limbs and branches are piled high in preparation for removal in the parking lot at Squantum Point Park.

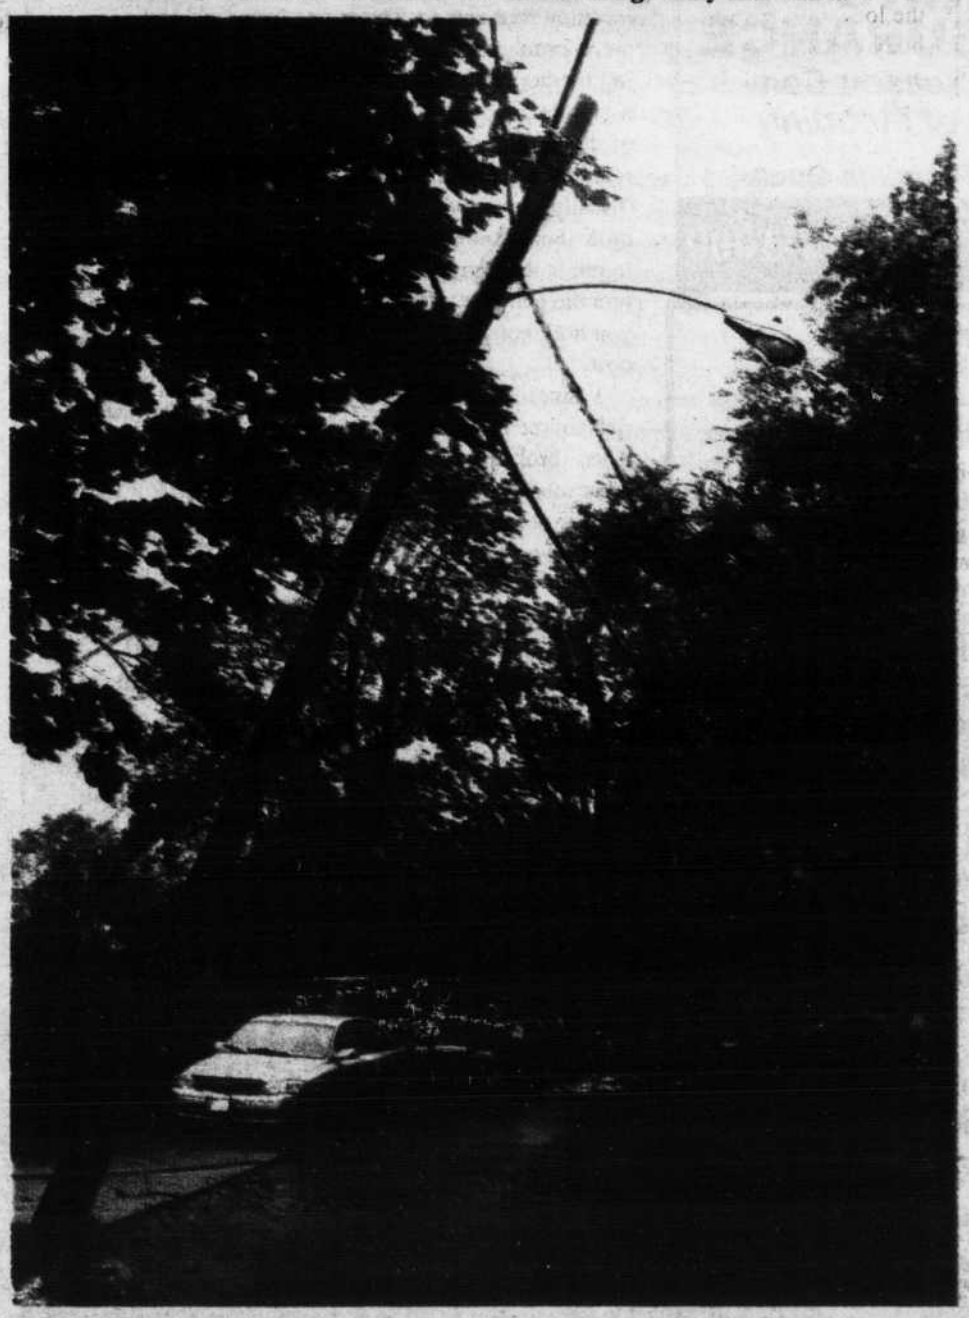

A GARAGE ON Rodman Street in South Quincy is covered with down branches from the storm. Another mature tree on the property was compromised by Tropical Storm Irene and it too will have to come down, according to the property owner. Quincy Sun Photos/Lisa Aimola

Key Housing Lesson: Borrower Education Works

(NAPSA)-New research says it's a smart idea for homeowners to get into financial literacy programs. Doing so can make homeowners less likely to go into default during a housing crisis, and, if they do default, they're more likely to recover and keep their homes than other borrowers.

"The fact that borrower financial education programs can really work may well be one of the lasting lessons from the housing collapse," explained Dwight Robinson, the Freddie Mac senior vice president who oversaw the creation of CreditSmart, a comprehensive financial literacy program.

Robinson cites an Urban Institute survey where 55 percent of borrowers who had counseling to help them get current on their loans remained out of trouble afterwards, versus only 38 percent of the borrowers who didn't receive counseling.

Learning to Avoid Trouble

Freddie Mac created Credit_Smart 10 years ago, before the housing crisis, by working in close collaboration with universities and leaders from America's underserved communities to train churches, community groups and other trusted organizations to teach families to budget their money, build strong credit and make wise financial choices.

So far, more than 40,000 trained instructors have used CreditSmart to teach some 3 million Americans in five languages. The program has been used by major financial institutions and organizations across the country, including the Coast Guard, the National Urban League, United States Hispanic Leadership Institute, and the "Moneywise" program on PBS and the Armed Forces Network.

"Americans were thirsty for knowledge and understanding about consumer credit and mortgage finance when we launched CreditSmart. Today, after the housing collapse, the public's thirst for sound credit information has only increased," Robinson said.

Helping the Next Generation

To quench that thirst, Credit-Smart is expanding its availability to a group of vulnerable-but often overlooked-citizens: high school students. The United States Hispanic Leadership Institute already has incorporated CreditSmart training into the leadership conferences it offers to high school and college students.

Later this year, a HUD-ap_proved counseling agency plans to start offering CreditSmart lessons to students and educators, and Washington, D.C.'s public school system and the GALA Hispanic Theatre aims to turn CreditSmart into theater pieces that teach students about credit and money management.

Another nonprofit group, Back2Basics Community Services, is preparing to launch a two-pronged effort in select schools with CreditSmart clubs for students and a separate money management training effort for parents.

"We see these efforts as part of a growing realization by community and business leaders alike that one of the best ways to prepare the next generation of homeowners for lasting success is to equip America's students with a sound financial education today," said Robinson.

Composting Tips

Q: I really enjoy your column, it's informative and helpful. We have many trees on our property, and leaves are a constant cleaning chore. We place the leaves in a barrel and let them decompose. When they've broken down, we use that compost in our flower beds and special gardens, like our volcano mountain waterfall garden. In the decomposing barrel, we add a little lime to sweeten the soil.

The best way to maintain home value is to keep the home looking appealing. – Mr. & Mrs. Harry & Janice K., St. Cloud, Fla.

A: Good advice. Creating a compost heap is a very budget-friendly way to keep garden plants flourishing. If you have a well-treed property and aren't taking advantage of all the free leaves, I highly recommend doing so. There are a number of composting methods, from creating a simple heap in a corner of the yard to purchasing a rotating composting system (usually a heavy-duty barrel on a stand that allows you to rotate the barrel easily to turn the compost). It's up to you how you want to compost.

Leaves can be a very rich source of minerals that when broken down do a great job of building up the soil for decorative plants as well as vegetable gardens.

Adding lime to compost is a topic of some debate. Lime typically slows down decomposition, and it reduces the acidity of the compost. So it's a good idea to know why and when lime needs to be added. If, for example, your compost is largely made up of oak leaves, pine needles or fruit pulp, adding a small amount of lime (about 1 cup for every 25 cubic feet of compost) can balance out the pH of the compost by lowering the acidity.

To speed decomposition and ensure even breakdown, turn your compost every three weeks. Shredding the leaves before adding them to the pile will also help the compost develop faster. This is where a mulching attachment on the lawnmower comes in handy. If it's too much trouble, however, just chuck the leaves onto the pile and remember to turn regularly.

HOME TIP: Leaf pile not composting? Add some manure (one part for every five parts of leaves), bone meal or other nitrogen-rich supplement to kick-start decomposition.

Where to Turn When Your Quincy Home Doesn't Sell

Quincy - If your home has just come off the market and hasn't sold, don't get discouraged. The reason your home did not sell may have nothing to do with your home or the market. In reality, your home may have been one of the more desirable properties for sale.

So Why Didn't Your Home Sell?

Last year almost half of the homes listed for sale never sold at all, and many sellers found that there was a tremendous amount a homeowner needed to be educated on to sell their home for top dollar in the shortest time period.

Don't risk making the wrong choices and losing both time and money on your investment. Before you hire a realtor, know the right questions to ask to save you time and money.

Industry experts have prepared a free special report called "How to Sell a House that Didn't Sell" which educates you on the issues involved.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your free copy of this report call 800-611-0351 and enter ID#1012. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Call now to make sure your home sells next time you list it or visit www.QuincyHomeExpired.com

Selecting The Right Roofing Shingles

(NAPSA) – When the time comes for a new roof, today's homeowners can be on top of the situation. Whether building a new home or remodeling, selecting the right roofing involves more than aesthetics and cost.

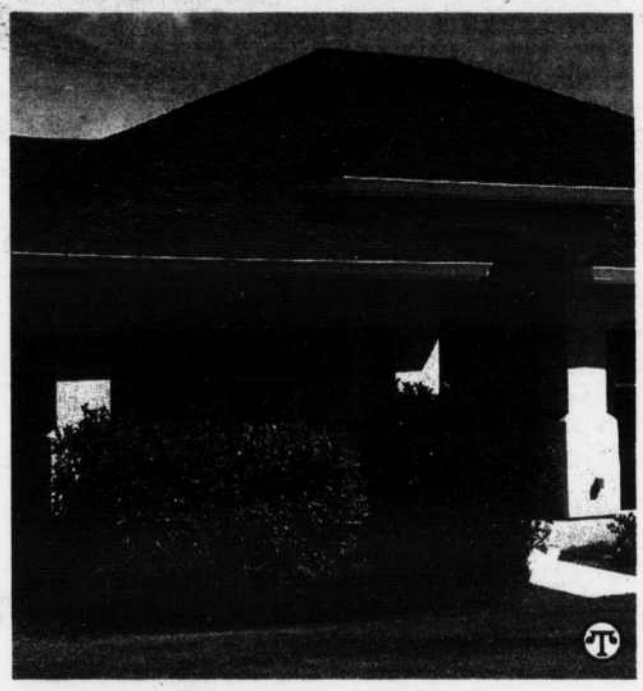

Factors such as building codes, climate and how long you intend to stay in the home can affect decisions about material, weather-impact resistance, warranty and solar reflective capability. The good news is there are now more roofing shingle options than ever before and curb appeal doesn't have to take a backseat to functionality.

Here's a look at a few:

• Strip shingles – the original, the most basic and most lightweight of roofing shingles – are single layered and generally designed to look like slate. Inexpensive and with a flat appearance on the roof line, strip shingles used to be the most popular shingle. Today, with significant advances in technology and consumer sophistication, strip shingles are primarily used by contractors building economy-priced homes or are purchased by homeowners for small repairs on homes that already have strip-shingle roofs.

• Dimensional shingles, or architectural laminated shingles, are now the predominant roofing shingles installed in North America. Manufactured as dual or multilayered, a dimensional shingle provides a thicker and richer appearance, with various shades and mixtures of colors and tones.

A big plus for homeowners concerned about color, these shingles can be closely matched to complement exterior siding, trim and doors. Dimensional roofing shingles are also typically heavier than strip roofing shingles, can be made with a higher impact resistance and are offered with improved warranty protections – from 30 years to lifetime.

• Premium shingles are laminated shingles, unlike traditional roofing shingles. Designs may mimic "old-world" roofing shingles, such as natural slate or shake shingles. These are a great choice for historical homes representing classic traditional architectural styles. For example, CertainTeed's Grand Manor provides enhanced aesthetic appeal. Premium roofing shingles also usually provide impact resistance or solar reflectivity, which can extend roof life and lower energy costs.

Protecting Yourself And Belongings From Hurricanes

(NAPSA) – There are several steps car owners, homeowners, condo owners and renters can take to protect themselves and their belongings from hurricanes and other kinds of rough weather, say GEICO professionals and the Insurance Information Institute (I.I.I.).

1. Check your insurance coverage. Your property insurance coverage should be enough to rebuild your home or adequately repair it. A common mistake is thinking the real estate value of a house is the same as its insurance value.

2. Know the amount of your hurricane deductible and have a plan for covering it. Review your policy papers to find the deductible that applies to your policy. If you are unsure, contact your insurance company.

3. Consider flood insurance. Flood damage is not covered by a standard homeowner's insurance policy. Separate policies can be acquired from private insurers and the National Flood Insurance Program at www.floodsmart.gov.

4. Keep an up-to-date home inventory. Conduct a full inventory of your major possessions and photograph all your home's contents. This will help you determine if you have enough coverage and makes it easier to document your belongings if you need to file a claim.

5. Have your insurance information handy. Know how to contact your insurance company. Keep the phone number, e-mail address and your insurance policy number with you at all times.

6. Be prepared. Keep an emergency kit of supplies in your car and in your home that includes water, batteries, blankets, a first-aid kit and other safety items you may need.

• If you're warned that a natural disaster is heading your way, gather cash, credit cards, insurance information, important documents and contact information.

• Keep your gas tank full in case of an emergency evacuation.

• Have a battery-operated radio to listen to news and weather reports and updates.

• Keep a supply of necessary medications on hand.

• Get your car to a covered location out of the way of any trees or other objects that may fall on it.

• Don't park in a low-lying location that's prone to flooding and consider wrapping a tarp around your vehicle to help prevent any water damage.

7. If you have to evacuate your area, never drive through standing water more than six inches deep; it could cause you to lose control of your vehicle.

Opponents Charge Plan Will Increase Flooding

that the Public (sic) did not need to know what was in the report since it was for Conservation Commission members..."

Both Goodman's appeal and the formal appeal charge the plan will harm smelt spawning areas of Town Brook.

The formal appeal details ten flaws in the decision of the Conservation Commission. At the outset, the challengers ask whether a city commission should be reviewing a city plan or whether an outside agency should perform an impartial review.

In addition, the appeal cites storm water issues and claims, "Approving the new alignment and culverting of the Town Brook, however, creates a permanent, permitted degradation of the Town Brook which does not protect the interest of fisheries and wildlife habitat. There is also a loss of public amenity in the form of access to the Town Brook."

DEP spokesman Ed Colletta said Monday that the complaint has been received and will be assigned to a staffer who will review the entire file and related documents and investigate all claims.

That investigator will also plan a site visit and invite all interested parties, including the 11 persons signing the appeal. Colletta said the DEP is not mandated to meet any time limits in responding to an appeal.

In addition to Perdios, Artis, and Goodman, the following persons appealed the Conservation Commission's decision: Ruth Griffin, Anneli Johnson, Josephine Costello, Linda Browne, Richard Joyce, Valerie Stromberg, Ross Edwards, and Courtney Perdios.

City To Receive $5 Million For Town Brook Project

ing to secure for a portion of the improvements, with the remainder to be financed by new taxes and parking revenue from the downtown project.

Under the agreement presented to the Council, called a Land Disposition Agreement, Street-Works will pay the City $30 million to cover downtown-related debt already incurred through construction of the Quincy Center Concourse and other related redevelopment costs. In return, the agreement allows for the primary project to be expanded by up to 750,000 square feet of development and an additional $11.5 million in public improvements.

Under the plan, the City will use state urban redevelopment law known as Chapter 121A as the property tax structure for the development. After development, the City expects to receive $10.1 million in property tax revenue. Of that, about $6.8 million will go toward paying for the public improvements, and $3.6 million will go straight to the City's general fund.

Other new revenues such as new meals taxes, hotel room taxes and property taxes outside the immediate project area is expected to generate at least total of $7.1 million in new revenue beyond what will be used to pay for the public improvements. In the end, the agreement will mean a 4 to 1 ratio of private spending to public investment, and a figure substantially higher than most traditional urban redevelopment projects, Koch said.

At no time will the City's general fund be responsible for paying for any of the public improvements, according to the agreement, city officials said.

Advice From The Better Business Bureau In Wake Of Tropical Storm Irene

Homeowners: Be On Lookout For 'Fly-By-Night' Storm Chasers

Your home and wallet may take a serious beating when a big storm like Hurricane Irene hits and Better Business Bureau is warning consumers to be wary of fly-by-night "storm chasers," as well as fraudulent charities promising to provide relief.

Storm chasers and other door-to-door salespeople often peddle dubious deals that may cost homeowners thousands of dollars and create serious headaches. BBB recommends doing your research to avoid getting taken advantage of by untrustworthy home contractors and the like.

For those who seek to aid in relief, BBB Wise Give Alliance urges donors to check trustworthy charities before making any donations. Not only do Americans need to be concerned about avoiding fraud, they also need to make sure their money goes to competent relief organizations that are equipped and experienced to handle the unique challenges of providing assistance.

When looking for a contractor you can trust and when seeking to aid to relief efforts, BBB recommends that homeowners and donors do the following:

Start Your Search with BBB. In addition to offering Business Reviews on tens of thousands of contractors—good and bad—across the US, you can also rely on BBB's Accredited Business Locator to find trustworthy contractors in your area. BBB accreditation standards require that accredited businesses make a good faith effort to resolve disputes.

Find trustworthy charities when aiding to relief. BBB Wise Giving Alliance urges donors to make sure their donations will go to legitimate and reputable charities and relief efforts that have the capability to help those in need. Be cautious when relying on third-party recommendations such as bloggers or other Web sites, as they might not have fully researched the listed relief organizations. Interested donors should visit www.bbb.org/charity to research charities and relief organizations to verify that they are accredited by the BBB and meet the 20 Standards for Charity Accountability.

Recognize the red flags. Beware of any contractor who uses high pressure sales tactics or requires full payment upfront. Also avoid contractors who require you to get the necessary permits. When looking to make a donation, be cautious about online giving, especially in response to spam messages and emails that claim to link to a relief organization. In response to the previous natural disasters, there were concerns raised about many Web sites and new organizations that were created overnight allegedly to help victims.

Vet the contractor carefully. Verify the business meets all state and local requirements including being licensed, insured and bonded. Also ask the business for references from recent jobs. Confirm whether or not the contractor will be subcontracting the job or relying on their own employees.

Beware of storm chasers. In the wake of a storm, fly-by-night repair businesses will solicit work, often door-to-door, in unmarked trucks. They might require advance payment and make big promises on which they won't be able to deliver.

Seek at least three bids. Beware of low-ball estimates that may potentially balloon over time or foreshadow shoddy work to come.

Make sure everything is in writing. Make sure that the full scope of the work is explained in the contract including cleanup and disposal of waste. All verbal agreements need to be included in the written agreement. Pay close attention to the payment terms, estimated price of materials and labor and any warranties or guarantees.

For more advice on hiring home professionals and for finding a charity you can trust, visit us online at bbb.org and BBB Wise Give Alliance at bbb.org/charity.

Football, Soccer, Volleyball, Golf & Cross Country Teams Ready To Start Up Next Week

High School Fall Sports: Back In Action On Monday

By SEAN BRENNAN

The official start of fall doesn't become a reality until the 23rd of September.

However, the launch of the 2011 fall sport seasons for North Quincy and Quincy High School will kick into action as early as next Monday (Sept. 6) when student-athletes representing the Red Raiders and the Presidents are scheduled to get back onto the playing fields, golf courses and gymnasiums in the city with eyes set on extended runs in the MIAA state playoffs.

The Quincy Sun sports department is providing its readers with the dates of every game for every team at NQHS and QHS for the upcoming fall season. These dates, after consulting with Athletic Director Jim Rendle, have been taken from the website www.highschoolsports.net. According to Rendle, the dates are accurate but there is always a chance that bad weather may force postponements – the chance for changes in game locations is always a possibility as well but the Sun will do its best to keep you updated on any changes that are made ahead of time.

The Sun's one-man sports department will begin team previews next week - with football and volleyball up first - and these previews will continue until every team listed below is covered. Throughout the fall, game results, potential feature stories and other news may be sent directly to me at quincysunnews@verizon.net.

The deadline each week is Monday by noontime.

North Quincy

Football

The Red Raiders kicked off preseason practice last Thursday in preparation for the upcoming 2011 football season; a season that should be filled with promise and a great potential to improve on last year's record of 6-5 overall.

Coach Jim Connor's squad only needs to look back to last Thanksgiving as motivation. The Red Raiders extended its modest winning streak on Turkey Day to two games following a 13-6 victory over rival Quincy.

Playing again this season in the Patriot League, North Quincy's schedule is front-loaded with non-league games – setting the stage for a final month of league contests against some of the better teams on the South Shore.

The Red Raiders open their 2011 calendar on Friday, Sept. 9 on the road at Boston Latin School in the first of five non-league games. North Quincy started 2010 off on the right foot with a 13-6 victory over the Wolfpack and will be aiming to match that feat next week.

After losing last year at home to Oliver Ames (14-12), the Raiders get another shot at this non-league foe on the road Friday, Sept. 16, followed by rematch with East Bridgewater, in their first scheduled home game at Veterans Memorial Stadium, on Friday, Sept. 23 at 7 p.m. The Vikings defeated North Quincy last fall 46-28.

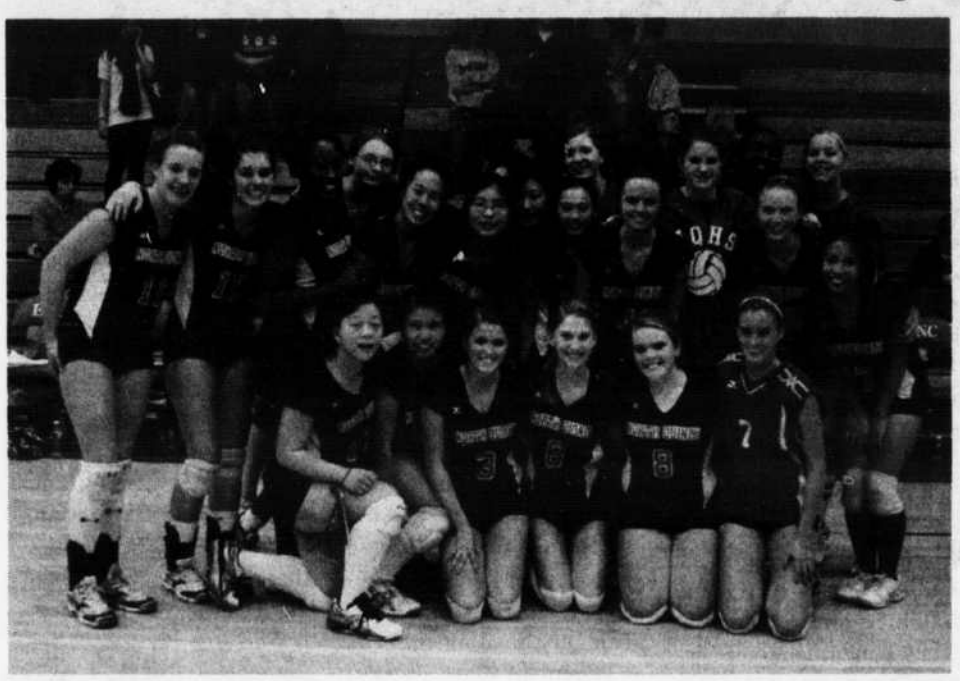

Non-league games versus Arlington (home, Sept. 30, 7 p.m.) and at Archbishop Williams (Oct. 7, 7 p.m.) precede Patriot League contests versus Middleboro – home game, Sat., Oct. 15, 4 p.m. – at Duxbury (Oct. 21), and consecutive home tilts with Hingham (Oct. 28, 7 p.m.) and Silver Lake Regional (Saturday, Nov. 5, 1 p.m.). The Raiders lost last year to Duxbury (36-21), Silver Lake (21-7), and Hingham (35-14).

An away game against Whitman-Hanson on Thursday, Nov. 10 is the lead-in game for the 79th annual Thanksgiving Day game with Quincy High School, set for-Thursday, Nov. 24 at 10 a.m. at the Veterans Memorial Stadium.

Golf

The Red Raiders tee off at Presidents Golf Course next Wednesday (Sept. 7, 3:30 p.m.) against league foe Silver Lake Regional.

Coach Bob Doyle's boys will play at Hingham on Sept. 8 before traveling to Middleboro to play the Sachems on Sept. 13. Three straight home matches against Duxbury (Sept. 14, 3:30 p.m.), Hanover (Sept. 15, 3:30 p.m.), and Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 20, 3:30 p.m.) precede away matches at Scituate (Sept. 21), Pembroke (Sept. 22), and Silver Lake (Sept. 27). A home match with Hingham (Sept. 28, 3:30 p.m.) will be followed with away matches against Duxbury (Oct. 4), Whitman-Hanson (Oct. 5), and Quincy (Oct. 6, 3:30 p.m.).

NORTH QUINCY VOLLEYBALL came within two victories of winning the Division 1 state championship in 2010. The Raiders should be a heavy favorite to capture the crown this fall. North opens the season on Sept. 7 at Barnstable. Quincy Sun file photo

Boys Soccer

North Quincy starts its 2011 season next Tuesday (Sept. 6) with an away match against Malden, which is followed with a road game against Archbishop Williams on Sept. 8.

Coach Rich Hanlon's troops play their first home game on Sat., Sept. 10 at 7 p.m. against non-league Milton at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

The Raiders open their Patriot League schedule on Sept. 13 at Silver Lake Regional before hosting Hingham on Sept. 15 at 4 p.m. An away match at Middleboro (Sept. 20) is followed by home games against Duxbury (Sept. 22), Plymouth North (Sept. 24), and Hanover (Sept. 26). A road tilt at Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 28) closes out the month of September.

On Oct. 1, North Quincy is set to host Quincy at Veterans Memorial Stadium (7 p.m.) with home games versus Scituate (Oct. 4) and Malden (Oct. 8) following. Road games at Hingham (Oct. 13) and Duxbury (Oct. 18) are trailed by home game with Whitman-Hanson (Oct. 20) and Quincy (Sat., Oct. 22, 6:30 p.m.). The Raiders close out the regular season with a road game at Pembroke (Oct. 25), at home versus Silver Lake (Oct. 27), and at non-league Milton (Oct. 29).

Girls Soccer

September ends with a home game versus Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 28, 3:30 p.m.) and a road game at Quincy on Friday, Sept. 30 at 4 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

It will be a busy October for North Quincy. The Raiders open the month with an away game at Scituate (Oct. 4), a home game against Pembroke (Oct. 6, 3:30 p.m.), and an away game at Silver Lake (Oct. 11). Consecutive home games with Hingham (Oct. 13) and Duxbury (Oct. 18) are followed by a road game at Whitman-Hanson and a home rematch with Quincy at the Stadium (Sat., Oct. 22, 4:30 p.m.).

North Quincy closes out the fall with three non-league games: home versus Everett (Oct. 26), and at Boston English (Oct. 27) and Lynn Classical (Oct. 28).

Volleyball

Last fall North Quincy advanced all the way to the Division 1 state semifinals before losing to Lincoln-Sudbury, 3-1, to finish the season at 20-5. Overall, 2010 was a banner year and this season has the real potential to be even better.

The Raiders get started next Wednesday (Sept. 7) with an away match against state powerhouse Barnstable. Consecutive home matches against Brockton (Sept. 9, 5:30 p.m.) and Duxbury (Sept. 12, 5:30 p.m.) are followed by away matches at Rockland (Sept. 14) and Hanover (Sept. 16).

Coach Kerry Ginty's girls host Middleboro on Sept. 19 (5:30 p.m.) before hitting the road for matches at Pembroke (Sept. 21) and at Hingham (Sept. 23). A home tilt with Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 26) and a road match at Silver Lake (Sept. 28) ends September. October opens with an away match at Duxbury (Oct. 5), which sets up a big home showdown with rival Quincy on Oct. 6 at 6 p.m. – all home games are played in the NQHS gym.

The month ends with a road match at Brockton (Oct. 7), a home match with Hanover (Oct. 11), away at Middleboro (Oct. 13), home versus Pembroke (Oct. 17) and Hingham (Oct. 19), on the road at Whitman-Hanson (Oct. 21), home versus Silver Lake (Oct. 24), at Quincy (QHS, Oct. 26, 6 p.m.) and at home against Marshfield (Oct. 27).

Quincy

Football

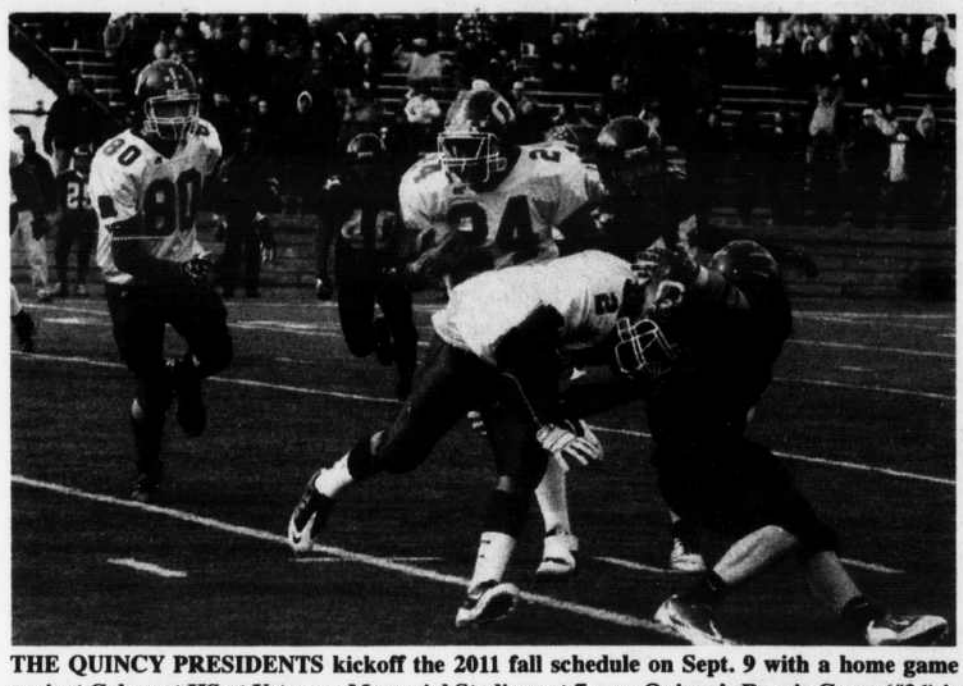

There is an air of excitement surrounding this fall's Quincy Presidents football program. Following last season's 4-7 record, which included a hard-fought 13-6 loss to rival North Quincy on Thanksgiving, Quincy will be looking to regain city status in 2011.

Coach Bill Reardon's team opened preseason practice last week and is set to travel to East Bridgewater on Saturday morning for a tune-up scrimmage. The regular season schedule opens next Friday (Sept. 9) when the Presidents host non-league Cohasset at 7 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

The Clippers defeated Quincy 45-7 in the 2010 season opener.

Quincy makes two non-league road trips following the Cohasset game. On Sept. 16 they play at Canton and on Sept. 23 they play at Plymouth South. Quincy defeated the Bulldogs 42-14 in 2010 and lost 12-11 to the Panthers.

Following a non-league game at home versus Malden Catholic (Oct. 7, 7 p.m.), Quincy tackles their Patriot League slate with away games at Hanover (Oct. 14) and at Pembroke (Oct. 21). The month of October ends with a home game versus Whitman-Hanson (Sat., Oct. 29, 1 p.m.) while November sees Quincy play at home versus Scituate (Nov. 4, 7 p.m.), at Middleboro (Nov. 10), and against North Quincy on Thanksgiving, kickoff 10 a.m. at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

The Presidents open the fall season next Wednesday (Sept. 7) with a home match with Duxbury at Furnace Brook beginning at 3:30 p.m.

Coach Lou Venturelli's boys play at Scituate on Sept. 8 and at Whitman-Hanson on Sept. 13 before hosting Pembroke (Sept. 14) and Hingham (Sept. 15). Consecutive road matches at Hanover (Sept. 20) and Silver Lake (Sept. 21) are followed by three home matches with Middleboro (Sept. 22), Hanover (Sept. 27), and Scituate (Sept. 28) – all home matches start at 3:30 p.m.

Quincy ends its fall season with road matches at Pembroke (Oct. 4) and Middleboro (Oct. 5). The Presidents close out the regular season at home versus rival North Quincy (Oct. 6, 3:30 p.m.).

Boys Soccer

Coach Mark Spendlove's team will be the first QHS or NQHS team to open the fall season when they travel to Randolph on Monday (Sept. 5) to play the Blue Devils.

Quincy follows that match with an away game at Plymouth North on Sept. 7 followed by back-to-back home tilts at Veterans Memorial Stadium against Bridgewater-Raynham (Sept. 10, 11 a.m.) and Duxbury (Sept. 13, 4 p.m.) before again hitting the road to play at Scituate (Sept. 15).

A home game on Sept. 17 with Plymouth North precedes games at Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 20) and at Pembroke (Sept. 22) followed by a home match versus Hingham on Sept. 26 – the month ends with an away game at Hanover on Sept. 28.

October begins with an away game against North Quincy on Oct. 1 at 6:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Stadium. Five straight Patriot League games against Silver Lake (Oct. 4), Middleboro (Oct. 6), Randolph (Oct. 8), Hanover (Oct. 11), Scituate (Oct. 13), and Pembroke (Oct. 18) should give QHS a chance to move up the league standings.

The regular season ends with road games at Middleboro (Oct. 20), North Quincy (Oct. 22, 6:30 p.m.) and B-R (Oct. 29).

Girls Soccer

Quincy starts what could be a much-improved season on Wed., Sept. 7 at 3:45 p.m. against Randolph at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

The Presidents travel to Duxbury on Sept. 13 before hosting Scituate (Sept. 15), Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 20), and Pembroke (Sept. 22) – all three games start at 3:30 p.m. Consecutive road games at Hingham (Sept. 26) and Everett (Sept. 27) are followed by home games with Hanover (Sept. 28) and versus North Quincy at Veterans Memorial Stadium on Sept. 30 at 4 p.m.

Coach Don Martin's squad plays six road games in row to start October: Silver Lake (Oct. 4), Middleboro (Oct. 6), Hanover (Oct. 11), Scituate (Oct. 13), Pembroke (Oct. 18), and at Randolph (Oct. 19).

The fall season ends with a home tilt versus Middleboro on Oct. 20, a road match at the Stadium with NQHS on Oct. 22 at 4:30 p.m. and at home against Mt. Alvernia.

Volleyball

The defending Patriot League champions, Quincy will be out for redemption this fall when their season opens on Wed., Sept. 7 at Brockton. The Presidents were eliminated by rival North Quincy in the Central-East Division 1 sectional final, 3-2; QHS finished the 2010 season with a 21-3 overall record.

Following the Brockton match, the Presidents play at Fontbonne (Sept. 9), at Middleboro (Sept. 12), and at Pembroke on Sept. 14. Consecutive home matches against Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 16) and Hingham (Sept. 19) are followed with an away match at Duxbury (Sept. 21) and home tilts versus Rockland (Sept. 23) and Silver Lake (Sept. 26).

September ends with an away match at Hanover (Sept. 28) and a home match against Fontbonne (Sept. 30) – all home games are in the QHS gym.

The month of October features matches against Middleboro (home, Oct. 5), at North Quincy (Oct. 6, 6:30 p.m.), home versus Pembroke (Oct. 7), away at Whitman-Hanson (Oct. 11) and away at Hingham (Oct. 13). A home game with Duxbury (Oct. 17) is followed with home matches against Brockton (Oct. 19), Hanover (Oct. 24), North Quincy (Oct. 26, 3:30 p.m.), and Canton (Oct. 31).

Cross Country

The combined NQHS/QHS cross country team hits the starting blocks on Thursday, Sept. 13 with a 4 p.m. home meet against Patriot League opponent Whitman-Hanson.

The team closes out the regular season with consecutive away meets at Duxbury (Oct. 18) and Hanover (Oct. 25).

The Patriot League All-League Meet is scheduled for Oct. 29 (TBA).

4th Annual Jamie Cochrane Memorial Road Race

On Sunday, September 11, 2011 the Fourth Annual Officer Jamie Cochrane Memorial Road Race will be held in Quincy. The race is held in memory of Jamie Cochrane who was a lifelong resident of Quincy and an eight-year veteran of the Quincy Police Department. He was tragically killed in a motorcycle crash on September 10, 2006. Jamie was a kind hearted, dedicated and selfless individual both in his personal and professional life. He believed in giving back to the community and helping those who were less fortunate than he.

Jamie's family, friends and co-workers have come together to raise money for a scholarship program in his name. Each year we distribute six $1000 scholarships to high school seniors whom reside in Quincy. The recipients are chosen based on academic record and service to the community of Quincy. In addition, donations have been made to other local charitable organizations such as Toys for Tots, DOVE, Inc, Germantown Community Center, Mass Fallen Heroes, Quincy Youth Arena, Autism Awareness, The Patriot Ledger Lend-a-Hand program, QCAP Food Bank, and the Salvation Army.

Our road race assumed the former U.S. Marshal William F. Degan Road Race that was held in Quincy for fifteen years. The Degan Committee graciously assisted us in making the Officer Jamie Cochrane Road Race the huge success it has been. Our race is held annually in September and consists of a 10K run, 5K run and 5K fun walk. The race is a fast, flat course partially along scenic Quincy Shore Drive. There are also many activities for children including a Kid's Fun Run, face painting, moonwalks and music. Food and drinks is provided to all registered runners and their families. Awards are given in age and gender categories.

The race will be held at 10 a.m. on Sunday, September 11, 2011. The race start and finish line will be at the entrance to Pageant Field on Merrymount Parkway, Quincy. The cost of the race is $25, the first 700 pre-registered runners will receive a free race t-shirt. Children from ages 2-10 may participate in the free Kid's Fun Run at 9:00 a.m. and will receive a goody bag. The Cochrane Road Race Committee will honor those we lost on the 10th Anniversary of September 11th.

Runners can register online at www.cochraneroadrace.com; applications can also be picked up at the Quincy Police Department. Pre-registration and number pick-up will be held on Saturday, September 10, 2011 from 2 p.m. - 5 p.m. at Pageant Field, Quincy. 10th Annual Walk of Hope To Benefit ALS Sept. 10

Get your walking shoes on and join more than 800 walkers at the 10th annual Walk of Hope for ALS on Saturday, Sept. 10. This 3.5-mile walk around Lake Quannapowitt in Wakefield benefits The Angel Fund, an independent, nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS) research at the Cecil B. Day Laboratory for Neuromuscular Research at UMass Medical Center in Worcester.

ALS, more commonly known as Lou Gehrig's Disease, is a progressive, always fatal neuromuscular disease which leads to muscle weakness and as it progresses, results in total paralysis and the inability to speak and swallow while the mind and senses remain intact.

The Walk of Hope begins with registration at 9 a.m. followed by the start of the walk at 11 a.m. In the event of inclement weather, the walk will be held on Sunday, Sept. 11.

Walkers of all abilities are encouraged to participate as individuals or as a team. To register as a walker or to register as a team, call The Angel Fund at 781-245-7070 or log in to the organization's website at www.theangelfund.org.

Donations to The Angel Fund can also be made online or can be sent to The Angel Fund, 649 Main St., Wakefield, MA 01880. All donations should be made payable to The Angel Fund. To assist its walkers, the organization has joined FirstGiving.org, which enables them to create their own webpage to raise money online. Registered walkers can create their page at www.firstgiving.com/angelfund.

In addition to the walk, the event includes children's activities and refreshments for all walkers.

Matches To Be Held At The Russell Street Courts

41st Annual City of Quincy Tennis Tournament

The Quincy Recreation Department announced that the Quincy Credit Union would once again sponsor the Annual City of Quincy Tennis Tournament. This traditional fall classic is scheduled for the 41st consecutive year to crown the best resident tennis players in 11 different divisions of play for boys, girls, men and women.

According to Director of Recreation Barry Welch, this is the 15th year that the Credit Union had provided the financial support that continues to make this event possible. The tournament is believed to be the longest running municipal tournament in New England.

"We are indebted to the Quincy Credit Union for recognizing this unique event that provides enjoyment for the families that make up the Quincy tennis community," Welch stated. "The sponsorship and generosity allows a positive recreational program with great benefit to continue and a new generation of players the opportunity to demonstrate their tennis skills."

The tournament applications will be mailed to past participants and can be picked up at the Recreation Department, the Quincy Credit Union, City Hall or at boxes located at the lighted tennis courts throughout the city.

The fee is $18 for adults and $8 for youth under age 16. The tournament is open to all residents of Quincy.

The deadline for applications is Sept. 9 with matches posted Sept. 14. Matches are played in ten divisions at the Russell Park tennis courts at the rear of Quincy High School starting Sept. 16 and will continue nights and weekends with a championship weekend to be held Sept. 24-25 weather permitting.

Additional information can be obtained at QuincyRec.com or by calling the main office at 617-376-1394.

ENC Baseball Showcase

The Eastern Nazarene College Baseball Showcase will be held on Saturday, Sept. 10.

The baseball event will provide participants with an opportunity to showcase their abilities to the ENC staff as well as other baseball programs of your choice. The ENC Showcase is open to all high school players but for juniors and seniors the event is the one and only showcase that ensures that the school of his choice will see each player's performance.

The ENC coaching staff will do professional evaluations and send those evaluations directly to the three schools that each participant is interested in.

For more information, contact Coach Bryan Hampton at bryan.hampton@enc.edu or visit www.enc.edu.

A Job Well Done

On Monday, Aug. 22, at approximately 9 p.m., Officers Dave Zupkofska, Joe Paccioretti and Steve Cleary were dispatched to the Southside Tavern on Liberty Street regarding an unarmed robbery that had just occurred.

LT. DAN MINTON

As the Officers responded, Dispatch informed them that a patron was chasing a male suspect down Brook Road. A description was provided along with an update, that the suspect may have entered a black SUV and headed up Water Street towards Brewer's Corner.

As Officer Zupkofska entered the intersection of Brook Road and Water Street, a male known to him yelled and pointed west down Water Street. While the Officers checked the area, Officer Zupkofska arrived at The Southside Tavern and interviewed the Bartender, who stated that he was tending bar and closed the cash register to use the bathroom. When he came out, a patron told him that a man just reached over the bar, opened the register, and took a handful of cash out, then fled chased by two other patrons of the bar.

One of the patrons who chased the suspect came back into the bar and told the Officer that he was at the bar and saw the suspect reach over the bar, push the button on the register and grab money. The witness yelled and the suspect ran from the bar. The witness gave chase as the suspect knocked chairs around inside to block him from chasing him. Once outside, the suspect ran south on Liberty Street, then turned right onto Brook Road. As the witness closed in, the suspect threw the money he had taken to the ground and yelled, "Take the money."

The witness continued to chase the man to the intersection of Brook Road and Water Street, but lost sight of him. Officer Zupkofska asked if he saw the suspect get into a vehicle and the witness said he did not see this, but added that a few minutes before the suspect took the money, he saw a dark colored SUV on Quincy Street next to the Southside Tavern and thought it looked out of place. He thought he saw the same man in the passenger seat. The bartender then gave Officer Zupkofska a set of keys and told him that there was a car parked in the lot and was running with the keys in the ignition. He said that no one at the bar knew who's car it was or if it was involved in the incident.

A check of the vehicle revealed that it was registered to a male Quincy resident; the vehicle's registration was active and was not listed as stolen. Dispatch attempted to contact the owner and see why the car was in the lot running with no one there and to find out who had last possession of it, but there was no answer. Officer Scott Smith went to the address while Officer Steve Cleary used the cruiser's Mobile Data Terminal (MDT) to display a driver's license photo of the male owner. The two men who chased after the suspect and a female patron were shown the photo individually. They all confirmed that it was the same man who fled the Tavern with a handful of money.

The female witness said that she was with friends and saw the suspect come in. She said that she had not seen him in the bar before. She believed he was there for approximately 1/2 hour and had a Bud Light beer while at the bar, then left. A few minutes later she heard yelling and looked over to the bar and saw the suspect running towards the door. She said the suspect now had a different shirt on as he ran out.

Officer Cleary began to conduct an inventory search of the suspect's vehicle and found a cooler on the passenger side floor with several empty Bud Light beer cans and ice inside. He then opened the trunk and was looking inside when one of the witnesses looked in and pointed to a blue shirt in the trunk. The witness told Officer Cleary that was the shirt the man had on earlier. Officer Smith radioed that he had knocked on the suspect's door and a female answered. The Officer asked if the suspect was home and she told him he was. The suspect came to the front door and Officer Smith asked him where he was earlier.

The suspect said that he left his car running in a parking lot and walked home. At this time Officer Smith arrested the suspect. The suspect, a 32 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Larceny from a Person." Officer Cleary went back to the Southside Tavern when their Security Company Representative arrived and provided the Officer with a flash drive of the video from the camera inside the bar during the incident. In all, over $600 in various denominations was recovered by the witnesses. An additional $160 was unaccounted for.

Nice Work!

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Labor Day is one of the youngest of our national holidays. It is an important day, not only for those in the ranks of labor, but for every citizen in this land. It look labor of all kinds to carve this nation out of a wilderness; to carve roads through the trackless forests; to clear lands and build towns.

Today many do not celebrate the day as it was originally dedicated for. There are, of course, the parades, but for many Labor Day marks the beginning of Fall. By Labor Day, autumn's trappings are much in evidence. Pumpkins are ripening. School is starting. Nights are cooler. Football is re-asserting its claim to be the national game... In resort areas, vacationers are having their last fling. In the cities, people are shaking off their apathy of summer.

We're glad the Knights of Labor invented the idea in the 1880's and Congress made it official in 1894. Today maybe it isn't what they had in mind, but they gave us all a day on which to say a hearty "welcome back" to fall.... And as we say a welcome to Fall, let us stop and think about our nation that was melded out of people from all sorts of backgrounds - provided they were willing and ready to work together.

CAR BREAKS – CREATE A NEW HABIT: Every night before going to bed, use your remote car lock to secure your car and at the same time, scan the general area for anything suspicious. This simple habit will help keep your property and your neighbors safe.

Report anything suspicious, such as but not limited to someone hanging on the corner or someone sitting in a car. All across the country, car-breaks are way up, but most of the cars are unlocked.

This happened recently on Ebbett Avenue and the Sims Road area, resulting in numerous cars being broken into, and with excellent police work, 5 suspects taken into custody!

RECENT SCAM: A citizen brought a postcard in that she received, which read, "Great News! You can receive $200 in gasoline!"

There is no other information on the card.

I called the number and the recorded message for the toll-free number stated that it is no longer active. As always, keep in mind that this is a scam!

City Seeks Federal Aid For Storm Response

in the coming weeks."

Mayor Koch met three times with the full emergency team prior to the storm's arrival, when the major concern was the potential for torrential rain and both coastal and inland flooding. More than 60 pumps were on standby, and the City rented additional large pumps from as far away as New York in anticipation of major problems in the City's flood-prone areas. Tide gates were inspected and catch basins were cleared throughout the City.

"We were prepared for the worst in terms of flooding, but thankfully we had no major flooding problems during the course of storm. It was a team effort from the beginning, and everyone did an outstanding job," said Department of Public Works Commissioner Daniel Raymondi.

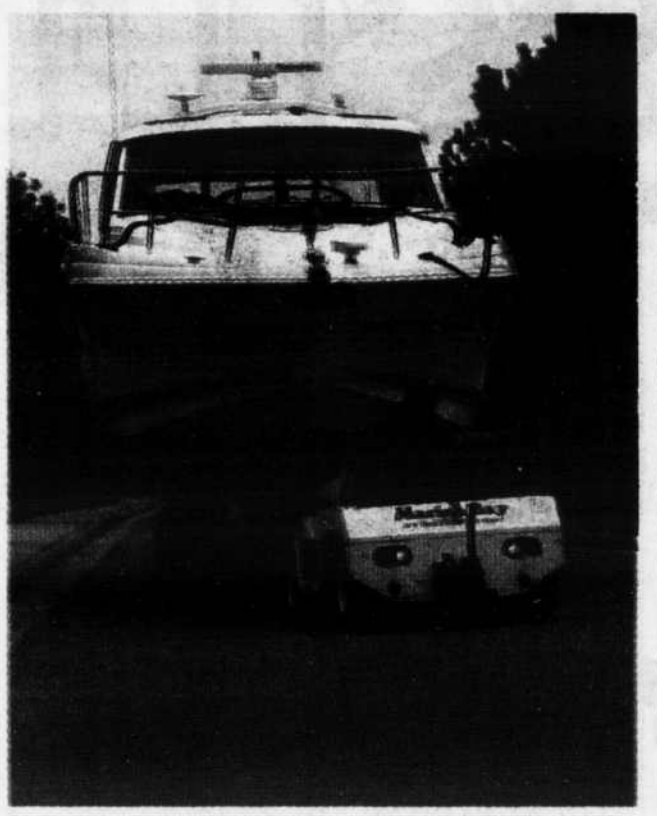

The City's Emergency Operation Center, under the leadership of Fire Chief Joseph Barron, was opened on Sunday morning in an effort to coordinate the City's response. Hundreds of phone calls were received at the Center, primarily for fallen power lines and roads blocked by falling trees.

Barron said there were no injuries during the storm, adding that emergency response crews stayed on top of calls throughout the storm.

As the storm progressed, it became clear that wind damage would be the storm's largest problem, and the DPW and Parks Department shifted its operation to meet those demands. Park Commissioner Kristen Powers said that 5 tree crews remained on call throughout the storm, including private contractors.

The Parks and DPW coordinated teams throughout the week to pick up debris left by the storm. Residents are still encouraged to leave limbs and large branches curbside on their regular trash day this week for pick-up.

Yard waste bags will not be picked up until the regularly scheduled collection next week.

Mayor Blasts National Grid Storm Response

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that National Grid's response to Tropical Storm Irene was "deeply flawed and totally unacceptable" with a lack of manpower and unreliable communication to both customers and City officials.

"The City was prepared, and we expected the same of National Grid. There's little doubt in my mind that they weren't," Koch said. "I just hope that this isn't a case of a major corporation sacrificing service to its customers in an effort to protect the bottom line. Regardless of the reason, National Grid's response was totally unacceptable."

Power was slowly coming back on line to more than 8,000 Quincy households that were blacked-out by the effects of Irene, which downed more than 250 trees and downed more than 50 power lines across the City, officials said.

Koch noted that through the duration of the storm, the City activated 5 individual tree crews to handle emergencies, while National Grid used a total of 3 crews for both Weymouth and Quincy during the heart of the storm – when falling trees and power lines posed the most serious threat.

Koch reflected on previous major storms in the City, remembering that the electric company would provide crews to operate in tandem with City responders. In this case, City crews were left waiting for National Grid during the storm.

Performance did not improve as the operation turned from emergency response to restoration of power, with City officials pressing National Grid repeatedly to provide more resources to get the back power back on to its Quincy customers.

"I fully understand that with major incidents like this, there is need for everyone to exercise a little patience, but the bottom line here is that National Grid was once again dramatically unprepared," Koch said. "There is no excuse – this storm had been forecast for more than a week. These are paying customers, and they deserve better."

Koch said he will be talking with Beacon Hill leaders and other local officials to pursue potential action through the Department of Public Utilities. National Grid was fined more than $2 million for its response to the December 26 blizzard, after which the company pledged to improve its emergency response plans.

"We are having the same conversations today that we had in December, and that is incredibly frustrating," Koch said.

The Mayor said that his anger is directed at the company's high-level executives, not the street-level managers forced to deal with frustrated local officials. He added that the company's poor response also threatens the line workers and other crews "who work very hard in very dangerous conditions. They deserve more resources."

EXCITING YEAR AHEAD – Quincy College President Peter Tsaffaras (seated) says there are major challenges ahead as the city's college enrollment and studies expand and college administrators and its Board of Governors develop plans for one single major campus in a revitalized Quincy Center. Enrollment Up 7.9%

Quincy College Booming As First Semester Begins

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy College enrollment is booming and it's no wonder, according to President Peter Tsaffaras who cites the economy, quality, and word-of-mouth recommendations spread across the world through students from 98 countries.

"As of last week, we're up about 7.9%," said Tsaffaras who was interviewed just days before the September semester and his first full year as president began.

No doubt finances play a major role in boosting the enrollment as Quincy College's tuition is a boon to cash-strapped parents and working students, young and old alike.

Two years of college for $10,200 total sounds like a Back-to-the-Future fantasy but that's a reality, according to Associate Vice President Dr. Kim Puhala who joined Tsaffaras and Vice President Pushap Kapoor during the interview and later provided statistics.

Hundreds of students earn credits and degrees at Quincy College and then head off to such four-year institutions as the University of Massachusetts at Boston and Amherst, Bridgewater State University, Curry and Eastern Nazarene Colleges, Northeastern, Suffolk, Bentley, Regis, Simmons and Emmanuel College, according to Puhala.

In fact, Puhala said after the meeting that the majority of new enrollees check off "to transfer to a four year university" as their main objective at Quincy College.

"The economy plays a major role," said Tsaffaras but he emphasized that the quality of education, courses, convenience, and faculty at Quincy College are primary reasons that the college's enrollment will likely top the 4,000 mark this year, causing facilities and park-

Police Substation In Quincy Center

The Quincy Police Department will open a substation in the heart of Quincy Center in a small storefront office space donated by the City's downtown redevelopment partner, Street-Works Development, LLC., Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday.

The substation, located at 1416 Hancock St. in one of the storefronts that are part of the Granite Trust Building, will be headquarters for the community police officer and two walking police beats that comprise downtown's daily police staffing, according to Police Chief Paul Keenan.

"Our officers who work downtown do a tremendous job, and this substation will allow for enhanced interaction with the public and provide increased visibility for the police presence already within the Quincy Center

9-11 Anniversary Remembrance Sunday

The City of Quincy and Quincy Fire Department will commemorate the 10th anniversary of the terrorist attacks and the losses suffered at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania Sunday, Sept. 11.

The public is invited to attend.

The ceremony will start with a walk from the Quincy Credit Union and proceed on Quincy Avenue to Fire Headquarters.

Maura Gilmartin will sing the National Anthem and Firefighter Steve Sweet will play the bagpipes.

After the flag is lowered to half-staff and the alarms are rung, Fire Chief Joseph Barron will speak.

Other remarks will be offered by Mayor Tom Koch and Firefighter Ernie Arienti.

Commercial vehicles that comply with the above policy shall be limited to one drop-off per week.

Attended Funerals For Fallen Comrades, Visited 'Ground Zero' At Former WTC Site

9-11 Memories Still Vivid For Local Firefighters

By EMILY TAFT

Ten years ago this Sunday, 19 hijackers took control of four commercial airliners, crashing one into the Pentagon, one into a field in Pennsylvania and two into the North and South towers of the World Trade Center in New York.

The horrific events that happened that morning took the lives of nearly 3,000 victims, 2,753 of those were victims in New York, including 60 police officers and 343 firefighters.

"I remember I was off duty and had just arrived home as my father was calling me," said Fire Chief Joseph Barron. "I immediately turned on the TV and watched and thought to myself that it had to be an accident, and as the second tower was hit I knew that this was no accident."

After that day many around the United States and the world wanted to help in any way possible. Among those who volunteered and traveled to New York to help were a number of Quincy Firefighters and Police Officers who headed to "Ground Zero" where the towers had stood.

"There were so many funerals going on in New York (for their local firefighters) that they were looking for volunteer firefighters to attend," said Quincy firefighter Ernie Arienti. "The one that stands out in my mind was the ceremony for a captain, where there was thousands of firefighters."

According to Arienti the normal attendance for a firefighter funeral would be in the thousands, but because of the number of deaths, families were grateful just to have some fellow firefighters in attendance.

"Saying there was hundreds at these funerals is nothing compared to normal," said Steve Sweet, another Quincy firefighter. "I remember on one Saturday we had to go to around 22 funerals."

Of the hundreds of firefighters that lost their lives on that day 128 were never found, leaving families nothing to say goodbye to.

"Unfortunately in this line of work death is a reality," said Sweet. "That is just the way it is."

While in New York many visited Ground Zero.

"I didn't want to go there at first, I didn't want to look like a gawking tourist," said Sweet. "When we arrived at Ground Zero around 2 a.m. the first thing that hit me was a industrial kind of smell, and as we got closer I was speechless. I didn't know what to say. There was nothing to say."

Since the attacks of 9/11 there have been many changes in the way fire departments train their staff.

According to Arienti they have to educate their new staff and existing staff differently now.

"Since 9/11 fire services have changed drastically, and cuts in man power have been made," said Arienti. "We are educated different-

Raymond McGrory Hopes Bell Ringing Will Rally Residents Together On 9-11

With the 10th anniversary of 9/11 this Sunday, 14-year old Raymond McGrory is hoping to rally residents of Quincy together to remember those who lost their lives that day.

McGrory is an ambassador for Project 351, which is a statewide project put out by Deval Patrick to encourage young people of Massachusetts to participate in community service.

"Early last year I was chosen to be an Ambassador for project 351," said McGrory. "I received an email from Deval Patrick having to do with remembering 9/11 and getting our communities together."

RAYMOND McGRORY

McGrory decided that in an act of remembrance he would spread the word to have firehouses, town buildings, police stations, schools, and houses of worship to ring their bells at 1 p.m. on Sunday, Sept. 11.

"I spread the word mostly through facebook and email," said McGrory. "It's a really important event to me, and I really think people should remember that day."

At the time that the two towers were hit McGrory, even though only in preschool, says he can remember where he was and what he was doing.

"It was a very shocking thing to see," said McGrory. "I remember my grandmother picking me up for school not knowing what was going on."

Along with McGrory other Ambassadors of Project 351 will be doing something to remember those lost on 9/11 in their own towns

Ask the GEMOLOGIST®
BY JEFFREY M. BERTMAN
GRADUATE GEMOLOGIST
PRINCESS DIANA'S LEGACY
One of the more romantic aspects of the marriage of Prince William to Kate Middleton was that the prince proposed to his future wife with the offering of his late mother's own engagement ring. This beautiful piece of jewelry, which garnered as much attention as it did when it first appeared on Diana's finger, features a lovely blue sapphire surrounded by 14 diamonds. Interestingly, the ring is not unique. It was featured in the crown jewelers Garrard's jewelry collection. The ring also continues the European tradition of colored gemstone engagement rings, particularly in royal circles. Marrying couples may want to incorporate this custom in their own lives by choosing colored gemstone engagement rings that reflect personal taste.
It's time to get engaged, and one of the highlights of the engagement is revealing that stunning engagement ring. Gemstone engagement rings add a brilliant splash of color and permit more individual expression then ever before. Come into our store at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center, to view our vast selection of rings and to feel the type of service only we can offer. Public Forums In Abington And Braintree

Keenan Town Meetings On Casino Bill Sept. 13, 14

Sen. John F. Keenan will hold a pair of Town Hall meetings this month to discuss with constituents legislation that would open the doors for casino gambling in Massachusetts.

The public forums are scheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 13 at the Abington Council on Aging facility located at 441 Summer St., and Wednesday, Sept. 14 at the Viking Club, located at 410 Quincy Ave., Braintree.

Residents from Abington, Braintree, Holbrook, Quincy and Rockland are invited to attend either, or both, of the meetings, which will begin at 7 p.m.

"This is a landmark piece of legislation that we have to get right the first time," Sen. Keenan said. "It's important to me that I hear what the residents of the Norfolk and Plymouth district have to say about it."

The proposed legislation, which will be debated by both branches in the coming weeks on Beacon Hill, permits the construction of three resort-style casinos and one slot parlor. The casinos would be limited to specific geographical regions within the state, and are expected to cost a minimum of $500 million each to build.

Proponents say that casinos are needed in Massachusetts to recapture the $857 million in spending that flows out to gambling establishments in other states. They predict that three casinos and a slot parlor will create 6,000 temporary construction jobs, and 10,000 permanent jobs at the casinos and other ancillary businesses.

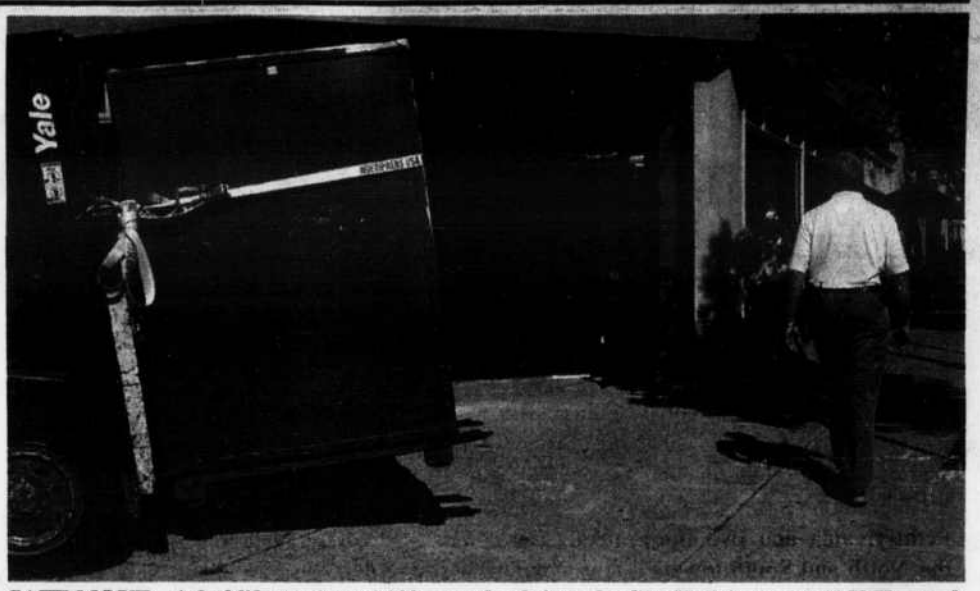

Opponents say that any growth in state revenue from casino gambling will be consumed by the costs associated with increased crime and demand for social services. In addition, they say that the market has softened due to the lingering economic downturn, and that business won't be as great as originally predicted.

Sen. Keenan supports the concept of expanded gambling but fears that permitting three casinos right away will saturate the market and ultimately hurt the industry.

"Instead of going from 0 to 60 so quickly, I'd rather the state permitted two casinos and then conduct a cost/benefit analysis before deciding whether to permit a third," he said. "I also am opposed to slot parlors, as all data shows they simply suck the economic activity from the local area."

Sen. Keenan said he has additional concerns regarding the lack of oversight of the proposed new casino gambling authority.

Anyone with questions may contact Sen. Keenan at 617-722-1494, or john.keenan@masenate.gov.

Debris From Irene Burns Outside DPW

By EMILY TAFT

Debris from Tropical Storm Irene caught fire Monday afternoon around 12:30 p.m. behind the Department of Public Works Building.

After smoke was reported in the Merrymount area, an engine was sent to the area to investigate. Firefighters found a fire had started in a debris pile near the compost area at the DPW on Sea Street.

On Tuesday, Quincy Deputy Chief Paul Griffith said the fire remained under investigation. The cause had not yet been determined.

The fire scorched an area about the size of about two football fields, according to Griffith.

"Wind was a major factor in this fire which helped it spread as big as it did," said Griffith. "The fire was still smoldering as of (Tuesday) morning."

The debris was compiled of leaves, twigs and tree branches brought in by the DPW after the clean up of Tropical Storm Irene.

According to Griffith, the piles were going to be chipped and perhaps sold.

The fire was worked on from 12:34 p.m until 8 p.m Monday night, and was on fire watch until 3 a.m Tuesday morning.

Five engine trucks and one ladder truck responded, while Quincy received help from Weymouth, Boston and Braintree fire stations.

A Day Of Tragedy – And Perseverence

We all know where we were when we heard the news that profoundly tragic day.

Ten years later, Sept. 11 should also be remembered for what didn't happen.

The terrorist attacks in New York, Washington, D.C. and in Pennsylvania did not stop our cherished right to vote.

Under sparkling sunshine and deep blue skies, the polls opened at 7 a.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 11, 2001. It was preliminary election day in Quincy with four contests on the ballot: councillor at-large and councillor in Wards 3, 5 and 6.

It seemed like any other election day. Outside the polling precincts, candidates and supporters held signs and greeted voters. Inside, election workers streamlined the voting process.

Then, the day's normalcy was shattered.

A few short hours after the polls had opened, there were reports of a plane hitting one of the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City. Moments later, another plane into the other tower. Then two more hijacked planes. One struck the Pentagon; the other targeted the Capitol or the White House but crashed in Pennsylvania after passengers tried to take control of it.

A day from hell had dawned.

In Quincy, news of the attacks spread in jaw-dropping speed.

Staff here at the Sun stared glassy-eyed as we watched in horror when the Towers fell.

We also realized we had a newspaper to put out – and an election to cover.

The right call was made: city officials decided to keep the polls open.

Voting continued and democracy prevailed. Moreover, the American way of life had persevered in light of unspeakable horror and cowardly acts of terrorism.

Here are some reflections from some who lived through that terrible September day, in their own words.

City Clerk Joseph Shea:

SHEA

"It started out as a normal election day. The police came between 5:30 and 6:30 a.m. and took the election machines out to the precincts. I started my appointed rounds (visiting the polling precincts). Detective Joe Manning, who was assigned to the License Board was working an extra shift that day so he was working with me. We came back to City Hall about 9 a.m.

"Within a few minutes (after the first plane struck one of the World Trade Center towers), Joe Manning heard some sort of message over his police radio. He said to me, 'something serious is happening in New York.'

"We came in and looked at the TV and we couldn't believe it. From then on, I was fielding questions from my (election) workers and some from the public about whether we should stop the election.

"I called Secretary of State William Galvin's office. He was aware of the events. About 31 cities in Massachusetts were having elections that day.

"I talked to Secretary Galvin about two or three times. I spoke with (then) Mayor (James) Sheets and City Solicitor Steve McGrath. It was my opinion that we shouldn't cancel (the election) because some people had already voted. It was two hours into the day.

"I think – and this may be an afterthought – that whomever did this – we found out later it was al-Qaeda – that's probably what they would have wanted: to disrupt everything.

"We decided not to cancel the election and Galvin concurred."

Keeping the polls open underscored the premise that no one – even terrorists – would interrupt our way of life.

"I remember having that conversation with Solicitor McGrath and Secretary of State Galvin," Shea continued. "Bill Galvin is always a good resource and when it comes to election things you defer to him. We're in charge of city elections – which is what we had on Sept. 11 – but he is in charge of state elections and we always use his people (for guidance). I got right through to him several times that day.

"We went on with the election but it was a very eerie day. Everywhere I went, people wanted to know what was going on. I deal with 180 election workers and 30 precincts. They didn't have access to TVs and they didn't know what was going on. So at every stop you had to re-explain it.

"Some workers wanted to go home, but most just wanted to know what was going on.

"After the polls closed and the ballots started coming in, it was clear most people's attention was not focused on the election. For me personally it was a very difficult day – election time is always difficult. My wife (Josephine) was in Santa Fe, New Mexico and couldn't get out of there. It took her a week to get home."

To compound matters even more, their daughter Katherine broke her leg the night before playing soccer.

Shea said he believes the terrorist attacks did not affect voter turnout nor did it influence the outcome.

"I think turnout was reasonably good for a city preliminary – about 29 percent. That's about average. I don't think it changed the outcome. Did it press (turnout) down a few percent? Possibly but in 2009 the turnout was 29 percent. There was no primary in 2007 and in 2005 it was 12 percent."

Former Mayor Frank McCauley:

McCAULEY

"I was a candidate for re-nomination as a councillor at-large that day and as was my habit over the years I made my first stop at the Squantum School where residents in Ward 6 Precinct 5 voted. Squantum consistently produced the highest turnout of voters over the years in any precinct in the City and I arrived at 6:45 a.m. that morning intending to catch the early bird voters and stay until about 8:30 a.m.

"Leaving Squantum, my next stop was at the Beechwood Knoll School which had two voting precincts. It was here that a parish priest from St. Ann's Church in Wollaston told of a plane striking one of the World Trade Center towers in New York City. I immediately thought of an incident that happened in the fall of 1945 when an Army Air Force plane crashed into the Empire State Building.

"While those of us at the entrance of the polling place were digesting the news, a fellow drove up to report that a second plane had struck the other World Trade Center tower! At this point we knew these crashes were not accidents!

"Our secure life in the United States had come to an end!"

Another candidate on the ballot was Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin. He was among four candidates seeking two nominations for Ward 3 councillor.

COUGHLIN

"I was standing on the sidewalk on Taylor Street near the northerly doorway of the Wollaston School gymnasium greeting those on their way to vote and asking for their support. There were sign holders for several candidates milling around and chatting and someone pulled up in a car next to us. Their radio was on and they said something about a plane crash at the World Trade Center.

"There was some confusion initially because there was a reference to Logan Airport and someone thought it was the World Trade Center across from the harbor from Logan where the terrible event had occurred. As time elapsed it became clarified that the plane was from Logan and the crash had taken place in New York City. I remember saying a prayer to myself for those who were lost.

"At first it seemed like an awful single accident and I recall talking of a story in history about a small plane that had crashed into a building in New York. I believed, if my recollection is correct, it was the Empire State Building. As time continued to unfold another resident came up and reported a second airplane crash at the same location. Clearly something was terribly amiss.

"Rumor and speculation filled the information void ebbing and flowing like the tide on a beach eroding our sense of confidence, self assuredness, and the normal sense of certainty we take so blithely for granted. As the morning progressed and people continued to come to vote there was talk on the street about potentially cancelling the preliminary election.

"It was hard to know what was the right thing to do with so little known initially but as time passed and the spectre of it being acts of terrorism came to the fore I remember thinking to myself that to stop the electoral process perhaps would feed into precisely some of what those behind these heinous acts were seeking to accomplish: to undercut our democratic way of life; to erode our sense of freedom and liberty. These thoughts were tempered by the great horror of what had happened, respect and sorrow for those whose lives were lost and the heroic stories that were being revealed.

"We needed to persevere."

Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen

HALLSEN

"It was election day and we came in early. I watched the second plane go into the World Trade Center tower on TV. There was a lot of panic, everyone started to say it was Osama bin Laden. Then there was some discussion about cancelling the election. We

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS OLD REAL photo postcard is a picture taken at the Harvard Aeronautical Society's Harvard-Boston aviation meet that was held at Atlantic in the first week of September in 1910. The air meet offered lucrative prizes to attract the world's top aviators and aeroplanes. The aircraft shown here was a Bleroit monoplane built by Frenchman Louis Bleroit who a year earlier became the first man to fly across the 21-mile English Channel. At the time of the meet this plane – the first single winged plane seen in New England – also held the world's speed record of 66.2 miles per hour. Claude Graham-White, an Englishman, used this Bleroit to win the largest prize at the Harvard Meet of $10,000 offered by the Boston Globe. The Globe's challenge was to fly from Atlantic around the State House dome and twice out and around Boston Light, a total of 31-miles. Graham-White was the only aviator willing to attempt the risky flight and won what today wold be almost a quarter of a million dollars. He also won most of the other prizes at the air meet. New Fire Chief In Two Weeks

By FRANK McCAULEY

Mayor James A. Sheets said he will appoint the city's new fire chief within the next two weeks.

Sheets had previously planned to name the new chief by the first week of September after holding interviews with each candidate, Acting Chief Thomas Gorman and Deputy Chief Joseph Walsh. However, the interviews had to be rescheduled because Sheets had been out of the city recently.

This Week
1991
20 Years Ago

Gorman and Walsh will be interviewed by Sheets, his Executive Secretary Thomas Koch, City Solicitor Stephen McGrath and Personnel Director Kathy Yaeger.

Although the candidates will be interviewed by a panel, the mayor said he alone will make the appointment.

(Editor's Note: Mayor Sheets appointed Thomas Gorman who was the present acting chief.)

20% VOTE SEEN FOR PRELIMINARY ELECTION

With only the school committee race and a Ward Six city council contest, less than 20% of Quincy's registered voters are expected to turn up at the polls for the preliminary election, Sept. 17.

City Clerk John M. Gillis said that this year's preliminary election is one of the quietest ever. Without a major ballot draw, like a mayoral contest, Gillis projects the turnout will be low.

(Editor's Note: Citywide turnout was 21.7%.)

LEXINGTON DECISION COULD BE MADE BY THE END OF SEPTEMBER

D-Day for the USS Lexington is only a few weeks away.

Mayor James Sheets who was back in the mayor's office after a trip to Washington, DC, last week said Navy Secretary Lawrence Garrett III would decide whether Quincy, Corpus Christi, Texas or Mobile, Alabama would win custody of the carrier by the end of September or the first of October.

(Editor's Note: Despite a valiant effort by city officials, Corpus Christi, Texas, was awarded custody of the Lexington. Later on the USS Salem would be awarded to the city of Quincy.)

Arts & Entertainment

MEMBERS OF THE Band 21st Century Fugitives are John Lucas of Quincy, vocals; Jackson Kehoe, keys; Jimmy Bezreh, guitar; Jaden Mendola, bass; and Gavin Burke, drums.

John Lucas Member Of Winning Band At Marshfield Fair

Quincy resident John Lucas, front man for the band the 21st Century Fugitives, recently performed at The Marshfield Fair Battle of the Bands where the Fugitives placed first in round one and second overall in the 25 and under age bracket.

At ages 12 and 13, they were the youngest band in the competition. The 21st Century Fugitives was only formed this past May and the Battle of the Bands was their first live performance together after only a few months of practice.

The competition consisted of 12 bands. Six played on Aug. 19 and six played on Aug. 25. The finals took place on August 26. "They really blew the audience away both nights drawing huge crowds. They turned a lot of heads at the event and have received multiple offers to play additional venues in the near future," said Artie Lucas, father to lead singer John Lucas.

"They are thrilled about the positive feedback they've been receiving and are excited about upcoming shows in Reading and Quincy," Lucas said.

The Battle of the Bands is designed to showcase as many youth bands as possible and to give youth bands an outdoor festival setting in which to perform. A grand prize of $600 for the first place band, $350 for second place and $300 for the third place band are awarded by the Fair and its sponsors to the winners on the final night's competition.

The bands were judged in five categories using a ten point system. The categories were song selection, singing ability, musicianship, stage presence and overall performance.

Quincy's Guila Murphy Named Patriot Scholar By Military Friends Foundation

Giulia Murphy of Quincy has been named a Patriot Scholar by the Military Friends Foundation, a nonprofit organization serving Massachusetts National Guard, Reserve and Families of Fallen Service Members.

The announcement was made by Sen. John F. Keenan and Rep. Tackey Chan

Murphy was one of nine high school graduates and college freshmen from across Massachusetts to receive the $1,000 scholarship presented annually by the Foundation to students with a parent or guardian who has deployed with the Massachusetts National Guard or Reserves since Sept. 11, 2001.

"Despite the mental and emotional distraction of having a parent deployed overseas, Giulia was able to work hard and remained focus on her education, and for that she is very deserving of this award," Keenan said. "We should always keep in mind the sacrifices made not just by our military personnel, but also by their families, on behalf of our nation."

Joining Keenan and Chan in honoring Giulia and all scholarship recipients were state Treasurer Steven Grossman, and the Adjutant General of the Massachusetts National Guard Major General Joseph C. Carter

"Our military families are our greatest source of inspiration and strength. On behalf of the Massachusetts National Guard, I commend the 2011 Military Friends Foundation scholarship recipients for their commitment to excellence and personal courage in the face of the repeated deployments and sacrifice of their military parents in the service of our Nation," said Major General Carter.

Roadway Nearing Completion

Concourse Final Paving This Week

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that final paving of the Quincy Center Concourse is scheduled to take place this week, marking one of the last steps toward completing a downtown roadway nearly 30 years in the making.

"We are nearing completion of this vital roadway that will be a cornerstone to a revitalized Quincy Center, and I – along with so many others who have worked on this project through the years -- am greatly looking forward to seeing it open to traffic this fall," said Mayor Koch. "This is another major step forward for our work downtown, and we are not slowing down."

Paving will not close any of affected roadways, although there will be lane restrictions and drivers can expect some disruptions.

The work, which includes paving the entire new section of roadway as well intersections and Revere Road, is expected to begin Thursday morning and take approximately three days to finish.

The project is being coordinated by the Massachusetts Department of Transportation and officials said that schedules could change depending on weather and other factors.

The Concourse, when completed, will provide a link from the Southeast Expressway to several neighborhoods in Quincy in what the City has long believed will end much of the traffic bottleneck in the heart of Quincy Center today.

Moving the traffic flow away from the City's commercial and civic center is a key element to creating a more pedestrian-friendly environment and setting the stage for the new development that will create new office, retail and housing throughout the downtown district.

ANOTHER CONCOURSE MILESTONE – Final paving of the Quincy Center Concourse is scheduled to take place this week, marking one of the last steps toward completing a downtown roadway nearly 30 years in the making. Above is the view of the concourse from Hancock Street looking toward the Paul Harold Bridge and the Burgin Parkway. At the left is the view from Hancock Street looking towards Revere Road. The concourse will be called the Mayor Walter Hannon Parkway.

Councillor Says Utility Failed To Deploy Adequate Resources Before Tropical Storm Irene Hit

Coughlin Seeks Investigation Of National Grid Response

By LAURA GRIFFIN

National Grid had plenty of time to prepare for Hurricane Irene but just ignored early warnings, according to City Council President Kevin Coughlin who wants a formal state investigation of the regional electric company's response to the late August storm as well as compensation to customers.

"National Grid failed to deploy adequate resources in preparation for the storm event," states Coughlin in his formal City Council petition that charges the company initially deployed only three service crews for all of Quincy and Weymouth.

KEVIN COUGHLIN

"That failure in that regard placed consumers at risk," Coughlin said Tuesday. "It also placed at risk their own staff... When you have staff working 18-hour days, it places those staff at risk."

Prior to Tuesday's council meeting, Coughlin said he hoped for speedy approval by the council as that approval will automatically trigger an investigation by the state's Department of Utilities. This week's council session was scheduled after The Quincy Sun went to press.

"If we approve this tonight, they must open an investigation," said Coughlin whose report charges that 8,000 Quincy residents had service interruption or lost power and that 2,000 customers suffered power loss until at least Sept. 1 – four days after Tropical Storm Irene hit the city and region.

Coughlin's two-part petition also seeks compensation for customers who suffered financial loss due to National Grid's negligence and calls for a Consumer Compensation Fund.

"There is no methodology to compensate those affected," said Coughlin who cited losses to businesses, lost wages, costs for equipment rental, and losses for individual customers due to power failure caused by negligence.

While individuals lose, the state can issue fines. Coughlin noted that the companies can be fined for failures at up to $250,000 a day and a $20 million maximum.

"They (those fines) don't benefit ratepayers," said Coughlin whose proposal will direct those penalty payments to a compensation fund.

As an example, Coughlin cited the hardship endured by residents in western Massachusetts several years ago after an ice storm knocked out power for weeks.

"They have no means for seeking reparation," said Coughlin, adding that those customers have now filed a class action lawsuit which can be a lengthy procedure.

Coughlin said that a compensation fund would have to be initiated at and supported by the state legislature and other communities.

In fact, one state representative has proposed a rebate system. However, Coughlin suggested that a rebate system might be difficult to administer in contrast to a compensation program similar to those administered through FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) after disasters strike.

Currently, companies are required to file an Emergency Response Plan or ERP when a State of Emergency has been declared. That plan must be updated during and after the emergency, according to Coughlin who wants to review National Grid's plan from Aug. 26 through Sept. 1.

While Coughlin did not personally experience a power outage due to Tropical Storm Irene, many of his constituents did and they contacted him through phone calls and e-mails.

The one over-riding complaint was the lack of communication, according to Coughlin who said, "People were frustrated by the lack of communication."

Furnace Brook Flood-Control Project Set To Start

A $2.5 million rehabilitation of portions of the Furnace Brook will begin in coming weeks as part of Mayor Thomas Koch's Capital Improvement Plan, which is targeting the Brook as a key element of the flood-control portion of the infrastructure investment plan.

The project comes as design, engineering and permitting for other arms of the broad flood-relief program included in the Capital Plan continues to move forward. The Furnace Brook project entails inspecting and cleaning heavy debris from culverted sections of the Brook. Open sections of the Brook will also be inspected for potential widening.

"We are moving forward systematically on flood-control projects in several areas of the City that are necessary, aggressive and affordable under our capital plan," said Mayor Koch. "We must make these kinds of investments in our infrastructure today to protect the City's future. The time to act is now."

Review Of Boston Scientific Tax Breaks Sought By Keenan, Gutro

By LAURA GRIFFIN

When Boston Scientific streamlines its labor force through worldwide layoffs of 1,200 to 1,400 employees, will those cuts hit Quincy?

That's the question Councillors Doug Gutro and John Keenan want answered as the company's actions affect Boston Scientific's city tax bills. The councillors planned to seek support at Tuesday's council meeting scheduled after The Quincy Sun went to press.

Boston Scientific won added tax breaks from the City of Quincy in 2010 under an amended TIF or Tax Increment Financing Agreement aimed at a 375 employee-count at its North Quincy facility.

"Can they live up to their commitment?" asked Gutro who called the layoff numbers "stunning." Gutro – who represents Ward 5 – wants an update on how the "Quincy facility will be affected."

"We should be regularly making sure reports (are filed)," Keenan said Tuesday, adding that follow-up is needed after companies having TIF agreements with the city announce any large-scale layoff.

Under the TIF amendment approved in 2010, Boston Scientific was expected to save an average of $350,000 a year in new taxes after the company invested $55 million in its North Quincy facility and its robotics program.

However, the company's tax savings are contingent on its employing 375 employees in North Quincy by 2013. Now, Boston Scientific is downsizing through attrition and through a reduction in force, according to company spokesman Erik Kopp who did not provide specific numbers for the company's various offices.

JOHN KEENAN

DOUG GUTRO

However, those employment numbers are essential in keeping those tax breaks, according to Gutro and Keenan who also represents the city as a state senator.

"There are reporting requirements," said Planning Director Dennis Harrington who said the reports are the obligation of the companies. If companies fail to meet the requirements of a TIF agreement, the company can be fined and the TIF reassessed.

In the current economy, Harrington said that Weymouth has had to nullify several agreements with small companies. Quincy has only signed off on TIF with about six very large companies, according to Harrington.

Companies must file an annual report describing their compliance with the TIF agreements, but apparently few have filed such reports in Quincy in recent years.

At the Assessors' office, Marion Fantucchio said that Boston Scientific filed a report on its original TIF in 2006 but has not filed a report since that date or since the agreement was amended.

In fact, Fantucchio said that none of the companies agreeing to TIF's have filed reports with her office although they could be filing them in other departments, "We have not received any annual reports."

Regardless of the status of the 2010 amendment, Boston Scientific's TIF will automatically expire in 2018.

Support For Senior Crossing Near Fenno House Complex

Support is growing for designating a new "Senior Citizen Crossing" at 540 Hancock St., Wollaston, as recommended by Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro and supported by the police department, according to Captain John Dougan.

The location is directly in front of the Fenno House complex which offers housing opportunities for senior citizens.

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro planned to submit the petition at Tuesday's council meeting at the request of Peter Gleba who cited pedestrian accidents at the crossing and numerous close calls. This week's council meeting was held after The Quincy Sun deadline.

Gleba wants green or yellow senior crossing signs at both ends of the crossing and a sign in the middle of the roadway and asked that the timing of the yellow light be lengthened. He also sought strict enforcement of a 20-mile-per-hour speed limit.

In his petition, Gleba cited a number of accidents in the area.

According to Dougan, there have been four accidents in the 500-block of Hancock Street in the past 18 months. One accident involved a pedestrian.

"Senior crossings are always good," said Dougan, adding that the signage alerts drivers to be more aware of a sometimes vulnerable population.

The 37-year old Fenno House features 112 apartments for residents over 62 years old and also provides assisted living facilities.

A Message From Impact Quincy

What Does Tobacco Have To Do With School Lunch?

My name is Jackie Doane and I am the Program Coordinator for the Greater Boston Tobacco Free Community Partnership, and a member of the Impact Quincy Coalition. Tobacco remains the leading cause of preventable death in Massachusetts. Our program works to decrease the health and economic impact of tobacco in the Greater Boston region. One way to do this is to protect our youth from new tobacco industry tactics.

JACKIE DOANE

As parents prepare to send children off to school, lunch money in hand, it's a great time to remind your children about the dangers of tobacco.

How do I connect lunch money and tobacco, you might ask? Well, that lunch money is enough cash to purchase many of the new tobacco products that are here in Quincy.

Dissolvable tobacco tablets, snus (spit-free tobacco), and little cigars are all cheap and accessible to youth. Some tobacco products on our store shelves sell for less than a $1!

The good news is that most youth do not smoke cigarettes these days. The bad news is that an increasingly large group of youth is beginning to use these other tobacco products.

Talk with your children about tobacco. Let them know it's the only product out there that, if used as directed, will kill you. Arm them with the knowledge and support necessary to withstand peer pressure to use or try these tobacco products.

The tobacco industry knows that a lifetime of addiction starts in a young brain that's still in development. They have created these new, appealing products as cigarettes have become more expensive and less accessible.

Let's support the youth of Quincy in standing up to these latest tobacco industry tactics.

The Greater Boston Tobacco Free Community Partnership is a program of Bay State Community Services and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health Tobacco Cessation and Prevention Program.

For more information on emerging tobacco products, log on to Oppose.Ning.com or contact Jackie Doane, Program Coordinator for the Greater Boston Tobacco Free Community Partnership, at: jdoane@baystatecs.org or 617-471-8400 ext.138.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday Aug. 27, at approximately 4 p.m., Officers Dan Parisi and Dan Francis were dispatched to the Corner Market located on West Street on a report of an unarmed robbery that had just occurred.

LT. DAN MINTON

While en route, Dispatch provided the make and license plate of a vehicle that was seen leaving the market. Officer Parisi arrived on scene and interviewed the store clerk, who stated that he had just been robbed by a man with a knife, then directed the officers attention to the store's security video.

The video showed a 20-25 year old male wearing a blue Boston Red Sox hat, a gray or white ADIDAS hooded sweatshirt, blue jeans and sneakers. The suspect walked into the store and proceeded directly behind the counter, brandishing a long silver bladed knife at the store clerk.

When the suspect said, "Give me the money," the store clerk opened the register and the suspect took the money from the cash register, then lifted the till to take the remaining money from underneath. The suspect was not wearing gloves. The store clerk stated that the suspect left the store and he called "911," then went outside to meet the Police. The suspect took approximately $400 in cash.

Quincy Police Communications informed Officer Parisi that there was a witness who suspected something was wrong when the suspect came running out from the store, jumped in the passenger seat and the car sped off. The witness's description of the suspect matched that of the suspect in the video. The witness called the Quincy Police to report his observations.

Officer Parisi located another witness who he knew, and received the same account from the first witness. The license plate of the vehicle is registered to a Quincy resident, so Officer E.J. Hartnett went to the residence but the car was not there. The Officer located the owner of the vehicle, who was with his girlfriend, and told him what occurred, then asked who had control of the vehicle now. The owner refused to identify who he lent the car to, so Officer Parisi, who arrived at the car owner's location, explained to the owner that his car was involved in an armed robbery and he needed to tell who had the car. The car owner replied, "I know but I can't tell you."

Officer Parisi explained to the owner that he was misleading a police investigation and he would be placed under arrest if he did not reveal who had his vehicle. The owner again refused and after several attempts to convince him, Officer Parisi placed him under arrest. As this happened, the owner's female friend began yelling, "Tell him – tell him – It's (name withheld)."

The car owner, a 26 year-old Quincy resident, was charged with "Misleading a Police Investigation." Officer Parisi informed the store clerk that Detectives would be down to collect evidence, including the video. About 3 hours later, a male walked into the station requesting to speak to a detective, stating that he was involved in an incident earlier. Detectives' Rick Wash and Jason Macisaac, who responded to the market to collect evidence, immediately recognized the male as the suspect from the video. They led him into an interview room, where the male said that he wanted to talk about the incident.

After waiving his Miranda rights, the male identified himself and stated that he was the one who was operating the get-away car and his friend/owner of the car had nothing to do with the crime. The male said that he committed the robbery because he was "dope sick and needed the money."

The suspect stated that he picked this store because he thought it would be easy since it was next to a highway and he is familiar with the neighborhood. The suspect described how he parked on a side street and then walked back to the store, where he brandished a knife and took $180 from the cash register.

He said he then fled back to his vehicle and immediately went to Dorchester where he purchased heroin and "shot it." He said he disposed of the knife and acknowledged that he had an accomplice but refused to name him because it was all his idea.

The suspect, a 25 year-old Quincy resident, was then placed under arrest for "Armed Robbery."

Marina Bay Marketplace Up And Running

Marina Bay Marketplace, located at 333 Victory Rd., is up and running

A ray of sunshine shines for the Marina boater, condo residents and all residents of North Quincy. In an area that for years has seemingly had some discourse between the residents, boaters and boardwalk revelers, a small marketplace has moved in and seemingly has endeared itself to the entire community.

Proprietor Larry Rucki said he established the marketplace to service the residents in the marina and the surrounding community. The marketplace offers fresh meat, produce, grab and go meals, convenience items, pizza, sandwiches, dairy beer and wine and of course incredible baked goods made by in house baker and general manager Kim Torchio.

"Kim and I believed that we could better service the boaters by creating an offering that considered regular residents first and then included specialty items that are specific to the boating community, and that concept seems to be working," Rucki said. "We also needed to create enough business to turn product while we got the residential community to know we exist. The timing of that also has proven to be effective.

"We have thoroughly enjoyed getting to know and service most of the boaters throughout this summer. We know that they will be off to enjoy other venues soon and at that point, we will be relying on the patronage of the Marina and community residents who have been coming to our marketplace in greater numbers each month since we opened last February."

Torchio said she has paid careful attention to creating menu items that fit a broad range of palate for all of our offerings of breakfast, lunch and dinner as well as grab and go meals and an assortment of baked goods which are constantly evolving, except for house made English Muffins which are available daily.

"We are however looking to service our customers by offering an outstanding delivery service of all products that are offered from pizza, prepared meals to simple grocery items, as well as beer and wine," she said.

"We are currently putting specialty offerings together to offer for sporting events. This way we can deliver your food and beer to your door and you just have to enjoy your Sunday or Monday night football game without ever leaving home. It's our way of helping people drink responsibly at home.

"Of course, you don't have to choose from our set menu or packages. We will cater any event, business or recreational and customize each event no matter how small or large."

As for what Kim enjoys most about the marketplace, she said she was split between meeting and getting to know all of the people or the enjoyment she gets when she sees people eat her carrot cake for the first time.

"We are simply a service company that happens to make really good food," Rucki. "And we want as many people as possible to try it. So it means that we have to deliver our great food, wine and beer to your door. So be it, but my favorite thing is when I make a delivery and get to stay."

area," said Mayor Koch. "I am grateful to our partners at Street-Works for once again demonstrating their commitment to our community by offering this space for police use."

Keenan said that the new substation will allow residents to file reports with officers without having to travel to Police Headquarters on Sea Street, and will provide police with increased communication capabilities with community members and business owners. Keenan recently deployed a full-time community police officer to Quincy Center to complement existing patrols.

"Having this kind of space is a great new tool to have for our officers focused on the downtown area, and it sends a clear message that the safety of Quincy Center is a priority for our City and this Police Department," Keenan said.

The Furnace Brook project is part of the broader flood-control plan that includes new pump stations, redesigned drainage systems and other improvements in the West and South Quincy areas hardest hit by the historic storms of March 2010. The plan is the most substantial flood-relief investment in the City in years, but City officials have said that while the investment is important, it is not a silver bullet to completely resolving flooding in low-lying areas.

"The Furnace Brook is really the epicenter when it comes to controlling flood waters in this area of the City, and this project is another important step by the City to tackle these problems head-on," said Ward 4 City Councilor Brian Palmucci. "Taken together, all of these projects will have a substantial effect on flood-control and the quality of life of residents in the affected neighborhoods."

Here are the projects in the Capital Plan:

Here are the projects:

Schools:

• $2.3 million in school roofs repairs and replacements at 16 schools.

• $1.5 million to renovate the Coddington School to house school administrative offices to eliminate rental of NAGE building.

City Buildings:

• $675,000 for roof repairs at old City Hall and Park Department headquarters and HVAC upgrades at the Department of Public Works.

Equipment:

• $750,000 for a Fire Department ladder truck

• $45,000 for a Fire Department incident command vehicle

• $135,000 for a bucket truck in the traffic department

• $750,000 for a new Public Safety Communications system and a GIS integration system for assessor's department.

Flood-relief:

• $5.8 million to begin to address Furnace Brook flooding issues. Streets affected include Sheldon, Ballou, Stedman, Alrick, Joyce, Miller, Cross and Furnace Avenue.

• $1.2 million for to repair Broad Street tide gate.

• $2.1 million for drainage improvements in Sagamore Creek/North Quincy area, including Fayette, Farrington streets, Teal Field, Atlantic Middle School area, Arlington, Brook, Belmont, Hobart and Burgess streets.

$350,000 for Sachem Street Tide Control Street system

• $730,000 for Circuit Road/Spence Avenue

• $150,000 For Division Street pump station repairs

Sheriff's Speakers Bureau Offers Wide Array Of Info

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office has assembled a speakers bureau featuring experts from various fields who offer useful and interesting information to residents of Norfolk County.

The speakers are available free-of-charge through the Triad program overseen by Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti to deliver talks to groups interested in learning more about subjects including identity theft and credit card scams, how to check out certification and prior complaints against building contractors, healthy nutrition for seniors, Alzheimer's disease and the Massachusetts Sex Offender Registry Board.

"Initially, we put together this speakers bureau with the idea of helping senior citizens by providing them with important information and good advice," Sheriff Bellotti said. "But many of the subjects they cover are of interest to people across the age spectrum."

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office makes the speakers available to local councils on aging as well as other groups such Rotary clubs, chambers of commerce and various fraternal organizations.

Among the speakers are representatives from South Shore Hospital, Visiting Angels of the South Shore, the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, the Governor's Auto Theft Strike Force and the MBTA.

"The speakers bureau is an example of public and private agencies working in partnership with the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office to effectively serve the public," Sheriff Bellotti said.

For a full list of speakers and their topics or to schedule an appearance, call the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 781-751-3516.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century
by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

ARTFUL RESTORATION

A dental "inlay" is a dental restoration that is often used to repair areas of decay that are too large to support a filling but not so large that a crown is necessary. Inlays generally cover chewing surfaces between cusps in molars, and "onlays" are used to restore fractured cusps. To prepare an inlay, the dentist makes a wax mold of the space left after the damage portion of the tooth is removed. Then, the mold is sent to a lab, where the custom inlay is created (usually out of gold alloy). Finally, the inlay is set into place, using cement. The resulting restoration is more durable than amalgam or composite fillings but less expensive than a crown.

Porcelain inlays/onlays can successfully achieve both esthetic and functional results in restoring discolored or metal posterior teeth. GOING AT BREAKNECK SPEED

Despite claims to the contrary, helmets protect motorcyclists from cervical spine injuries in collisions. That is the finding from an analysis of a nationwide database that found the frequency of cervical spine injury to be significantly higher among non-helmeted bikers than helmeted motorcyclists (5.4% versus 3.5%). Moreover, the study pointed out that wearing a helmet was linked with a 22% reduction in the odds of injury to the cervical spine. Opponents of mandatory helmet laws argue that helmet use increases the likelihood of cervical spine injuries due to their weight, which causes an increase in the torque of the neck during collisions. The new study seems to disprove this claim. Chiropractors generally favor anything that preserves spine health.

2011 HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL PREVIEW

Low Participation Turnout This Fall; Open With Five Straight Non-League Games

North Quincy Is Ready To Tackle Any Challenge

By SEAN BRENNAN

There was a number's game occurring these past two weeks at Cavanaugh Stadium.

As most high school football coaches will tell you, in a preseason camp having around 60-70 kids come out into the hot late-August air to tryout for a varsity and jayvee team is ideal. But sometimes football coaches have to do more with (a lot) less.

North Quincy had only 33 student-athletes tryout for the football program this fall. That number is for both the varsity and the jayvee teams. So, despite finishing with a 6-5 record in 2010, the Raiders' team depth is going to be tested and its lack of varsity experience is going to be put to the flame right away.

All of this could be looked at as a big negative entering Friday night's season opener at the Boston Latin School but NQHS head coach Jim Connor prefers to look at the number and depth issues from a prospective of positivity.

"Sometimes it is down," he said matter-of-factly without looking for sympathy in discussing the lack of players participating.

"But now in practice these kids are all getting double the reps that any other school is getting, so that is a positive," Connor continued. "I've got four linebackers when most schools have ten. So we are getting a lot of reps. We can move through our individual periods a little faster and that means we get to our team time for a longer period of more heavy teaching."

Connor is a good coach. He played along the offensive line for Tom O'Brien's Boston College Eagles and as the head coach at North Quincy he has led the Raiders to three winning seasons in the last four years. Connor has also won two straight Thanksgiving Day games over Quincy - ending the Presidents ten-year reign as city champions in the process.

He is also a realist. North Quincy has the talent, both experienced and raw, to compete again this year in the Patriot League. But the lack of depth will be a challenge moving forward.

"A negative is the depth," he said. "That is a concern. When you lose our first few guys and maybe one or two rotators we drop down pretty far and then we are bringing some freshmen up just to try and keep things manageable at the varsity and jayvee levels."

To an extent the Raiders are going to have to go old school to maximize its talent. Every player on the varsity roster is going to see considerable playing time. Some will have to be two-way players, but not as many as you would think with such small numbers. That speaks highly of the kind of football talent that Connor sees in his team.

"We will have a lot of guys go both ways. Fortunately the talent level is not very drastic from our top to bottom, which is fortunate in that we can have the luxury of having guys go one way. Typically when your numbers are in the mid to low thirties you have to have ten guys going both ways and then you (have) to really work them. We still have a lot (two-way players) but I don't think we have anything different than we have had in past years."

The talent on the offensive side of the field for the Raiders is going to be completely different from the one we saw last against Quincy on Thanksgiving. Gone are all-league running backs Seyi Adesuyan (13 touchdowns) and Kyle McKay (five TDs) along with halfback Mike Morrison (all-league defender), quarterback Joe Schmitz and tight end Garrett Kelley. The entire offensive line, which was an anchored by captain Jimmy Scribi, needs to be replaced.

Three players to watch for when North Quincy is on offense this season are senior running back Marquis Chase, senior split end Johannes Harten and junior fullback Walter Hannon. This trio is explosive and should allow Connor to implement multiple offensive sets over the course of a four-quarter game.

"Marquis is our wingback and Walter, who played a little tight end last year, is going to be our fullback. So, he'll carry a lot of our offense from the fullback position," said Connor. "Johannes Harten is our split end - he played a little for us last year."

Two additional offensive threats for the Raiders will be senior Chris Kerin and sophomore running back Antoine Allen.

At quarterback North Quincy currently has two options. Senior Joe Brown and junior Andrew Minton have been battling it out during preseason practice. There isn't a quarterback controversy brewing, just some healthy competition for the honor of getting that call to start against the Wolfpack on Friday night. In speaking with Connor on Monday it sounded like the underclass-

Looking To Improve On 4-7 Record in 2010; Open Friday At Home Against Cohasset

Presidents Are Rearing and Ready To Play Football

By SEAN BRENNAN

It was not the pro-turf of Veterans Memorial Stadium, but the grass layout at Pageant Field worked out just fine for the Quincy Presidents last week as they put in the final preparations for the upcoming high school football season, which kicks off on Friday night against Cohasset (7 p.m., Veterans Memorial Stadium).

Coach Bill Reardon's team lined up like a new class of recruits, standing in attention to the barking orders of the Quincy coaching staff that was looking to shape this collection of gridironers into formation. There was a feeling of optimism in the early September air, as the Presidents got ready to start the fall with a clean slate after wiping the remnants of last season's 4-7 record off the board and out of their minds.

Last season is old news. It is now time to start fresh and every player on the field looked ready to work extra hard to help bring Quincy football back to its winning ways after two years of mediocrity.

The Presidents began last season at 4-3 following wins over non-league opponents Canton (42-14) and Randolph (23-8) and victories against Patriot League foes Pembroke (22-12) and Middleboro (34-26) – with losses coming to non-league Cohasset (45-7) and Plymouth South (12-11) and league powerhouse Duxbury (35-7) – but a season-ending four-game losing streak, which included defeats in league games to Hanover (29-7), Scituate (35-7), Silver Lake (29-8) and a 13-6 loss to rival North Quincy on Thanksgiving, took the air out of the program, which up un-man is going to get first crack - but that plan is fluid.

"Right now we are looking at Andrew Minton, he is a junior," Connor said. "We have a senior quarterback in Joe Brown who is right there, so it is just deciding on who is going to step up. I would say the first game it will probably be Andrew but three weeks from now it could be Joe. They are very close and both have had a very good camp."

It won't make much of a difference this season if it is Minton or Brown under center if the offensive line can't quickly come together and forge the type of chemistry seen last fall with Scribi and Co.

"Last year the offensive line had very good chemistry," said Connor who knows a thing or two about playing in the trenches. "This class is going to be a question mark. Losing your line is never a good thing but on a positive note we are young and every one of the starting line is back next year (2012)."

"If Andrew can stay with the job at QB, then our quarterback will back, too. But for this season if our seniors can lead by example than we should be Ok."

Hannon will quarterback the North Quincy defense. The junior is expected to handle the defensive signals from his linebacker position; this assignment is on top of his role as a featured back in the offense. Hannon will receive help from Chase (defensive back), Minton (defensive back), Brown, Allen and sophomore Vinny Tran.

"Walter is going to take Scribi's old spot and I like that because you need a guy who is going to take control," Connor said. "Tran and Chase will be there and so will Minton and Brown. We can rotate some players in because we have kids who can do a good job and be serviceable."

In no way is North Quincy considering this a throwaway season. The Raiders have the ability to equal or match last year's six-win mark. The fall begins with five non-league games against Boston Latin School, Oliver Ames, East Bridgewater, Arlington and Archbishop Williams. North Quincy opened 2010 by defeating Boston Latin 13-6 before losing to Oliver Ames (14-12) and East Bridgewater (46-28).

They'll get another crack at all three of these teams before the Patriot League portion of the schedule begins, but the most compelling early season game is the tilt with Archies.

"We have beaten Boston Latin the last two years and we get another shot at both Oliver Ames and East Bridgewater," Connor stated. "We lost Malden from last year and because of that we had an open date and so we looked at the MIAA (website) and Archbishop Williams was there. They are close and we are similar schools, so I think it is a game that could last."

As members of the Patriot League's Keenan Division, the Raiders are scheduled to play Duxbury, Hingham, Silver Lake, and Whitman-Hanson; North will also line up against Middleboro and Quincy from the league's Fisher Division.

The low numbers are just another hurdle facing North Quincy. There will be no excuses made no matter how 2011 pans out. Connor always has his teams focused on the game at hand and that is the way the Red Raiders will tackle things in the present day. Any success this year is only going to benefit the program moving forward.

"In the long run even if we take our bumps this year in the future these guys who have worked hard, even with the low numbers, can develop a good chemistry and that is what you need to have a great team."

til that loss to Hanover had a legitimate shot at qualifying for the Division 3 state playoffs.

"In the middle of last season we were going pretty well and then we hit a wall," said Reardon. "I'd like to build on that kind of momentum (this season). I think we have had some good leadership from the seniors so far and I was happy with the effort in our scrimmage on Wednesday against Marshfield and Stoughton, traditionally two very good football teams. I'd like to be able to ride that momentum a little bit and see what happens."

With a stable of new seniors at his disposal, Reardon has designs on this momentum being led by three of his most talented twelfth graders. Reggie Cesar, Nick Lepore and Keenan Daniels were handed the captaincy keys during the preseason and the program should be better off because of it.

Cesar is a two-time Patriot League all-star who last season rushed for over 900 yards and scored six touchdowns as Quincy's featured running back; Daniels is the anchor of the Presidents' offensive and defensive lines while Lepore is one of the team's top receiving threats at the tight end position - he will also line up at defensive end.

"Reggie has been outstanding so far in the preseason as have our other two captains Nick Lepore and Keenan Daniels," Reardon stated.

Cesar is a threat to score every time he touches the rock, which is going to be plenty. The explosive home run hitter brings elusive speed to the offense. In consecutive games last year against Pembroke and Middleboro he scored on runs of 59, 50 and 74 yards as Quincy won both games.

In high school football, having one featured back is key; having more than that is a luxury. And that is exactly what Reardon has this fall. Joining Cesar in the backfield will be Patriot League all-stars Jalen Green and Jaquan Harris. Green exploded for eight touchdowns (team high) including a two-touchdown game versus Randolph and an 84-yard dash against Pembroke last year while Harris will be a change-of-pace runner for the Presidents.

"We are looking at Reggie, Jalen and Jaquan in our backfield," Reardon noted. "Between the three of them running the ball we should be in good shape."

At the quarterback position, Reardon has himself a little bit of a quarterback controversy. It is nothing personal, but both senior Curran Jorgensen and junior Andrew Schaaf have been battling it out daily for the shot to open the season under center. Both players have their positives and therefore both signal callers will see time directing the offense. There is nothing wrong with a some competition as it breed's success, usually.

"I am in a little bit of a quarterback controversy," joked Reardon who will be starting his third different QB in three years on Friday night. "Andrew has some experience from last year (he was the jayvee QB) but I got a senior in Curran Jorgensen who has really done great all summer in the passing leagues and he looks pretty good."

"There really isn't much of a controversy because they are both great kids and they are not fighting over it," he continued. "If you are asking who is my starting quarterback, I don't know."

Whichever quarterback gets the nod against the Clippers they'll be looking to connect with junior wide receiver Alex Heffernan, Lepore or first-year receiver Zerick Fadario in the passing game – to name just a few Presidents looking to make his mark retrieving the football. Quincy may not pass much but when the Presidents do there should be options.

"Heffernan has done a real good job and Fadario seems to be picking it up," Reardon said. "Lepore will be a key for the quarterbacks at tight end."

The offense won't do much in either the running or passing game unless the offensive line can provide time and space; that is where Daniels and his crew need to make their mark. The coaching staff has moved Daniels from the inside guard position to the outside tackle spot to strengthen the unit as a whole. Lining up alongside him will be junior Paul Nigro at left tackle, senior Dennis Nguyen and juniors Peter Cedrone and Jackson Lamb at guard and junior Rich Turpin at center.

"We are looking pretty solid at some of the spots on the offensive line," noted Reardon. "We have a couple of kids that we are working in because it seems like everyone gets nicked up at some point so you want to have at least three guys at each position that you can rotate in."

After allowing 24.5 points per game in 2010, Quincy's defense has to improve in order to keep the high-flying teams of the Fisher Division in check. Good defense starts with a strong pass rush, which means two-way players like Daniels and Lepore and whoever else sees time on the defensive line must get pressure on the opposing quarterback.

Quincy's second line of defense – the linebacker core – is still a position in flux according to the head coach. Right now Cedrone and underclassman Max Joseph have made early impression. A player to watch out for is sophomore Matt Hines.

"We are working the linebacker situation out now," Reardon said. "It is kind of like whoever the two best tacklers are we'll put them in. We have had a very good camp up to this point from Joseph and Cedrone, but we'll see."

The Presidents' last line of defense, the defensive backfield, should be legit. Harris and Green will start on opposite corners while Cesar (strong safety) and junior Viet Doan (free safety) will roam the middle. Harris broke out last year. In Quincy's 42-14 win over Canton he returned two interceptions (42 and 35-yards) for touchdowns earning himself an all-league nod as a sophomore.

To qualify for the postseason Quincy will have to do better than last season's 2-2 record in the Patriot League's Fisher Division. Teams like Hanover, Scituate, Whitman-Hanson, Pembroke and Middleboro stand in the way as do nonleague opponents Cohasset, Canton, Plymouth South, Malden Catholic and obviously there is North Quincy on Thanksgiving.

It will be battle each and every week for the Presidents.

"We will see how our side unfolds," Reardon said. "Scituate is always talented, Pembroke has a Hall of Fame coach, Hanover is a bunch of tough kids and Middleboro will be tough."

Quincy opens the 2011 season at home Friday at 7 p.m.

Fell Two Wins Short of State Title Last Year; Returns Majority of Roster; Home Opener Friday Night

North Quincy Has Its Sights Set On State Championship

By SEAN BRENNAN

One year removed from playing in the Division 1 state semifinals for the first time since 2007 – the final hurdle before getting the golden opportunity to compete for a Division 1 state championship – the North Quincy Red Raiders have their sights set on not just getting back to the state's Final Four, but winning the whole thing.

"A new season always presents new challenges," said head coach Kerry Ginty last week. "There are different teams with different schemes so we are going to have to take it game by game and try and improve day by day."

North Quincy, which lost to Lincoln-Sudbury 3-1 in the state semifinals in 2010, returns the majority of last year's roster to a team that finished at 20-5 overall. The Raiders racked up 17 regular season victories and then rolled through the Division 1 Central-East playoffs, defeating Cambridge Ridge & Latin, Newton North and Quincy, 3-2, in a dramatic match at Eastern Nazarene College in the Central-East sectional championship.

On top of that the North Quincy program last fall was an underclassmen majority that mainly relied on its athleticism and youth. (The lone senior on the squad was Kamilah Gonzales.) When their season opened yesterday (Wed., Sept. 7) with an away match at Brockton, that youth became a veteran, big game majority that when combined with superior volleyball talent has the potential to produce a high school juggernaut – North Quincy is a team that should be considered a heavy early-season favorite to bring a state championship banner back to Quincy.

Ginty's team is not lacking for senior talent, which is the number one reason why the Raiders have lofty goals entering the season. Last year these seniors made up what was arguably the best junior class on the South Shore if not the entire state. And now this core gets one final go-around at winning a state title. If that isn't motivation enough then the season-ending defeat to the Warriors, a loss that still stings, should provide that extra fuel.

"Most of the seniors have started for two years or more," Ginty explained. "Their maturity to know what they are supposed to do out on the court should be key. Losing the way we did last year in the state semifinals when we felt like we dropped the ball against Lincoln-Sudbury gives us some motivation to get back to that point."

"These seniors have already stepped up huge," continued Ginty when discussing her team's preseason preparation. "As juniors we relied on them a lot and having them now with some real big-game experience makes it easier (to coach) them. Their confidence is high and they are poised and very smart out there on the court. The leadership shown already has been tremendous."

This veteran leadership begins with seniors Elizabeth Sullivan (liberio/defensive specialist), Olivia Umoren (middle & outside hitter), and Emma Ainsley (outside hitter); all three were team captains as juniors and according to Ginty will again keep that title. Sullivan is the key to the back line of the Raiders' defense while Umoren, who played mainly in the middle last season and is one of the team's biggest hitters, will play both in the middle and on the outside depending on matchups. Ainsley, a staple on this team for three years on the outside, offers Ginty multiple options on the ends.

Fellow senior Rachel Chu (setter) has impressed during the preseason with her leadership ability and will be a key clog in what is shaping up to be a deadly North Quincy attack.

Most teams would be happy to have four productive seniors on its roster. That isn't good enough for North Quincy, which is bad news for the rest of the state. Seniors Lizzie Kelley (right side), Michelle Cole (outside), Kara Reardon (defense), Elizabeth Forde (outside) and Meghan Leahy (defense) are all potential all-stars and all of them understand what it takes to advance deep through the playoffs.

COULD THIS BE THE YEAR? Seniors Olivia Umoren (left), Rachel Chu (center) and Michelle Cole (right) are just three of eight seniors on this season's North Quincy roster. The Raiders have their sights on a state championship after falling two wins short in 2010.

"Our make-up is different from last season," said Ginty about her team's depth. "We have people who have really improved and that gives me some new options as to where we can place girls on the court, which has been great. We are going to utilize all this talent."

And that talent does not end with the senior class.

Ginty has three underclassmen competing for elite status. Junior middle hitter Rose Bennett morphed herself into one of North Quincy's better players following a sophomore season that saw her start every match. Her ability to play anywhere on the court – either in the middle or on the outside – will open up Ginty's bag of tricks even more while sophomores Maya Umoren (Olivia's younger sister) and newcomer Carolyn Schwartz (middle hitter) are the foundation of North Quincy's vision for an extended run of dominance beyond the 2011 season.

"Last year Rose and Olivia Umoren played in the middle," explained Ginty. "This season Carolyn Schwartz will play there and that means I can move my big hitters (Bennett and Umoren) to the outside and we can play to our strengths. These underclassmen are going to play a big role this season."

High school volleyball in Quincy has always been above industry standard and that shouldn't change this fall, but elite girls' volleyball in Massachusetts, usually limited to a handful of teams (North Quincy, Quincy, Barnstable, Lincoln-Sudbury, Newton North, Newton South, Brockton, New Bedford), has become a changed landscape and that means getting back to the state semifinals for the Raiders is not going to be an easy task.

"Volleyball is only getting more and more competitive and is quickly progressing in Massachusetts and throughout the Northeast," said Ginty. "It is growing super competitive, so the race for a state championship is only going to get tighter."

North Quincy will play its home opener on Friday at 5:30 p.m. against Brockton.

First Asian-American Nominated • Terrorist Attacks Reduce Voter Turnout

Possible Recounts In Wards 3, 5

A dash of political history and the possibility of two recounts in close ward battles highlighted Quincy's preliminary election Tuesday.

Only 29 percent of Quincy's 52,253 registered voters went to the polls, many apparently staying home to watch television coverage of the terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington, D.C. City Clerk Joseph Shea had predicted a 35 to 40 percent turnout.

Jimmy Liang, 24, Quincy restaurant owner, became the first Asian-American nominated in the city's history when he landed the sixth spot in the city council at-large field.

Ward 5 incumbent Stephen Durkin, 45, may also have made some history when he missed the nomination in his bid for a fourth term.

But he lost by only 28 votes and may ask for a recount.

The other possible recount is in Ward 3 where John C. Cain, Jr., 55, making his second run for that seat lost a nomination by 43 votes.

Neither Durkin nor Cain were available Tuesday night to say whether they would seek the recounts.

Atty. John Garland, 41, nailed down the first nomination for the Ward 3 seat with an impressive vote of 1,106. Kevin Coughlin took the second nomination with 871.

Cain was third with 828 and David McGillicuddy, 60, was fourth.

Douglas S. Gutro, 36, a program manager with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and James E. Mullaney, III, a certified public accountant, won the Ward 5 nominations. Gutro's vote was 1,224 and Mullaney's 823. Durkin trailed Mullaney with 795, just 28 behind.

Incumbents Timothy P. Cahill, 42, seeking his eighth term, and Francis X. McCauley, 71, running for his third consecutive term, were the pace-setters in the council at-large race.

Joseph G. Finn, 45, former executive director of Father Bill's Place, and John F. Keenan, 37, financial coordinator for the Norfolk County Advisory Board and former

The pain of Tuesday's terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington D.C. was felt locally as former Quincy resident Susan (McAleney) McKay was reported to be a passenger aboard one of the commercial jet airliners that crashed into the World Trade Center.

Help Search World Trade Center Rubble

14 Quincy Police Volunteer In NYC

By TOM HENSHAW

Forty-eight hours after the hijacked commercial jets plunged into the World Trade Center in New York City, 14 Quincy police officers were on the scene, helping the police there in their search and rescue efforts.

"I saw one person," said Officer James Silcox. "I'd rather not talk about, if you don't mind."

The Quincy police, who went down to New York Thursday, spent 16 hours in Ground Zero, the site of the former 110-story twin towers, removing buckets of loose debris.

"After the loose debris was removed," he said, "the Iron Workers went in and cut the heavy beams and hauled them away. Then we went back to work on the loose stuff again."

The heavy equipment couldn't be used, he said, for fear that it would crush the bodies and perhaps even live survivors that were hidden underneath the debris.

"When we weren't on the line," said Silcox, "we slept a bit, ate and then went back. They had plenty of stuff --- clothing, blankets, cots, food, everything.

"As soon as we arrived they outfitted us in helmets, harnesses, even indicators that told you when you were in trouble."

When they arrived, the Quincy contingent was given a choice --- they could ride with New York officers in police cars in the rest of the city or they could search and rescue. They chose the latter.

"We stayed together as a group," said Silcox, "and worked with a special service unit of the New York police. We were only one group of police from all over the country."

Although the job they had to do was a horrific one, Silcox emphasized that he and other relief workers received nothing but kindness from city residents.

"This tragedy really brought out the best in New Yorkers," he said.

The 12-member Quincy delegation returned Sunday in the van loaned to them for the purpose by the Verco car rental company and another group replaced them.

"Some of the guys are thinking about going back in a week or two," said Silcox. "They figure it will be a couple of months before they've gone through all the debris."

If anyone other than police or firefighter is thinking of going to New York to help out, Silcox advises them not to do it.

"It's great to see someone volunteer but it's a waste of time," he said. "They are not letting anyone but police and firefighter through. It's still a crime scene."

STANDING IN THE RUBBLE which once was the World Trade Center is Quincy Police Officer David Levine, one of a contigent of Quincy police officers who volunteered for search and rescue efforts following the terrorist attacks which leveled the two towers Sept. 11. The buckets beside Officer Levine are for the removal of debris, items of identification, and body parts of the many victims killed in the attacks.

Quincy officers who went to New York Thursday included:

Sgt. Thomas Corliss, Officers Paul Brown, Thomas Cleary, E. J. Hartnett, Terence McDonnell, James Silcox, Roger White, Brian Mahoney, David Levine and Mark Kennedy.

Among the second group that left Saturday were Lt. Thomas Bolinder and Officers Leo Coppens, Scott Smith and Timothy Sorgi.

Amidst Terror Attacks, Family Grateful For Daughter's Safety

By CRAIG SALTERS

As the horror of coordinated terrorist attacks unfolded before the nation's eyes Tuesday, Quincy's Alicia Coletti took solace in the safety of her daughter even as her heart went out to the victims of the attacks and their families.

"She called at five past nine to tell me she was all right," Coletti said of her daughter Gina Coletti, who works in a Manhattan office building near the World Trade Center for the investment firm Goldman Sachs. "Obviously there's relief but you feel for the people who were in the World Trade Center and for their loved ones who are waiting for news."

Coletti, who lives on Samoset Ave. with husband David, said her daughter Gina called to let her know that she was all right but had been evacuated from her office building and was trying to make her way home, some 200 blocks north, amidst the confusion and chaos of the day's first terrorist attack which saw two jets crash into both towers of the World Trade Center, causing their collapse.

Ironically, she said, Goldman Sachs had decided last week not to move Gina's department into office space in the World Trade Center. In addition, one of Gina's friends, who had served as an usher in her wedding just one year ago, had recently turned down a job with the press office of the New York Port Authority, which would have placed him in the building as well.

Throughout the day the Coletti home served as ground central for family and friends wanting information on Gina. Among them was Gina's husband George Lanides, a school teacher in the Bronx who was unable to reach his wife because of damaged phone lines in New York City.

"Gina's three brothers called within five minutes of each other to make sure she wasn't in the World Trade Center, to make sure she was safe," Coletti said.

In addition to the destruction of the World Trade Center, which alone would have been the worst act of terrorism in the United States, there were other coordinated attacks throughout the country, including a plane crashing into the Pentagon.

As of press time, at least 260 had been killed in the downing of four jetliners alone with no report on the death toll in New York City, although New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani reported some police and firefighters among the casualties.

Coletti gave thanks for her daughter's safety and said her thoughts were with those seeking information on their loved ones, especially the families of those aboard the two planes which departed from Boston and are believed to be the ones which crashed into the World Trade Center.

"It's just all so sad," Coletti said.

plosions caused both WTC towers to collapse. Hundreds were feared dead, including many New York City firefighters and police officers who were near the towers when they collapsed.

McKay, wife of Doug McKay and mother of two children, Matthew and Lauren, is the daughter of Thomas and Susan McAleney of Ellington Rd. in Wollaston.

Prayers for the McAleney family were said Tuesday night at a community prayer service held for the terrorist victims and their families at the Fort Square Presbyterian Church. The service was officiated by the Rev. Richard Brondyke of Fort Square Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Greg Wheaton of Glad Tidings Church, and the Rev. John Swanson of Union Congregational Church.

The prayer service marks the city's attempt along with the rest of the nation to absorb the shock of the worst act of terrorism in United States history.

As of press time, there were no passenger lists available for any of the four jetliners lost in the day's attacks. A third plane crashed into the Pentagon in Washington D.C. and a fourth crashed in Pennsylvania.

Mayor James Sheets said early Tuesday morning that the city was mobilizing its resources to protect the safety of Quincy residents and provide assistance to the city of Boston if necessary. Although no terrorist activity had been reported in Boston, the city's buildings were evacuated and MBTA service was free of charge, two of the many responses to the day's attack.

The mayor said he had been in contact with Dr. Octavio Diaz of Quincy Medical Center's ER and that the hospital was prepared for any emergency which might develop. He was also in the process of meeting with Fire Chief Thomas Gorman, Acting Police Chief William Falco, and Quincy Emergency Management Director Anthony Siciliano and would coordinate efforts with Boston Mayor Thomas Menino as needed.

Classes at Quincy Public Schools, the mayor said, were not cancelled Tuesday because of the logistical problems involved in sending students home. However, high school and middle school students had been informed of the terrorist attacks.

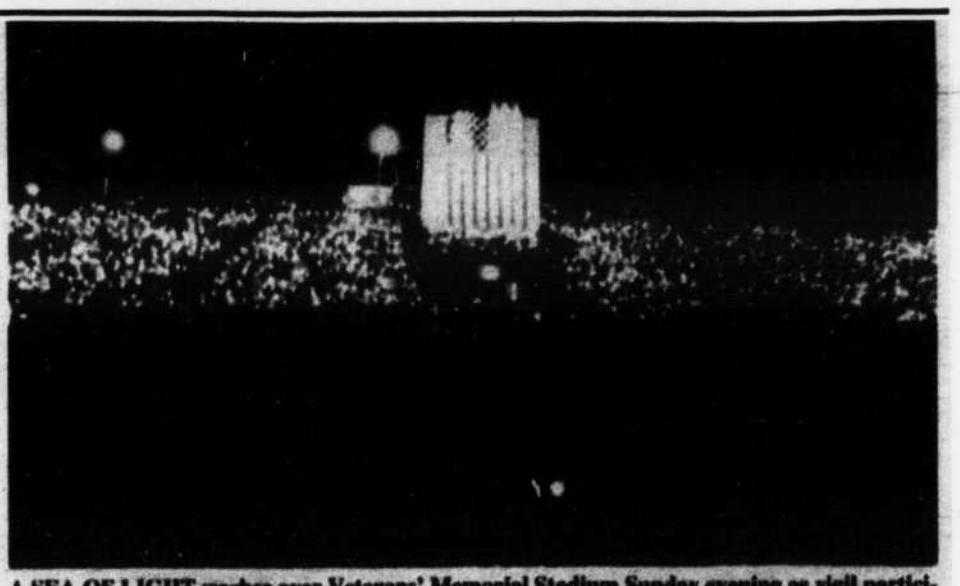

All after-school activities were cancelled.

The mayor said he had also been informed by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) that it had shut off access to Nut Island because the facility serves as a headworks for area sewerage lines.

News of the destruction of the 110-story World Trade Center shook the Bossart family of Merrymount. Exactly one month prior to the devastating terrorist attack, Robert Bossart had taken his children — Jeffrey, age 15, Kevin, age 12, and Katherine, age 10 — to visit the New York City landmark on their way home from a family reunion in Pennsylvania.

Estimated 6,000 Unite At Veterans' Memorial Stadium

Prayer Vigil Unites City In Grief, Faith, Tolerance

By CRAIG SALTERS

An estimated 6,000 Quincy residents filled the stands of Veterans' Memorial Stadium Sunday night to offer prayers for the victims of Sept. 11's terrorist attacks as well as reaffirm their faith in their country and one another.

"You are the backbone," Rabbi Jacob Mann of Beth Israel Synagogue reminded Sunday night's audience, urging them to work together "to heal our good Uncle Sam."

With the ink on the programs barely dry, a crowd of all ages and backgrounds turned out on 48 hours notice for the interfaith prayer service organized by the city and led by the clergy of Quincy Point, traditional home to many faiths including the Islamic Center of New England, which has received various threats in the wake of terrorist attacks upon the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

"America is grieved and so are Arab Americans," said Imam Talal Eid of the Islamic Center of New England. "We condemn this vicious and cowardly attack on innocent civilians and the destruction of property."

Adding that roughly 700 American Moslems "haven't come home yet" from the Sept. 11 attacks, he told those gathered in remembrance that "terrorism has no label. Its only label is blind hatred."

The Rev. Robert Monagle of St. Joseph's Church spoke of the tradition of tolerance in Quincy Point since its earliest days of shipbuilding and offered a pointed rebuke to the Sept. 11 terrorists.

"The perpetrators claim that they were pleasing God, that they were engaged in a 'holy war,'" Rev. Monagle said. "But we gather tonight as the clergy of Quincy to tell you our God is a loving God. Our God is not a God of Hate. Our God does not want innocent people to die."

Near the end of the service the Rev. Ann Suzedell of Quincy Point Congregational Church lit a "candle of hope," the flame of which was passed from candle to candle until the home side of the stadium shone in the darkness.

"The terrorists thought they could damage our faith and diminish our spirit of liberty," Rev. Suzedell said. "They were wrong. The light shines on."

In his opening remarks, Mayor James Sheets recalled America's Civil War and the horrors of World War II and promised that, similar to those dark days, America would emerge a stronger nation.

"This nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom," said Sheets, quoting the words of President Abraham Lincoln.

Sheets said Tuesday that he was "thrilled" with the way Sunday's interfaith vigil came together and thanked the Quincy Point clergy and the efforts of Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi for making the night possible.

"We had 5,000 candles and they were all gone at the end of the night," said Sheets. "It went very well and I think it was important that the Imam was there."

The interfaith vigil also included the singing of spiritual and patriotic songs — including "God Bless America" and "Let There Be Peace On Earth" — led by former City Council President Peter Kolson; the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance; a moment of silence for the victims of Sept. 11's terrorism; and the presentation of colors by the honor guards of the Quincy Police and Fire Departments.

Recognition was also given to the more than a dozen Quincy police officers recently returned from rescue efforts at "ground zero" in New York City as well as the more than 100 Quincy firefighters who have volunteered for relief efforts.

Although flags and candles were passed out for the event, many residents brought their own. Vigil participants filled the homeside stands of the stadium, estimated to hold 5,000 people, and spilled out onto the lawn and walkway.

The stands on the visitors' side of the stadium were draped with three large American flags.

At the end of the hour-long service, residents donated funds to firefighters and police officers standing by the gates, raising $12,923 for the New York City Police and Fire Widows' and Children's Benefit Fund.

One benefit of the fund, said Bernice Mader, administrative assistant to the mayor, is that funds raised go directly to the families of the rescuers who died with no intervening bureaucracy.

Those wishing to donate to the fund should send checks to: New York City Police and Fire Widows' and Children's Benefit Fund, P.O. Box 3713, Grand Central Station, New York City, NY 10163

Tragedy, Perseverence On Sept. 11, 2001

sion. People were afraid to go out and we had people calling because they had relatives and they couldn't get through. It was chaotic and scary, especially when we found out two of the planes had come from Boston. They started closing the schools. The horror of watching it and then we found out people who knew people who had died.

"It was the fear of the unknown. The election was second place."

The Sun newsroom was already somber before that tragic morning.

On Monday, we learned that the mother of one of our staff writers had died unexpectedly over the weekend while on vacation in the Caribbean. His chair was empty, the computer screen dark. Our thoughts were with our colleague. We wondered about the funeral arrangements and when we could pay our respects.

On Tuesday morning, I arrived at work ready for a long day because of the election. We wouldn't go to press until 10 or so that evening – after the votes had been tallied and the election story written.

After booting up my computer, the phone rang and one of our reporters answered. He quickly hung up and said "Bob, turn the TV on."

In stunned silence we watched video of dark smoke billowing from the World Trade Center. Then, the second plane struck. It was not long before news reports referenced al-Qaeda and Osama bin Laden.

The U.S. was under attack by terrorists.

We soon learned that one of the passengers on American Airlines Flight 11 that struck the first tower was a former Quincy resident – Susan (McAleney) Mackay.

The city began to collectively mourn for all those whose lives were lost.

We continued to work and tune in the TV at intervals throughout the day. The more we watched, the harder it was to comprehend. The words "unbelievable, tragic, and surreal" were uttered in the same sentence.

Ten years later, 9-11 is still a very difficult day. We pause to remember all those who were victims that day and the loved ones they left behind. We also recall the heroism of firefighters, police and so many others who died during rescue efforts.

I didn't know anyone who lost his or her life on 9-11.

But I wonder if our paths had ever crossed.

On May 11, 2001, my wife Amy and I went on vacation to California. We landed in L.A. after taking a 6-hour non-stop flight from Boston.

We were among the passengers that day on United Flight 175.

The same flight that five months later struck the second WTC tower.

I wonder if the flight crew that day was the same crew on Sept. 11, 2001.

I also think about other things when the calendar shows 9-11 again.

Like how precious life is.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

A glance at the history of our civilization reveals the fact that many of those who have contributed most toward its advancement have come up with great difficulties. We are reminded of:

Homer, blind, living on crumbs, leading the company of poets;

Milton, blind, living in hell, writing Paradise Lost;

Beethoven, deaf, yet giving to the world some of its greatest music;

Helen Keller, blind and deaf, yet rising to heights of greatness unequaled by any other under such handicaps. She once said: "I knew there would be obstacles in the way, but I was eager to overcome them. Everyone who wishes to gain true knowledge must climb the hill of difficulty alone."

What gave us John Huss, Martin Luther, John Wesley, Cromwell, George Washington, Lincoln, Livingston, William Booth, Jane Adams, Booker T. Washington and hundreds of others? The answer is: Persecution, Slavery, City Slums, Dark Continents, Civil Wars, Ignorance, Hard Places – DIFFICULTIES...

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Mars, your ruling planet, helps you deal with career challenges in a way that reflects some of your own hidden strengths. This impresses some important decision-makers.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your strong Bovine will, combined with your romantic nature (you are ruled by Venus), helps turn a romance with a potential for problems into one with more-positive possibilities.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Mercury's influence creates some unsettling moments, but nothing that you can't live with. You'll soon learn more about that major change that is about to be revealed.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Opportunities for you are like the phases of the Moon: constantly appearing and reappearing. So, cheer up. The opportunity you think you let slip by will be replaced by another.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) An opportunity that you hoped would open up for you remains closed. Stop wasting time scratching at it. Something else you'll like will soon make itself apparent and accessible.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Congratulations. You'll soon hear some positive feedback for all the hard work you recently put into a project. A Pisces could soon swim into your personal life.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Someone whose friendship you felt you had to write off will try to revive it. What you do is up to you. But don't do it without giving it considerable thought.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A job-related plan might need to be reworked to allow for changes. Lucky for you that Saturn remains a strong influence that can help you focus on getting it done right.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) This is a good time to move into areas of self-discovery. You might be surprised about who you really are and how you really relate to those around you.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Expect to confront someone who will make an unwelcome request. Stand by your resolve to do the right thing no matter what "persuasion" might be offered.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A friendly competition could become more contentious than you expected. Take time out to discuss the reasons behind this unexpected change, and act accordingly.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You have a wonderful mind for solving mysteries, so you should feel confident about solving the one developing very close to you. An unlikely source offers help.

BORN THIS WEEK: You're a great host or hostess. You love being with people, and you're very good about planning all sorts of social events that bring folks together.

Quincy College Booming As First Semester Begins

ing to be the urgent concerns of the administration.

"Our purpose is to make our students successful in whatever endeavor they choose, whether it's going on to a four-year college, back to their home country or getting a promotion at work," said Tsaffaras who cited the varied goals of a student body that includes full-time students, part-time students, different ages, occupations, and many cultures.

One student may seek 60 credits toward an associate's degree and subsequent transfer, while another is earning 10 credits for a pay raise, computer or language skills. The nursing program offers an open route to qualifications for registered nurses or medical careers.

"We're all about student success, teaching effectiveness," said Tsaffaras whose mantra, "One Student At a Time," fuels his vision and has been incorporated into college literature and marketing.

Tsaffaras has already directed a number of changes, such as requiring that all deans and faculty administrators teach in the classroom, thus increasing the faculty numbers by ten from 42 full-time faculty members to 50 with two additional faculty on leave.

"All of our deans will be teaching. All of the faculty performing administrative functions will be teaching," said Tsaffaras who said all but one or two openings have been filled.

The convenient hours offered at Quincy College are also essential, according to Tsaffaras who noted that courses are offered nights, days, Saturdays and online.

In addition, Tsaffaras has directed that administration staff be available nights and Saturday mornings for students' convenience and has established a detailed organizational chart that is reviewed and tweaked regularly.

Tsaffaras credits the staff with making his transition smooth but said that he could hire many more. "The people here are really good. The school is underresourced. Every single person who is employed here is necessary."

Despite the college's scattered campuses, Tsaffaras keeps in touch with the faculty as much as possible, reviews every new hire, and constantly reaches out directly to the students.

"I try to be out and about a lot around the campus. I'm liable to pop up anywhere," said Tsaffaras who has even established a "President Unplugged" persona on campus modeled on the MTV's series 'Artist Unplugged.'

Those casual campus meetings once a week offer him an opportunity to hear directly from the students whose main concerns mirror the administration's concerns: parking and facilities. More recently, students told him that they'd like the course schedules available earlier and he said he intends to work on that.

"It's good to get different viewpoints," said Tsaffaras, adding, "People really bring up interesting issues. They've all been pretty practical, nuts and bolts."

Tsaffaras, a practicing attorney with 40 years experience in college administration, was selected president in late 2010 after a lengthy search by the Board of Governors. He has lived in Quincy for 25 years.

Tsaffaras has a full plate as he addresses urgent space needs now, faculty hires, strives to cement alliances with other institutions, and adapts constantly to a technology-driven student body.

During his short tenure, Tsaffaras has focused on the infrastructure, filling essential positions such as the director of the Nursing Program, and developing immediate plans for moving the nursing program as well as expansion at the Plymouth campus which will mark its 20th anniversary this year.

Those are the short-term challenges for Tsaffaras in what he believes is an "exciting" year ahead for the college which offers 31 associate degree programs and 11 certificate programs in such disciplines as business, public service, liberal arts, health science and nursing.

As for the long term, Tsaffaras is working with two committees and StreetWorks, the city's development partner, on plans for the college's permanent home in the Quincy Center where it first opened just over 50 years ago.

The target date for that move is 2016.

College Nursing Program Moving To Larger Quarters In Quincy Center

Quincy College administrators plan to move the college's nursing program from its Temple Street site to larger quarters in Quincy Center this January.

Now they have two choices for that new home on Hancock Street.

According to Pushap Kapoor, vice president of Administration at Quincy College, the owners of Presidents' Place at 1250 Hancock Street and the owners of Hancock Plaza at 1515 Hancock Street responded to the college's Request for Proposals (RFP) for leased space by the Aug. 30 deadline.

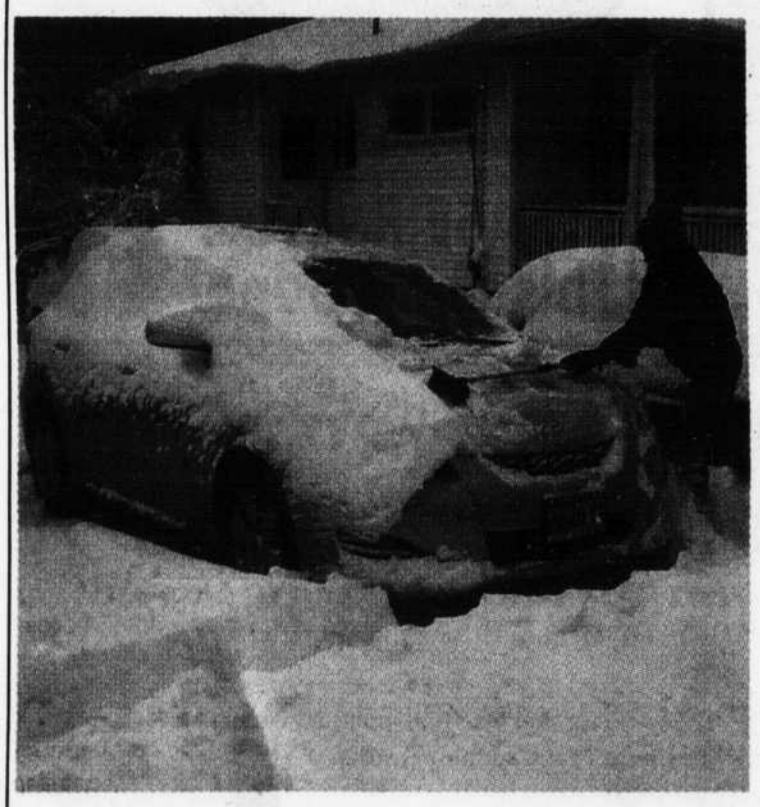

Quincy College President Peter Tsaffaras said the college needs double the area currently available at Temple Street to meet the college's expanding medical studies division.

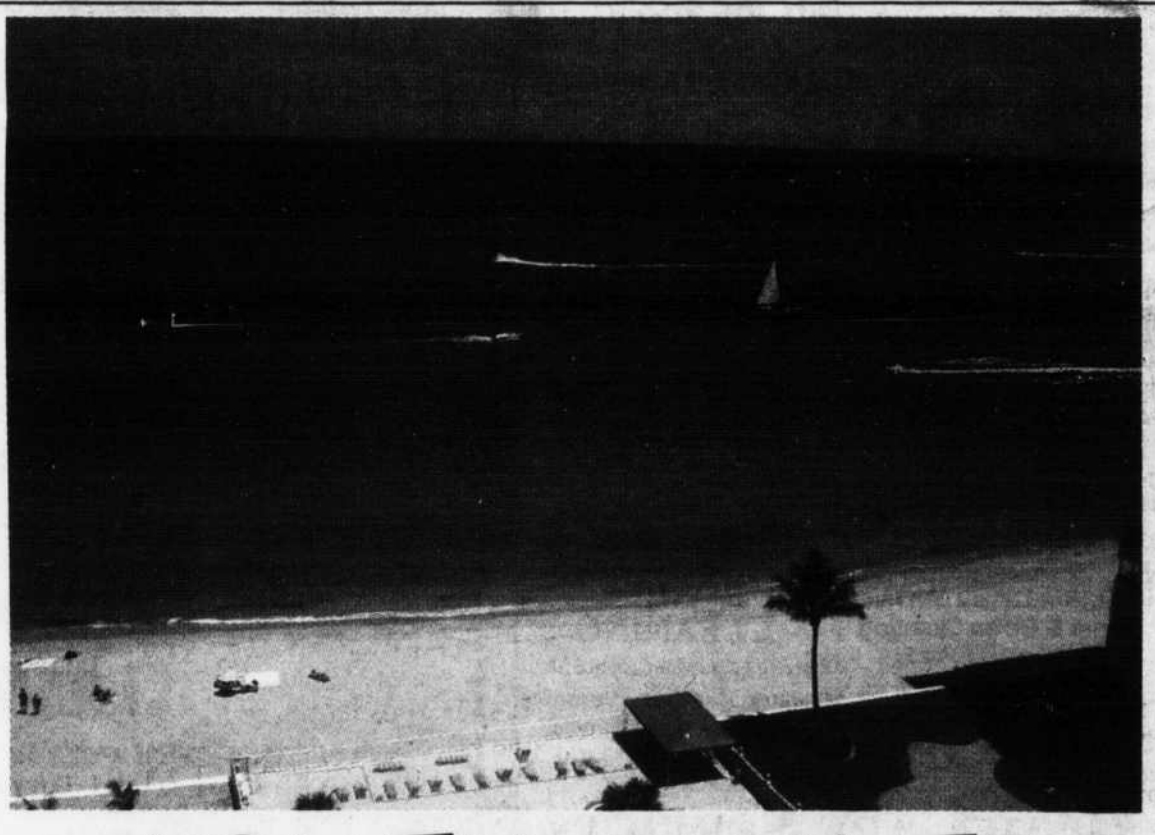

In an ironic twist, one bidder, the owners of Presidents' Place, refused to lease space to the college five years ago after citing the challenges of housing hundreds of students.Times have changed and Presidents' Place Trustees met this year's bid deadline.

Kapoor said a committee will review both responses before making a recommendation.

Bidders must meet all of the criteria in the RFP to be considered and the low bidder need not be selected. The RFP specified that the lease would be executed for no more than eight years as the college is planning to develop one major facility and relocate to one single campus in Quincy Center by 2016.

Remembrance & Resolve On 9/11

THE CITY COMMEMORATED the 10th anniversary of the 9/11 terrorist attacks during a ceremony Sunday at Fire Headquarters on Quincy Avenue. Firefighters, City Recall Heroism, Kindness After Sept. 11th Attacks

By EMILY TAFT

Local residents, public officials, and Quincy firefighters came together Sunday on the 10th anniversary of 9/11, to remember a day that will never be forgotten.

"This morning is eerily similar to that morning 10 years ago," said U.S Rep. William Keating. "We must remember that day, if we don't then we will be doing ourselves – and the country – a dishonor."

After firefighters marched from the Quincy Credit Union down Quincy Avenue to the Fire Department Headquarters, the National Anthem was sung to begin the solemn remembrance. The American Flag was lowered to half-staff, a bell was rung

Council Races In Wards 2, 6 Next Tuesday

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Voters in Ward 2 and Ward 6 will go to the polls next Tuesday, Sept. 20 to nominate two candidates for city councillor in those two respective wards.

Three candidates are on the ballot for councillor in Ward 2 and Ward 6. The top two vote-getters in each of those wards will vie for the council seats in the city's final election Tuesday, Nov. 8.

The candidates seeking nomination – in the order they appear on the preliminary ballot – are:

Ward 2: Steven Perdios, 86 Ruggles St.; Stephen M. Kozlowski, 14 Berkeley St.; and Brad Croall, 53 Summer St.

Ward 6: Michael J. Miller, 38 Warwick St.; Brian T. Radell, 21 Standish Ave.; and Brian F. McNamee, 133 Commander Shea Blvd.

There are no city-wide contests for the Sept. 20 preliminary election.

Only registered voters in Ward 2 and Ward 6 are eligible to vote next Tuesday.

City Clerk Joseph Shea predicted a low turnout – approximately 20 percent in each ward. He based his estimate in part by the low number of voters who have cast absentee ballots.

Ceremony To Honor Former Mayor Hannon

East-West Concourse Road Opens Oct. 2

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday that a moment more than three decades in the making will take place at 10 a.m. Sunday, Oct. 2 when the first cars travel the full length of the east-west connection through Quincy Center on the completed Walter Hannon Parkway.

The road, which is now undergoing final paving and other finishing touches, is a lynchpin in the City's $1.6 billion downtown redevelopment plan that will create a cross-town byway from Burgin Parkway to Southern Artery. A ceremony honoring the new road's namesake, former Mayor Walter Hannon, will officially open the new roadway.

"This new road is a vital foundation for what will be

Mayor Will Present Track Plans To School Committee

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that he will submit plans for the City's first regulation running track at Faxon Field to the School Committee, saying he believes this "incredibly positive" project will be supported by the body.

The decision comes after a lawsuit filed by 10 residents – including three sitting School Committee members – moved to halt track construction following approval by the Park and Recreation Board and the Quincy City Council. A judge ruled that the plan would also need the approval of the full School Committee, reversing a previous opinion by the Massachusetts Association of School Committees that such a vote would not be necessary.

"We're moving forward, and we are going to formally submit our plan to the

"5555" to signal the loss of a firefighter and "God Bless America" was sung to close out the ceremony.

Firefighter Steve Sweet played "Amazing Grace" on the bagpipes, and a wreath was placed in the front of the department sign. A moment of silence observed the fallen from that day, and for those who have lost their lives since defending this country.

"This is a very special day to come here and honor our 3,000 fallen brothers and sisters," said Deacon Jack Menz, the chaplain of the fire and police departments. "This day brings back tough memories for all of us, and reminds us to of those 343 firefighters who lost their lives in New York."

According to firefighter Ernie Arienti, many Quincy firefighters in attendance that morning signed up to help on the days following the attack. Arienti along with a number of his co-workers went to New York City the days after 9/11 to attend at least two funerals a day.

The crowd at this year's memorial was unlike any Arienti has seen in the past.

"We had over half the Fire Department here, and the crowd was full of Quincy citizens, and family members of local firefighters," said Arienti. "The turn out today was fantastic."

Fire Chief Joseph Barron agreed, saying that this was the biggest crowd since the first anniversary of the attacks was observed in 2002.

"We may have had about half the fire department, so about 100 of our men," said Barron. "This is the biggest crowd I have seen, I would say in total around 250 people, including the firefighters."

Retired Quincy firefighter Bernie Macauley of Broady Avenue was happy to be a part of the local firefighters, where he served for 32 years.

"This was such a beautiful ceremony, I am proud to be here," said Macauley. "It is a wonderful tribute to a sad day that happened in 2001."

Barron announced in his speech that the department would be swearing in seven new firefighters this month.

"I feel proud and privileged to be standing here today with these men," said Barron. "Nothing could have prepared us for the horror that happened that day, it is hard to believe it has been 10 years."

In his remarks Cong. Keating asked if after that day is this country stronger and safer?

"Accounts have continued to vary with the question of are we stronger as a country," said Keating. "I remember the images of Americans coming together in crowds after that day, so the real question is are we stronger as a country from within?"

Mayor Thomas Koch said he was profoundly grateful to the men and women who protect this city day and night.

"The world has changed and we are lucky to have our veterans protecting us across the world," said Koch. "At home we have the protection of our police and fire departments. It is good to come together and remember those acts of kindness that occurred on that day."

DRAMATIC PRESENTATION!
Anyone interested in making the most dramatic presentation of a diamond need look no further than a "tension setting." Otherwise referred to as a "floating" or "suspended" setting, tension-set diamonds seem to hover in place in the middle of a band of metal. In actuality, tension settings utilize spring tension in the ring's shank to firmly grip each side of the diamond, the circumference of which slots into grooves at the ring's attachment points. As a result, the diamond appears to float in air with no metal backing. This two-point pressure method of securing the gemstone without the need for prongs assures that the diamond remains unobstructed and that the most amount of available light will penetrate it, producing maximum brilliance.
Our tension set diamond rings are known for their dazzling beauty and are a favorite among many of our customers. This magical setting exemplifies a stunning and unique piece of jewelry which will be admired by all. We are located at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center, where our jewelry professionals will help you select the exact piece for that special someone. Quincy Medical Center Event Raised Nearly $2 Million In 13 Years

Supporters Pledge Return Of Cancer Walk

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy's annual Cancer Walk may be gone this year, but it will return next year, pledges walk founder Bob Curry.

"It's not over," Curry said Tuesday, assuring supporters that future events will be even bigger and better than the past 13 successful events that raised nearly a total of $2 million for the Marie A. Curry Fund. Last year, 1,000 walkers participated in the event.

Right now, Curry noted that Quincy Medical Center is undergoing an ownership transition and its new status does not allow charitable ventures, but the Cancer Walk will be revived next year either through QMC or another entity.

The goals remain the same for Curry who honored his late wife through the Marie A. Curry Fund. The fund is dedicated to wiping out cancer by funding early detection, free cancer screenings, education and medical equipment.

Originally, Curry said the goal was to help the uninsured and underinsured get medical attention, but, as the years passed, the event took on a wider meaning of its own and created awareness of the need for medical check-ups for everyone.

"Everybody was talking about getting check-ups," recalled Curry. "It turned out to be a wonderful event."

The hundreds of walkers each year ran the gamut from senior citizens to mothers pushing baby strollers to dozens of high school students.

And every year, those walkers collected pledges, local businesses donated goods and services, and others raised funds through bake sales, bottle drives, creative projects, and face–paintings booths.

The September event became a local tradition.

"We'll do it again," said Curry who said his son Sean will take his place on the foundation board and he will remain available as backup.

Also on board for a future event is Tony Agnitti, foundation chairman, who said Tuesday, "I'll be there in force. It's vital to the community to continue doing exactly what we do."

Agnitti noted that his father died of cancer seven years ago Tuesday and there are few people who have not been touched by cancer.

Curry and Agnitti were contacted after officials at QMC issued a formal statement announcing this year's cancellation, citing the hospital's move towards ownership by the for-profit Steward Health Care System.

The joint statement issued by Mark O'Neill, Chief Executive Officer, and Grace Murphy-McAuliffe, Chair, Board of Trustees, states:

"It is likely this change in ownership could occur toward the end of September, right around the time of our annual walk. As such, Quincy Medical Center would become a for-profit entity and would not be eligible to use charitable donations for its operation."

While there are no specific details, O'Neill and Murphy-McAuliffe, also, envision organizing a new community foundation dedicated to the same goals as the Curry Fund, "We see the Cancer Walk being very much a part of this future development. We are very proud of the good that the Walk has made possible," said O'Neill and Murphy-McAuliffe who called the $1.9 million total "an incredible feat."

SOME OF THE 1,000 walkers who participated in the 2010 Quincy Medical Center Cancer walk. The walk raised nearly $2 million for early detection, free cancer screenings, education and medical equipment. This year's walk has been cancelled but organizers and supporter expect the walk to return next year.

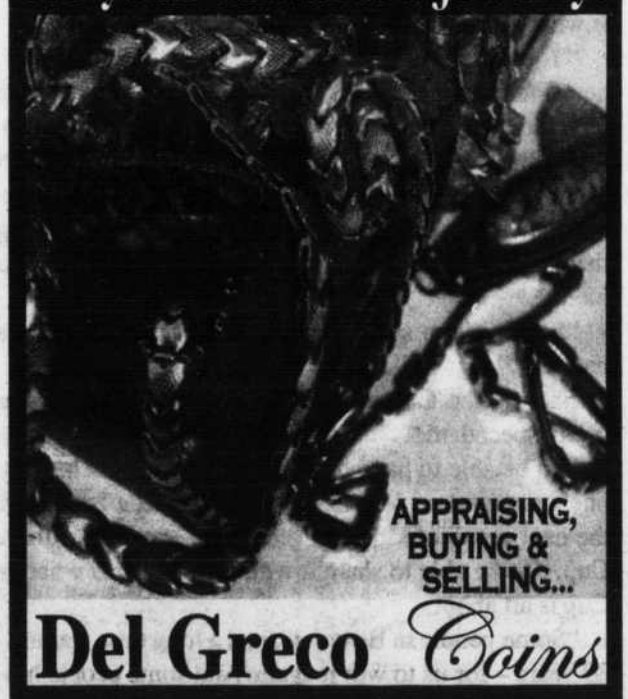

In the past, the funds have been used to provide free cancer screenings, including breast, prostate and cancer screenings as well as cancer education programs, such as the annual Marie A. Curry Cancer Breast Cancer Symposium.

"Proceeds from the QMC Cancer Walk have also been used to provide state-of-the art diagnostic equipment and cancer care services at QMC."

Determined to pay off your mortgage as quickly as possible?
This loan is for you!

There are so many good reasons to love the 15-Year Mortgage. For some people, it's about being debt-free. Others want the mortgage paid off by the time the kids go to college or before they retire. Some see paying off their mortgage quickly as a kind of "forced" savings. Here's the simple fact: If you can swing the somewhat-higher monthly payments, a 15-Year Mortgage knocks years off your original loan. Your equity builds very quickly. And you pay thousands less in interest, compared to a longer-term mortgage loan. Rates are still at historic lows. How much longer? Who knows. If a 15-Year sounds good to you, let's talk. Soon! Come see us or call Angela Blanchard or Richard Coleman at 617-471-0750. Or apply at colonialfed.com - click the Loans tab. (Also available for debt consolidation and for new home purchases.)

A Special Assist Brings The Stanley Cup To Quincy

Standing outside the Sterling Middle School early last Friday morning, a woman gasped at the first sight of it.

"Oh my gosh. There is it."

Others just starred.

The anticipation was over.

Eyes brightened, smiles widened.

The Stanley Cup – the much storied and iconic championship trophy of the National Hockey League – had arrived at the school in a shiny black Cadillac Escalade.

The rear hatch opened and the magnificent trophy appeared glimmering in the bright early morning sunshine.

Lugging the trophy from the sidewalk into the building was Ryan Nadeau, a Quincy resident and employee of the this year's Stanley Cup champion Boston Bruins. Nadeau and his wife, Taryn, a school psychologist for Quincy Public Schools, had decided share part of their day with the Cup with visits to two Quincy schools: Sterling and Atlantic Middle School.

Within moments, the Stanley Cup – the center of professional hockey's universe – took center stage in the Sterling Middle School auditorium. An NHL official traveling with the Cup assured this was the real "presentation" Stanley Cup – the same Cup that is handed to the winning team's captain from the NHL commissioner at center ice. (A replica cup stands in for the real one at the Hockey Hall of Fame in Toronto when the true Cup travels with the victors.)

As the Cup graced the stage beneath a black NHL apron that adorned a small table, a line of photographers – like paparazzi on Hollywood Boulevard – clicked their cameras as groups posed with hockey's royal relic.

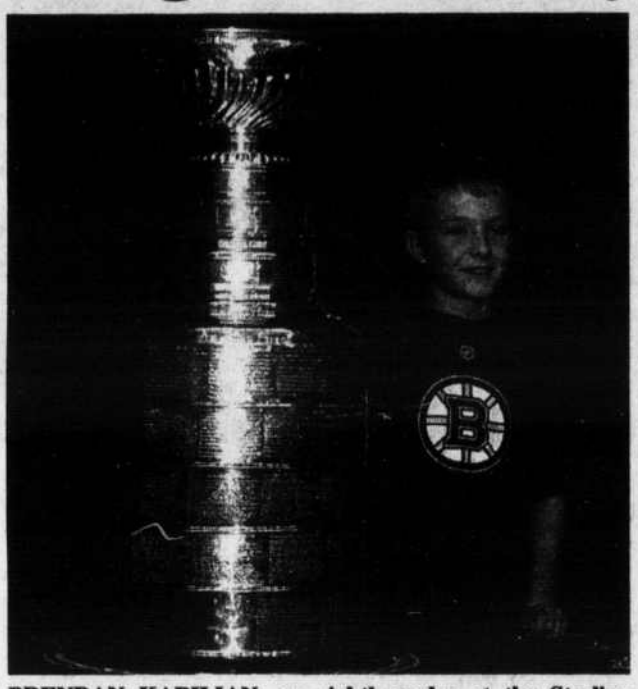

"It's awesome," said 13 year-old and eighth grader Brendan Kabilian. Wearing a black and gold #91 Marc Savard Buins tee-shirt, he then took another look at the Cup and added, "It blows my mind. I never thought I'd see the Cup in person. It's the best day ever."

For Bruins' fans young and young at-heart, it certainly was a day to remember.

For one hour, a steady stream of some 400 students, staff, parents and other members of the Sterling community walked up the stage and huddled around the silver chalice for photos for posterity.

"Having the Stanley Cup here is a wonderful opportunity for the children," said Sterling Principal Christine Barrett. "The kids are excited and we're excited to share this moment with them."

Barrett, a Bruins' fan whose family has had season tickets since the mid 1960s, said the day would not have been possible without the kindness of Ryan and Taryn Nadeau.

BRENDAN KABILIAN, an eighth-grader at the Sterling Middle School, spends a special moment next to professional hockey's biggest prize – the Stanley Cup .

"We were very fortunate that Ryan and Taryn decided to share part of their day with the Cup at the Sterling Middle School. We're very excited and appreciative. This is a great day for Sterling and a great day for the city. This is for the kids. Everyone's a Bruins' fan today."

Players and front-office personnel from championship teams are allowed to have one personal day with the Stanley Cup. For the Nadeaus, sharing hockey's most prized possession with Quincy school children was "a perfect fit."

"Today is my day with the Cup so we figured we'd start in Quincy," said Ryan, the Bruins' director of Hockey Administration and a scout. "With my wife working in the Quincy public schools, it's a perfect fit. It just made sense to be able to share it with the kids. It should be a fun day."

His wife Taryn, who has worked in the QPS system for five years, agreed.

"When we found out that Ryan would have the Cup for a day, we were so excited to able to share it with as many people as possible. Working in Quincy we wanted to share it with the kids and the staff that do so much in the community. We want to share it with as many kids as possible."

Barrett noted that the Nadeaus have been very generous to the Sterling community. Ryan – who is beginning his eighth year with the B's – has donated hockey sweaters and sticks signed by Bruins' players for school fundraisers.

But Ryan deflected the compliment like a Tim Thomas stick save.

"Those are the easy things, helping kids out and helping the community you live in. Why wouldn't you do it? To be able to give them autographed jerseys or sticks when they're doing fundraisers it's pretty simple stuff. But to be able to see the kids faces and employees and watch them see the Cup it's pretty neat."

Nadeau grew up in Taunton a huge Bruins fan. He dreamed of winning the Cup as a member of Boston's Original Six. "To be able to do it as member of the organization is pretty special."

Asked how it feels to lift the Cup over his head – something reserved for championship players and personnel – he breaks into a big grin.

"It's still strange. Starting with winning Game 7 and having the Cup on the ice and having it in the locker room and on the plane ride home and having the Cup today, it never gets old. To see it, to be able to pick it up - it's still sort of surreal at times."

It's been three months to the day – June 15th – that the Bruins ended their 39-year championship drought with a heart-palpitating victory in Game 7 against the Vancouver Canucks in British Columbia. The traditional awarding of the Cup at center ice to the victors was Nadeau's first encounter with the 35-pound, 35-inch tall trophy.

"Superstition in hockey you don't go near it until you win it. That was the first time I saw it up close and got to touch it. It's pretty special."

As many as 52 names representing the 2011 Boston Bruins – both players and staff – will be engraved on the Cup this week in Montreal. Asked if his name will be among them, Nadeau replied, "It's a select group. I'd certainly be honored if my name were on there. But there's so many deserving people that were such a big part of it. It's hard to fit just 52 names."

Mike Bolt, one of the NHL Hockey Hall of Fame's Keepers of the Cup, said there is a general rule of thumb for engraving names.

"Anyone who is a part of the organization can qualify to have their names on it but the team decides whose names go on it and who doesn't," said Bolt, who accompanied the Cup to Quincy. "The general rule is you have to play half the games in the regular season (41) or in the playoffs. That is a bit of a gray area. There are guys who have only played a few games (for a Cup winner) but had their name engraved on the Cup because the organization wanted to have him on there."

After the team makes a decision on the names, the NHL has to approve the list to be sure everyone is legit.

And for good reason.

For example, in 1984, Peter Pocklington – the owner of the champion Edmonton Oilers – had the name of his father, Basil Pocklington, engraved. He was not a member of the team so the NHL xxx'd his name out.

Bolt estimated he's attended thousands of public appearances for the Cup during his 12 years as a keeper. He logs 250 days with it a year.

"The reaction (of seeing the Cup in person) never gets old. It doesn't matter where you are in the world."

Since the Bruins won it, the Cup has travelled all over Canada, the U.S., and overseas including the Czech Republic, Slovakia and Northern Finland – where goalie Tuuka Rask shared it with his homeland.

Bolt says working for the Hockey Hall of Fame – which is based in Toronto, Ontario, is an honor, thrill and a privilege.

"When I got offered to be one of the Keepers of the Cup, it's also a lot of fun even though there are long days when you're living out of a suitcase and on planes."

But, he adds:

"I've explained to people I couldn't have bought this much fun. I still love looking at it. Every morning that I clean it and get it ready for that day's events, I'm thinking 'I'm cleaning the Stanley Cup.' It's in my room and I get to bring it to the guys and watch their reactions. They are superstars and they're paid pretty well but this is what it's all about. That's what matters most.

"You get guys calling you all the time, they have questions about their day. Just seeing the excitement on their faces and their family's faces – especially mom and dad when the players bring it home – and being able to share it with them because they're the ones who helped make their career happen (paying for equipment, getting them to the ice arenas, taking them on the road to tournaments).

"Seeing them share it with them is a pretty special moment."

Sharing the Cup at the Sterling Middle School was pretty special, too.

"To be able to have the Cup and just to watch everyone's expressions is unbelievable," Nadeau beamed as the next group of kids mugged for the cameras with the Cup. "To be able to share it with people, that's what the Cup is all about.

"Some people in Boston waited a long time waiting – 39 years – for us to win it again. And some people have waited their whole lifetime. To give them a chance to see the Cup is a pretty special feeling."

That goal was scored at Sterling on Friday. And give the Nadeaus a big assist for making it happen.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1953 real photo postcard view of what was then the Quincy Adams depot showing a New Haven Railroad FMC diesel powered passenger train approaching from Braintree. The railroad company built this depot, which was the third one built at Water Street, when the Works Project Administration built a bridge over the tracks with federal government money in 1936. This view is from the bridge. Cited for years as a treacherous railroad grade crossing by city officials, the railroad had steadfastly refused to pay for a bridge over the tracks here and the city didn't have the money. The bridge dedication ceremony drew hundreds of area spectators; it was decorated in bunting and neighbors were encouraged to fly U.S. flags on their homes. Leading a parade Mayor Tom Burgin was in the first automobile to cross over the bridge. Speaking at the ceremony was former Mayor Charles Ross who stated that he knew personally a half dozen people that were killed by trains at the grade crossing over the years and that he witnessed the killing of the gate tender and another woman. He also said he saved the lives of two young girls here. When the MBTA's Red Line was demolished and about 10 years later, the bridge was replaced when Burgin Parkway was built alongside the tracks on the right. The present Quincy Adams T station is less than a mile south of here and this old depot site is now home to the Bogantree Service Company. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Council Hearing On Parkingway Addition

By FRANK McCAULEY

The city council was planning to hold a public hearing at 7:30 p.m. at city hall on proposed land taking to extend the Mayor Charles A. Ross Parkingway.

Tnis Week
1965
46 Years Ago

The proposed extension would add about 300 spaces to the southern end of the parking area. The new area would cover a triangular block bounded by the Parkingway, School St., and Hancock Court and a smaller section on School Street across from Hancock Court from the main lot.

Cost to the city to acquire the land and buildings was estimated at $413,200. In addition, it would cost $150,000 to construct the lot.

The City Council in July appropriated $13,500 as the necessary qualifying fee for borrowing to finance the project.

(Editor's Note: The project was never built because of strong public opposition.)

QUINCY SEEKS SUCCESSOR TO DR. ASH

The city launched a search for a new commissioner of health to succeed Dr. Richard M. Ash who would retire in October. Dr. Ash will become 70 during October and under state law must retire at the end of that month.

Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa said that he asked Personnel Director Kenneth G. Gardner to look for a replacement. Mr. Gardner said there was no requirement that the new health commissioner be a doctor. The city is concentrating its search for a person trained in public health. The post now pays $11,825 per year.

Asperger's Syndome/Autism Teen Social Group Begins Friday

The South Shore YMCA, in association with the Quincy Parent Advisory Council to Special Education, announces the continuation of The Teen Center Social Group.

The group is a social and pragmatic language skills development program for adolescents with Asperger's/ High Functioning Autism disorders.

Adolescents with this disorder often struggle significantly with learning appropriate social behavior and reading proper social cues of others. In its third year, The Teen Center Social Group meets Friday nights at the Quincy YMCA, 79 Coddington St., from 7 to 8:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 16.

Funded by the Community Development Block Grant Program, the program is facilitated by two instructors who provide instruction and strategies for building social skills in a place where young adults can recognize, practice, and feel at ease with everyday social encounters while building confidence, developing friendships, and having fun in a comfortable, relaxed atmosphere.

Young adults ages 13 and older are invited to join.

The Homestead is located on Butler Road at the corner of Hancock Street in Quincy.

Dating from 1686, the house is 325 years old. During the 17th and 18th centuries, this mansion was considered the grandest estate in Quincy. During the Revolutionary War era, it was a meeting place for such patriots as Josiah Quincy, John Hancock and John Adams. It was the childhood home of Dorothy Quincy Hancock, the wife of John Hancock.

The Homestead is operated by the Colonial Dames of Massachusetts in conjunction with the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR.)

A Worthy Excuse To Play Basketball

I speak for many basketball enthusiasts living in Quincy when I congratulate the Quincy Sun's writer, Sean Brennan, for his coverage of this year's O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament.

It was fantastic seeing old coaches and friends participating in such a worthy cause at the local Fenno Street Courts. Even though I have just recently heard of these two men's stories thanks to Brennan, I am hopeful that the money from this and future tournaments will continue to educate others of these individual's stories and help worthy students continue their education. Thank-you again for a wonderful article, Sean.

Quincy Oktoberfest Sept. 30 To Benefit ISS Food Pantry

The fraternal organizations of the Quincy Elks and 8th Masonic District will host the Quincy Oktoberfest Friday, Sept. 30 at the Tirrell Room, 254 Quarry St., Quincy.

All participants must be 21 years old or older; proper ID is required.

To purchase a ticket, call 617-773-6203.

The event will honor a German tradition and help hungry local residents. Proceeds will benefit Interfaith Social Services' Food Pantry.

"Both the Elks and the Masons are organizations dedicated to helping those in need, we also like to have a good time while fulfilling that mission," said Oktoberfest Committee Chairman Steve Ziolkowski. "This is going to be a great event, and will hopefully raise a lot of money for hungry people."

Since the first Quincy Oktoberfest in 2009, the Elks and Masons have raised over $22,000. Proceeds were donated to support Interfaith Social Services' food pantry which serves the South Shore from Quincy to Cohasset.

"This fundraiser couldn't have come at a better time," said Interfaith director Rick Doane. "The Oktoberfest helps sustain our programs as we gear up for the difficult winter months. We are so grateful for all of the Masons and Elks who are helping to coordinate this, they are putting together a fun evening for September 30th."

Festivities during Oktoberfest will include a bar pong tournament for charity, other bar games, karaoke, D.J.'s on two different floors, a door prize and raffles: including gift certificates to local restaurants, an autographed basketball signed by the entire 2011 Celtics team, a large screen TV and other items.

Sponsors include Sam Adams – Boston Beer Company, Harpoon Brewery, Burke Distributing Corp., and Montillio's Baking Company. Montillio's will provide a selection of desserts for everyone who attends.

"Besides the beer, of which there will be an abundance, an important part of Oktoberfest is the traditional German food," said Ziolkowski. "The Tirrell Room's chef always does a great job from schnitzel to sausages and pretzels we try to keep it authentic."

Ziolkowski noted there will also be a selection of wine and liquor for those who aren't beer fans.

"However, the most important thing to remember is that ultimately this event is about helping hungry people. Interfaith Social Services does such great work, the Elks and Masons are happy to do everything we can to support their programs," he added.

Doane emphasized the importance of these community based fundraisers amidst the current economic downturn.

"We are definitely feeling the effects of the recession here on the South Shore," Doane said. "Since 2008 our food pantry has served 1,500 to 2,000 more people each year than the year before."

Those numbers continue to increase. Last year the volunteers at Interfaith's food pantry served over 17,000 hungry South Shore residents.

"There is no way that we could keep up with this demand for services if it weren't for the increased support we have received from individuals, foundations and charitably minded organizations," Doane added.

Community Preservation Committee Term Limits Repealed

Koch Signs Measure After 7-2 Council Vote

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Mayor Thomas Koch has approved the City Council's bid to remove the two-term limit imposed on members of Quincy's Community Preservation Committee (CPC), according to the mayor's spokesman Chris Walker.

The mayor acted after the council approved the amendment by a 7-2 vote at their Sept. 6 meeting.

Once Koch signed the amendment, no further action was necessary, according to Assistant City Solicitor Deidre Hall.

"There are no term limits mandated by state law," Hall said Monday, adding, "The term (limit) in Quincy was in effect because of local ordinance."

City Council voted to repeal that limit.

"There's no benefit to restricting these volunteers," said City Council President Kevin Coughlin who sponsored the change and previously served on the CPC. The amendment had been referred to the Ordinance Committee in May.

Coughlin said Tuesday that it takes time to understand and implement the preservation law, "You spend a couple of years; you develop an expertise."

"Kicking someone off a volunteer board doesn't make sense," said CPC Chairman Steve Perdios who worked with Coughlin toward repeal of the single sentence, "No member shall serve more than two terms."

Perdios said the first term basically represents the first phase of the learning curve of a "very involved state law" that has very stringent applications.

"You've got to go through a full cycle, maybe two...." said Perdios who noted few of the state's preservation committees have term limits nor do the majority of the Quincy's other committees.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee voted against the change as did Councillor John Keenan.

In opposing the change, McNamee said that a city of 90,000 residents must have an abundance of candidates to replace members limited by two-terms.

"It is my understanding that the original intent of term limits for CPC members was to ensure that a small number of people could not control the way CPA funds were spent over a long period of time," wrote Perdios in his formal discussion of the issue.

Perdios then noted that 19 people are directly involved in assigning preservation funds thus guaranteeing substantial transparency. Each allotment of preservation funds must be approved by the nine-member CPC, then by the nine-member City Council, and, finally, signed by the sitting mayor.

According to the city statute, the CPC must include three mayoral appointees, and one member of the City Council, the Planning Board, Conservation Commission, Historical Commission, Park and Recreation Board and the Quincy Housing Authority.

At this time, Connie Driscoll, a representative of the Park and Recreation Board, is nearing the end of his second term, which would have made him ineligible to continue service if term limits remained in the local statute.

Currently, the City Council's seat on the CPC is vacant due to the resignation of former Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymondi.

Current board members are Perdios, Maureen Mazrimas and Don Powers, the mayor's appointees; Conservation Commissioner John Brennion, Coleman Barry of the Planning Board, Tony Ricci of the Historical Commission, and Mary Ann Morris representing the QHA.

New Float At Houghs Neck Public Landing

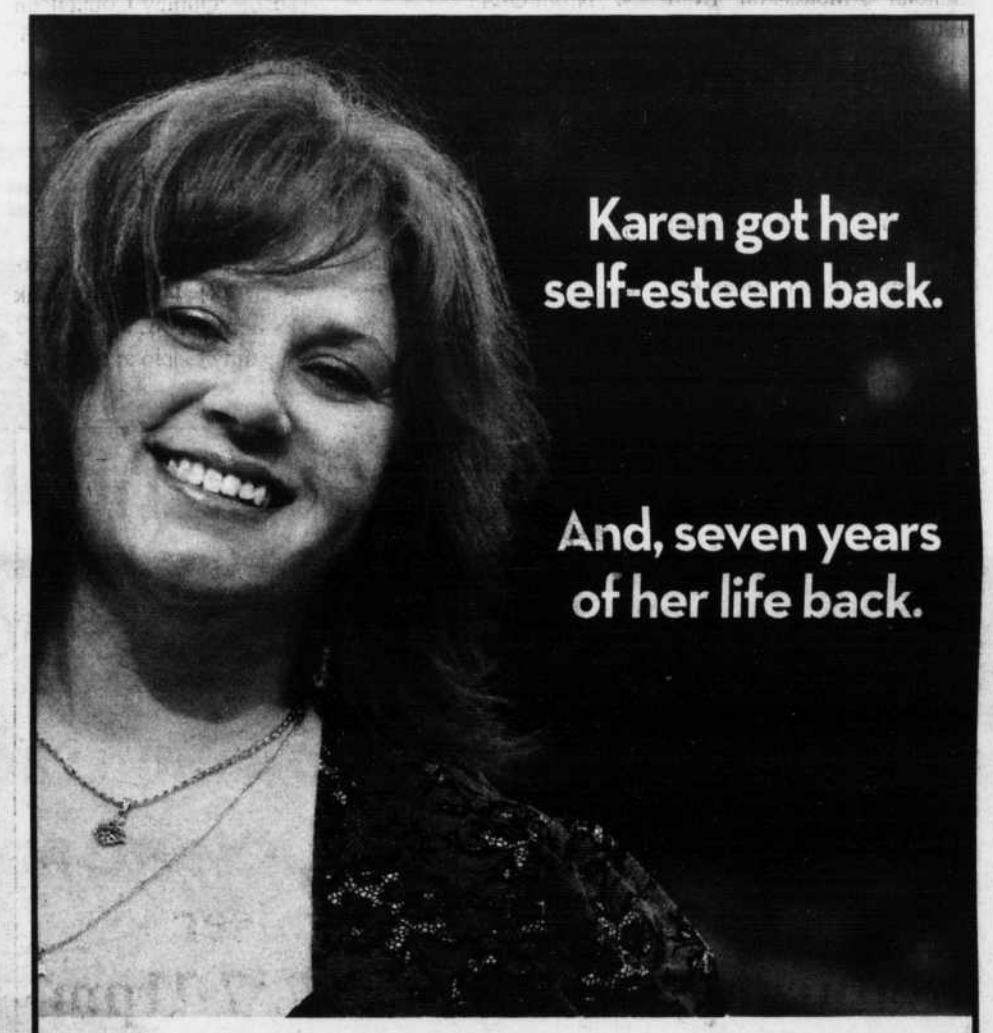

STANDING ON THE new custom-made float at the Houghs Neck Public Landing are Mayor Thomas Koch and Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest with the public-private team that worked on the project. The new 40-foot float was built with materials supplied by the City and labor donated by Houghs Neck contractor John Urbanus and his firm, Commonwealth Siteworks. From left to right: Paul Urbanus, Councillor Laforest, Mayor Koch, John Urbanus, David Dennis, Colleen Dennis, and Quincy Police Lt. Robert Gillan, who leads the Department's Marine Unit.

There will be another "first" next Tuesday:

Results by ward and precinct will be tallied and announced at the new City Hall Annex at 1259 Hancock St. That's because the City Council Chamber at the James R. McIntyre Government Center is undergoing renovation.

Results will also be aired on Quincy Access Television Channels 8 and 10 beginning at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Committee Hears Update On School Roof Projects

By EMILY TAFT

The School Committee recently heard an update on the progress of 17 of the 19 Quincy public school buildings roof repairs Sept. 7, along with other projects that have been left unfinished.

Of the 17 school roofs being worked on seven of them have been completed, according to schools Facilities Director Kevin Murphy.

"We have done an incredible amount of work," said Murphy. "We have worked on repairs of ceilings, walls, and floors in a number of Quincy schools."

A few concerns were brought up by a Quincy resident whose son is a 4th grader at the Lincoln-Hancock Community School.

The resident asked the committee why the roof on the school was not repaired this summer when they had good weather to do so, and also why the first section of the roof that was repaired was located over the gym and pool area when the first half that should have been done was on the classroom side.

In response to the residents concerns School Committee member Elaine Dwyer said that she doesn't disagree.

"There have been some delays, hence why the roof wasn't done before school started," said Dwyer. "There was some delay in accepting the bidding for the project. The classroom side will be done by Oct. 1st."

The roofs on the 17 schools are not being fully repaired according to Dwyer. They are repairing and patching the oldest portions of the roofs.

"The work involved on all of these buildings are done differently, because they are all made differently," said Mayor and School Committee Chairman Thomas Koch. "We are getting a good product on each of the projects being done on the schools."

Also discussed was the Snug Harbor Community School playground project that is still a work in progress. The ground has to be leveled and the equipment put back together.

"There are safety concerns in putting back together the equipment," said Murphy. "It is on the list of things to do, we are just trying to figure out how to get it all done before repairing the grounds."

School Committee Vice Chairwomen Anne Mahoney said she was concerned about the playground not being finished.

"It is 2 years and 2 months later and we still haven't finished this," said Mahoney. "Is it that hard to pick up the phone and see if we are able to get the plans to set up the playground?"

The discussion ended with an agreement that a call would be made to see if Murphy is able to get the plans to set up the equipment or they would have to go another route.

QPS Enrollment Up 136 Students

School enrollment is up 136 students from last year, School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro told the School Committee Sept. 7.

The number of students enrolled in the Quincy public schools as of Sept. 7 was 9,440, which are up from last year's attendance of 9,304. Figures on enrollment at individual schools will be released next month.

DeCristofaro also said that well over 200 teachers participated in the professional development programs offered.

Backpacks were given out at Snug Harbor Elementary School as a part of the backpack initiative plan.

"A total of 2,700 backpacks were given out to about every school," said DeCristofaro. "This is a yearly event we do, and it helps so many families throughout Quincy."

Coordinator of Extended Education Programs Janice Erler presented to the school committee the success of the summer programs this year.

Over 1,000 students attended the summer programs this year, 250 of those students were summer school students.

The programs were taught by Quincy public school teachers and consisted every subject and activities covered in school, from chemistry to drama.

Residents Opposed To Faxon Field Track Site 'Thrilled' By Court Ruling

The group of residents who are opposed to the city building a new track at Faxon Field are "thrilled" by last week's Norfolk Superior Court ruling.

The 24 Quincy residents who took the city to court prefer that the new track be built at Pageant Field.

In a ruling issued by Judge Patrick F. Brady, the court supported the residents' assertion that Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch overstepped his authority when he moved the planned track from Pageant Field to Faxon Field, despite the fact that the Quincy School Committee had voted against placing the track on Faxon Field.

"We are obviously thrilled that the court today validated everything we have been saying for the past several years," said Chris Chetwynd, a Faxon Field neighbor who led the fight against the track's relocation from Pageant. "We have been saying all along that Tom Koch had no legal right to disregard the vote of the School Committee and we're pleased that the court's ruling acknowledged that."

Represented by attorney Timothy White, Chetwynd filed the lawsuit with 23 other Quincy residents, including three School Committee members who were among the majority that voted against placing the track on Faxon Field: Elaine Dwyer, Anne Mahoney and David McCarthy.

Mahoney, the vice chairman of the School Committee and a candidate for mayor, said the ruling had far-reaching legal implications.

"With today's ruling, the court acknowledged that Tom Koch usurped the School Committee's statutory control over all school properties and grounds," Mahoney said. "Had this action been allowed to stand, it would have set a legal precedent that could have been used to justify other such arbitrary actions by municipal leaders against elected school committees across the Commonwealth."

Mahoney said that as a member of the School Committee whose vote Koch ignored, she felt compelled to stand up for the rule of law as well as for the many neighbors who expressed their fears that building a track at Faxon Field would exacerbate the area's long-standing drainage and flooding issues.

She also praised Chetwynd and the other Quincy residents who joined in the lawsuit, saying that the Koch administration had unfairly blamed the group for delaying the construction of the new track.

"The only person to blame for the delay in the track's construction is Tom Koch – if he hadn't moved the track from Pageant along with forcing the Faxon site against the wishes of the School Committee, the track would have been completed years ago," Mahoney said. "It's unfortunate that Tom Koch's utter disregard for the rule of law has deprived Quincy students of a track facility for the better part of a decade."

According to Chetwynd, the residents' case centered on the fact that special legislation enacted by the state legislature in 1964 transferred Faxon Field from Park purposes to school purposes, legally putting the property under the control of the School Committee.

In October 2000, while serving as Park Department director, Tom Koch attempted to have Faxon Field transferred back to the control of the Park & Recreation Board. The School Committee voted against the proposal.

In May 2008, shortly after becoming mayor, the Koch administration made a proposal to the School Committee to move the location of the new track from Pageant Field to Faxon Field and the School Committee voted against the proposal.

Despite the School Committee's vote, however, Koch moved ahead with plans to build the track at Faxon Field anyway, culminating in June 2011 when the City Council voted to transfer the site-specific track funding from Pageant to Faxon Field. Following the court's ruling today, the city will now have to find another location for the track.

"In the end, this case was about more than just a track and its location," Chetwynd said. "It was about a mayor overstepping his legal authority, seizing control of school-owned property in violation of the law.

"The fact that the court sided with the residents is a great victory for the citizens of Quincy and the integrity of checks and balances with in our local government," Chetwynd continued. "As for finding another site to place the track, Pageant Field is still a very viable option and it's no fault of ours if the mayor refuses to place it there. That decision rests with the mayor."

The Ward 5 Community Association (W5CA) will hold its first meeting of the 2011-2012 year Wednesday, Sept. 21 at 7 p.m. at the Beechwood Knoll School.

The main topic will be Sailor's Home Pond.

Association President Neil McCole said he is asking for neighborhood input into the Sailor's Home Pond Rehabilitation Project. McCole authored a grant for $25,000 through the City of Quincy Community Preservation Act.

The projects next steps are open for public input. The project sponsors include: W5CA, City of Quincy DPW, Councillor Doug Gutro, and Lycott Environmental.

Neighbors of the pond are encouraged to attend.

A recently installed fountain aeration system at Sailor's Home Pond will help water quality, reduce algae blooms, and assist with mosquito breeding prevention. Funding was provided to the Ward 5 Community Association from The Community Preservation Act for pond rehabilitation, conservation, and preservation.

WARD 5 COMMUNITY Association recently presented its Citizen of the Year award to longtime Quincy Police and Current Ward 5 Community Police Officer Dave Coletti (third from right). In Sync Center of the Arts Will Inspire Your Children All Year

It's that time of year again! The kids are back to school and shoes, backpacks, pencils and notebooks are shined up and ready to go! For parents, there is a whirlwind of activity in the days before school starts and then we all slowly fall into that familiar routine.

For us here at In Sync Center of the Arts, the same sort of thing happens! In the weeks after summer camps have ended and before the fall season begins there is a flurry of activity and loads of excitement.

Dance teachers have pulled out their dancing shoes and re-worked their lesson plans. We have been training over the summer, getting re-freshed and inspired to jump into the dance groove again! Music teachers have upgraded their music gear and are ready to start making music again. Art teachers have stocked up on paint, paper and all the supplies they need for a beautiful season. The Lego teacher has sorted, cleaned and ordered new Legos and is ready to start inspiring the engineers of the future again! Cooking teachers are tweaking the recipies for this season and taekwondo teachers are sharpening up their skills!

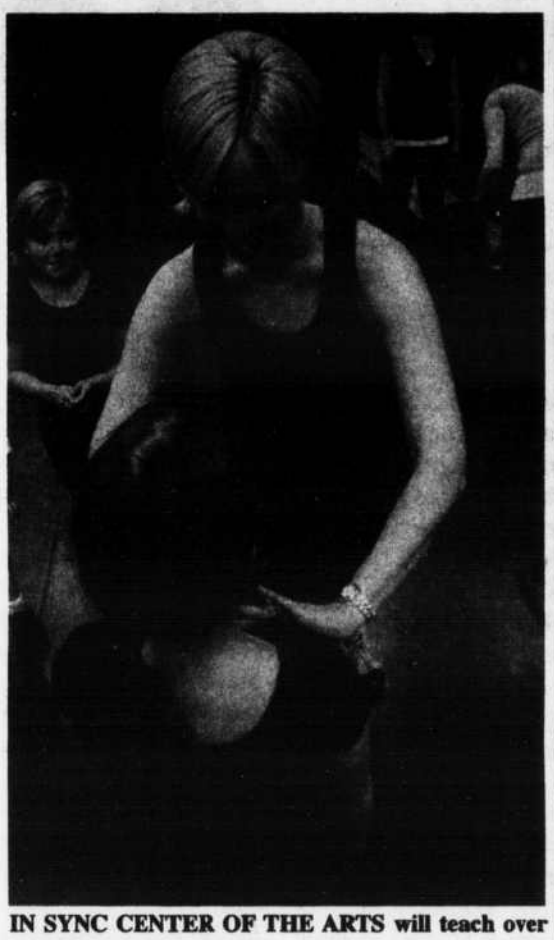

If you peek in the window, you will find us polishing floors, cleaning carpets, reorganizing cubbies and washing mirrors. We have stocked up on dancewear, lesson books, stickers and most importantly lots of disinfectant and tissues!

The staff at In Sync Center of the Arts is bursting with excitement! We can't wait to see all of our students from last year and meet all the new friends scheduled to join us this year! This season, In Sync will have the pleasure of teaching over 1,025 children and more are walking through the door to join us each day. We are honored to have the opportunity to inspire so many young people through the arts.

As parents, we hope that we have given our children the opportunity to find their passion through the extracurricular activities we have painstakingly scheduled for them. We hope that all the running from dance, soccer, gymnastics, baseball, karate, music, etc...will pay off in the end. Will they like what they are doing? Will they find a love for something that will take them into adulthood? Will they make new friends? Will their new hobby inspire them?

As a mom and the owner of In Sync Center of the Arts, I raise my heavily caffeinated coffee cup to you – Here's to another amazing year of experiences! We at In Sync hope your children have special teachers, coaches, or instructors to inspire them this year!

Active Summer Leads Into Busy Fall On Beacon Hill

By State Senator
JOHN F. KEENAN

The calendar has hit September and, with Labor Day behind us, we have entered the unofficial start of fall. Like many of you, our house is getting re-acclimated to early school morning wake-ups and figuring out after-school sport schedules.

At the State House, we are gearing up for what promises to be a very busy season. After the hectic budget sessions and a July that saw Senate passage of human trafficking legislation and probation department reform, we used the summer to catch up and to get ready for the full legislative agenda that awaits us the rest of the calendar year.

For example, I expect within the next couple of weeks that we will be debating the third pension reform bill in three years, as well as legislation that toughens penalties for career criminals, and reduces the role legislators play in hiring at state agencies.

In addition, many legislators, including myself, continue to learn more about the governor's proposal to make major changes to how we all pay for health care. Although the governor has said publicly he wants fast action taken on his "global payments" bill, the issue is so complex, yet important, that I don't expect it to come up for a vote for a few more months.

I have been particularly busy in my role as Senate chairman of the Joint Committee on Mental Health and Substance Abuse. Many of our local hospitals continue to struggle with the problem of boarding mental health patients in their emergency rooms. Those suffering from acute mental health issues deserve immediate and appropriate treatment. Yet too often they are left stranded on hospital gurneys because both our public and private-funded health insurance networks have failed to live up to their requirements to provide the same level of care as someone with a physical emergency. We are working to ensure that any change in the way health care is paid for includes true parity, i.e. that mental health care is provided equally and in the same manner as medical health care.

Later this month, I also plan on filing legislation that will start to address the major problem we are seeing with prescription drug abuse. Teenagers today are as likely to try highly-addictive prescription pain pills as they are marijuana. There is a lack of understanding on the part of teenagers and adults about how addictive and dangerous these medications are, and how quickly they can travel the road from taking a Percocet from the medicine cabinet on a Friday night to a full-blown heroin addiction. Opiate abuse isn't just an "inner-city junkie" problem anymore. It now affects good families, from good neighborhoods. It consumes honor roll students and star athletes, parents with white-collar jobs and small business owners. A person only had to attend one of the recent drug vigils held in Rockland, or Quincy, or Weymouth to understand the scope of this ongoing epidemic and the impact it's having on our communities.

The most buzz in the State House, once again, surrounds casino gambling. The issue of permitting casinos in Massachusetts has been around in some form for 30 years now. Although the House and Senate struck a deal in the waning moments of the legislative session last year, Gov. Patrick effectively killed it by sending the bill back with an amendment, knowing the Legislature wouldn't be able to address it before the end of the session.

Wisely, this time we are not waiting until the waning weeks of the session to consider the issue. Although there are many times when legislators are able to juggle multiple issues at one time, casino gambling fully consumes all the energy and focus within the State House. The sooner the matter can be resolved, the quicker we can move on to other important matters.

The proposal before us is for three resort-style casinos, and one slot parlor, not necessarily at a racetrack. Each casino owner would have to pay $85 million just to receive an operating license and then invest at least $500 million in their facilities. Massachusetts residents currently spend almost $900 million annually at casinos in Connecticut and Rhode Island, generating nearly $200 million in tax revenue for those two states. Proponents say that the casinos will keep that money in Massachusetts as well as create thousands of temporary and permanent jobs.

This week, prior to this paper's deadline, I held a pair of Town Hall-style meetings on the casino bill where I outlined some of the concerns I have with this bill. Although I believe casino gambling has a place within the state economy, I am worried that going from no casinos to three casinos is too much, too soon. I support a more deliberate approach featuring two casinos. I am also strongly opposed to having any slot parlors, as many studies show that slot parlors merely suck away economic activity from the surrounding areas. I also am concerned about the lack of oversight of the new authority being set up to manage casino gambling, the lack of restrictions to prevent some of the patronage abuses we have seen in the past, and the hand-outs to the racing industries. I am reluctant to say, as of now, whether I will be voting for or against the bill, as I am still reviewing it, and am also aware that it could change significantly as floor debate begins. My final decision, however, will be based solely on whether casino gambling is a good bet for Massachusetts.

On the local front, we continue to regularly hold office hours throughout the district and to address the many constituent issues that make their way to our office. Also, we are working with all parties to ensure the smooth sale of Quincy Medical Center to Steward Health Care. Quincy's legislative delegation is working as a team with the City of Quincy to secure redevelopment funds for the historic revitalization of the downtown. We are working with Braintree Mayor Joe Sullivan, the Town Council, and State Representative Cusack on legislation for the construction of the recreation complex at Braintree High School, and are working with the Abington Board of Selectmen and Representative Diehl on legislation that will expedite the Woodsdale Elementary School renovations. In Rockland, we continue our efforts with the citizen's group and Representative Rhonda Nyman to advance the Senior Center project, and are working with local officials on issues relating to the Southfield development at the Weymouth Naval Air Station. VOICE FOR HEALTH
by Dr. Gabrielle Freedman
Chiropractor
DRIVING AMBITION
It certainly does not come as welcome news to long-distance drivers that recent studies show that prolonged sitting compromises health and may even lead to premature death. Among the first to point out that sitting stresses the back more than standing, the American Chiropractic Association recommends that drivers take certain steps on long trips to avoid back problems. First, drivers should adjust their seats close to the steering wheel, with their knees positioned higher than their hips. They should also keep a relaxed grip on the wheel at the 3:00 and 7:00 positions, alternating occasionally with the 10:00 and 2:00 positions. Stretching toes, leg muscles, and shoulders while driving is also important. Back supports should also be used as necessary.
At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we can help you evaluate your situation and decide together what procedure is right for you. You can trust the expertise we provide at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. Now is the time to call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We have extensive training and experience in the field of chiropractic care and are ready to help you. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.
P.S. If you sit for prolonged periods of time at a desk, behind the wheel, or on a couch, you owe it to yourself to schedule a consultation with a chiropractor for an assessment of your condition and recommendations for necessary adjustments.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 22, 1598, English playwright Ben Jonson is indicted for manslaughter after a duel. He was very nearly hanged, but his ability to read and write saved him. He claimed "benefit of clergy," which allowed him to be sentenced by the lenient ecclesiastical courts. Jonson was as famous in his time as Shakespeare.

• On Sept. 21, 1866, H.G. Wells, pioneer of science fiction, is born in Bromley, England. In 1895, he published his classic novel "The Time Machine," about a man who journeys to the future. The book was a success, as was "The War of the Worlds" (1898).

• On Sept. 20, 1881, Chester Arthur becomes third president to serve in one year. The year began with Rutherford B. Hayes in office. Hayes served out his term and turned over the reins to James A. Garfield. Four months later, Garfield was shot by an assassin but did not die until Sept. 19. Vice President Arthur was then sworn in as president.

• On Sept. 24, 1890, faced with the eminent destruction of their church and way of life, Mormon leaders reluctantly issue the "Mormon Manifesto" in which they command all Latter-day Saints to uphold the laws of the nation and abandon polygamy.

• On Sept. 23, 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt is forced to defend his dog's honor and his own reputation. Critics had circulated a story claiming that Roosevelt had accidentally left Fala behind while visiting the Aleutian Islands earlier that year. They accused the president of sending a Navy destroyer, at taxpayer expense of up to $20 million, to go back and pick up the dog.

• On Sept. 19, 1957, the United States detonates a 1.7 kiloton nuclear weapon in an underground tunnel in Nevada. The test was part of a series of 29 nuclear weapons and nuclear weapons safety tests known as Operation Plumbbob.

• On Sept. 25, 1981, Sandra Day O'Connor becomes the first female U.S. Supreme Court justice in history when she is sworn in by Chief Justice Warren Burger. After graduating from Stanford law school in the early 1950s, no law firm in California would hire her because she was a woman.

Concourse Opens Oct. 2

the most substantial economic development plan in our City's great history, creating thousands of new jobs and providing millions of dollars in new revenue for teachers in our classrooms and police on our streets," said Mayor Koch. "Its completion is a major milestone, and another sign that we are making real progress on this historic project every day."

The roadway, known as the Quincy Center Concourse for years in the planning and construction stages, will be dedicated as the Mayor Walter J. Hannon Parkway. Koch won approval from the City Council to name the road in honor of Hannon, who served as a Ward 5 councillor, mayor, state representative and as planning director during his public service career.

Hannon was the first to conceive a master plan for downtown as Mayor in the 1970s and most recently led the committee that drafted new zoning guidelines for Quincy Center aimed at attracting a major redeveloper.

"Mayor Hannon has played a critical role in the future of Quincy Center for the last three decades, and this roadway will be a testament to the legacy he built," said Mayor Koch.

The Parkway project, the final phase of which was paid for by $8 million in federal funding, has been a combination state, federal and local project through each of its phases. A number of state and federal officials are expected to be in attendance for the dedication ceremony and formal opening of the road.

The Parkway's purpose is two-fold: First, to make it easier for traffic to make it through the downtown area by avoiding the traffic crunch around the Church of the Presidents and the immediate area. The second is to provide a new gateway to the redeveloped area, officials said.

The master development agreement, called a Land Disposition Agreement, sets the legal and financial terms for a plan that calls more than 1 million square feet of new office space, more than 1,200 housing units, two hotels, a cinema and entertainment complex, and 700,000 square feet of new retail and restaurant space in Quincy Center.

The project, which will be built to "green" LEED standards, will create several new civic spaces within Quincy Center, includes 500 mature street trees, and will see Town Brook Culvert restored to a new location where it can be exposed to daylight and enjoyed as a public space.

The plan calls for nearly $300 million in public infrastructure improvements as part of the project, including new underground utilities and public parking facilities with 3,500 spaces. The City and Street-Works are working to secure $50 million in state and federal grant funds for a portion of the improvements, with the remainder to be financed by new taxes and parking revenue from the downtown project.

Under the agreement presented to the Council, called a Land Disposition Agreement, Street-Works will pay the City $30 million to cover downtown-related debt already incurred through construction of the Quincy Center Concourse and other related redevelopment costs. In return, the agreement allows for the primary project to be expanded by up to 750,000 square feet of development and an additional $11.5 million in public improvements.

Under the plan, the City will use state urban redevelopment law known as Chapter 121A as the property tax structure for the development. After development, the City expects to receive $10.1 million in property tax revenue. Of that, 6.8 million will go toward paying for the public improvements, and $3.6 million will come straight the City's general fund.

Other new revenues such as new meals taxes, hotel room taxes and property taxes outside the immediate project area is expected to generate at least total of $7.1 million in new revenue beyond what will be used to pay for the public improvements. In the end, the agreement will mean a 4 to 1 ratio of private spending to public investment, and a figure substantially higher than most traditional urban redevelopment projects, Koch said.

At no time will the City's general fund be responsible for paying for any of the public improvements, according to the agreement.

Track Plans To School Committee

School Committee. This is such an incredibly positive project for our young people at a wonderful location next to our new high school," Koch said. "This is just another step in the process to build a first-class track facility that the entire community will be able to enjoy."

The School Committee did not have a plan for the track before it when it scheduled a special meeting in July 2008 to discuss the proposed site at Faxon Field. The committee voted 4-3 against siting the track at the location, despite protests from some members of taking a vote without having seen a plan.

After that vote, the Committee voted unanimously to ask the Massachusetts Association of School Committees to provide an opinion over what entity held jurisdiction at Faxon, the Park and Recreation Board or the School Committee. The opinion stated that the Committee's approval would not be necessary to build a track on the site.

The City proceeded with full plans for the project, and most recently won approval from the City Council to use existing financing to pay for the project at Faxon.

A Dedham Superior Court judge response to the lawsuit stated the City should also get permission from School Committee to build a track on Faxon Field.

Mayor's Golf Tourney Raises $40,250 For Charities

City council also voted unanimously to accept $11,505 in donations toward the city's DARE program.

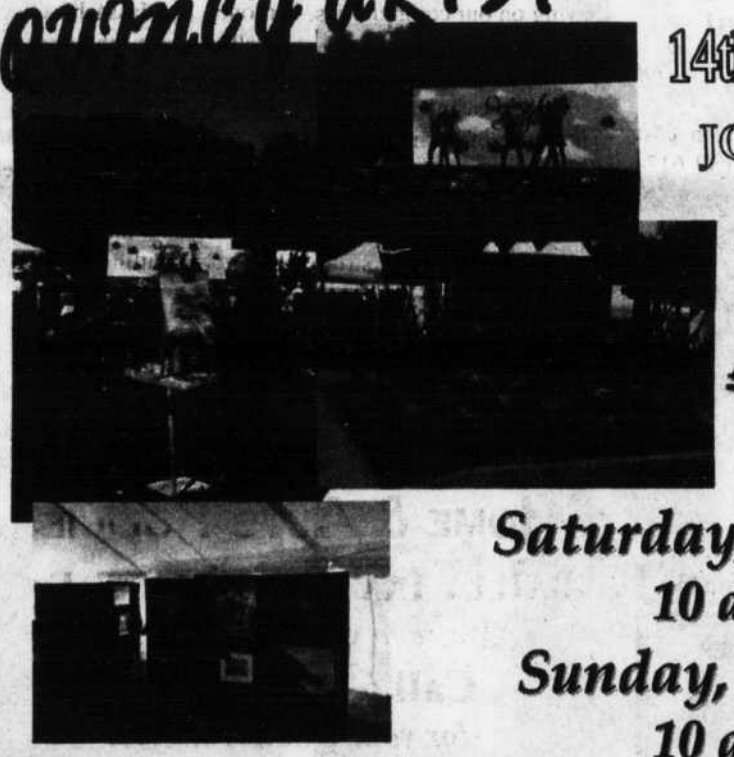

Donors for the DARE camp included a $10,000 gift from the Copeland Family Foundation, Inc., $500 contributions from Eastern Bank and Schlager Auto Body Repair, $250 from Body Extremes and $255 from varied sources.

The council also accepted from Industrial Tower and Wireless LLC., a $200 donation for the Ward 4 Paintbox Program.

Stanley Cup Takes Center Stage At Sterling Middle School

RYAN NADEAU, a Quincy resident and the director of Hockey Administration for the Stanley Cup Champion Boston Bruins, lugs the most storied trophy in all professional sports into the Sterling Middle School Friday morning. For one hour, as many as 400 students, staff, parents and other members of the Sterling community posed with the Stanley Cup as it took center stage in the school's auditorium. The Nadeaus also took the Cup to Atlantic Middle School before heading to some events in Nadeau's hometown of Taunton.

Ryan is the director of Hockey Administration and a scout for the Boston Bruins. Last Friday was his day to spend with the Stanley Cup – a tradition for players, coaches and front-office staff who win the Cup. Taryn is a school psychologist at Sterling and Atlantic Middle School, the other stop for the Cup in Quincy last Friday. THIS IS A HAMMER

By Samantha Mazzotta

Toilet's Antics Drive Wife Mad

Q: The toilet in our master bedroom, for no reason I can explain, will randomly start running for a few minutes and then stop again. Of course, it is accompanied each time by a faint hissing sound as the water flows into the tank and then a "clunk" when it stops. At night, this is incredibly annoying. My wife wants it fixed ASAP. Is this something that can be fixed quickly, or do I need to call a plumber? – Hoyt C., Vero Beach, Fla.

A: There's a good chance you can fix this yourself. What's happening is that water is silently trickling from the upper tank into the toilet bowl. When the water level of the tank drops to a certain point (below the range of the float ball or indicator), the inlet valve at the bottom of the tank opens up and the tank refills. Once the water level rises and returns the float ball or indicator to its top position, the valve closes and the water stops. Often you'll hear a "clunk" or chain rattle as this happens.

To verify a slow leak, mark the water level at its highest point (right after it finishes refilling from a flush) with a crayon, then close the inlet valve under the tank. Come back in a half hour to an hour to see if the water level has fallen.

Next, try to locate the cause of the leak. If there's no water on the floor (indicating bad seals or a cracked tank – a definite contact-the-plumber sign) then the flapper valve – the big valve in the center of the tank that dumps water into the bowl with each flush – is the likely culprit.

The problem could be as simple as a misaligned flapper valve. This is most commonly caused by a lift chain or lift arm that is too long or too short. (The lift chain or arm literally lifts the flapper valve up when you push the flush handle – try it now and see.) Adjust the chain by placing the connecting hook (the hook that attaches the chain to the upper lift arm) into a different rung of the chain. Adjust a vertical lift arm by either slightly bending or straightening the arm.

If the adjustment doesn't work, consider the age of the flush assembly. The seals may be breaking down, especially in a hard-water environment. Replacement assemblies can be purchased at your local home-improvement store (be sure to bring the toilet's brand and model number with you to get the correct fit).

HOME TIP: Increase the life of your toilet tank seals and flush assembly by avoiding the use of bleach-based, in-tank cleanser tablets.

Remodeling The Kitchen? Consider These Useful Tips

(NAPSA) – For some, the reality of remodeling the kitchen may be complicated with visions of cost overruns, delays, strange people in their home, and endless decisions. And while the process may seem daunting, the outcome can be extremely rewarding; in fact, a kitchen with smart design can help make daily life easier for the people living in it.

One home improvement expert, Danny Lipford, shares his remodeling experiences and tips for seamless renovations as the host of "Today's Homeowner with Danny Lipford®." His goal is to eliminate the fear and anxiety many homeowners have when they think about remodeling.

In fact, Lipford recently completed a major renovation of an old Tudor-style home in Mobile, Ala., which he calls The Kuppersmith Project.

"I want to educate homeowners on practical ideas for remodeling while addressing the challenges they may face along the way," explained Lipford. "That's why I embarked on The Kuppersmith Project, a series of episodes dedicated to renovating a 1920s house."

The transformation of the house has been documented in a 13-part series to show realistic approaches to remodeling. The original kitchen was small, outdated and difficult to work in, so "Today's Homeowner" partnered with Merillat® cabinetry to bring functional cabinetry solutions to the new Kuppersmith kitchen.

Consider the following tips from Lipford and his team before undergoing a kitchen remodel.

Tip 1: Think about how you will use your kitchen

To have a successful remodel, it is important to define the goals of your project and think about how you'll actually be using your new kitchen. A main goal for Lipford and his team was to make the Kuppersmith kitchen easy for a family to live and work in at multiple life stages. One kitchen feature you will see in the Kuppersmith home that helps make living in a kitchen easier is an island. Since the kitchen is the social hub of the home, an island provides extra seating and serving space for a family and can include great storage options to help keep the kitchen organized.

To keep the kitchen easy for multiple people to work in, Lipford recommends creating designated spaces for efficient prep, entertaining, storage and cleanup. Each of these activities has various storage opportunities. And when a kitchen is designed for the way you live, it's sure to be more functional.

Tip 2: Storage is key

According to Lipford, a kitchen can never have enough storage options. With Merillat cabinetry, the Kuppersmith kitchen is full of functional storage accessories such as a deep drawer peg-board divider and roll-out trays. Even more storage was included in an island fully equipped with additional space for baking sheets and trays, as well as a sink, dishwasher and trash compactor, making cleanup a breeze.

Everyone knows kitchenware isn't the only item in the kitchen, which is why Lipford created a drop zone area in the Kuppersmith home with cabinetry right off the garage. This is a perfect place to drop keys, sort mail, take off shoes and store the dog leash as you enter the kitchen from the garage. Consider a utility cabinet with roll-out trays and individual cubbies to help minimize clutter from cell phones, hats, keys, etc.

Tip 3: Make the kitchen functional for all

When remodeling your kitchen, it is important to consider who will be using it. If you enjoy entertaining, you may want an open- plan kitchen that allows for more social interaction between the kitchen and other rooms. If you have young children, you might want to consider lower countertops and cabinets and deep drawers to store children's items like a backpack, schoolwork and crafts.

A pantry or utility cabinet is perfect to store many different items in one central location and at different levels, making some things more accessible or inaccessible for children.

For homeowners who consider themselves "at-home chefs," it's important to keep cooking items organized and within easy reach. Storage solutions could include a pull-out spice rack next to the stove, perfect for cooks who like to experiment. A cutting board kit neatly stores knives within a drawer and has a built-in cutting board.

"However you use this most popular room in the house, smart design and innovative storage can make life in the kitchen easier-and more fun," concluded Lipford. "We want the owners of the Kuppersmith home to enjoy cooking, eating and spending time with their family in the kitchen."

Consider Home Moisture Control

Protect Your House, Health And Comfort

(NAPSA)-While building tight, energy-efficient homes is generally necessary, there can be unintended consequences.

Such homes can experience interior moisture buildup, resulting in uncomfortable living conditions, homeowner health issues and, in extreme cases, significant structural damage.

Industry experts say the result is a need to consider home moisture control. According to Building Science Corporation, a leading expert on high-performance home building techniques, "Most air-conditioning equipment will not have the capability of removing the moisture load without overcooling the space-a condition likely to result in other problems. Supplemental dehumidification can complement the capability of the air-conditioning system to remove moisture from air within the conditioned space."

Many people think that high moisture occurs only during warm weather, but the most critical times of the year to address humidity issues are spring and fall, when temperatures are moderate and outdoor humidity levels are high.

High humidity levels can affect your comfort by causing you to feel either hot and sticky or cold and clammy, while also contributing to bad odors in the house. They can also be bad for wood floors, furniture, artwork, electronics and even the overall structure of the home.

Maintaining proper humidity levels and providing controlled fresh air are also important steps in protecting your health. Poor indoor air quality can cause eye irritation, allergies, headaches and respiratory problems such as asthma.

HAVING AN energy-efficient home doesn't have to put a damper on your health and comfort.

To help, a leading brand of whole-house ventilating dehumidifiers offers a solution that is both effective and energy efficient. The company's full line of ventilating dehumidifiers addresses interior moisture issues as well as fresh air ventilation needs in a single, high-efficiency system.

Installed by HVAC professionals to work in conjunction with the air-conditioning system, the units can provide comfort and good indoor air quality. The units are designed to provide effective moisture control, fresh air ventilation and high-efficiency air filtration to the entire home.

Every Ultra-Aire whole-house ventilating dehumidifier meets or exceeds the ENERGY STAR program efficiency standards and high-efficiency MERV-11 filters are standard on every unit to remove most airborne allergens.

DOOR TO DOOR SOLICITATIONS: residents should always be wary of anyone ringing their doorbells. By opening your secure door to an unknown person, it only takes seconds for someone to push you back, gain entrance and shut the door behind you.

Remember, if the offer was that good, why would someone have to go door to door to sell the item? In many cases, the solicitor fabricates a story to get you to buy the product. In the case of magazines, most people never receive their paid-for subscriptions.

If you have information on the above crimes, drug activity or any crime, please call the Quincy Police Detective Bureau at 617-745-5764 or log onto the following website: http://tinyurl.com/ytf6td.

A Job Well Done

On Monday, Sept. 5, at approximately 2:25 p.m., Officer Michael Powers was dispatched to the Merrymount area of Quincy for two males going door to door and looking into windows of homes. The caller was an off-duty officer who confronted the two males and they claimed to be selling magazines door to door.

LT. DAN MINTON

Officer Powers located the two suspects on Samoset Avenue and were joined by Officers' Bill Mitchell and Barry DeFranco. Suspect #1 provided a California identification card and suspect #2 produced a Maine identification card.

When asked what they were doing, suspect #1 said that they were competing in a contest to sell the most magazine subscriptions and the winner would receive a grand prize. Suspect #2 said that this was his first day and he was with his "trainer", suspect #1.

A city requirement for all door to door vendors, with the exception of non-profit groups, politicians and religious groups, requires that solicitors register with the Quincy Police Department and City Hall. The Police Department conducts a criminal record check and if the solicitor passes this test, City Hall charges a $50 fee.

Neither suspect had a license to solicit throughout the City of Quincy.

Suspect #1 had a World Travel Honors Award ID card from the year 2010 with his name printed on it, and a magazine price list along with a National Cash Awards Contest points pamphlet, both from 2010. He also had 20 Circulation subscription receipts in his possession; however, 19 had not been filled out, and one had been voided by the subscriber.

Officer Powers spoke with the off-duty officer who said that he was home when he heard noises coming from along the right side of his house in his driveway. The Officer did not see anyone in his driveway, so he walked to the front door and found suspect #2 peering in the front window of his house. The officer questioned what the suspect was doing and he said he was selling magazines.

At this time, suspect #1 emerged from the officer's driveway, so the officer asked him what he was doing there. Suspect #1 also said that he was selling magazines, even though neither suspect actually had any magazines with them.

When the officer asked the suspects to show him their City of Quincy soliciting permit, both suspects did not answer as they slowly walked away from the officer, who then returned into his house to call the police. A criminal record check showed that suspect #1 had a criminal record from California consisting of thefts, burglaries, and robberies. He also had an outstanding warrant for failure to appear on a burglary charge out of Santa Monica California issued 06/20/2011, but the Police Department said that they would not extradite.

After reviewing suspect #1's criminal record, it appears he was last arrested in California on 10/28/10 for Grand Theft and pled that down to a burglary charge where he was convicted of the felony, put on 3 years probation, and ordered to serve 365 days in jail however he defaulted when it came time to do so.

Suspect #2's criminal record showed a history of criminal offenses such as OUI, terrorizing, and thefts in the state of Maine. In his possession, he held a Florida license with a different name. A criminal record on this name showed an extensive criminal record from Florida to Maine consisting of OUI's, thefts, criminal mischief, and shoplifting. Suspect #2 said that the license was a friend's.

Based on all the information available, suspect #1, a 20 year-old Los Angeles resident, and suspect #2, a Winscasset, Maine resident, were placed under arrest for violation of city ordinance – failure to register as solicitors.

SCAM: A retired NQHS Teacher called to tell me that she received a recorded phone call claiming to be from "Eastern Bank", stating that they were re-issuing Mastercards.

The instructions were to push "1" to proceed. This is called "phishing" and the phone call goes out to many homes. The person that hits "1" get the live operator, who will try to scam your present Mastercard account numbers. Eastern Bank had no involvement in the scam – it's just the bank the suspects decided to use.

Conditions Include 10-Year No Close Period

AG Coakley Approves QMC Transfer To Steward

Attorney General Martha Coakley's Office has secured significant improvements and conditions as part of approving the proposed transfer of Morton Hospital in Taunton and Quincy Medical Center in Quincy to an affiliate of Steward Health Care System LLC (Steward.)

As part of each investigation and approval, the AG's Office improved the original terms of the asset purchase agreement to include a number of additional safeguards designed to ensure the transactions are in the public interest. In both transactions, the AG determined that the proposed transfer of the non-profit acute care hospital to a for-profit entity, with the additional changes negotiated by the AG's Office, meets the factors identified in state law.

"(The) approvals ensure that the communities of Quincy and Taunton will have local access to full service acute care hospitals with an influx of capital that will improve facilities and preserve jobs," said AG Coakley. "In our effort to protect the public interest, we have enhanced these transactions by providing additional stability, oversight and commitments to vital community programs and services."

The Attorney General's approval of the Quincy Medical Center transaction will ensure that the hospital emerges from bankruptcy in the best position to provide Quincy's 92,000 residents with access to a full service acute care hospital and maintain key jobs (Quincy Medical Center currently employs 1,100 people). Steward has agreed to $44 to $54 million in facility upgrades. In finding that the public interest is satisfied in the Quincy transaction, the revised agreements require Steward to:

- Maintain an acute care hospital in Quincy that provides at least the same scope of services during a 10-Year No Close period;
- Pay $35-$38 million dollars toward Quincy's outstanding debt through the Bankruptcy Court;
- Commit to spend, within five years, no less than $34 million in capital expenditures, including no less than $15 million within the first year and another $10 million in the second year;
- Spend between $10 million and $20 million for the capital needs of Quincy Medical Center in years 6-10;
- Maintain charity care and community benefit expenditures at least at the current levels for Quincy Medical Center during the 10-Year No Close Period and maintain charity care and community benefit programs consistent with Attorney General guidelines thereafter; and
- Recognize each bargaining unit provided for under existing or expired collective bargaining agreements.

Steward has also agreed to make modifications to its agreement with Quincy Medical Center at the request of the AG's Office. These enhancements, among many other changes, include:

- Ensuring Steward's capital commitment in years 6-10 includes a minimum commitment of at least $10 million;
- Preventing Steward from transferring ownership of the hospital individually for five years;
- Preserving Quincy Medical Center's 22 inpatient, geriatric psychiatric beds;
- Agreeing to maintain charity care and community benefit programs. This includes community benefit outreach services to the substantial Asian population in the service area, including an Asian Outreach Coordinator, a chest clinic and the provision and training of medical interpreters;
- Requiring Steward to donate unspent funds to a health care charity if Steward fails to meet its minimum capital expenditure obligations in the first five years; and
- Giving the Attorney General's Office the direct authority to enforce the post-closing commitments of Steward.

In any transaction involving the transfer of a non-profit hospital's charitable assets to a for-profit entity, the Attorney General's Office has statutory authority to conduct a review of the proposed transfer. In its review of these two transactions, the AG's Office found that: (1) it is impracticable for each hospital to continue its current operations in charitable form; (2) due care was followed by each Board and senior management during the transaction; (3) there was no self-dealing or conflict of interest mismanagement with respect to either transaction; (4) each hospital will receive fair value for its assets and operations; and (5) the transfer is in the public interest.

In the Quincy Medical Center transaction, the AG's Office will file its report along with a request for the United States Bankruptcy Court to approve the proposed sale of the hospital to Steward as part of the hospital's long-term restructuring plan. The United States Bankruptcy Code was amended in 2005 to ensure that the transfer of non-profit organizations to for profit entities through the bankruptcy process also conforms to state law, in this case requiring the AG's approval of any transfer of a non-profit acute care hospital to a for profit entity. Quincy Medical Center will subsequently file a petition with the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) seeking approval for the appropriate disposition of the charity's donor-restricted funds, which shall be subject to the oversight and the assent of the Attorney General. The Department of Public Health must also approve the transaction for it to proceed.

The Walk is the largest single-day participatory event benefiting the Jimmy Fund and Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and since its inception in 1989 the event has raised more than $73 million.

Participants may choose to walk one of four routes: the entire 26.2-mile route; the 13.1-mile route from Babson to Boston; the five-mile Boston College route, or the three-mile route starting at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Those unable to participate on Walk Day can become "virtual walkers" and still fundraise for the Jimmy Fund.

All walkers must raise a minimum of $250, except for walkers 12 years old and younger who have a minimum of $100.

Sports Injury Clinics At Milton Hospital

Milton Hospital, a clinical affiliate of Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center providing community-based health care, is offering free weekly sports injury clinics for student-athletes, Saturdays from 9-11 a.m. in Milton Hospital's Rehabilitation Services Department.

A Milton Hospital orthopaedic physician and physical therapist will provide injury assessments for student-athletes at the clinic, which will serve as a starting point for pursuing further diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation paths when necessary.

With fall sports back in season, this clinic provides a cost-efficient means for local families to receive care for sports-related injuries before more serious issues develop, or simply to seek assurance about the severity of a particular injury.

No appointment is necessary for a consultation.

For more information on the upcoming Saturday clinics, call 617-313-1143.

Presidents Fall Overboard Against Cohasset, 33-16

By SEAN BRENNAN

Cohasset did it again to Quincy in a season-opener.

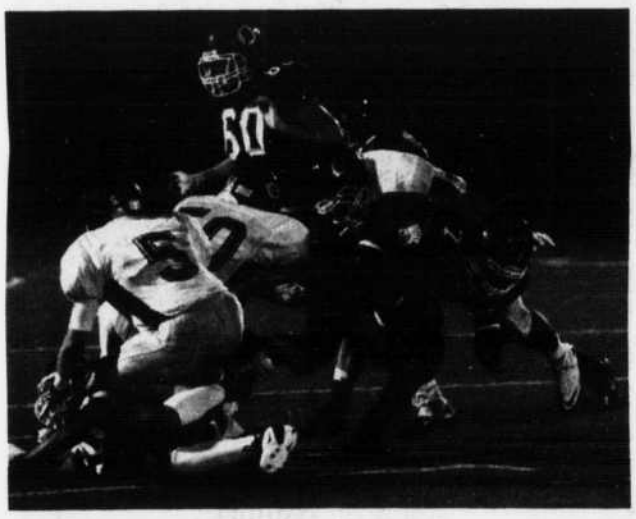

Last year the Skippers dominated the Presidents, 45-7. Quincy responded to that loss by winning four of its next six games; last Friday's 33-16 outcome at Veterans Memorial Stadium isn't a season-ender, but the Presidents have work still to do if they want to make a serious run at the Division 3 playoffs.

At the top of the list of problems that need a quick fix is eliminating turnovers – and doing a better job of limiting big plays by opposing offenses, especially early in the game. Quincy also needs to get healthy. Top running back Reggie Cesar and top-defender Jaquan Harris did not suit up against the Skippers.

"First thing is we need to get healthy," said QHS head coach Bill Reardon this week. "Having Reggie and Harris out is not helping. We need to continue to improve and not turn the ball over. I saw some good things. I hate losing but the way we competed was a positive."

Cohasset struck first versus Quincy. With just 2:28 gone in the opening quarter, Skipper quarterback Jamie Farber found a streaking Chris Carpenter down the seam for a 27-yard touchdown strike that gave the visitors a 6-0 advantage (Shane Haggerty's PAT made it 7-0).

Nonleague Cohasset added to its lead later in the first when running back Kyle Livingstone (19 carries, 131 yards, two touchdowns) broke through Quincy's red zone defensive front, scoring from four yards out with 2:30 left in the quarter. Haggerty's kick missed but the early game damage had been done and Quincy faced an uphill battle the rest of the way.

The second quarter started badly for Quincy but ended with a highlight. First-year quarterback Curran Jorgensen was on the front end of both plays. The first - a 25-yard interception return for a touchdown by the Skippers' Kyrel Jaundoo - which gave Cohasset a commanding 21-0 first-half lead (the two-point pass conversion from Farber to John Collins was successful) was responded to by the senior signal caller when he threw a beautiful pass to junior wide receiver Alex Heffernan.

With the clock running down in the half, Jorgensen spotted Heffernan wide open behind the Cohasset defensive backfield. His pass arched over the safety's reach and into the waiting arms of Heffernan who made the catch and fell into the end zone for Quincy's first score of 2011.

Jorgensen ran in the two-point conversion to slice the Cohasset lead to 21-8 at the break.

"I was pleased with the way Curran hung in there," said Reardon. "It was his first varsity game and to his credit he responded after throwing that interception."

Whatever momentum Quincy picked up following the Jorgensen-to-Heffernan touchdown carried over to the Presidents defense in the third quarter. Quincy held the high-flying passing game of Farber and the elusive running attack of Livingstone in check throughout the third quarter; however, the Presidents could not manage any offensive attack and the game went to the fourth quarter at 21-8.

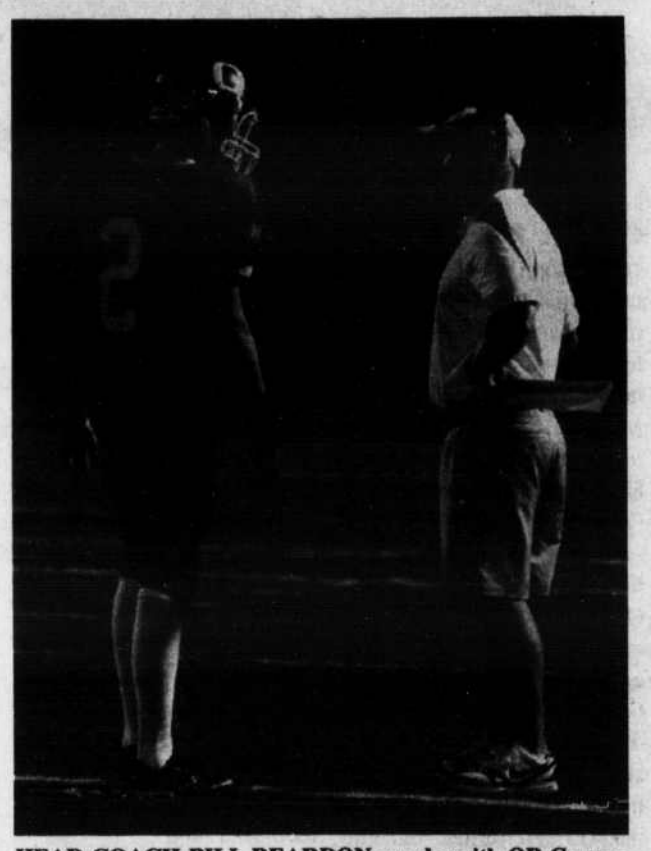

Quincy had managed to keep the score close after a shaky beginning, but the veteran-laden Skippers put the game out of reach with a fast start in the fourth. Livingstone added to his solid game by punching the ball over the goal line from three yards out on Cohasset's first drive of the quarter (the PAT was no good). That touchdown made the score 27-8.

Farber capped off his night by scoring on an eight-yard quarterback scramble (33-8) following an unsuccessful Quincy possession.

Despite struggling to produce many points, the Presidents received a huge game from senior running back Jalen Green. A Patriot League all-star in 2010, Green gashed Cohasset's defense to the tune of 130 yards on just 13 carries. Green was rewarded for his hard work late in the game when he bounced off tackle and scored from 25 yards out in the waning minutes.

Junior Viet Doan made it 33-16 with a successful two-point conversion rush.

"With the injuries that we have, we are going to need Green to continue to play well," Reardon said about his senior back.

ALEX HEFFERNAN hauls in a 25-yard touchdown pass from Curran Jorgensen during the first half of Friday's nonleague game with Cohasset.

It does not get any easier for Quincy on Friday. The Presidents travel to nonleague Canton to play the Bulldogs for a second straight season. Last fall, Quincy dominated Canton on the way to an impressive 42-14 victory.

"Canton is improved this season," Reardon noted. "We are going to have to play better than we did against Cohasset if we want to win."

Quincy plays at nonleague Plymouth South on Sept. 23. The team's next home game, which follows an early bye week, is on Oct. 7 versus Malden Catholic.

Senior Walter Hannon Rushed For 100+ Yards, Touchdown; Late Field Goal Missed

Raiders Come Up Short Against Boston Latin

By SEAN BRENNAN

The issues were obvious following North Quincy's 7-6-loss to Boston Latin.

First, the Raiders' lack of depth caught up to them during a second quarter drive by the Wolfpack. Playing an early game in warm weather last Friday in the season opener, Jhalen Bien-Aime finished off an extended possession by scoring from four yards out right before halftime against a worn down North Quincy defense.

Secondly, the Raiders turned the ball over three times inside Boston Latin's 20-yard line, giving away points in the process because of mental mistakes.

And despite all of this, North Quincy still only trailed nonleague Boston Latin 7-0 at the start of the fourth quarter. The Raiders special teams, specifically Jaquan Montero, came through with a huge play four minutes into the quarter to give the visitors a fighting chance.

Montero broke free and blocked a punt, which was recovered by the Raiders. Senior fullback Walter Hannon (100+ yards rushing) punched the ball into the end zone to cut the deficit to 7-6 but the PAT was no good. North Quincy kept bringing pressure and with seconds left in regulation placekicker Harris Bega's 27-yard field goal attempt fell just short.

It was too little too late for the Raiders.

"We did a good job in the second half on defense," said NQHS head coach Jim Connor. "Boston Latin did not get another first down following that touchdown. We had a chance in the end but the field goal came up short."

"There were some positives but we have a lot to work on," Connor continued. "We ran the ball well (over 200 yards rushing) but we also turned the ball over three times in the red zone and made some mental mistakes that cost us. You can't shoot yourself in the foot early and expect to be able to pull it out."

Hannon played as advertised at fullback, as did senior running back Marquis Chase, who finished with 50-plus yards, and sophomore back Antoine Allen. However, North Quincy's lack of numbers caught up to them in the second quarter. Connor doesn't see that as being an issue that should plague his Raiders moving forward.

"We were gassed in the second," he said. "Boston Latin has some big bodies up front and I think we were just physically exhausted. But we responded after that and we will continue to work on remaining fit moving forward."

It was just one loss. North Quincy's focus now turns to nonleague Oliver Ames this Friday.

"It is never as bad as you think," Connor said about the season opener. "We need to put our focus on Oliver Ames and win this one. It is a must win but we will be ready."

North Quincy will play consecutive nonleague home games the next two weeks. On Sept. 23, the Raiders host East Bridgewater (7 p.m.) and on Sept. 30 the team welcomes Arlington to Veterans Memorial Stadium (7 p.m.).

A nonleague road game against Archbishop Williams is scheduled for Oct. 7.

Note: In the Quincy Sun's North Quincy football preview last week, Walter Hannon was listed as a junior. Hannon is a senior. The Sun regrets the error.

Militia To Play Final Home Game Saturday

The Quincy Militia will play its final home game at Veterans Memorial Stadium this Saturday, Sept. 17 at 8 p.m. against defending EFL champions Taunton Gladiators.

During halftime, the Militia will recognize the 2011 Quincy Youth Football League's teams and cheerleaders and coaches. Please come out and support the local football teams in the city.

Missed Playoffs By Three Points Last Year

Raiders Primed To Go On The Offensive This Season

By SEAN BRENNAN

The most obvious weakness for Coach Paul Bregoli's girl's soccer team in 2010 was its lack of scoring prowess. North Quincy tallied 20 goals in 20 games – you don't have to be a math major to calculate that averages one goal per game.

Despite the inability to score more often, and with the support of a young defense that allowed opponents to score just 33 goals against, the Raiders finished with a 7-10-3 record and just missed qualifying for the state tournament by three points.

So, after what has been a two-year hiatus, the goal is to make it back to the state playoffs. To reach this milestone, North Quincy will need to have a number of underclassmen and its six seniors step up their performance on the pitch because the Raiders have to replace the production of six key players in Jillian Carchedi, Maggie Lynch, Shannon Coleman, Courtney Byrne, Sarah Gardiner, and Jillian Keezer off last year's squad.

"We finished at 7-10-3 last year and we fell three points shy of the state playoffs for a second year in a row," said Bregoli who will be coaching his 17th season as NQHS head coach this fall. "We had a difficult time scoring goals last year. But I was really encouraged about how we played in the preseason. We actually scored some goals."

The preseason fireworks carried over to the Raiders' season-opener last Wednesday against nonleague Malden. North Quincy exploded for four tallies, including two from junior forward Danielle Paschall, one from senior captain Taylor McKay and a goal from freshman Kiera Forde, in a 4-0 victory.

It was a solid beginning for the offense. But to sustain the fast start, last year's leading scorer, junior forward Shannon McCleary (five goals in 2010, 12 goals in two years), is going to need more help. Paschall, McKay, and Forde's opening salvos were a step in the right direction. Joining these three up front will be seniors Bethany Routier and captain Kelly Byrne and, sophomore Delia Devane.

Directing the offensive flow from the midfield – the players responsible for giving the forward core space and opportunities to bury goals – are seniors Kaleen Campo and captain Jessica O'Donovan, juniors Caitlin Bulger, Liz Kelly, Briana Mullaney and Kayla Surgue, sophomore Abby Smith, and freshmen Courtney Campo and Sydney Chang.

"This year we are going to have players step up," Bregoli stated. "I don't see that lack of firepower up front like I did last year. Last year it was Shannon and that was it, but this year we will look to distribute more of the scoring."

"Taylor McKay should produce and Paschall has blazing speed and she can strike it from inside the 18-yard line, so she should score for us," Bregoli continued. "Smith had a couple of goals last year as a freshman and in the middle Liz Kelly, who is our best overall athlete and always makes good decisions with the ball, Courtney Campo and Chang are versatile players."

With the offense (potentially) significantly improved, North Quincy's defense should be under less pressure.

This group was the strength of the 2010 season and, even with four-year starter Shannon Coleman graduating from the backend, opponents still have to contend with returning players in goalkeeper senior Sara Sullivan (1.63 goals against average in 2010), junior defenders Lauren Campo and Jaclyn Scuzzarella, and sophomore sweeper Arianna Viscione and sophomore outside back Haley McKay.

"We have pretty much the same defensive core back," explained Bregoli. "Sara is starting her third year in goal and she is going to go every minute of every game if at all possible. We lost Shannon Coleman, but I have Haley McKay, who is terrific at outside back, Lauren Campo, who played a lot at outside back and Arianna Viscione, who was our sweeper as a freshman and now has a whole year under her belt. Scuzzarella is solid at stopper for us as well."

"These young kids are steady," Bregoli noted about his defense. "We are solid on the backline and we don't make too many mistakes."

If North Quincy can limit mistakes, and it sounds like Bregoli believes that possible, the Raiders should be a team to deal with this fall in the Patriot League – typically one of the strongest leagues in the state. The nonleague schedule is no cakewalk either.

"The Patriot League is always the teeth and there is no easy team in our league," said Bregoli. "The nonleague schedule is a bit of an upgrade this season."

"The goal is to advance to the state playoffs," he continued. "The last couple of years we were a few points shy. That doesn't mean that we weren't good or didn't have good players, but we just didn't have enough in certain areas. With our schedule the margin of error is so thin."

North Quincy hosted Silver Lake Regional on Tuesday. The Raiders play at Hingham today (Thursday) before hosting nonleague Lynn Classical. Saturday at 10 a.m. at Teal Field in North Quincy.

Team Notes: Senior Kaleen Campo, junior Kayla Sugrue and freshman Sydney Chang played well versus Malden… Sara Sullivan made five saves for the shutout victory… Coach Bregoli won his 157th game as head coach following the 4-0 victory over Malden.

Six Seniors Lead The Way This Fall

The Present And Future Look Bright For Quincy

By SEAN BRENNAN

This may not be the year it all comes together, but the Quincy High School girl's soccer program is lined up to be a serious force on the South Shore soccer scene for seasons to come.

Coach Don Martin's 2011 edition is stocked with talent – but the Presidents are wet-behind-the-ears. The majority of the talent resides in his sophomore and freshmen classes. On the varsity roster, Quincy has 22 players: six seniors, three juniors, seven sophomores, and six freshmen. According to Martin, every player is going to see time on the pitch this fall, which should make for some exciting and unpredictable action.

"I am feeling blessed this season," said Martin who is starting his 13th season as coach of the Presidents. "Every player from 1-to-22 can contribute and the soccer IQ on the varsity team is very good. They are all good ath-

Returns Six Seniors Off Last Year's Team; Tied Bridgewater-Raynham On Saturday

Young Presidents Are On The Right Track

By SEAN BRENNAN

This year's Quincy boys' soccer team is going to be on young side. There will be bumps along the way as the Presidents' twelve juniors and sophomores continue to gain experience on the pitch. Any issues of leadership should be well handled by the six seniors currently on the opening day roster.

Coach Mark Spendlove is optimistic that the 2011 edition is going to be much improved over last fall's squad, and he is leaning heavily on his older players to make sure the development of the underclassmen is not impeded.

"We have those six seniors and the rest of the team is made up of juniors and sophomores – we don't have any freshmen this season," the third-year coach said on Monday. "I expect my six seniors to play quite a few minutes."

Leading the way for the senior class are team captains Jev Valfor, Dan Mongo and Nick Dolan. According to Spendlove, Valfor is expected to see time at both midfield and defense while Mongo will play at midfield and at forward. Dolan is also expected to be a multi-position player who will see considerable minutes at both defense and at midfield.

Fellow seniors Duy Vo (midfield and defense), Kevin Mullin (goalkeeper), and Kevin Paterno (midfield and forward) provide Spendlove with a bevy of options that he can unveil as the fall progress along.

"In a nutshell this is probably the most balanced team that I've had in my three seasons," stated Spendlove. "We have a good mix of seniors and underclassmen. We have some good team speed and I have players who can play multiple positions – that is the nature of the squad because we only have 18 varsity players."

"I am confident that (the team) can do that," he continued. "We will not be the most physical team but we have that flexibility. For the first time, I have a team that can attempt to play the way I would like to see us play. That means keeping possession of the ball."

With only 18 players available, Quincy needs to remain healthy. The lack of depth is Spendlove's pressing concern. Staying healthy is key but so is his team's mental ability to limit (or in a perfect world, eliminate) mistakes and, most importantly, maintain solid concentration for all 80 minutes of matches.

"What we need to do is stay fit and remain healthy," Spendlove explained. "We don't have the depth so we very much need to focus and keep our concentration level high. If we do that we might just do some damage this season."

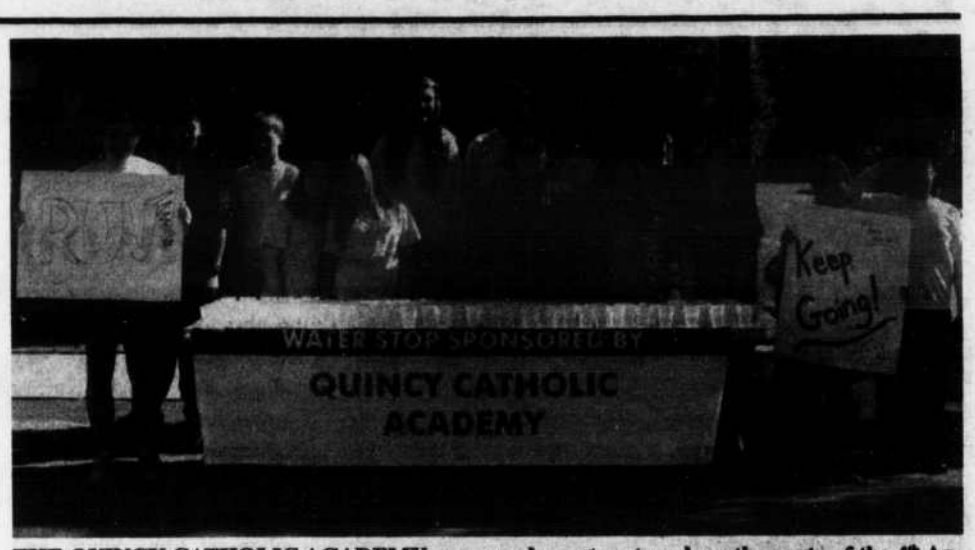

Quincy got the 2011 season off on right foot this past Saturday in a nonleague game with Bridgewater-Raynham. The Presidents didn't gain two points but battled instead for one point as they played the Trojans to a 2-2 tie.

"It was a good way to open the season," Spendlove said. "We did fairly decent during the preseason so to come out and earn a point against a strong Bridgewater-Raynham squad was good."

The Presidents kicked off its Patriot League schedule on Tuesday with a home match against Duxbury and the team is set to travel to Scituate today (Thursday) for a league game with the Sailors. Quincy will host nonleague Plymouth North on Saturday at 10 a.m. before playing two league road games next week against Whitman-Hanson (Sept. 20) and Pembroke (Sept. 22).

The month of September ends with a home match with Hingham (Sept. 26) and an away match at Hanover (Sept. 28).

Quincy and North Quincy rekindle their cross-city rivalry on Saturday, Oct. 1 at Veterans Memorial Stadium at 6:30 p.m.

THE QUINCY CATHOLIC ACADEMY sponsored a water stop along the route of the 4th Annual Officer Jamie Cochrane Road Race on Sunday in Quincy. The race, which drew close to 1,000 runners, raises monies for numerous local charities. The Quincy Sun will have a story and photo spread on this year's race in next week's edition.

Veteran Red Raiders Are Excited For Season

By SEAN BRENNAN

A collection of fourteen seniors, several underclassmen, which includes a handful of first-year players, make up Coach Rich Hanlon's boys' soccer team at North Quincy this fall.

Their collective goal is to improve on last year's record of 6-4-8 record with the long-range goal of advancing into the state playoffs.

"This is the most seniors I have ever had on one team," said Hanlon who is starting his seventh season as head coach of the Red Raiders. "We return several players who made an impact last year and everyday we are going to have to improve."

"These kids are fired up," continued Hanlon. "We know how difficult it is going to be (to qualify for the tournament), but we are going to do our best to get back there."

Headlining the large senior core are team captains Connor Clifford (midfielder), Tim McAuliffe (midfielder), Iany Martins (forward), and Ryan Ketner (defender). Senior Paul Curtin, the Raiders' strongest player according to Hanlon, will direct the team's offense from the midfield.

"These guys will be looked at to provide leadership," Hanlon stated. "They are all returning starters and we will be counting on them."

In years past, going back to Ryan Louis two seasons ago and Anthony Andronico last fall, North Quincy has been blessed with a standout goalkeeper between the posts. An unfortunate injury to expected starter Jamieson McFarland over the summer left a deep void at the position during the preseason according to Hanlon. In stepped senior James Dunn, best known for his performance between the pipes for the North Quincy hockey team. Dunn is raw as a soccer goalie, so expect some early mistakes, but his athletic ability and his drive should help the Raiders as the season moves along.

"James is a work in progress," Hanlon explained. "He is a great athlete but he will make mistakes. Our defense is going to have to understand that he will need some help."

Up front, Martins will receive offensive support from senior forward Chris Lamont. Freshman John Lopes, one of the Raiders' newest players, has the potential to be a force for North Quincy at the striker spot – Lopes' stepbrother, sophomore midfielder Erico Rosa, brings some fresh blood to the middle of the pitch.

"These two brothers are excellent soccer players," stated Hanlon. "They joined us this season and both should help us."

Alongside Lopes, Clifford, and McAuliffe at the midfield position are senior Omar Abo-Sido and junior Steve Beaton. Abo-Sido was North Quincy's leading scorer in 2010 while Beaton saw considerable playing time as a sophomore.

The defense protecting Dunn is led by junior Robbie Routhier. The talented eleventh grader provides Hanlon with a heady player who can control the backend. Routhier will be paired with Ketner as well as senior Ian Hunter and junior Kyle Waters.

"Robbie is the leader of the defense," his coach said. "We are going to need our defense to play well if we want to win more games than we did last season."

Other players to keep an eye on this season are senior transfer Jordan Vidamo and seniors Tyler Braun, Seamus Keavney and EJ Schroth.

North Quincy opened its season on Sept. 6 with a 3-1-nonleague loss to Malden. Routhier scored the lone goal on a penalty kick late in the second half. It was a game that was there for the taking, but some mental mistakes cost the Raiders.

"It could have been a 1-1 result but we made some mistakes," said Hanlon. "(Malden) was a lot better than we expected but it was still a disappointing start. We need to fix some things quickly because we start our league schedule early next week against Silver Lake and Hingham, both are among the best teams in the league."

North Quincy played a night game on Sept. 8 at Archbishop Williams (a 4-3 loss) and hosted Milton on Sept. 10 – both games were nonleague affairs – and played at Silver Lake on Tuesday.

The Raiders play at home versus Hingham today (Thursday). The game starts at 4 p.m.

The Present And Future Look Bright

letes, which means that their fitness level is strong. We are going to be a young but the future looks bright."

Martin noted that the shift in young soccer talent to QHS from NQHS can be attributed somewhat to the brand new high school and the upgraded facilities available on Coddington Street. But for this mix-match core of senior and underclassmen to produce at a level good enough to qualify for the state tournament – a Martin coached team has never advanced that far – they will have to rely on one another with the older players taking leadership roles.

"What I am seeing is that these young players are bringing out the best of the older kids," Martin said. "They are good for each other, but at the end of the day how we do this year will be how well they play together."

"I have been happy with how the seniors have lead the charge," he continued.

Team captains this fall include returning starters Michaela Walker (goalkeeper), Brielyan O'Leary (defender), and Victoria Wallace (midfielder). That is three key players at three different spots on the field, which is an added bonus for a team that will play plenty of inexperienced underclassmen among its top-11 varsity starters.

Senior midfielders Caroline Spada and Olivia Goldson (starting center midfielder) give Martin some additional experience in the middle of the field while senior forward Janelle Leone will be someone the younger kids can lean on for advice.

The junior class is headlined by midfielder Courtney Sheridan, midfielder/stopper Bridget O'Brien, a transfer from NQHS, and defender Jenny Scarnici, who is currently injured.

The seven-member sophomore class, a group that gained varsity experience in 2010, includes midfielders Stacey Gallagher, Dominique Lucier, and Alyssa Lydon as well as defenders Kayla McArdle and Colleen Andrews; Natalie O'Donovan (second keeper) and Olivia Wallace should also help Quincy this season.

"Every player has been training hard and there isn't a real drop-off in talent," said Martin. "Everyone on the varsity roster is going to play. It may only be 30 minutes of an 80-minute match but they will all see time. The younger players will need to adjust to the speed of play at this level."

The excitement in Martin's voice when he discussed his incoming freshmen class was obvious, but he also understands that ninth graders have a lot to learn about what it takes to become a successful and productive varsity soccer player. But having six freshmen on the varsity roster, ready to play now, is the number one reason the future of girls' soccer at QHS is bright.

Headlining this brat pack is forward Emma Papile. A year-round club soccer player, Papile, according to Martin, is the total package. She has the highest soccer IQ on the Presidents, is good with both feet and is not afraid to get dirty or keep her teammates involved – almost to a fault. It is too early to predict what kind of impact the young scorer may have for Quincy, but she has the chance to be special.

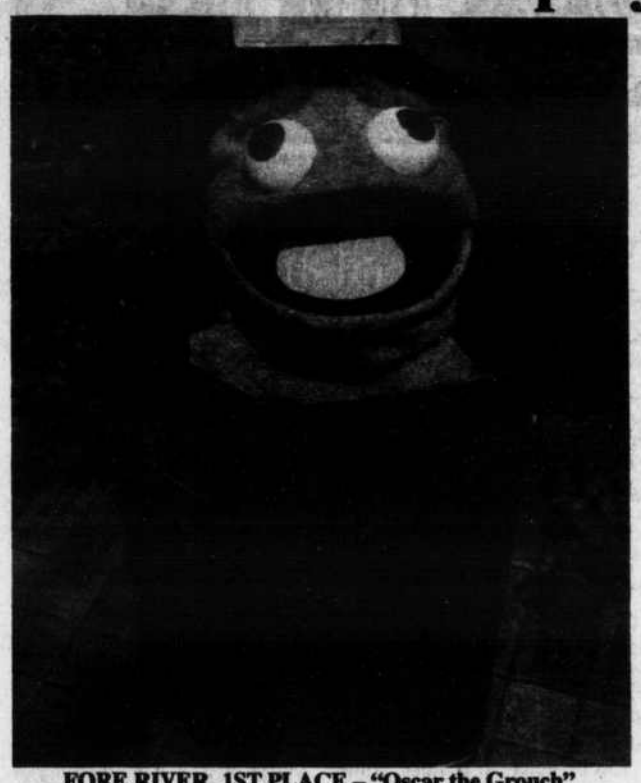

Defensive outside midfielder Colleen Madden, forward Julia Donovan, defender Emily Hatfield, stopper Seanna Villarel and Kerry Phelan make up the rest of the freshmen dandies.

Martin knows he has something special moving forward with his team. The task now is to make all the pieces fit, which will be the challenge. The short-term results may be spotty, but the hope is that in the long-term, by playing so many underclassmen, his program will be much improved.

"I have more tenth and ninth graders than juniors and seniors and that doesn't ever happen," he noted. "Hopefully we can surprise some teams this year. The (QHS) girls' program needs this. It is all about the community. These girls could be something special."

The new-look Presidents opened the season on Tuesday at Duxbury. Quincy plays today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m. against Scituate before hosting Whitman-Hanson on Sept. 20.

Arts & Craft Display Winners

FORE RIVER, 1ST PLACE – "Oscar the Grouch"

This year's Quincy Recreation Department's Arts and Crafts display at City Hall Plaza saw a summer of exceptional projects with over 400 ballots cast with a high voter turnout from both the public and from the playgrounds in the city. Each of the 13 parks spent many hours creating their projects, which made for a fabulous final display in what was a close competition.

Fore River Playground, for a third straight year, placed first with its "Oscar the Grouch" display. The competition for second place was extremely close with only one vote separating second and third place; taking second this year was "Angry Birds 3D" by Forbes Hill Playground while third place went to "iPhone" by Perkins Playground.

Arts and Crafts Specialists Taylor Dennehey, Shelly Donovan and Ashley Kostka organized this year's display.

The Recreation leaders at Fore River were Malorie DeVoe, Kylie Kozlowski and Brian Williams. Participants were Ryan Boretti, Nicholas and Donovan Murray and Harrison Stengal who all spent hours creating the winning piece.

Forbes Hill was led by Recreation leaders Tyler Braun, Kara Reardon and Colin Ryan. Chrissy and John Norton, Maura Crump, CJ Santangelo, JJ Camara and Chris and Connor Conaghey helped with the second place project.

Perkins crafted its third place piece with the help of Donald and Fallon Hobin, Nicole Buckley and Josh Alves under the leadership of Recreation leaders Siobhan Carnell, Myles Carrigan and Hannah Donovan.

Director of Recreation Barry Welch offered a thank you to the local merchants who supported this event by donating prizes to the winning playgrounds. "Their generosity helps to make this event possible. Many thanks for the kind generosity of Balducci's, Time Out Pizza, Pizza Connection, Renaissance Café, Cake Spot, Ginger Betty's Bakery and Donut King. They helped make this year's event tremendously successful once again."

FORBES HILL, 2ND PLACE – "Angry Birds 3D"

PERKINS, 3RD PLACE – "iPhone"

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

America is the "Land of the Free"; "Home of the Brave"; America is "God's Country" with its bountiful gifts from the gardens, with its poetic scenery, with its radiant warmth in summer, and its artic temperatures in winter. God created the earth, and all of mankind reaps its benefits and its beauty.

Being Americans we reap more of the benefits than any other people on earth. Being Americans we have and give more than any other. Being Americans we have the freedom to go where we wish, say what we think and worship where we want...

There are many occasions during the year which occupy our time and demand a great deal of attention; one of those times is nearly upon us – ELECTION DAY – a day in which we can take a few precious moments from our daily routine and exercise one of our FREEDOMS – THE FREEDOM TO VOTE – Each and every American can and should take the few moments to PROTECT and ASSURE our freedoms will remain intact for our children and for their children.

REMEMBER POLITICAL OPINIONS ARE ONLY OPINIONS – UNLESS YOU VOTE.

Jennie And Romaio Magnarelli Celebrate 65th Wedding Anniversary

Humor And Balance Secrets Of A Long, Loving Marriage

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy residents Jennie and Romaio Magnarelli, who have been married for 65 years, know the secret to a long, happy life together.

"The secret is to make her think she is the boss," said Romaio jokingly. "You also can't fight, and sometimes you just don't talk, that's the secret – don't talk."

The real secret to their long and happy marriage Jennie believes is balance.

"He helps me with the cooking and some of the cleaning I can't do," said Jennie. "I think maybe I will keep him for a while."

The Magnarellis celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary on Sept. 8th with a surprise limo tour of Quincy where they stopped at Saint John's Church where they were married all those years ago, then headed to each of their childhood homes, and ended the day with a dinner at one of their favorite Italian restaurants.

"To be married 65 years this day in age is amazing," said Diane Semler, their daughter. "I really look up

Partnership Seen Bringing Premier Retailers Downtown

Officials Tout Street-Works, NRDC Venture As Major Boost To Center Revitalization

A first-of-its-kind joint venture between Street-Works Development and National Realty and Development Corp. (NRDC), a leading real estate owner/developer in the Northeast, will pave the way for some of America's best known retailers to locate in the city's new downtown shopping district, according to officials associated with the deal.

The partnership – announced Tuesday by the city, Street-Works and NRDC – is seen as a major boost to the historic $1.6 billion redevelopment of Quincy Center, said Mayor Tom Koch who called the venture "a tremendous win for Quincy."

Koch said: "We are fortunate to have such a powerful force in the retail industry investing their expertise, time and resources in developing two major blocks of our downtown. NRDC is committed to creating the type of shopping, dining and entertainment options our community would like to see, and I'm excited to be working with them on this major piece of our redevelopment project."

Education Programs Filling Empty Spaces In Quincy Center

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Babies, college students and professional employees will be filling in some blank spaces in and near Quincy Center by the year's end as three entities plan expansions to larger quarters in the next few months.

"We're hoping to be open before the holidays," said Joseph McCarthy, president of A Child's View Daycare Center, of his plans to relocate from Quincy Shore Drive to a larger stand-alone building at 622-632 Washington St.

A Child's View has been located on Quincy Shore Drive for decades and that site will stay open during the transition, according to McCarthy.

Not only will A Child's View be leasing new larger quarters soon, but so too will Quincy College's nursing program and Landmark Education, LLC, a for-profit firm which offers seminars for personal and professional development.

Both Quincy College and Landmark aim to complete their moves before January.

State Launches Probe Of National Grid's Storm Response

By LAURA GRIFFIN

A city council petition has triggered a statewide investigation into the London-based National Grid's response to power failures in the aftermath of Tropical Storm Irene, according to City Council President Kevin Coughlin who said Monday that the company's international ownership has raised questions as well.

Coughlin drafted the petition which charged that National Grid, despite sufficient warning, failed to prepare properly for the storm, failed to communicate and coordinate with local officials as required by law, and deployed "a grossly insufficient level of staffing and resources."

City councillors unanimously approved Coughlin's petition at their Sept. 6 meeting.

At that meeting, councillors and labor leaders not only blasted National Grid's response to the late August storm, but also described a multi-national corporation that stripped its local management team by a third while pocketing $2.6 billion in new revenue, thus raising its annual profit to over $6 billion.

"National Grid is a company in crisis," said Bobby Mahoney, Senior National Representative of the Utility Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO. Mahoney described his trip earlier this year to the company's London headquarters after the local dumped 1,200 non-union workers.

Mahoney told councillors that his warnings of chaos fell on deaf ears while those same executives spent company funds on such perks as $26,000 wine collections, condo renovations, and private school tuition.

"This is going to be a statewide investigation," said Coughlin when he announced Monday that the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) has begun laying the groundwork for the investigation in response to the Council's petition.

Some 500,000 National Grid customers in Massachusetts lost power on Aug. 28 and that included 8,000 in Quincy where over 2,000 customers suffered that power loss for five days after the storm toppled 50 trees and downed power lines.

The state's DPU will work in concert with the Attorney General's office in conducting the investigation, according to Coughlin who noted that this is the second investigation of National Grid in twelve months.

Currently, the Attorney General's office is finalizing a settlement with National Grid which was faulted for its response to a December storm. Coughlin said that agreement will likely be announced Oct. 1, but the penalty funds will compensate individual customers with just pennies.

Coughlin, also, said he has been asked whether security issues are involved in having National Grid owned by an international conglomerate based in England.

"It leads one to pause," said Coughlin of the National Grid's status as a multi-national provider of electricity and gas to United States consumers, while headquartered in London. National Grid USA provides three million customers with electrical power and three million customers with natural gas in the Northeastern states.

"Why is it that a foreign corporation holds ownership over a utility that is essential to our government? It's an interesting question," said Coughlin, noting that police and government are dependent on that power and people have raised the security issue with him.

As for the state's investigation, Coughlin said that begins with public hearings aimed at assessing problems with the company during the storm and its aftermath. Coughlin said he will lobby for one of the public hearings to be held in Quincy.

Once the hearings are concluded, DPU and the Attorney General staff will move into the discovery phase and could complete the preliminary work in three months, according to Coughlin.

If a hearing is held in Quincy, state investigators will likely get an earful as councillors offered a litany of complaints on the limited resources assigned to Quincy.

According to testimony at the council meeting, Quincy shared three work crews with Weymouth during the first days of Tropical Storm Irene and offered few updates for customers or officials during the emergency.

At the same time, speakers said residents not only lost power, but dodged dangerous downed wires

"They're the poster child of corporate irresponsibility," said Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci. "It's like they're asleep at the switch."

Even before the storm, Palmucci had sought an investigation into National Grid, citing such risky problems as more than a dozen tipsy double utility poles along Willard Street.

"National Grid was asleep at the switch," said Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro who described the response as "woefully substandard."

Ward 6 Councillor Margaret Laforest faulted National Grid's lack of communication even with city officials. Laforest said she got either recorded messages or reached ill-informed National Grid staff.

"I was willing to do the communicating for them," said Laforest who described her unsuccessful efforts to update her constituents through Twitter and Facebook.

The council's hearing on

Statement From National Grid Spokesperson Amy Zorich On Irene Response

The magnitude of Irene's impact was not felt by New England alone. Nearly six-million people across the eastern seaboard of the U.S. were without power.

At the height of the storm, we at National Grid, had nearly 500,000 customers without power in Massachusetts alone. Within 48 hours we restored two-thirds of those customers. By Thursday, we had restored service to 90 percent of our customers. On Saturday all of our customers had power, having brought in crews from as far away as Texas, Colorado and Canada to help.

Importantly, because of the breadth and depth of the damage Irene brought to the electric system in the Northeast, neighboring utilities from our region and along the East Coast were unable to supply crews to assist as they normally would because they too were fighting to make repairs in Irene's wake.

Irene was an extremely destructive storm that decimated our equipment over a wide geographic area making it the largest single restoration effort in almost half a century.

Our Northborough customer service center was staffed around the clock and fielded about 600,000 calls during and after the storm. In order to be able to give reasonable estimates of when power would be restored, we needed to assess the damage first, then repair our large, high-voltage lines that run cross-country through heavily wooded and remote areas. These lines are the backbone of the system and are what supplies power to substations and the rest of the power lines that serve our communities and neighborhoods. As soon as we had a good handle on what it would take to get power back, we were able to provide our customers and communities with estimated times for when their power would be restored.

The Sun Begins Its 44th Year

The Quincy Sun begins its 44th year with this issue as "Historic Quincy's Hometown Weekly Newspaper."

The first issue of The Sun hit newsstands Thursday, Sept. 26, 1968. Since then, we have focused exclusively on Quincy.

As our founder, Henry Bosworth, said many, many times: "We are proud to carry the name Quincy in our banner."

The Sun is fortunate to have the support of loyal readers over the years. They expect a newspaper devoted to their community and interests.

And we aim to deliver each and every week.

We have readers scattered throughout the 49 other states – former Quincy residents who want to keep up with what's going on "back home." As they say, "Once a Quincyite, always a Quincyite."

Through the years, The Quincy Sun has won a number of New England Press Association awards. It's also been designated a Blue Ribbon Newspaper for its "high standards of service to the community."

We are also grateful for being recognized by many local organizations for our service to the community.

As we start our 44th year, we also want to thank our advertisers for their continued support and encouragement during these past 43 years.

We also acknowledge and convey a special thanks to our dedicated team of newscarriers who bring the Sun to homes every week.

Again, to everyone who has helped support the Sun since that very first issue 44 years ago, thank you once again.

Sincerely,
Robert Bosworth

THE QUEEN OF GEMS

Opal, the birthstone for October, is sometimes referred to as the "Queen of Gems" largely owing to its display of changing colors and reputation for bringing wearers good luck and hope. One of the most appealing things about these fiery gemstones is that no two are exactly alike. The gemstones are composed of non-crystalline silicon gel that has hardened over millions of years into the form of small silica spheres. These are arranged in very unique and specific patterns, no two of which repeat exactly. Opals come in almost every imaginable color, and in some cases, a single gemstone will hold a whole rainbow of colors. For this reason alone, opals always seem to catch the eye.

Luminous opal adds a distinctive play of color to fine jewelry. We offer a variety of jewelry, including rings, pins, bracelets; earrings and necklaces. You will find all of these stunning pieces displayed in our showcases at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. Councillors Plan Meeting With Boston Scientific On Tax Break Agreement

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City councillors will review the details of tax break agreements between the city, Boston Scientific, and possibly other companies at hearings of the Downtown & Economic Development Committee and the Finance Committee.

Both Councillors John Keenan and Doug Gutro, Ward 5, sought the hearings after Boston Scientific announced plans to reduce its staff worldwide by 1,200 to 1,400 employees through attrition or layoffs. In addition, the company will have a new president, Michael Mahoney, by mid-October and Mahoney will be Boston Scientific CEO in November, 2012.

Such changes and layoffs could directly affect the city's tax-break agreements, according to Gutro who plans to invite Boston Scientific officials to the meeting.

Boston Scientific, an international company, has a major facility in North Quincy at Marina Bay and has benefited from a Tax Incentive Financing (TIF) agreement initiated in the early 2000's and a more recent TIF amendment in 2010.

The tax breaks under the amendment are contingent on the company's meeting certain requirements and maintaining a specific employment level of 375 at its North Quincy facility. The original agreement is not at risk but the more recent savings could change.

In return for the 2010 investment and employment pledge, Boston Scientific was expected to save roughly $350,000 a year in new taxes after the company invested $55 million in its North Quincy facility and its robotics program. Both the original agreement and the amendment will expire in 2018.

Companies benefiting from TIF's must file reports with the state by Sept. 30 each year and document specific details regarding their compliance with the TIF.

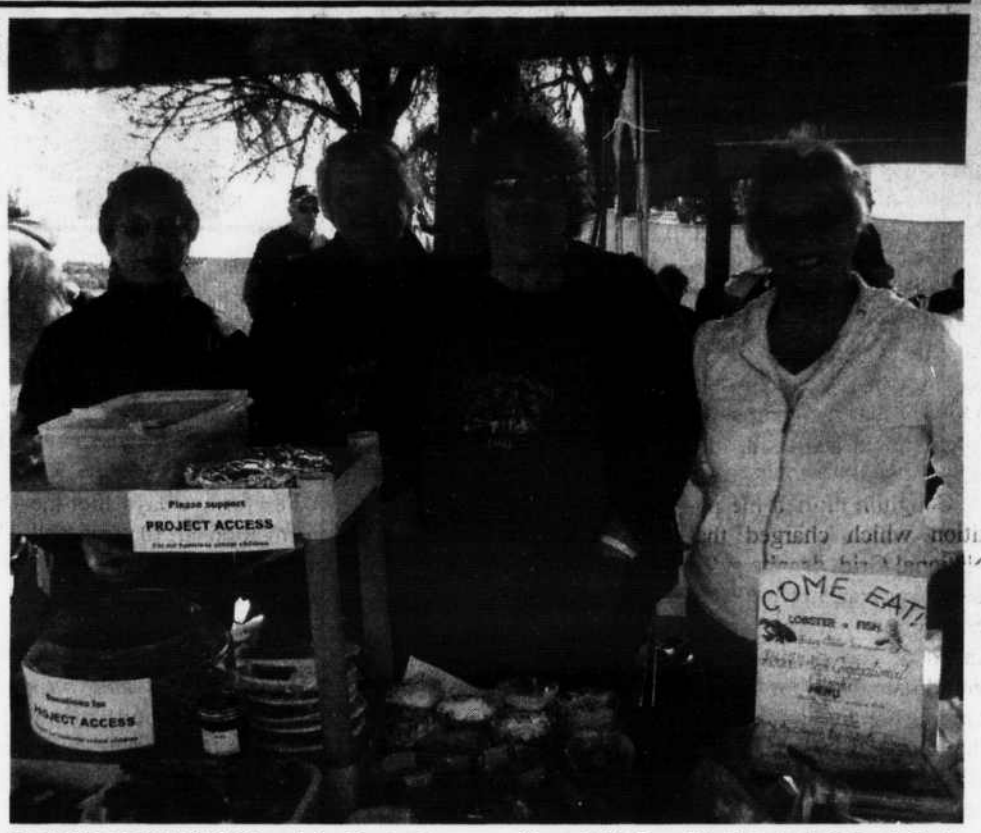

"We may wait for the (annual) filing Sept. 30 and after that invite them," Gutro said. He also said it is important to have something in writing and an update from the company's executive branch.

At the council's Sept. 6 meeting, Gutro said he raised the issue after one of his constituents said he'd been laid off from Boston Scientific's North Quincy facility and that 100 other workers were at risk.

Gutro said it's important to get periodic updates on the companies' compliance with TIF agreements particularly after the companies announce plans for massive layoffs or major changes.

Jim Fatseas, Mayor Thomas Koch's Chief of Staff, told councillors on Sept. 6 that Boston Scientific is not only meeting its

Francis X. And Jerry Lewis

The show went on without its marquee name.

But for those who have followed the Muscular Dystrophy Labor Day Telethon over the years, this year's event wasn't the same without Jerry Lewis.

The iconic 85-year-old comedian and entertainer stepped down as MDA's national chairman in August – three months after announcing he would not emcee this year's telethon – the 46th since its inception.

I tuned in several times during the holiday weekend, hoping Lewis would offer a final farewell to the event and cause that he did so much for since becoming the MDA national chairman in the 1950s.

But there would be no such final curtain or bow for him to take.

Many of his fans would have preferred that he had one last chance to say thanks and good bye to all those individuals who helped "Jerry's Kids" all these years.

Some of those folks live right here in Quincy. Volunteers who for some 10 years were associated with the Quincy-South Shore MDA Committee and The Quincy Sun-Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon Pledge Center. Together – and through the generosity of so many helping hands and great, big generous hearts – they raised more than $1 million for MDA.

From 1977 to 1986 – the Sun hosted a pledge center coinciding with the MDA National Telethon on Labor Day. And, apparently, some folks still think of the center every Labor Day. One resident called the office over the long weekend, wondering when our pledge center would be open.

During those telethon weekends, volunteers manned telephones at the pledge center or helped out at the front counter taking donations for the "fish bowl." There was media coverage including live updates carried by WJDA radio and Quincy Cablesystems (before there was Quincy Access TV). Some volunteers remained at the Sun from Sunday evening to Monday afternoon – a dedicated – and sleep deprived – group if ever there was one.

The weekend left many exhausted but everyone felt good about raising money for such an important cause.

A cause whose roots grew because of one lonely little boy.

The story dates back to 1957 when my father Henry was a reporter for The Boston Traveler.

In October of that year, the newspaper received a letter from Mrs. Doris Reynolds, a nurse at Lakeville Hospital in Massachusetts asking if they could help a little boy be happy on his birthday. The little boy – who was afflicted with muscular dystrophy – was lonely because no one came to visit him.

As Henry explained it years later in a story for an MDA trade publication, the boy was going to be nine years old on Oct. 8. Would the Traveler please help him receive a few cards, Doris pleaded.

Henry and photographer Frank Kelly were sent to the hospital. "We met a handsome lad with one of the biggest smiles in the world. But not quite big enough to hide the heartache of thinking he was unwanted," Henry wrote.

A doctor at the hospital filled them in on the boy's tragic background. His mother was dead, and his father imprisoned charged with her death.

Because of the circumstances, the boy's full name was not used. He was instead referred to as "Francis X." (Francis was his real first name) and "Little Boy Blue."

When he was asked what he wanted for his birthday, he replied, "four or six funny cards."

Kelly took a photo of Francis seated in a wheelchair - back to the camera – looking out the window for the visitors who never came.

The story and photo appeared on Page 1 of the Traveler Oct. 3 – five days before his birthday. The response was overwhelming.

By the weekend, the Middleboro Post Office was snowed under with letters and cards. Thirty extra people had to be hired to keep up with the "avalanche."

The Traveler story had been picked up by the Associated Press and United Press (the "old fashioned way" news was transmitted to other sources in those days long before the Internet) and carried around the nation. Ham radio operators read it to others around the world.

That was just the tip of the iceberg.

Before it was over, there were 500,000 pieces of mail,

$12,000 in coins and dollar bills and three rooms full of toys and other presents.

The toys were shared with other youngsters at a number of hospitals. The money was set up in a trust fund for Francis.

"But the most touching part of this story happened the night of Francis' ninth birthday," Henry wrote. "Jerry Lewis, who even then was national chairman for MDA, had read the story and quickly swung into action.

"He wanted to give Francis something special. And, he did."

Lewis asked the head of NBC for a closed TV circuit from Burbank, CA, to the little town of Lakeville – some 3,000 miles away. NBC approved. According to the network, it cost some $350,000 and the services of some 9,000 persons – including technicians and engineers – to complete the hookup.

By telecast time, the audience had grown, Henry recalled. Joining Francis in front of TV receivers in the hospital's recreation hall were other youngsters in wheelchairs, beds and on crutches. Also huddled in the room were nurses, doctors, parents and newsmen, too.

Then, a voice announced:

"This program is an NBC closed circuit broadcast for Francis in Lakeville Sanatorium – direct from Hollywood – a special command performance!"

Henry reported that Francis "smiled, giggled and slapped the side of wheelchair as Jerry Lewis mugged, clowned, sang and spoke directly to him."

Over the course of the 75-minute show, performers including Eddie Cantor, Dinah Shore, Hugh O'Brien, Eddie Fisher, George Gobel, Pinky Lee, The Mouseketeers, Mary Costa and others appeared on camera. Each with a special personal message for Francis – and all doing their thing free to make a little boy happy.

The adults in the audience managed to hold back the tears when Lewis and the Skylarks sang a parody to "No Business Like Show Business" entitled "There's No Francis Like Our Francis."

But then the tears showed up when Dinah Shore serenaded Francis with "You Made Me Love You," and he happily waved back.

Nine years later, in November of 1966 a few weeks after his 18th birthday, Francis died. In that time, the mail never really stopped. Francis was remembered with cards every birthday and Christmas.

The program for Francis became a forerunner for the MDA telethon.

For those who were present, it was a night to remember.

"Jerry was at his best," Henry wrote. "It was an Emmy performance – from the heart."

THIS IS A 1918 postcard view of Sea Street looking south from near the end of Houghs Neck. On the right was the Boston Lunch restaurant at 1250 Sea Street on the corner of Crosby Street. Next to it was Howard Vinton's grocery store and then the large building was Associates Hall on the corner of Winthrop Street. On the left Oregon Terrace is just beyond the tree. The tram was probably a livery service; notice the driver is wearing a necktie. Although Vinton's Grocery lasted into the 1940s, all the other buildings shown here were gone in the 1930s. $250 Tax Hike Seen For Homeowners

By FRANK McCAULEY

Unless the present law on 100 percent property valuation is changed the average Quincy homeowner will face a minimum $250 tax bill hike according to Council President-Rep. Arthur H. Tobin.

Assessments on commercial and industrial properties were lowered and those on most homes increased as a result of the Quincy revaluation carried out by a professional firm under the present law, he said.

This Week
1970
41 Years Ago

A proposed amendment to the Massachusetts Constitution, which will appear on the Nov. 3 state election ballot, would ease the impact on the homeowner, Tobin said.

The amendment would allow communities to value properties in three different categories: Industrial, Commercial and Residential.

The proposed amendment was co-sponsored by Mayor-Senator James R. McIntyre, Reps. Tobin, Joseph A Brett and Walter J. Hannon.

Quincy for the past three years has been able to stall court ordered implementation of 100 percent valuation.

(Editor's Note: While Quincy voters approved the "Classification Amendment," narrowly – 16,528 yes to 14,754 no – the question was overwhelmingly defeated statewide – 37% in favor, 63% opposed. The classification amendment would appear once again on the November 1978 ballot, this time being approved statewide. Quincy voters approved the question by a vote of 29,058 yes and 6,338 no. This amendment has saved Quincy residential taxpayers millions of dollars since 1984.)

GIVE VOC-TECH OWN IDENTITY, DIPLOMA, URGES McCORMICK

School Committee Vice-Chairman James F. McCormick, Sr., proposes that Quincy-Vocational Technical School be given its own identity and accredited graduation diploma.

He recommends that it be made a separate four-year high school because "it is large enough and good enough."

He said the school has a reputation for being one of the "best" in the United States and that should not be considered "second-rate" by anyone.

Voc-Tech students now graduate with Quincy High School classes and the school is often thought of a "branch" of Quincy High School.

"It is now time that the school definitely (be) separated from the other schools and with its own accredited high school diploma."

Quincy Center: From Gridlock To Ghost Town

Anyone who lives in Quincy knows that from 6 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. and from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. the city is a state of gridlock.

So we are going to add another 16,000 cars a day to the streets of Quincy. Welcome to the new Toyko – the land of face masks.

They claim they are going to widen and change the configuration of some intersections in the new downtown. That's going to be like giving a glass of water to a drowning man.

The only thing the new Quincy will do is turn the old Quincy into a ghost town.

Let's all take a deep breath and ask ourselves 'do we really need a new Quincy and the world's largest traffic jams every day?"

And the Cliveden Street bridge is the biggest joke of all.

Sept. 11, 2001 Grief Is Today's Enduring Hope

On Sunday, Sept. 11, I came back to Quincy to the corner of Glover Avenue and Hancock Street. Ten years ago, I stood by the Sacred Heart School as a campaign supporter of city council at-large candidate Brian McNamee.

It was a nice September morning like Sunday, Sept. 11 this year. Then, we started getting the news: first - one plane crashing into one of the towers of NY's World Trade Center and then again, we found out a second place had hit the other tower. There were some outside the polling site who thought the elections should be postponed due to this terrorist attack.

I can remember saying at that time that if we postpone the elections, it meant the terrorists had won the day. The elections went on.

Eventually, I made my way down to Wollaston Center and went to the Blockbuster store to view what I had been hearing on the radio. Those endless images of the two towers crumbling into dust will forever live in my memory.

Back 10 years ago, I saw America coming together as never before in my life time. I can remember the wall of folks with candles and American flags standing from one end of Wollaston Beach to the other in unity. America survived those attacks but we have changed. We no longer see ourselves as invincible as we thought we were.

This year, on Sept. 11, while standing at that spot I stood on 10 years ago, I noticed how shady it was now but not then. I looked up at this beautiful shade tree and I didn't recognize it. Was it there 10 years ago? The answer was yes but it was a baby tree then.

In the last 10 years since 9/11, the little tree had grown much and continues to grow. Life didn't end on 9/11 – not for us or that little tree. Life will never be the same after that day of violence but life continues. We continue. America wasn't paralyzed. We remember that day, we pray for all the victims and we hope never to experience such a day again.

We all live with the wounds of that day but that old grief has turned into enduring hope and resolve. Our nation became stronger in the wake of 9/11.

I needed to go back to Quincy to stand where I once stood to remind me who I am and how far I have gone since Tuesday, Sept. 11, 2001.

Over 2,000 Turn Out For Houghs Neck Chowdafest

John Crosta, Wood Road Deli Top Competition

By SCOTT JACKSON

Saturday meant one thing in Houghs Neck: Chowda. The Houghs Neck Community Council hosted its seventh annual Chowdafest on a beautiful autumn day.

Up to 2,200 people attended the event at the Houghs Neck Maritime Center, according to council President Jim McCarthy. Chowdafest's biggest draw was a competition between eight individuals and more than a dozen restaurants to see whose chowder would reign supreme.

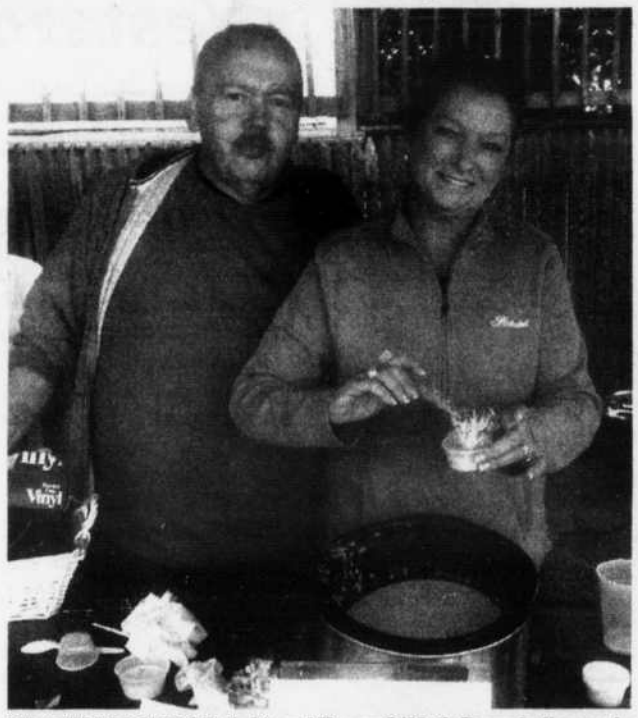

John Crosta won the individual competition. Crosta, who finished second in last year's balloting, is a Houghs Neck resident and a Quincy firefighter.

After winning, Crosta thanked his late father for inspiring his recipe. "I went to school to cook, but the roots of it started with him," he said. "He was a cook in the army and then became a firefighter and did a lot of cooking in the station."

Finishing second in the competition was the Reverend John Castricum, the Pastor at Houghs Neck Congregational Church. Before the winners were revealed, he earned high praise from another competitor. Brian Laroche, past president of the Houghs Neck Community Council, called him "the master," and predicted a repeat for the Reverend.

The event's restaurant contest was won by the Wood Road Deli of Braintree. The victory was their fourth in a row, and they earned high marks from fellow restaurateurs. Tracy O'Neil-Campbell, owner of Peggy O'Neil's Pub in Dorchester said "I like the Wood Road Deli's chowder, I grew up on it."

O'Neil-Campbell ended up taking third in the competition. Her family has owned the pub for 50 years, and Saturday was a big deal for the family. "We all live here, I have seven brothers and sisters, all my cousins are down here. All my nieces and nephews are running around," she said.

Quincy's Burke's Seafood finished runner-up with their haddock chowder. Burke's wasn't the only non-clam entry, as there were also potato chowders entered into the competition.

One thing that was noticeably absent was Manhattan-style clam chowder. The Rev. Castricum says he "grew up on that [variety]." But when asked if he'd consider entering into next year's Chowdafest, he simply replied "no way, it's clearly forbidden around this area."

Chowdafest is more than a place to try out different chowders. According to McCarthy, its "goal is to raise money to pay for community events for children, adults, and seniors."

The Houghs Neck Community Council wasn't the only organization raising money Saturday. Houghs Neck Congregational Church hosted a bake sale, which benefitted Project Access, a non-profit that supports homeless children in Quincy Public Schools. And Boy Scout Troop Six sold burgers, hot dogs, and soda to raise money for themselves.

"Death by Bill," a local band of teenagers, provided live music. Their set consisted mostly of covers with a few originals sprinkled in. The Quincy and Weymouth Police Departments provided free boat rides on their police vessels.

The event also recognized a new Mayor of Houghs Neck. Father William English of the Holy Trinity Parish won the honorary award for his service to the community. He was unable to attend the ceremony, and Joanne Bythrow accepted it on his behalf.

For Service To Church And Community

Koch To Receive Prestigious St. Edmund's Medal Of Honor

Mayor Thomas P. Koch will receive the St. Edmund's Medal for Service to the Church and Community Oct. 7, announce The St. Edmund's Retreat Board of Trustees and Father Thomas F.X. Hoar SSE, Ph.D., president.

Other distinguished recipients include Sister Georgette Lehmuth, OSF, President and CEO of the National Catholic Development Conference in New York; Brother Sean Sammon, FMS, former Superior General of the Marist Brothers; and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nardone, Westerly, RI.

"Mayor Koch is a very deserving recipient of the St. Edmund's Medal of Honor," said Father Tom Hoar. "He is a warm, compassionate and charitable individual serving both community and church.

"One of seven children, he learned very early on from his parents the responsibility they had to people in need. The three most important things to Mayor Koch are his family, his faith and his love of Quincy.

"Mayor Koch began a men's prayer group at Sacred Heart Church that he says keeps him grounded spiritually," Father Tom said.

Koch began his 20-year career in public service and Quincy government when he was appointed director of the Quincy Council on Aging by then Mayor Francis X. McCauley.

TOM KOCH

Koch, a graduate of North Quincy High School, was elected mayor in 2007.

Political and civic involvement runs in the family. Many still associate the Koch name with the Koch Club, a charitable and recreation group that Mayor Koch's father began.

Prior to becoming Mayor, Koch worked as the city's parks commissioner, in a building named for his dad, Richard Koch, Sr. In that capacity, Koch led a major beautification effort that continues today. He co-founded Quincy Arts Fest with the leaders of the Quincy Art Association, and the event is now one of the biggest art shows in the Boston area.

Mayor Koch took his second oath of office in January 2009. Besides serving as the city's chief executive, Koch is actively involved in a number of groups and organizations around Quincy, including Sacred Heart Church, the Quincy City Club, and the Quincy Partnership.

Mayor Koch married his high school sweetheart, Christine Kennan and they have three children: Cornelius Richard, 12 and twins Thomas Jr. and Abigail, 10. The family lives just two doors down from the mayor's childhood home on Newbury Avenue in North Quincy.

The eighth annual St. Edmund's Medal of Honor Dinner and Celebration will take place Friday, Oct. 7 at the Mystic Marriott in Groton, CT beginning with a 6:30 p.m. reception followed by a 7:30 p.m. dinner with presentation of the medals. Black tie is preferred.

A 5 p.m. votive Mass in honor of the recipients will be held at Our Lady of the Assumption Chapel at Enders Island, Mystic, CT. The Most Reverend Michael R. Cote, D.D., Bishop of Norwich will be Principal Celebrant for the Mass.

The St. Edmund's Medal of Honor for Service to the Church and Community has been established by St. Edmund's Retreat to recognize those individuals who exhibit the values and spirit of St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury. Past recipients have included former Boston Mayor and Ambassador to Rome Raymond Flynn and Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia.

Tickets are $175 per person or $325 per couple; table sponsorships and booklet greetings are also available. For information and reservations, contact Karen Maloney, Events Coordinator (860) 536-0565, ext. 115.

Extra Product From Backyard Gardens Sought To Help Needy Families

Harvest Helpers Seeks Garden Surplus

"What am I going to do with all of these tomatoes and cucumbers?"

Many backyard gardeners ask themselves this question every September.

Some gardeners freeze them. Others offer a few to neighbors. Now there is another option – donate them to families in need through Harvest Helpers.

Harvest Helpers, a partnership between Interfaith Social Services and Keohane Funeral Home is the first program of its kind in Massachusetts. In the spring, the program offered free plants to those who volunteered to grow them for the Interfaith Social Services food pantry. Now, as the vegetables they have grown are delivered to families served by the food pantry, Harvest Helpers is asking the wider community for help in providing fresh fruits and vegetables to its clients.

"Last year over 17,000 hungry people came to our food pantry looking for assistance," said Interfaith's Executive Director, Rick Doane. "We distributed over 400,000 pounds of food to impoverished families throughout the South Shore and we rely on support from the community to meet their needs.

"Keohane Funeral Home, our Harvest Helpers partner generously donated plants for volunteers to grow a good supply of fresh produce for our clients. As the growing season winds down, we hope that other gardeners will choose to participate in Harvest Helpers by donating some of their garden surplus to their needy neighbors."

John Keohane, co-president of Keohane Funeral Home, said: "We know from the gardens behind our funeral home and next to Interfaith Social Services that they can produce a great deal of food – sometimes more than is needed.

"We hope that our neighbors with extra fruits and vegetables will put them to good use by donating them to the food pantry."

Doane said some people have already come by with donations from their gardens.

"They know that it may otherwise go to waste and feel that giving it to the food pantry is helping to give back to the community," Doane added.

"We have already had families come by the funeral home with extra produce and we hope as more people learn about Harvest Helpers they too will consider donating from their garden," said funeral home Co-President Dennis Keohane.

Donations will be accepted at Interfaith Social Services, 105 Adams St., Quincy and Keohane Funeral Home 785 Hancock St. in Quincy from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

For more information or to schedule a different time for a donation, contact Interfaith Social Services at 617-773-6203, or Keohane Funeral Home 617-773-3551.

Massachusetts Archaelogy Month At The Inclined Plane Railway

The Quincy Quarry and Granite Workers Museum will participate in the Massachusetts Historical Commission's "Step Back in Time with Massachusetts Archaeology Month 2011."

The quarry museum will conduct a tour of the Inclined Plane Railway site, a portion of the granite railway system which was the first commercial railroad in the U.S.

There will also be pictures including a newly acquired rendering by artist Ruth Harderski of the Inclined Plane in operation and interpretive information on many aspects of the railway.

The tour will take place Saturday, Oct. 1 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Mullin Avenue in West Quincy (dead end street). Rain date is Oct. 15.

The Inclined Plane was built by Gridley Bryant in 1828 to transport granite blocks from the quarry at Pine Hill ledge to a turntable at the base. At the turntable, the blocks would be transferred to the Granite Railway for transport to the Neponset River at Gulliver's Creek. There the blocks were loaded onto sailing vessels for transport to Charlestown via Dorchester Bay, where they were unloaded to build the Bunker Hill Monument.

HEAVY LIFTING ADVICE

Each year, chiropractors issue warnings about shoveling (which apply to shoveling dirt, gravel, snow, etc.) that are intended to prevent injury. While most people are aware that shoveling is a dangerous activity that causes an average of 11,500 emergency room visits annually, they may not realize that heart problems only account for about 7 percent of shoveling-related cases (and more than half of hospitalizations). The rest primarily involve soft tissue damage, cuts, and broken bones. The most frequently injured area of the body is the lower back (one-third), and the most common cause of injury is musculoskeletal exertion. In addition, it may surprise you to learn that children under 19 experience more than 1,750 shoveling-related injuries annually. Age provides no immunity from injury.

Do you or your children participate in the activity of shoveling? At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we can help you evaluate your situation and decide together what procedure is right for you. You can trust the expertise we provide at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. Now is the time to call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We offer computerized spinal scans. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Always keep your back straight while lifting, and lift primarily with your legs, not your back.

National Grid's Storm Response Probed

Tropical Storm Irene not only offered the public a report on National Grid, but testimony from city officials on the city's preparations which began four days before Irene reached the city's shores.

By that time, it had weakened with 40 mph winds. Despite the lower intensity, there was significant damage.

At the council hearing, Fire Chief Joseph Barron and Public Works Commissioner Daniel Raymondi described daily planning sessions that began Aug. 24 and were attended by Mayor Thomas Koch, police, fire, traffic, school park and public works officials.

As a result, the city targeted the special needs of Houghs Neck and Squantum, had three new pumps, distributed sandbags, attended to seawalls, prepared a shelter at Quincy High School, made arrangements with the T for emergency transport and with Fallon Ambulance for extra calls and called in emergency crews and, in the storms aftermath, provided extra dumpsters for spoiled food and ruined items.

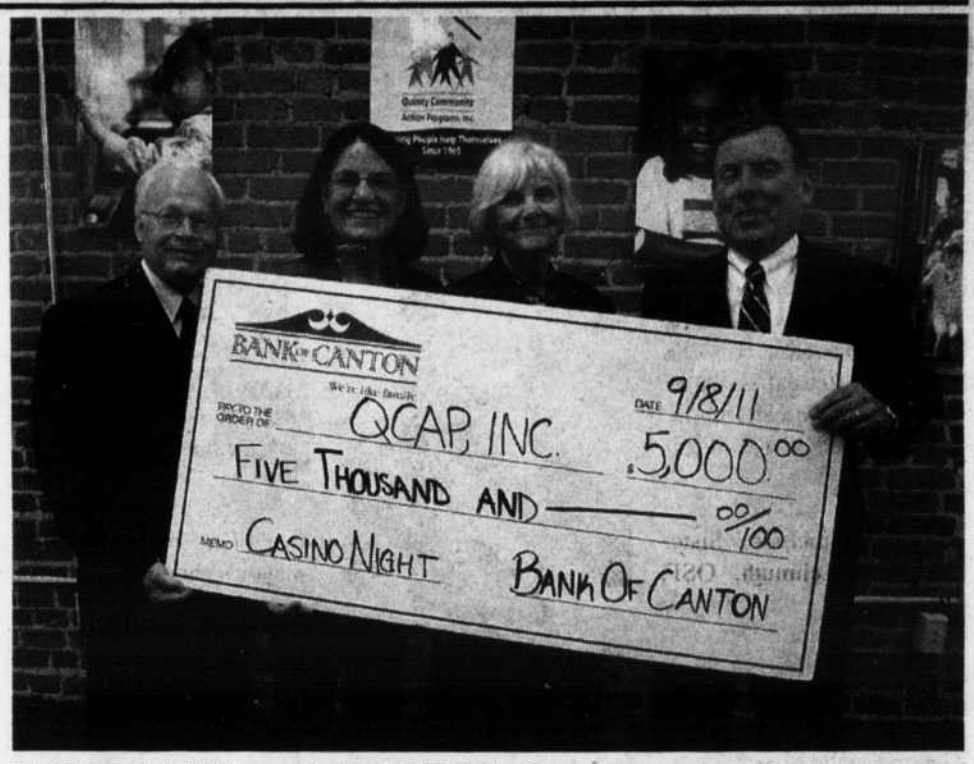

In addition, generators were checked at police and fire stations.

"These folks worked tirelessly for 12 days straight," Raymondi said of DPW crews.

Raymondi described the city's three-pronged approach to emergencies with preparation first, then performance and a post-storm evaluation.

By the week's end after Irene, the police had taken over 200 calls, the park department 500 and similar call numbers went to City Hall and councillors. A total of 8,120 reported power outages on Tuesday, Aug. 23.

By Wednesday, six National Grid crews were on duty in Quincy and that number was reduced to 2,947 and to 2,197 by Thursday.

BANK OF CANTON recently donated $5,000 to Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP). The contribution helps sponsor the "Raising the Stakes for QCAP" casino night fundraiser and silent auction Thursday, Oct. 6 at 6 p.m. at Granite Links Golf Club in Quincy. Proceeds from the fundraiser will benefit QCAP programs, which help nearly 20,000 children, adults, and seniors each year to get back on their feet and lead self-sufficient lives. From left are: Bob Coneys, QCAP director of Administration and Finance; Beth Ann Strollo, QCAP executive director; Judy Farmer, Bank of Canton Regional Lending manager; and Bank of Canton President and CEO Stephen P. Costello. Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. is a private non-profit organization in the Greater Quincy area dedicated to reducing poverty and helping low-income people achieve self-sufficiency.

City of Quincy for making us a part of this incredible opportunity," said Robert Baker, chairman and CEO of National Realty and Development Corp. "Our belief in the importance of vibrant downtowns has made us eager to enter the urban market in an authentic and meaningful way. It is very clear that Quincy and Street-Works have given birth to the new paradigm of urban redevelopment, and we have every faith that together we will create a very successful new Quincy Center."

NRDC will joint venture with Street-Works in the development and leasing of approximately 400,000 square feet of anchor retail space at Market Center. With nearly 50 years of experience in retail development, ownership and management, and a portfolio of over 22 million square feet throughout the Northeast, the NRDC team has top-level access to the country's best-known retailers, including Kohl's, TJX Companies, Toys 'R Us, Sears and Target.

"This partnership aligns perfectly with our overall vision for Quincy—to lay the groundwork, bring the very best partners on board, and get everyone working towards making a vibrant, dynamic and revitalized downtown real and sustainable," stated Richard Heapes, Co-Founder and Partner of Street-Works LLC. "When Street-Works first conceived the master developer strategy for the new Quincy Center as articulated in the Land Disposition Agreement, we immediately thought of NRDC as partners for this venture. This is a strategic and thoughtful element of our master developer approach to executing a successful urban project in Quincy."

"Street-Works and NRDC share a hands-on approach to conceiving and executing successful development opportunities. Our working relationship with NRDC is more than 20 years old and is built on mutual trust, respect, effective performance, and a belief in paying attention to all of the details. This joint venture is not just a commitment between two businesses, it is also a personal commitment between friends to insure that retail in the new Quincy Center is a success," said Ken Narva, co-founder and managing partner of Street-Works.

"NRDC is committed to development in the urban space and we are very excited and focused on making the new Quincy Center a success," said John Orrico, president of NRDC. "Our team will be working very closely with Quincy and Street-Works to bring real results to this project—both on the ground in Quincy and by drawing from our national network of retailers."

"NRDC has been very successful in its expansion over the past 50 years and brings a very strong balance sheet to the table," said Jeffrey Levien, senior director of Development for Street-Works. "We are thrilled to have them on board, as they are known as savvy owners that pick their opportunities carefully."

NRDC has extensive experience in guiding projects from inception to leasing and tenant occupancy under the guidance of John Orrico. The company's six divisions—site acquisition, leasing/marketing, construction, legal, property operations and accounting—as well as its 95 full time managers and staff, will work on behalf of the new Quincy Center project as part of the joint venture. Also as part of the joint venture arrangement, NRDC will provide pre-development capital at a critical phase.

New Quincy Center is a $1.6 billion transit-oriented, master planned, mixed-use development in Downtown Quincy that will include approximately 700,000 square feet of retail space, 1 million square feet of office space, 2 hotels, 1,200 residential units and over 5,000 new structured parking spaces.

Officials said the redevelopment has gained momentum since the signing of the Land Disposition Agreement in December of 2010 with the recent announcement of its retail brokers, CBRE-GRA, and a visit from Governor Patrick supporting the application for I-Cubed state funding for the project.

As part of a new bold public-private partnership, Street-Works will upgrade the city's infrastructure using private money, with Quincy's investment of public funds occurring only after the redevelopment produces new tax revenues. This financial agreement offers an unprecedented model for how public and private interests can work together to create something real and sustainable in today's economic times, officials said.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

COLLAR BID

One of the wonders of the mouth is how the gums wrap tightly around the teeth much like a turtleneck collar hugs the neck. At the edge of the gumline, the gum tissue fold back underneath itself, creating a snug, 1- to 3-millimeter furrow around each tooth (the "gingival sulcus"). To measure the health of gums, the hygienist or dentist gauges the depth of the gingival sulcus at several points around each tooth by inserting a thin measuring rod (periodontal probe). A depth of over 3 millimeters may indicate that a pocket is forming between the tooth and gum, which is evidence of gum disease. Treatment prevents mild gum disease (gingivitis) from progressing to severe gum disease (periodontitis).

You don't have to lose teeth to periodontal disease. Brush, clean between your teeth, eat a balanced diet, and schedule regular dental visits for a lifetime of healthy smiles. Always feel free to discuss your dental concerns with us. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where we practice compassionate dentistry. You can trust the health of your teeth to our extensive training and experience. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Plaque that is allowed to build up in the gingival pocket may lead to possible infection and damage that reaches even further down the tooth, eventually compromising the tissues that hold it in place.

Volleyball Teams Dig Deep To Fight Breast Cancer

By EMILY TAFT

The girl's volleyball team at North Quincy High School is teaming up with the Quincy High team along with the Side-Out Foundation's Dig Pink Initiative to raise money for breast cancer.

The two teams, although rivals on the court, are working together to spread the word and raise $5,000 for a cause that has hit home in many ways with every player.

"We planned on the team doing some kind of community service this year," said North Quincy varsity coach Kerry Ginty. "The girls came up with this great idea to raise money for breast cancer."

They came to an agreement to raise the $5,000 because they believe it is such a great game, and great match between the two Quincy public high schools that they should be able to meet their goal.

"It is going to be a great day for volleyball, it should be a great match," said Ginty. "We are really excited for the event and hope a lot of people show up."

The fundraiser is something that the teams have been discussing for a while now and they say it is great to finally put the plan into action.

"We wanted to get more involved in the community," said senior Kara Reardon. "I stumbled across the Side-Out Foundation while online one day, and thought it would be a great idea."

The Dig Pink Initiative is part of the Side-Out Foundation, a national non-profit organization that unites volleyball players and coaches to work towards a common goal of furthering breast cancer awareness.

The term side-out on the volleyball court means the team without possession of the ball wants to win the ball back and also get the point.

"The foundation's name underscores the purpose of the organization," said senior captain Olivia Umoren. "We are all excited to be participating in this organization, we know it was time we made a change in the community, especially since we all know someone who has been affected by breast cancer."

According to Ginty they have received a large amount of item donations but have yet to receive any money donations and hope to start working on that soon before the actual game occurs. The items that include baskets full of a variety of items, and gift cards will be raffled off at the game on Oct. 6th.

The North Quincy High School varsity and junior varsity volleyball teams will both be participating in helping to raise money in anyway they can think of.

Before the game on Oct. 6th the two teams have gone door to door in little groups asking for any amount people are willing to donate. They have also have set up a Facebook page, created flyers and spoken to any media outlet available in hopes to raise their goal of the $5,000.

"We hope to have the stands full at both the junior varsity and varsity game," said Ginty. "We plan on asking people to donate $5 or more before they enter the gym, starting at 4 p.m for the jayvee game."

The team plans on decorating the gym before the match with large poster boards filled with key words about the game and the foundation above the bleachers, streamers, balloons, rally towels, and both Quincy and North Quincy plan on wearing pink jerseys for the game.

Donations can also be made on the website at www.side-out.org/application/ous/fundraising_page/45451. On the site dedications can be made towards each donation and Ginty hopes to display some if not all of those dedications the day of the game.

"Everyone knows someone who has had breast cancer," said senior Elizabeth Forde. "This is a great cause, my grandmother had breast cancer that she fought through, and I think it will be an event that would be great for families that have had family members and friends fight this disease."

Multicultural Health Care Business Opens At 1 Billings Rd.

By EMILY TAFT

The new Multicultural Home Care business – a full service home care business – recently opened its doors at 1 Billings Rd. in North Quincy.

"What many don't know is that home health care is covered under most insurance companies," said Director of Business Development and Asian Services Lola Tom. "We are a full service home care business, and our target is to service the different cultures, and make sure our staff is trained in that way as well."

Since its founding in 1995, Multicultural Home Care has over 700 employees and provides a number of different services such as skilled nursing care, certified home health aides, homemakers and companions, and assistance with nursing home discharge and placement, covering eight different languages and ethnicities.

"Our goal is to reach out to the diverse South Shore community to let them know that Multicultural Home Care is here to provide quality home care services in their language and culture," said Tom. "We would also like to continue to provide quality home care services to those who are homebound, partner with organizations to provide the community with services they need to age in place, and educate the community on their home care options."

Multicultural Home Care is committed to providing and coordinating excellent home health care services to patients regardless of the complexity of their medical needs.

"We recognize the growing Asian population in Quincy and are prepared with a skilled team of nurses, therapists and home care aides committed to providing the best care that folks need in their homes," said Chief Executive Officer Carolyn McCarthy. "We are opening this office with the commitment to provide quality home care to those who are homebound and need our care in the South Shore."

Tom, a woman of Chinese descent, has spent her life learning about the Asian community. She has lived in Quincy since 1985 with her father who is originally from Toishan, China and her mother who is originally from Hong Kong. Her parents immigrated to Boston in 1970.

"After I took a trip to Hong Kong when I was 16, I had a wake-up call and realized I wanted to work within the Asian community," said Tom. "I knew I wanted to help change and grow the Chinese community."

Owner Glenn Bacheller bought the company in 2004 after working and volunteering in the senior community for years.

"There is a large Chinese and Asian community here in Quincy," said Bacheller. "I think we are a perfect fit, and we can help fill the needs of the Quincy community."

Multicultural Home Care has three other office locations, one in Lawrence, one in Brighton, and their main office in Lynn.

They decided to open the Quincy office to help better serve the cultural population in the South Shore according to Tom.

"We will be servicing a large cultural population here in Quincy," said Tom. "We are very excited to be in Quincy. We have joined the Chamber of Commerce, and we are looking to get involved in the community."

The ribbon cutting ceremony took place on Sept. 12 and allowed those in attendance to learn about the Multicultural Home Care building and to catch up with old friends and neighbors according to Tom.

"We had over 150 people attend the open house," said Tom. "We are very happy and grateful for the showing of supporters. We are looking forward to being a good neighbor and partner to Quincy."

City Clerk Joseph Shea reported no problems with the city's new opti-scan voting machines that made their debut Tuesday.

"Everything worked terrific. We had no problems with the new machines," he said.

Ballots from the polling precincts were returned for tabulation at new City Hall Annex at 1259 Hancock St. adjacent to the James R. McIntyre Government Center (Old City Hall).

The preliminary election cost about $40,000 including the printing of ballots, staffing election workers and providing police details at the polls.

With Tuesday's preliminary in the books, the focus now shifts to the Nov. 8 election. In seven weeks, voters will head to the polls to decide contested races for mayor, councillor at-large, councillor in Wards 2, 3, 5 and 6 and for three seats on the School Committee.

Here is the list of candidates who will appear on the ballot:

Mayor – incumbent Tom Koch, 249 Newbury Ave., is being challenged by Anne Mahoney, 12 Ferriter St., a member of the School Committee.

Councillor at-Large:

There are four candidates on the ballot. They are incumbents Joseph Finn, 15 Williams St. and Michael McFarland, 140 Summit Ave.; Douglas Gutro, 230 Marlboro St., and John Rodophele, Sr., 62 Grenwold Rd. Gutro is vacating his Ward 5 council seat to run for councillor at-large.

commitments, but also surpassing the requirements with over 437 employees.

All companies benefiting from TIF's must file electronic reports so that state and local officials can access them, according to Fatseas who quoted the 2010 report.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee objected to the review and suggested that raising the issue regarding Boston Scientific was not necessary.

"It's clear to me that it's an expansion site," McNamee said.

Other councillors disagreed, citing the tax breaks offered through TIF's and the council's obligation to taxpayers to oversee such agreements.

According to Nick Verenis, the city's Economic Development Planner, City Council has approved TIF agreements in place with the following companies: P.V. Sullivan; Cashman Co. for properties leased to BlueFin and New England Aquarium and the owners of 100 Hancock St.

Fundraiser To Benefit School-Age Children Suffering A Traumatic Setback

Quincy For Quincy Families Raises More Than $12,000

Quincy for Quincy Families, Inc. recently held its second annual fundraiser at Marina Bay's Oyster Bar.

The event featured a BBQ buffet by Marina Bay Marketplace, music from a DJ, raffle items, and silent auction.

Quincy for Quincy Families, Inc. is a 501(c) 3 charity that began offering assistance in 2010 to Quincy families with school-age children that are suffering a traumatic setback. Whether due to illness, injury, or accident, Q4Q seeks to provide short term financial assistance to help families get back on their feet.

Currently, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts offers many assistance programs for families and individuals who have lost their jobs, are at risk for homelessness, or qualify for transitional assistance (otherwise known as welfare benefits). There is currently no system or program in place to help families that are struggling through a short-term financial displacement due to a family tragedy, serious injury, or long term illness. Q4Q seeks to bridge that gap.

This year's event raised over $12,000 and will benefit Quincy families in need that require assistance. The Davis family is among the families who will benefit from this charity. Liam Davis is an eight year-old boy who suffers from Myotubular Myopathya, a severe muscular disorder that leaves him paralyzed, speechless and confined to a wheelchair.

Families that are seeking aid must live full time in Quincy, have school-aged children, and have less than $49,580 in household adjusted gross income verified by the previous tax year's IRS Form 1040.

Families that fit this criteria and are in need of assistance are encouraged to apply by calling Tom Murdock, founder, chairman and CEO at 857-251-2506

Quincy for Quincy Families is a true community initiative that provides short term financial assistance during a family crisis to Quincy families with school-age children.

The organization relies on both volunteer and financial support from the entire community. From business and political leaders to everyday Quincy citizens, Q4Q harnesses the talents of a single community to help those around us in need.

Quincy Community United Methodist Church

Quincy Community United Methodist Church will join all United Methodist Churches worldwide in celebration of World Communion Sunday Oct. 2.

World Communion Sunday is observed on the first Sunday of October. The day was first observed by Presbyterians in 1936; four years later, the Federal Council of Churches adopted it and, shortly thereafter, Methodist Churches began to celebrate it.

"World Communion Sunday is a reminder that Christians throughout the world all share one sacrament in common: Holy Eucharist," said Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of Quincy Community. "We have use different name for this sacrament, such as 'The Lord's Supper' or 'Holy Communion,' and we may celebrate it in many different ways.

"We certainly hold many different beliefs concerning it. Nevertheless, this sacrament makes all Christians one."

The morning worship service, held at 10:30 a.m., will emphasize Christianity's global community. The music and prayers will come from many countries.

A variety of breads from various cultures will be presented during the Offertory and placed on the altar; they will then be shared during Holy Communion.

Following the service, the same breads will be shared again – this time at a sandwich luncheon. Parishioners will provide a variety of sandwich fillings, so that everyone's dietary needs will be met.

This year, Keith Boucher will be the guest speaker at the service. Boucher, a lay person in the United Methodist Church, has led several relief missions to Haiti. His presentation will focus on what has been accomplished there, and what still needs to be done to help the people of Haiti.

The church is located at 40 Beale St., Wollaston.

A Job Well Done

On Wednesday, Sept. 14, at approximately 2:20 a.m., Officers Patrick Folan, David Cooper and Robert Kelly were dispatched to Whiton Avenue after Communications received a "911" call from a female who was making incoherent statements.

LT. DAN MINTON

Communications informed the responding Officers that they tried numerous times to determine what the problem was, but there is an extensive history of calls related to domestic violence at the address. It is also the address for a tenant who was soon to be evicted through an effort by the Community Police, the landlord and Quincy District Court. Sgt. Garrett Greenwood also responded due to the high number of past calls at this residence.

Officers Kelly, Folan and Cooper approached the front door and heard a female yelling from within the apartment, so they requested that she open the door. The female replied with vulgar obscenities and refused to open her door or state why she called the 911 emergency line. The officers told her to open the door so they could determine if she was alright and what assistance they could provide.

Sgt. Greenwood arrived and also attempted to convince the female inside the residence to open the door but she continued with her rants and refusal to open the door. At one point, the female inside began to cry hysterically and said, "I don't care what happens to me," and "Do whatever you want to me."

When asked if she was alone in the residence, the woman responded, "You never help me when he's here." Based on the history of violent and domestic violence calls to the residence, Sgt. Greenwood determined that the door had to be opened to be sure that the female was not in any harm. The past history of the address along with statements made by the female that she did not care what happens to her and her inebriated state, provided cause to visually check on her, so the Quincy Fire Department was requested to provide a forced entry to the residence.

While waiting for the Fire Department, the Officers continued their efforts to convince the woman to open her door. Instead of opening the door, the female called the Massachusetts State Police "911" emergency line several times making incoherent statements, and they, in turn referred the calls to the Quincy Police. After final attempts to get the female to open the door, Quincy Firefighters forced open the door.

The officers entered the apartment and found the female standing inside, appearing to be under the influence of alcoholic beverages. Her eyes were glassy and bloodshot and there was a strong odor of alcoholic beverage emanating from her breath. The female was visibly pregnant too. There was no one else in the apartment.

The officers again asked the female why she called for assistance and she grew belligerent and hysterical, blurting out, "I don't care what happens to me." Due to the female's unstable state of mind, Fallon Ambulance was dispatched to evaluate the female and the EMTs' determined that she needed medical and psychiatric evaluations.

The officers approached the female and told her that she had to go with the ambulance to the hospital. She became enraged and violent, refusing to move toward the ambulance. As the officers physically took hold of the female, she attacked Officer Kelly, biting him on his left forearm area. She was quickly handcuffed and put in a "Stair Chair" (used to transport patients in tight quarters, with restraint belts).

A surgical mask was placed on the female's mouth to prevent spitting and reduce the opportunity to bite again. Once at the ambulance, the female was moved from the chair to a stretcher and handcuffed. The female, a 30 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Assault and Battery on a Police Officer."

Check Heating Unit Before Cold Arrives

Q: Please settle an argument for me. I feel our heating unit needs to be maintained every year, while my housemate has an attitude of, "If it ain't broke, don't mess with it." Who's right? –Jackie L. in Maryland

A: While most homeowners don't have their heating (and cooling) systems checked every year – or for several years, for that matter – they should try to schedule a maintenance checkup at least every other year. A licensed air conditioning and heating professional can check the entire system, including ducting and vents, point out potential trouble spots and ensure the unit is working efficiently.

In between maintenance checks, homeowners can do some of their own maintenance to keep the heating system in top shape for winter. Fall is the best time to do this, before you need the heat. Here are some tips:

–Change the air filter, even if it is relatively clean and was changed on schedule last winter. Once you start using the heating system regularly, replace the filter monthly.

–Open vents and registers, check for debris and vacuum out dust and dirt. This not only keeps warm air flowing freely, it helps reduce allergies from dust and pollen.

–Clean the blower and motor housing. Often accessible behind the air filter, make sure these two important parts of the heater are free of dust and dirt. Wipe with a clean rag. If the housing is covered with a film of dirt, wipe with a rag dampened in soapy water to clean. Don't use solvents or harsh chemicals on these parts.

–If your heater is a natural gas unit, make sure the pilot light is working efficiently. Turn the burner control to OFF and wait three minutes for the pilot light assembly to cool. Open the pilot light access panel. Turn the burner control to PILOT and light the pilot light (you may need to depress the control while lighting). The pilot light should relight fairly quickly and burn with a clean blue flame.

That's basically all a homeowner needs to do between professional maintenance checks. It may not seem like much, but simply inspecting and cleaning the heating unit each year can go a long way toward preventing unexpected repair bills.

HOME TIP: It's important to locate the shutoff valve for your home's gas system in the event of a leak. It's typically near the meter.

A Job Well Done

On Wednesday, Sept. 14, at approximately 2:20 a.m., Officers Patrick Folan, David Cooper and Robert Kelly were dispatched to Whiton Avenue after Communications received a "911" call from a female who was making incoherent statements.

LT. DAN MINTON

Communications informed the responding Officers that they tried numerous times to determine what the problem was, but there is an extensive history of calls related to domestic violence at the address. It is also the address for a tenant who was soon to be evicted through an effort by the Community Police, the landlord and Quincy District Court. Sgt. Garrett Greenwood also responded due to the high number of past calls at this residence.

Officers Kelly, Folan and Cooper approached the front door and heard a female yelling from within the apartment, so they requested that she open the door. The female replied with vulgar obscenities and refused to open her door or state why she called the 911 emergency line. The officers told her to open the door so they could determine if she was alright and what assistance they could provide.

Sgt. Greenwood arrived and also attempted to convince the female inside the residence to open the door but she continued with her rants and refusal to open the door. At one point, the female inside began to cry hysterically and said, "I don't care what happens to me," and "Do whatever you want to me."

When asked if she was alone in the residence, the woman responded, "You never help me when he's here." Based on the history of violent and domestic violence calls to the residence, Sgt. Greenwood determined that the door had to be opened to be sure that the female was not in any harm. The past history of the address along with statements made by the female that she did not care what happens to her and her inebriated state, provided cause to visually check on her, so the Quincy Fire Department was requested to provide a forced entry to the residence.

While waiting for the Fire Department, the Officers continued their efforts to convince the woman to open her door. Instead of opening the door, the female called the Massachusetts State Police "911" emergency line several times making incoherent statements, and they, in turn referred the calls to the Quincy Police. After final attempts to get the female to open the door, Quincy Firefighters forced open the door.

The officers entered the apartment and found the female standing inside, appearing to be under the influence of alcoholic beverages. Her eyes were glassy and bloodshot and there was a strong odor of alcoholic beverage emanating from her breath. The female was visibly pregnant too. There was no one else in the apartment.

The officers again asked the female why she called for assistance and she grew belligerent and hysterical, blurting out, "I don't care what happens to me." Due to the female's unstable state of mind, Fallon Ambulance was dispatched to evaluate the female and the EMTs' determined that she needed medical and psychiatric evaluations.

The officers approached the female and told her that she had to go with the ambulance to the hospital. She became enraged and violent, refusing to move toward the ambulance. As the officers physically took hold of the female, she attacked Officer Kelly, biting him on his left forearm area. She was quickly handcuffed and put in a "Stair Chair" (used to transport patients in tight quarters, with restraint belts).

A surgical mask was placed on the female's mouth to prevent spitting and reduce the opportunity to bite again. Once at the ambulance, the female was moved from the chair to a stretcher and handcuffed. The female, a 30 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Assault and Battery on a Police Officer."

Check Heating Unit Before Cold Arrives

Q: Please settle an argument for me. I feel our heating unit needs to be maintained every year, while my housemate has an attitude of, "If it ain't broke, don't mess with it." Who's right? –Jackie L. in Maryland

A: While most homeowners don't have their heating (and cooling) systems checked every year – or for several years, for that matter – they should try to schedule a maintenance checkup at least every other year. A licensed air conditioning and heating professional can check the entire system, including ducting and vents, point out potential trouble spots and ensure the unit is working efficiently.

In between maintenance checks, homeowners can do some of their own maintenance to keep the heating system in top shape for winter. Fall is the best time to do this, before you need the heat. Here are some tips:

–Change the air filter, even if it is relatively clean and was changed on schedule last winter. Once you start using the heating system regularly, replace the filter monthly.

–Open vents and registers, check for debris and vacuum out dust and dirt. This not only keeps warm air flowing freely, it helps reduce allergies from dust and pollen.

–Clean the blower and motor housing. Often accessible behind the air filter, make sure these two important parts of the heater are free of dust and dirt. Wipe with a clean rag. If the housing is covered with a film of dirt, wipe with a rag dampened in soapy water to clean. Don't use solvents or harsh chemicals on these parts.

–If your heater is a natural gas unit, make sure the pilot light is working efficiently. Turn the burner control to OFF and wait three minutes for the pilot light assembly to cool. Open the pilot light access panel. Turn the burner control to PILOT and light the pilot light (you may need to depress the control while lighting). The pilot light should relight fairly quickly and burn with a clean blue flame.

That's basically all a homeowner needs to do between professional maintenance checks. It may not seem like much, but simply inspecting and cleaning the heating unit each year can go a long way toward preventing unexpected repair bills.

HOME TIP: It's important to locate the shutoff valve for your home's gas system in the event of a leak. It's typically near the meter.

Quincy College Awarded Military Friendly School Title

G.I. Jobs, a magazine for military personnel transitioning into civilian life, has awarded Quincy College the designation of Military Friendly School.

The 2012 Military Friendly Schools list honors the top 20 percent of colleges, universities and trade schools that are doing the most to embrace America's military service members and veterans as students.

The 1,518 colleges, universities and trade schools on this year's list prioritize the recruitment of students with military experience. These schools are making the grade by offering scholarships and discounts, veterans' clubs, full-time staff, military credit and other services to those who served.

The list was compiled through extensive research and a data driven survey of more than 8,000 schools nationwide. Methodology, criteria and weighting for the list were developed with the assistance of an Academic Advisory Board (AAB) consisting of educators from schools across the country.

"Yet another positive step in our commitment to make Quincy College an institution where we value the sacrifices made by our veterans in serving our country and provide an environment which is both receptive and accommodating to what are often the distinct needs of veterans," said Quincy College President Peter Tsaffaras.

Through the Quincy College Veterans Discount Program, veterans may enroll in either Liberal Arts or Business and Public Service classes at a discounted rate. Veterans are eligible for this reduced rate regardless of the number of courses they take in a semester.

The veteran discount program is not funded by the state or federal government; therefore veterans who are eligible for education benefits through the VA may also receive the Quincy College discounted rate.

In addition to being a Military Friendly School, Quincy College is a member of the Service Members Opportunity Colleges Consortium (SOC). Quincy College advisors are willing and able to review both military and college transcripts, as well as CLEP and DANTES exam scores, for transfer credit according to American Council of Education (ACE) recommendations.

Veterans, veteran dependents, and active duty service members are able to use their federal education benefits at Quincy College including: Post 9/11 GI Bill, Montgomery GI Bill, Vocational Rehabilitation, and Tuition Assistance.

For more information on the Quincy College Military & Veterans Program, contact John Ebuen, director of Military and Veterans Services at jebuen@quincycollege.edu or by phone at 617-984-1735.

to them, they are an inspiration to me."

Both grew up in Quincy and attended Quincy High School, but never met during their years there.

After graduation Romaio enlisted in the Army and served during World War II, where he received letters from a woman he had never met, Jennie.

"A friend of mine was overseas fighting the war and I would write to him from time to time," said Jennie. "After a while he asked me if I could write his friend Romaio since he wasn't receiving any mail, so I did, and we wrote back and forth until he came home on leave."

When Romaio came home he went straight to Jennie's work and asked her out to dinner.

"She had sent me a picture in the mail when I was overseas," said Romaio. "So I had an idea of what she looked like and knew I wanted to take her out."

After his service discharge in 1945, Romaio and Jennie continued dating. After less than a year, one night on the porch of Jennie's home, Romaio asked her to marry him, and she said yes, although now she jokes that her first response was that she would think about it.

"A good sense of humor is what I think has made my parents able to be together for 65 years," said Semler. "I grew up wanting a marriage like theirs. I looked up to their relationship. I even ended up having four kids just like my mom."

The two were married in 1946 at the age of 23, and three years later they welcomed their first child, and three more to follow, they had two boys and two girls.

Jennie was a stay at home mom while Romaio, a World War II veteran, worked as a machinist.

The two now live on Beach Street in Quincy where they have lived for 57 years. Both are 87 years old – still driving and doing everything themselves.

Romaio said he enjoys working and that he will continue to work for as long as they will keep him.

"I don't know any two stronger people," said Semler. "They both still drive, and my dad still works full time, my mom is still cooking and cleaning, they won't let me do anything for them.

"It is really unbelievable, they are unbelievable."

Auto Repair Service Tips From The BBB

What do you do when your windshield wipers stop working, your left taillight burns out, and your brakes give out?

Some may opt to fix the problem themselves, but many turn to the services and handiwork of auto repairmen.

While most auto repairmen are honest and forthcoming, consumers need to be on the lookout for those that are trying to make a quick buck.

Better Business Bureau is advising consumers to do their research before turning their car over to an auto repair service.

When your vehicle needs repairs, you don't need a crash course in auto mechanics, but you should know how to find a reliable shop and mechanic. It's important for consumers to be on the lookout for scams like overcharging on repairs, charging for labor that was never performed, and performing shoddy work. In 2010, BBB received a whopping 12,682 complaints against auto repair mechanics. In this year alone, BBB has already received nearly 11,000 complaints.

"Many times consumers realize that they have been scammed, but they don't have any way of proving it," said Paula Fleming, vice president of local. "It's extremely important to get all estimates for parts and labor in writing first before authorizing anything."

BBB recommends the following tips to consider before turning over your car to an auto repair service:

Get a least three referrals. If you are looking for a qualified mechanic, ask friends, family and coworkers for recommendations. Be sure to check the business with bbb.org to see if there have been any complaints filed against the business. Look for shops that display certification. For major work, such as brakes, transmission or engine repair, you need to find a shop employing a specialist.

Ask as many questions as you need. Don't be embarrassed to request technical definitions. Don't rush the technician into making an on-the-spot diagnosis of the problem. Ask to be called and apprised of the problem, course of action, and cost of work before any work begins.

Get everything in writing. Before authorizing repairs, get a written estimate for parts and labor. Tell the shop to get your permission before making additional repairs. Ensure you receive notification by having the service manager write a request on the bottom of the repair order. Give phone numbers where you can be reached and before you leave, be sure to understand all shop policies regarding labor rates, guarantees, and acceptable methods of payment.

Do a walk through with your mechanic. When you pick up your vehicle, get an explanation of all work completed and get all guarantees in writing. Ask that any major new parts that have been installed be pointed out to you. Your repair bill should be itemized so if a problem occurs later, you can prove the item is covered by the guarantee.

Geoff Hennessy's Teams Include Talented Young Runners And Veteran Leadership

No Longer Combined, Cross Country Teams Still Running Together

CROSS COUNTRY HEAD COACH Geoff Hennessy (center) had his six-year QHS/NQHS co-operative team split into two teams this fall. The change means that Hennessy will be fielding a NQHS and QHS boys and girls' team during meets this season. Overall, the program is loaded with young talent. Quincy Sun file photo

By SEAN BRENNAN

For the last six fall seasons, high school cross-country in the Quincy Public School system had been as one – a cooperative program between QHS and NQHS - and that arrangement worked well for head coach Geoff Hennessy. But the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) made the decision this year to split the QHS/NQHS team into two separate entities, which means in 2011 (and beyond), Hennessy will be coaching both a Presidents and a Red Raiders program.

However, just because the MIAA required that one cooperative team become two doesn't mean that the student-athletes participating in cross-country are going to go separate ways. Instead, the teams are planning on taking the change head-on with the mission to continue to push one another to be always at their best.

"We're working hard and making steady progress," Hennessy wrote in an email to The Sun. "We were dealt a small set-back with the MIAA separating us back into two schools after being a cooperative program for the past six years. We have no control over that."

"That's up to Athletic Director Jim Rendle and I'm sure he'll construct a good case to put us back together," continued Hennessy. "It's been a great thing (having one team) for the kids working as one, the socializing, the diversity, to pasta fests, it is just a great thing for track kids. Younger kids coming up have always known that regardless of where they went (to high school) that we were all on the same page, so to speak."

Despite the separation of Quincy and North Quincy, the teams do still train together daily at Pageant Field, which they share with the Quincy High School football team.

"We work hard, they work hard, but we have no time to observe what they do, we're trying to get better in the always tough Patriot League," wrote Hennessy. "We have to deal with the (Whitman-Hanson) Panthers plus Pembroke and Hingham, all division champs the past five years."

Anyone who runs competitively will tell you, challenges, physical, mental or emotional, are par for the course so to speak. These kids are wired to run through adversity. The hope for this season is that the teams, which are weighted on the younger side, can continue to develop and lean on one another despite being told they can't run together as a QHS/NQHS team.

In the fall opener versus Whitman-Hanson on Sept. 13 at Pageant Field, both teams came up short against the Panthers who have been picked by several publications to be a league and state force in both boys and girls cross-country.

The Panthers took the top two spots in the boys race with North Quincy freshman Mike Mullaney taking third only 27 seconds behind Nate Stephansky and Pat Ryan, two of the top runners in Division II. Quincy sophomore Brendan Cunningham finished sixth overall and Quincy's Aidan McMorrow was 12th; North Quincy team captain senior Bond Ho was 19th overall.

The final scores were Whitman-Hanson 18, North Quincy 45 and Whitman-Hanson 16, Quincy 47.

On the girls side North Quincy lost to the Panthers, 18-41, but had several girls in the top-10 including freshman Emily Bryson in fourth place (only 29 seconds behind league leader Rachael Baker), Danielle Mullaney in sixth, and freshman Julia Bryson in eighth place. Junior Mary Zheng finished 11th; freshman Marguerite Belcher was 16th; sophomore Amanda Yao was 17th and sophomore Amelia Ho took 20th overall. Quincy junior Kelsey Fischer, the lone Presidents runner, took 23rd overall.

At the head of this young pack of runners on the boys' teams are Mullaney and Cunningham. Only a freshman, Mullaney is a two-time Hershey National Track & Field qualifier in the mile while Cunningham, just a sophomore, has the potential to do great things on the course. McMorrow is another rapidly improving athlete who is joined by Ho, sophomores Mike Saccoach (a BC High transfer) and James Guerin and freshmen Wei He, Max Hurley and Nolan Flynn.

On the girl's side juniors Lia Bonoli, Siobhan Flynn, Mary Zheng and Danielle Mullaney, all of NQHS and Quincy's Fischer provide strong leadership. Sophomores to watch for include Faith Whooley, Mairead O'Brien, Danielle Coneran, Amanda Yao and Ho.

Three freshmen, including twin sisters Emily and Julia Bryson, perhaps two of the top runners on the team, join Belcher to make up a strong varsity seven for the Red Raiders.

"It's fun to see the new kids silently develop," Hennessy said. "The Bryson twins along with Danielle Mullaney (who came over from soccer after a banner spring track season) make a formidable top-three. They'll get their education in this league.

"By the time we get to the big meets like the league championship, State Coaches Invitational or MIAA EMass Divisional, they'll be ready for prime time. We just have to stay healthy and have fun with it."

Beginning his 24th season as head coach, Hennessy's program also runs a jayvee walk and jog program for beginners. Student-athletes run a weekly time trail as well as running a shorter route in home meets attempting to reach a time goal to get promoted to varsity.

This group includes boys Zhenya Buckley, Romel Malimban and Chris Buzzell; girls participating include Katy Deng, Isabella Cobble, McKenzie Dollosa, Jennifer Hong, Emily Lo, Karen Ly, Maryann Ly, Sophie Mac, Joanna Micinoti, Hailey Naistadt and Emily Zheng.

Quincy and North Quincy ran in a quad-meet with Scituate and Hingham on Tuesday and are scheduled to run at Pageant Field against Silver Lake Regional on Sept. 27 and away at Pembroke on Oct. 4.

QHS Lost To Canton; NQ Fell to Oliver Ames

Quincy, North Quincy Still Searching For First Win

By SEAN BRENNAN

Heading into Friday's games, the Presidents and the Red Raiders are both still searching for that elusive first win of the season and with the Patriot League portion of their schedules still several weeks away, Quincy and North Quincy are both in need of a quick fix to what ails them.

The Presidents continued to be stunted by injuries while the Red Raiders' lack of depth is beginning to catch up to them. The 2011 season is still in its infancy but a victory by either team this weekend would go a long way in determining whether either program has what it takes to excel on the gridiron this fall.

QHS Presidents

Quincy (0-2 overall) had hoped to break through last week at Canton High School, a team that Quincy had defeated 42-14, ironically enough, in the second game of the 2010 season. The Bulldogs had other ideas in 2011.

Canton, behind a stellar performance by running back Dexter Green (19 carries, 262 yards, two TDs; two catches for 43 yards and a TD; 305 total yards) and on-spot precision from quarterback Anthony Bires (two passing TDs), knocked back Quincy by a 26-12 score.

Although the final result ended up being a two-score (14 points) deficit, the Presidents actually kept the contest close in the first-half. Canton opened the scoring in the first quarter when Bires found wide receiver Elias Camacho for a 25-yard TD strike – the PAT failed. Quincy responded to Canton's first score by driving the length of the field. Senior quarterback Curran Jorgensen connected with junior Viet Doan on a 36-yard touchdown – PAT failed – to even the score at 6-6.

But then Canton's Green went go. The shifty back scampered in from three yards out near the end of the quarter and his successful two-point conversion rush gave Canton a 14-6 lead after 12 minutes. The Presidents' Jalen Green, not to be outdone by the Bulldogs' Green, scored his second touchdown in as many games on a ten-yard run. Again, the PAT failed, leaving Quincy trailing 14-12.

Dexter Green showed off his receiving skills later in the quarter when he caught a short pass by Bires in the Quincy red zone and barreled in from 11 yards out. The unsuccessful PAT gave Canton a 20-6 halftime lead. The Bulldogs added to their lead in the third quarter when Green, again, took a sweep and drove the ball into the end zone from ten yards. Another unsuccessful PAT accounted for the final score of 26-12.

Quincy looks to get off the snide on Friday when they travel to nonleague Plymouth South. The Presidents lost a heartbreaker to the Panthers last season, 12-11. Quincy has a bye week on Sept. 30 before playing nonleague Malden Catholic at Veterans Memorial Stadium on Oct. 7 at 7 p.m.

Red Raiders

North Quincy fell to 0-2 overall following their 33-7 blowout loss to nonleague Oliver Ames last Friday in North Easton. The Tigers jumped out to a 20-0 first quarter lead before expanding that advantage to 26-0 at the halftime break.

Jared Schneider (two-yard rushing TD), Dean Soucie (22-yard INT return), and Sam Langston (five-yard rushing TD) found pay dirt in the first half for 2-0 Oliver Ames.

The third and fourth quarters were more of the same. The Tigers' Schneider connected with wide receiver Alex Tepper on a ten-yard TD pass midway through quarter three and in the fourth Schneider and wide receiver Duane Johnson hit jackpot on a 54-yard touchdown pass that gave Oliver Ames a commanding 33-0 lead.

The Red Raiders finally got on the score sheet with a 1-yard TD run in the final minutes of the contest. The Tigers made it two wins in two seasons versus North Quincy. Last year Oliver Ames won 14-12.

The nonleague portion of the schedule moving forward does not get any easier for North Quincy. The Red Raiders host East Bridgewater (2-0 overall) at 7 p.m. on Friday at Veterans Memorial Stadium. The Vikings demolished Hanover, a team that should challenge for a Patriot League crown, 50-20 on Sept. 16. East Bridgewater put up 46 points against North Quincy last fall in a 46-28 victory.

The Red Raiders will host nonleague Arlington on Sept. 30 before heading to Braintree to play at Archbishop Williams on Oct. 7.

Raiders Start Season At 3-0

By SEAN BRENNAN

Something good is brewing with the North Quincy girl's soccer team.

No one associated with the program is ready to start printing playoff tickets yet, but if early season results – the suddenly high-powered Raiders are 3-0 overall - are any indication, North Quincy is going to be a thorn in the side of opponents this fall.

For a team that scored 20 goals in 20 games last season, something has clicked offensively through the first three games in 2011. The Raiders have outscored Malden, Silver Lake and Lynn Classical by a total tally of 11-0. The best news for head coach Paul Bregoli is that this explosion of goals has come from several sources.

Against Lynn Classical last Saturday, junior forward Shannon McCleary finished with a hat trick, senior forward Bethany Routier plotted her first varsity goal, and sophomore forward Delia Devane twinkled the twine in the Raiders' 5-0 nonleague win.

Unfortunately for North, senior captain Jessica O'Donovan suffered a broken leg in the game, which will sideline her for the reminder of the season. The freak injury, which occurred as O'Donovan was attempting to keep a ball in play, is a tough blow for one of the team's top go-to players.

"(Lynn Classical) outplayed us in the first half, but we came back in the second half and turned up the offense," said Bregoli on Monday. "O'Donovan's injury, however, took the joy out of the win. This is a loss of a great kid who had worked and trained as hard as anyone to get ready for her senior season. She was poised to have a great year and she was a true captain who cares a lot about this team."

"The rest of the team is going to have to pick it up," Bregoli continued. "That will determine how the season plays out."

Earlier last week North Quincy got its first signature win of the fall. The Raiders shocked Patriot League powerhouse Silver Lake, 2-0, as McCleary – off an assist from freshman Sydney Chang – put North up 1-0 six minutes into the second half. North continued to apply pressure and was rewarded for their tenacity two minutes later when senior Liz Kelly headed in an Abby Smith corner kick at the far post.

Senior keeper Sara Sullivan (eight saves) and defenders Haley McKay and Kaleen Campo led a North defensive effort that shut down a dangerous Lakers' attack.

The 2-0 victory was North Quincy's first over Silver Lake since the 2001 season.

"This is a confident team who can beat anyone," said Bregoli about his varsity program. "They were ready to play this team. We hadn't had much success against Silver Lake, so this was a big win."

North Quincy plays a pivotal early season match today (Thursday) at Duxbury. The Raiders host nonleague Malden at 4 p.m. Friday at Teal Field in North Quincy.

AFC Under-10 Girl's Team Looking For Players

America FC is fielding five youth teams 14 years old and younger this fall season while the U15 and older players are playing for their high school teams.

The AFC U9/U10 Revolution girl's team is the only team looking for a few more players. The team is coached and trained by Tyler Martin, U8 Foundations co-director. His team trains 1.5 hours per day on Monday, Wednesday, and Fridays at Quarry Hills Field from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

This newly formed team trains consistently from September through mid-June and is part of the AFC Academy soccer-training program. The team's training objective is to develop technical skills. Considerable emphasis is placed on developing ball mastery skills including dribbling, moves and general ball control to develop a core set of soccer skills before the players enter the more competitive U13 and U14 ages.

If you have a child that may be interested in participating in the training program and team, go to the AFC website www.americafc.us for more information or contact coach Tyler Martin at tmartin4@gmail.com or at 401-524-4281.

Third Annual Smegs Legs Memorial Run Oct. 8

One wouldn't expect an Atherton Hough, Broad Meadows, and Boston College High School alum to high five President George W. Bush after receiving his diploma at the United States Merchant Marine Academy in Kings Point, New York. You wouldn't expect that unless you knew Chris Smeglin and his unquenchable zest for life, unique sense of humor and service to country.

Smeglin enlisted in the United States Navy to fulfill a lifelong ambition to serve his country and became an aviator. Dedicating one's life to the United States, while a true honor, can also be the ultimate sacrifice. On Oct. 2, 2008, Navy LTJG Chris Smeglin, a 24-year-old Houghs Neck resident, was tragically killed while stationed in Kingsville, Texas during a bike training session for a triathlon.

In respect of his love and desire for fitness, his family, friends and neighbors are asking for Quincy Sun readers' support in their efforts to commemorate the life of this great young man and patriot by participating in, volunteering for or sponsoring the Third Annual Smegs Legs 5 Mile Road Race & 2 Mile Walk to be hosted at Broad Meadows Middle School in Quincy at 9 a.m. on Saturday, Oct. 8.

Smegs Legs proceeds will benefit The Chris Smeglin Memorial Fund, which will raise monies for various local charities. This year's beneficiaries are: Access Sports America (www.accesssports.org) - sports for children and adults with disabilities, a scholarship in Chris' memory with the Houghs Neck Community Council (www.houghsneck.org), and the Broad Meadows Middle School athletic program.

Event run/walk participants can register by mail before Oct. 1 for $20 or on the day of the event, starting at 7:30 a.m., for $25. Online registration deadline is Oct. 6. Any support, including donations would be greatly appreciated and acknowledged at the event.

If you are interested in volunteering or sponsoring the event, contact Eddie Aucoin at eaucoin@gis.net. The Memorial Fund's 501©(3) number is available upon request.

Thank you for your consideration in supporting these causes in the memory of Chris. Please visit www.smegs-legs.org for more information and respond by Oct. 1 to: Chris Smeglin Memorial Fund, c/o Mike and Jane Smeglin, 125 Spring Street, Quincy, MA 02169.

Plays Varsity Games At Veterans Memorial Stadium

QYFL Began 61st Season On Sept. 11

Fall and football go hand and hand.

Quincy and North Quincy kicked off their 2011 seasons two weeks ago and everyone knows that the New England Patriots, behind reigning NFL MVP Tom Brady, are already sitting at 2-0 overall.

But there is more football to get out and watch during fall weekends in the city.

The six-team Quincy Youth Football League (QYFL) began its 61st season on Sept. 11 with varsity games being played at Veterans Memorial Stadium. QYFL is football at its best – raw and real with youngsters playing the game for the right reasons. The games are competitive but always played with an eye towards sportsmanship and fair play.

The opening weekend, according to QYFL President Paul Doherty, saw a near record crowd and very good attendance numbers come out and support the teams.

Throughout the season, The Quincy Sun in cooperation with Doherty and league coaches will publish weekly updates of games. The following are results for the first two weeks of QYFL play.

QYFL WEEK TWO RESULTS

The Storm v. Panthers (Sept. 18)

The Squantum Storm rebounded from a season-opening loss to the Milton Mustangs with a 7-0-shutout win over the Quincy Point Panthers in Week Two.

The only score in the varsity game was an 18-yard touchdown scamper off right tackle by running back Kevin Mock. Liam O'Connor finished off the scoring drive with a conversion rush of three yards.

With the offense doing just enough to win, the Storm defense dominated the pace of the game, holding the Panthers to zero net yards on offense. Middle linebackers Connor Cramond (six tackles) and Mac Deegan (four) were menaces while linemen Ryan Manning, Declan Mayo and O'Connor and cornerback Troy Shepherd finished with three tackles, respectively.

The Storm's running backs netted 112 yards on the ground behind the strong blocking from center Manning, guards Jeremy Downey and Nick Kelly, tackles Cramond and Mayo and ends Jake Grady, Joel Lawless and O'Connor. Leading the ground attack was Lawless with ten carries for 81 yards and fullback Deegan with two carries for 14 yards.

The longest play from scrimmage was a halfback option pass from Shepherd to O'Connor for 28 yards on the drive that resulted in the game's only touchdown.

Quincy Point Panthers Coaches Statement

"The Panthers played another tight game with division rival, Squantum Storm. The heavyweight battle lasted all four quarters with the Storm nearly running the clock out deep in Panthers' territory. With time and yardage against them, the Panthers began a stoic march only to run out of luck and downs. As the two teams traded handshakes at the 50-yard line the words, 'Good Game' rattled across the players and coaches' mouths. All of us truly knowing that it really was. The two teams meet again in two weeks (a game) that you may not want to miss if you're a true football fan."

Jayvee Results

In the jayvee game fifth-grader Timmy Layden handled the QB duties for The Storm without a hitch after being promoted from the freshmen team. Max Storch starred on offense and defense for The Storm, scoring three rushing touchdowns. The only other TD was scored by running back John Paul Kelley with blocking from fullback Tommy Veasey and linemen Ty Flynn, Luca Smith, Colin McGrath, Johnny Tran, Daniel Steele, Pat Bronske and Pat O'Brien.

Freshmen Results

The Storm freshmen won 6-0. First-time quarterback Andrew Airosus led the backfield of Antonio Allen, Johnny Collins and Dan O'Leary to a dominant ground game. Airosus, Collins, O'Leary, Josh Dangora, Josh Jackson and Michael Golden led the defensive effort.

Apaches v. Manets (Sept. 18)

The Houghs Neck Manets and the North Quincy Apaches battled to a 13-13 tie in Week Two.

The Manets scored first as quarterback Joe Boddie scored on a TD run. The successful conversion made the score 7-0. The score was set up by a brilliant 30-yard run on a fake punt by Tyler Chenette.

The Apaches fired back when running back Tysean Moore (102 yards, TD, INT) scored on a 61-yard TD run on the first play from scrimmage. Tight end Allen Lee caught the conversion pass from QB Aiden Brown to tie the game at 7-7. In the second quarter, the Apaches had a 50-yard TD run by Mike McNelle called back by a penalty, and four plays later, the Manets intercepted a pass and the offense proceeded to drive down the field to score on a 25-yard TD pass from Boddie to Mike Nazzaro – the conversion attempt failed and the score at halftime was 13-7.

In the second half both teams played strong on defense with North Quincy's attack sparked by the effort of John Le (11 tackles, sack), McNelly, Lee, Tom Whooley and Paul McLoughlin. The Apaches tied the game in the fourth quarter with a TD run by McNelly.

The Manets had one final drive that the Apaches stopped and the game ended in a tie.

Eighth-graders Mike Monroe, Conor Pound, Kyle Wright, Ryan Landers and Ritchie Rose played well along the offensive line for Hough Neck.

Elks v. Mustangs (Sept. 18)

The West Quincy Elks improved to 2-0 overall with a 26-25 victory over the Milton Mustangs (1-1). A full game summary was unavailable.

QYFL WEEK ONE RESULTS

Mustangs v. The Storm (Sept. 11)

The Mustang varsity football team finished off a sweep of the Squantum Storm squads by winning easily by a score of 28-0 on Sept. 11. On Sept. 10, the jayvee Mustangs prevailed 14-0 over the Storm jayvee; the Mustangs freshmen team defeated the Storm team by a 13-6 score.

Outgaining the Storm varsity 227 yards to 15 yards, the Mustangs scored three touchdowns in the first half on runs of 1, 9 and 45 yards – they also converted all four-conversion attempts.

Milton ran off 36 plays in total, 18 in each half while the Storm ran only 20 plays from scrimmage with 15 coming in the first two quarters. With the Mustangs dominating the game by running the ball, the Storm only managed one play from scrimmage in the third quarter, which ended up being a pass that was intercepted.

Mac Deegan and Joel Lawless were the Storm's most effective runners while Stephen Timmins starred for Milton with a 45-yard TD run. Linebacker Connor Cramond and ends Deegan and Lawless led the Storm defense.

Elks v. Apaches (Sept. 11)

The West Quincy Elks struck quickly with three touchdowns on its first three possessions and defeated the North Quincy Apaches, 28-12.

Joey Weinstein scored from ten yards on the first Elks' possession; John Texiera scored from 30 yards out on the second possession, and Doug Santos ran for a 55-yard touchdown to make it 21-0. In the second half, the only Elks' touchdown came from a 25-yard touchdown run from Weinstein.

After spotting the Elks a 21-0 advantage, the Apaches offense finally woke up when Tysean Moore raced for a long touchdown run at the end of the first half. John Le recovered an onside kick to start the second half and after a couple of tough runs by running back Mike McNelley, Moore broke free for his second TD run of the afternoon to cut the Elks' lead to 21-12.

McNelley, Moore, quarterback Aiden Brown and Allen Lee played well on both sides of the field for North Quincy.

Manets v. Panthers (Sept. 11)

The Houghs Neck Manets were able to hold on for a 13-6 win over the Quincy Point Panthers in what was a hard fought game.

Behind touchdown runs by Cody Desmond and Mike Nazzaro, the Manets came up with the big plays when needed. A nice catch by Tyler Chennette on a conversion rounded out the Houghs Neck scoring and an offensive line anchored by Conor Pound and Ryan Landers helped the Manets control the attack.

Jose Garcia, Garret Cronin and Chris Wallace all played strong games for the Panthers.

Raiders' Hopes Rest On Healthy Quarterback

By SEAN BRENNAN

Last year without starting quarterback Bob Sleeth healthy for five games North Quincy finished with a 6-3 record just one season removed from winning its first Greater Boston League Championship with a 9-0 record.

Sept. 26, 1968 43 YEARS AGO

Coach Carl Leone hopes that with a good nucleus of veterans and one of the largest teams in his eight-year tenure his team will do at least as well this season when the Raiders open their season Saturday against Revere at 1:30 p.m. at Quincy Veteran Stadium.

"Our success will depend to a large extent on our quarterback, Bob Sleeth," said Leone. "Last year he was sidelined for five games and we lost three of them. He has never played in a losing game since the seventh grade. If he stays healthy we should have a good season."

North Quincy is expecting big campaigns from halfbacks Don Polver and Larry Bray while fullback Don Meyer along with backs Bob Swirbalus, Joe Lane, Mark Riley and Jim Broderick are also expected to contribute offensively.

The offensive line is anchored by two-year veteran Steve Dieslo, guards Tom Perrin, Jack Hemphill and Ken Colleran, all veterans, tackles Whitey Bartelson, John Holleran, Art McIver and Steve LeShane and ends Steve Poore, Lou Trubiano, Jerry Mulcahy and Dan Zink.

"Our line, one of my biggest, will average about 195 pounds," Leone stated. "The backs are small but fast and versatile."

Among those who will play regularly on defense are Jay Connerty, Broderick and Lane as cornerbacks and Holleran, Mulcahy and Colleran on the defensive line.

PRESIDENTS FEATURE FASTER LINE, BETTER BACKS

Despite losing 30 seniors from the varsity and junior varsity squads last season, Head Coach Hank Conroy says his line will be faster and his running backs better as Quincy looks to improve on its 3-6 record in 1967 while playing in the Greater Boston League.

In Saturday's opener at Brockton, Conroy's line will probably include Ed Sigliano, veterans Rod Burrows, Rich Speranzo and Ed Reynolds, Larry Burns, Steve Tappen, Dick Menchi, and Dick Kennedy. The line will be responsible for protecting quarterback Steve McDevitt and opening holes for backs Ken Prouty, Steve Carrera, Dick Petrilli and John Molla.

"This gives us a fast offensive team with pretty good experience and good size," said Conroy who is beginning his fourth season as coach. "The backs have fair size with Petrilli going 190, McDevitt 180, Prouty and Carrera 175 each and Molla about 165."

On defense, Conroy plans to platoon a number of boys who will play regularly including Steve Shapiro and Cliff Mattson at tackle, Paul Hand at middle, and Ted Meyer at end. Dennis Bogan, Joe McGuire, Bill Contino, Bill Kelley, Dennis Brien, Steve Fellino, Joe Finiera, Pat Grimes, Chuck Walters, Tom Daley, John Bonfiglioli, Rick Pettiti and Peter Bucaulus will also be asked to contribute defensively for QHS.

Assisting Conroy is Gene Macomber (offense); Bud Mosher (offensive line); Tony Day (defensive line), and Dave Burke (jayvee coach).

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Recently I came across a little book, entitled "Life's Little Instruction Book." Five hundred suggestions, observations, and reminders of how to live a happy and rewarding life. I would like to share some of the words of wisdom with you. This little book is not without a bit of humor.

"Compliment at least three people every day. . . Be the first to say, "Hello." . Say "Thank you" a lot . . . Be forgiving of yourself, and others. . . Look people in the eye. . . Treat everyone you meet the way you want to be treated. Don't waste time learning the tricks of the trade. Instead, learn the trade. Never give up on anyone. Miracles happen everyday. . . When playing games with children, be sure to let them win sometimes. . . Be tough minded, but tender hearted. . . Wear out, don't rust out. . . Measure people by the size of their hearts, not the size of their bank accounts. . . Keep a secret, but be careful about burdening a friend with your secret. . . Never tell anyone they look tired or that they look like they feel bad. . . Resist giving advice to anyone concerning matrimony, finances, or their hair style. . . Remember that over night success usually takes about 15 years. . . Try to always have a friend who owns a truck. . . Don't be afraid to say "I made a mistake." Never rain on someone else's parade. . .

Wise words from a tiny book . . .

Center Revitalization 'Solid Bankable Project,' Planning Director Harrington Tells Councillors

$50M Expected For Downtown Project

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City officials expect that the $50 million core funding for the Quincy Center Revitalization project will win state approval by late October or early November.

"We've proven to the Commonwealth that we have a solid bankable project," Planning Director Dennis Harrington said Monday during his detailed presentation on Quincy Center to the City Council's Downtown and Economic Development Committee.

Harrington's summary this week covered all aspects of the massive $1.6 billion project from dealings with the Street-Works team, the funding and new inves-

Downtown Project Clears Major Regulatory Hurdle

The City has received a vital green-light from state regulators to move forward with a comprehensive environmental impact study on the City's $1.6 billion Quincy Center redevelopment plan.

State Secretary of Environmental Affairs Richard K. Sullivan signed the formal certificate directing the City, together with its development partners Street-Works Development, to complete what is a called a Draft Environmental Impact Report for the 3.4 million square-foot development.

The secretary's certificate provides the specific scope that the study must entail on issues ranging from traffic, noise, construction management, and storm water management among others.

"We continue to make real progress on this historic project every day, and this study will be an important framework for what will not only be the most substantial economic development project in the state but also boasts a litany of environmental benefits," said Mayor Thomas Koch.

The City and Street-Works expect to file the voluminous impact report in the Spring -- on schedule to allow for the private construction to begin in 2013. The filing is separate from the City's permitting plan to restore the Town Brook which is currently proceeding on its own track with several state approvals in hand and more expected in coming weeks.

In total, the redevelopment of Quincy Center will create more than 2.5 acres of new green space – excluding Adams Green, which

Hannon Parkway Opens Sunday

Final preparations are underway this week for Sunday morning's 10 a.m. Walter Hannon Parkway opening ceremony, which will take place at the intersection of the new parkway and Hancock Street in Quincy Center, Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday.

A number of state and federal officials are expected to join Mayor Koch to honor former Mayor Hannon and to officially open the long-awaited east-west connection through Quincy Center that is a lynchpin in the City's $1.6 billion plan to redevelop downtown. After the ceremony, Mayor Hannon will drive the first car on the newly completed roadway.

"This project is about historic job creation, historic economic growth and a new vibrancy for our historic downtown – all things that Mayor Hannon visualized three decades ago and stayed with him throughout his exemplary time in public life," said Mayor Koch.

Hannon, in addition to serving two terms as the City's mayor from 1972 through 1975, was also state

To Our Readers

Due to rising production and other-related costs, the price of The Quincy Sun will increase effective with the Thursday, Oct. 6th issue.

At that time, the newsstand and home delivery by carrier price will be 75 cents – an increase of 25 cents.

The yearly mail subscriptions are not affected by this new rate.

We regret the increase – the paper's first in four years – but increased production and other rising costs force us to make the adjustment.

At 75 cents, the price of The Sun will still be lower than most weekly newspapers in the South Shore and New England areas.

We are most grateful to our loyal readers – many of whom have been subscribers since the first Quincy Sun edition on Sept. 26, 1968.

And we continue to strive to improve the publication and offer our readers more Quincy news and features.

We hope everyone who supports The Sun will understand the need for the price adjustment that is effective with next week's issue – Oct. 6.

Thank you again for the privilege of serving the community as Historic Quincy's hometown weekly newspaper.

Sincerely,

Robert Bosworth

Furnace Brook Flood Project Underway

Construction crews can now be seen in thickets at various points of the Furnace Brook inspecting, clearing, and repairing sections of the flood-prone waterway as a major portion of Mayor Thomas Koch's flood-relief program swings into high gear.

Contractors are clearing large debris from the brook and using special cameras to investigate underground portions of the Brook to identify portions that need major repairs. The work is a lynchpin of more than $12 million in citywide flood-relief projects that are part of Mayor Koch's Capital Improvement Plan.

"This is one part of our broader plan, but it is absolutely essential because so many of the West and South Quincy flooding problems that we are committed to addressing are directly related to the Furnace Brook," said Mayor Koch.

The Furnace Brook project is part of a flood-control plan that includes new pump stations, redesigned drainage systems and other improvements in the West and South Quincy areas hardest hit by the historic storms of March 2010. While the plan is the most substantial flood-relief investment in the City in years, City officials have said that while the investment is important, it is not a silver bullet to completely resolving flooding in low-lying areas.

Here is the breakdown of flood-relief infastructure projects in the Mayor's Capital Plan.

- $5.8 million to begin to address Furnace Brook flooding issues. Streets affected include Sheldon, Ballou, Stedman, Alrick, Joyce, Miller, Cross and Furnace Avenue.
- $1.2 million for to repair Broad Street tide gate.
- $2.1 million for drainage improvements in Sagamore Creek/North Quincy area, including Fayette, Farrington streets, Teal Field, Atlantic Middle School area, Arlington, Brook, Belmont, Hobart and Burgess streets.
- $350,000 for Sachem Street Tide Control Street system
- $730,000 for Circuit Road/Spence Avenue
- $150,000 For Division Street pump station repairs

Hannon Parkway Opens Sunday

representative and planning director. Hannon was the first official to conceive a master plan for downtown as Mayor and most recently led the committee that drafted new zoning guidelines for Quincy Center aimed at attracting a major redeveloper.

The Parkway project, the final phase of which was paid for by $8 million in federal funding, has been a combination state, federal and local project through each of its phases.

The Parkway's purpose is two-fold: First, to make it easier for drivers to make it through the downtown area by avoiding the traffic crunch around the Church of the Presidents and the surrounding area. The second is to provide a new gateway to the redeveloped area, officials said.

The master development agreement, called a Land Disposition Agreement, sets the legal and financial terms for a plan that calls for more than 1 million square feet of new office space, more than 1,200 housing units, two hotels, a cinema and entertainment complex, and 700,000 square feet of new retail and restaurant space in Quincy Center.

The project, which will be built to "green" LEED standards, will create several new civic spaces within Quincy Center, includes 500 mature street trees, and will see Town Brook Culvert restored to a new location where it can be exposed to daylight and enjoyed as a public space.

The plan calls for nearly $300 million in public infrastructure improvements as part of the project, including new underground utilities and public parking facilities with 3,500 spaces. The City and Street-Works are working to secure $50 million in state and federal grant funds for a portion of the improvements, with the remainder to be financed by new taxes and parking revenue from the downtown project.

Under the agreement presented to the Council, called a Land Disposition Agreement, Street-Works will pay the City $30 million to cover downtown-related debt already incurred through construction of the Quincy Center Concourse and other related redevelopment costs. In return, the agreement allows for the primary project to be expanded by up to 750,000 square feet of development and an additional $11.5 million in public improvements.

Under the plan, the City will use state urban redevelopment law known as Chapter 121A as the property tax structure for the development. After development, the City expects to receive $10.1 million in property tax revenue. Of that, $6.8 million will go toward paying for the public improvements, and $3.6 million will go straight to the City's general fund.

Other new revenues such as new meals taxes, hotel room taxes and property taxes outside the immediate project area is expected to generate at least total of $7.1 million in new revenue beyond what will be used to pay for the public improvements. In the end, the agreement will mean a 4 to 1 ratio of private spending to public investment, and a figure substantially higher than most traditional urban redevelopment projects, Koch said.

At no time will the City's general fund be responsible for paying for any of the public improvements, according to the agreement.

JUMPING THOUGH HOOPS!

Who said that the design of hoop earrings must be restricted to minimalist bands of thin gold, silver, or platinum wire? The most popular of current styles feature big hoops punctuated with precious gemstones that literally "rock" your world! While no one will ever question the tastefulness of a pair of simple gold hoop earrings, hoops embellished with front-facing sapphires, topaz, or diamonds are sure to raise the ante. Gemstones can be encapsulated singularly in bezel settings or in a series along the front of each hoop just below the earlobe. Because they are worn so close to the eyes, earrings have always been the jewelry pieces that garner the most attention. Gemstone hoop earrings are dazzlers!

Earrings put the excitement in jewelry. An inexpensive gift for yourself or a delightful gift for someone else, a beautiful earring is always an enjoyment. Preservation Funds To Keep Church Bell Ringing

$100,000 Grant Will Also Refurbish United First Parish Church Clock

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The church bell will ring again and the tower clock will keep ticking, but on a fresh face, at the historic Church of the Presidents, United First Parish Church (Universalist), in Quincy Center.

Thanks to a $100,000 preservation grant approved unanimously Monday by City Council, the cracked bell will be replaced soon and the face and hands of the old clock will be refurbished while the scaffolding remains standing for current repairs to the tower.

"It will be wonderful to be able to ring the bell for public events and celebrations," said Rev. Sheldon Bennett, the church pastor.

Rev. Bennett said Tuesday that he hopes the work will be completed before the holidays. Once installed, onlookers will see the replacement bell swinging but it will actually be operated through an electrical system.

Currently, scaffolding supports workers rehabilitating the bell tower as they install new mahogany columns, fresh gold leafing, and a restored weathervane. The original project has been funded through parishioners' donations, as well as state and preservation grants.

Both the clock and the bell are actually owned by the City of Quincy, according to Rev. Bennett who said repairs to the clock will be made while the scaffolding is still up. The pastor has been coordinating the project with Architect Jim Edwards.

"We're very pleased," said Rev. Bennett, noting the new bell, a previously owned bell, will be installed via a crane after the current bell is removed.

"It seems to be a very wise use of community preservation funds," Dr. Edward Fitzgerald, Executive Director of the Quincy Historical Society, told councillors at Monday's meeting.

Fitzgerald outlined the history of the congregation's bells and clocks prior to the council's vote and detailed the city's purchase of bells and clocks long before the current building was constructed in 1828.

"There's been a long history of support for both the bell and the clock," said Fitzgerald, stating that the first bell was ordered in 1811 by selectmen from patriot and silversmith Paul Revere and paid for with municipal funds.

Of course, that bell summoned the towns' residents to town meetings, as well as prayer, while the clock offered citizens an accurate timepiece

That bell lasted until 1859 and the crack in the current 3,012-pound bell was first referenced in 1939, according to Fitzgerald, The current bell is roughly four feet at its widest point.

THE 152-YEAR old bronze bell in the tower of United First Parish Church is cracked and will be replaced with the help of $100,000 in community preservation funds approved by the City Council Monday night. Church Pastor Rev. Sheldon Bennett points to the crack in the 3,012-pound bell installed in 1859. Quincy Sun Photo/Robert Bosworth

Fitzgerald outlined a similar history for the church's clocks which were also purchased by the city in 1844, 1859 and, most recently, 1952.

"It's a worthy and necessary investment," said Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro.

City Council President Kevin Coughlin said that the Community Preservation Committee had approved the transfer earlier that day before its submittal to the council.

As a rule, the year's CPA grants are announced in the spring. However, this project was considered exceptional because the work has already begun on the church tower and reinstalling the scaffolding would involve considerable costs.

• On Oct. 9, 1635, religious dissident Roger Williams is banished from the Massachusetts Bay Colony by the General Court after speaking out against the right of civil authorities to punish religious dissension. Sculpting began again with Jefferson on the left side of Washington.

40% Voter Turnout Seen For Nov. 8

Voter turnout for the Nov. 8 city election – compared to last Tuesday's preliminary election – will be like an elevator at the basement floor.

It can only go up.

But how much?

City Clerk Joseph Shea is forecasting a 40 percent turnout when voters head to the polls to cast ballots for mayor, city councillor and school committee in six weeks.

SHEA

If that prediction is on target, it will be a marked improvement from the Sept. 20th run-off for councillor in Ward 2 and Ward 6. Only 14.33 percent of voters in those two wards – or 2,696 out of 18,814 registered – went to the polls in 10 precincts.

Shea's forecast is based in part from recent history. Two years ago, 44 percent of the city's electorate cast ballots in the final election that featured a mayoral rematch between incumbent Tom Koch and the man he ousted in 2007 – former Mayor William Phelan.

The potential does exist, however, that this year's election could outdraw the 2009 campaign.

That's because there are 19 candidates competing in seven contested races on the Nov. 8 ballot. Those include two open ward council seats that could help spike turnout in those neighborhoods.

Headlining this year's election is another mayoral race. Koch is seeking his third two-year term. He's challenged by Anne Mahoney, a member of the School Committee.

For City Council, there are four candidates seeking three at-large seats (incumbents Joe Finn and Mike McFarland), Doug Gutro and John Rodophele, Sr. Gutro is vacating his Ward 5 seat to run at-large. Rodophele is making his first bid for elective office.

There are contested council races in Ward 2 and Ward 5 where the seats are open; and in Ward 3 and 6 where incumbents have opposition.

Candidates are: Brad Croall and Steve Perdios, Ward 2; and Kirsten Hughes and Neil McCole in Ward 5. The four are all first-time candidates.

In Ward 3, Councillor Kevin Coughlin is challenged by John Cain, Sr. In Ward 6, Councillor Brian McNamee is challenged by Brian Radell. Cain has run for the Ward 3 seat before; Radell is a political newcomer.

ACCORDING TO RECENT figures from the Quincy Election Department, there are 54,235 registered voters in Quincy. That's a decrease of 984 from Oct. 13, 2010 when 55,219 were registered.

Unenrolled voters are first with 25,534; Democrats second with 23,145 and Republicans third with 5,189. Since last October, the number of unenrolled voters has dropped 223 (from 25,757); Democrats are down 625 (from 23,770) and Republicans fell 140 (from 5,329).

QUINCY'S LATEST VOTING technology – an updated opti-scan system – passed with flying colors on Preliminary Election, Shea reports.

"I am very pleased (with how the machines worked). I worry about something new but I think things could not have gone better," the city clerk said.

The new voting method asks voters to make their ballot choices by filling in an oval next to a candidate's name. This differs from the old manner of connecting a candidate's name to an arrow with a line.

Voters should like the new method: it will even tell them if they have not voted correctly.

"If you draw a line instead of filling in the oval, the machine won't take it," Shea said. "That happened a few times during the preliminary. So, in those circumstances, the ballot is discarded and the voter receives another ballot to use."

The city council in May approved leasing the new machines in May. The Secretary of State must certify the equipment before the city can purchase it.

Will the latest-and-greatest voting technology make overriding an election result by recount a thing of the past?

"I would never say never but this stuff is pretty good," Shea said.

GOOF DEPARTMENT: Last week's story on the preliminary election noted Steve Perdios, who won one of the nominations for councillor in Ward 2, was 46 years old.

Steve is actually 43.

"I need every year I can get," said a good-natured Perdios.

PERDIOS

Also, we also want to set the record straight concerning a recent column that listed Councillor Mike McFarland as the longest serving public official in Quincy at this time with 16 years of service.

BRAGG

There is another elected official who is in her 16th year as well.

That is School Committeewoman Jo-Ann Bragg.

So, for the moment anyway – Mike and Jo-Ann are "co-deans" of city government.

Mike is on the ballot running again for councillor at-large. Bragg – who has received many awards and accolades during her public service career – is stepping down from the school committee and is not seeking another term.

QUINCY BOSTON-BOUND? According to one source, Quincy will be placed in a district with Boston when the new re-districted Congressional map is placed before state lawmakers for approval next month. The new map will show the boundary lines for the state's nine Congressional districts since the Bay State is losing one seat due to the 2010 federal census.

So, that means Con. William Keating – who represents the 10th district – will have to decide whether he challenges one of his Congressional colleagues in 2012 if he wants to remain in Washington. It doesn't appear any of the other nine Congressmen will retire or seek another office.

KEATING

While some speculation has Keating challenging Cong. Steve Lynch who currently represents a Boston-based district, some observers think Keating could take on Rep. Barney Frank. Keating is from Sharon which is currently in Frank's district. He also owns a house in Bourne. The Cape would probably be a part of Frank's new district.

Scenes From Yesterday

SQUAW ROCK, SQUANTUM, MASS.

THIS 1920 scenic postcard is a view of Squaw Rock that is located at the northern tip of Squantum in Dorchester Bay. Squaw Rock is an ancient formation of various types of rocks formed into its present shape by a glacier thousands of years ago and by wind and tides ever since. It protrudes upwards 40 feet from sea level. Popular Indian lore has it that it was named for an Indian maiden who leapt to her death from here into the sea below, although other legends tell of different origins of the name. Myles Standish, the first European to set foot in Quincy, landed near here between Squaw Rock and the adjacent Chapel Rocks in September 1621, three hundred and ninety years ago. The area hasn't changed much since then. In this old postcard scene the sign facing Dorchester Bay advertised water view dining at the Squantum Inn. It was trying to attract some of the thousands of summer day-trippers that passed by here on their way to Nantasket. The Squantum Inn was located near today's Shoreham Street and had a sweeping veranda overlooking the bay. This area, now known as Squantum Park, was purchased from private owners by the City of Boston in 1893 when they were building the Moon Island sewer plant just off the coast. After years of haggling it was acquired by the City of Quincy in 1974. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Special Education Benefit At Sons Of Italy Oct. 14

A fundraiser will be held to raise money for the Quincy Public Schools Special Education Department on Oct. 14 from 7 p.m. to midnight at the Sons of Italy in Quincy.

"This is our second year holding the fundraiser," said fundraiser organizer Kelli Guarino. "Last year we raised over $8,000 that went towards teacher's grants."

This is the second year Guarino and her husband Vinny decided to hold the fundraiser because their son is a part of the Special Education Department in school and they wanted to give back.

They hope to raise the same if not more at this year's event.

The money is given to selected teachers, who are chosen by Vinny and Kelli, and goes towards items such as a therapeutic swing, sensory materials, reading programs, floor mats, and other equipment.

"We wanted to give back to the teachers because they have done so much," said Guarino. "This fundraiser not only benefits the special needs students of the schools, but every student of Quincy Public Schools."

Even though the fundraiser says Special Education, Guarino said that the money is given to help the Quincy Public Schools as a whole.

Last years fundraiser was so successful that Guarino said the Sons of Italy's largest function room was almost filled to capacity, and they couldn't let any people in.

"We weren't expecting such a great turn out last year, we weren't prepared," said Guarino. "This year we are charging $20 instead of $10 to get in, but we are also including food, and we are much more prepared help wise this year for hopefully another big turn out."

The QHS Culinary Department donates food for the event, such as finger foods and hors d'oeuvres.

All prizes that are being raffled off are donated items and will consist of trips, sporting event tickets, gift cards, and gift baskets. Those who attend will be able to get a chance in winning the prizes by purchasing raffle tickets.

DJ Ray Papile will provide the music and parents are welcome to bring their children.

"We hope this can be a yearly event," said Guarino. "It's been a difficult year for everyone but we want to give back to the teachers who have been so great to our children, they are the ones that deserve it."

City Collects $627,000 In Back Taxes

This Week
1982
29 Years Ago

By FRANK McCAULEY

Mayor Francis X. McCauley announced that since January the city had collected $627,000 in back property taxes and interest and has agreements for the payment of $1,263,000 more.

McCauley said that when he became mayor nine months ago he asked City Treasurer Robert Foy to compile a list of individuals and firms that owed the city more than $2.9 million in back taxes, some dating back to the 1960s.

Since then, Mayor McCauley said that City Solicitor William B. Golden has been aggressively seeking payment of those overdue taxes.

"It is the policy of this administration to demand payment in full of all taxes and interest die," said McCauley. "No waivers or abatements have been granted to anyone owing back taxes."

"This administration will continue to pursue the collection of all back taxes due the city and will start foreclosure proceedings against those who do not indicate a willingness to pay what they owe," concluded McCauley.

TOURAINE BUILDING LEASED, SEARS TENANTS SEEN

Robells Department Store with goods in moderate price range plans to open in ten days in the old Touraine building at 1563 Hancock St., next to the Sears, Roebuck building.

Planning Director James Lydon said that lease forms for space in the Sears building itself have been sent to two other firms for consideration by their boards of directors.

Lydon said Meredith and Drew, agents for the Faxon Trust, which owned the Sears building, would continue to advertise for at least two more tenants for the building, which has been vacant since Sears moved to the South Shore Plaza in Braintree.

Musical Adaptation Of 'Little Women' At Eastern Nazarene College

The Eastern Nazarene College Theatre Department will present Little Women, a musical adaptation of Louisa May Alcott's beloved novel chronicling the lives of four sisters growing up in a New England town during the Civil War.

To be presented at the Cove Fine Arts Center on the college's Wollaston campus, Little Women will premiere Thursday, Oct. 13 at 7:30 p.m., with additional performances offered Saturday, Oct. 15 at 3 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., and Thursday, Oct. 20 through Saturday, Oct. 22 at 7:30 p.m.

Thursday evening performances will be followed by a conversation with the play's actors and production team.

"Little Women is such an icon of our history as Americans and New Englanders," director Tara Brooke Watkins said. "I'm hoping that people see our production and feel that they are wrapping themselves up in a cozy quilt next to a fire with those they love most."

Watkins said ENC's production will benefit from the college's close proximity to Alcott's family home in Concord.

"As a cast, we visited the Alcott home, the Orchard House, and heard many stories of these girls' lives," she said. "The cast walked away with a better understanding of their characters and who they were in real life.

"Our set also reflects the look and colors of Orchard House," she continued, "and the costumes bring us into the Civil War that these little women all lived through."

The play's musical elements will also reflect the wartime setting.

"The music reflects classic musical theatre as well as Civil War marches and dances," Watkins said, "so we will hopefully find ourselves automatically transported to Alcott's world. It's been an enriching experience to work on this show, and I know it will be equally enriching for those who come to see it."

Tickets for Little Women are $15 general admission, $10 for students, $5 for children 12 and under. For tickets or more information, visit www.brownpapertickets.com.

NQHS Teacher Uses 9-11 Articles As Learning Tool

By EMILY TAFT

North Quincy High School history teacher Rimas Ambraziejus started collecting newspaper articles from the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks after that fateful day.

This year – on the 10th anniversary of that tragic day – he posted the articles on the two walls in the school's Atrium of Honor as a learning tool for his students.

"Most of my collection is from the days following the attacks," said Ambraziejus. "I have collected them from 2001 up until 2006 mostly and then added to it when appropriate, such as articles on the killing of Osama bin Laden, which I thought would be a fitting end to the collection."

Ambraziejus was at the high school the day the two towers were hit and remembers having to answer questions and concerns by students at the time.

The laminated photos, and articles were taped to a white background and displayed from one door to another on the far side of the Atrium of Honor room.

They cover everything from pictures of when the plans hit, to stories of lost ones, and memorials held throughout the world.

The collage was first discussed last spring between Principal Earl Metzler and Ambraziejus where they came up with what they thought would be an appropriate memorial.

"This is a school rich in tradition with sacrifice, and where the memorial was placed is appropriate. Rimas is very passionate about the subject, and when he first came to me with the idea I had no idea how many clippings he actually had," said Metzler. "For me it brings up both personal and professional thoughts. On one hand I feel it is the right thing to do in educating the students of this day, and on the other it's such a personal day for me because it was the day my daughter was born."

The newspaper clippings were first spread throughout Ambraziejus classroom until he moved to a different room and now they are back up for display where many more can see in the Atrium.

"I thought displaying them for the 10th anniversary would be a great idea, since most of the students here don't remember that day," said Ambraziejus. "I thought it would be a great way to stimulate knowledge and understanding of that day in the students."

Ambraziejus, a teacher of 17 years, has covered all types of history subjects from World History to and World War II. He also covers 9/11 and the war following in his history classes and believes it is an important subject.

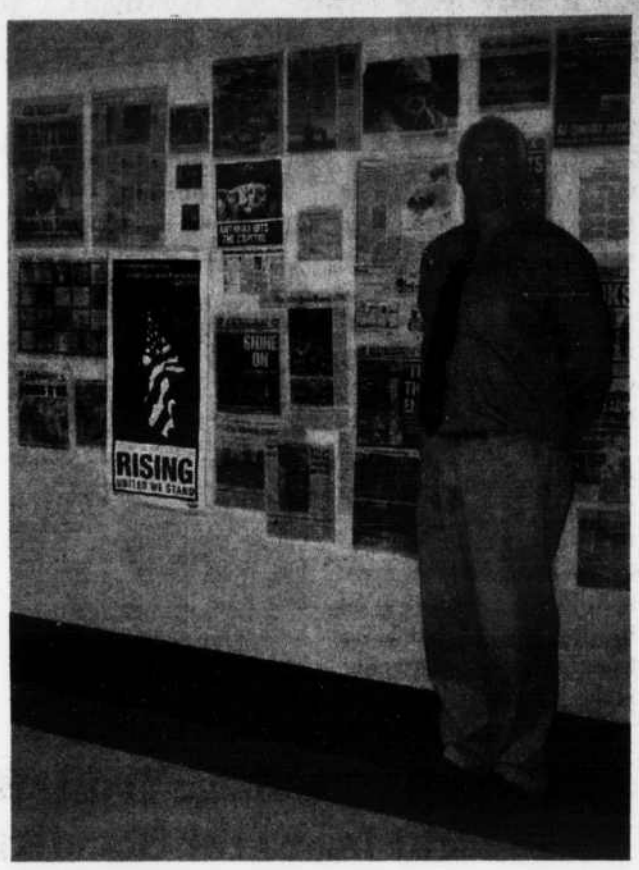

"When I teach the students about it I make sure I focus more on the heroes and the heroism of that day and the days following then the terrorists. They are the ones that gave their lives for others to live, and they are the ones still fighting and giving their lives," said Ambraziejus. "I think that 9/11 was an atrocity."

Department Head of History Michael Connor believes it's an important subject to touch upon inside and out of the classrooms.

"It is very important for the children who didn't live through that day to see what their parents and older siblings went through," said Connor. "I remember feeling that I had to make the students in front of me feel safe and secure and answer any question they asked me as honestly as I possible could. I felt the country was galvanized; it was a time where people put self-interest behind."

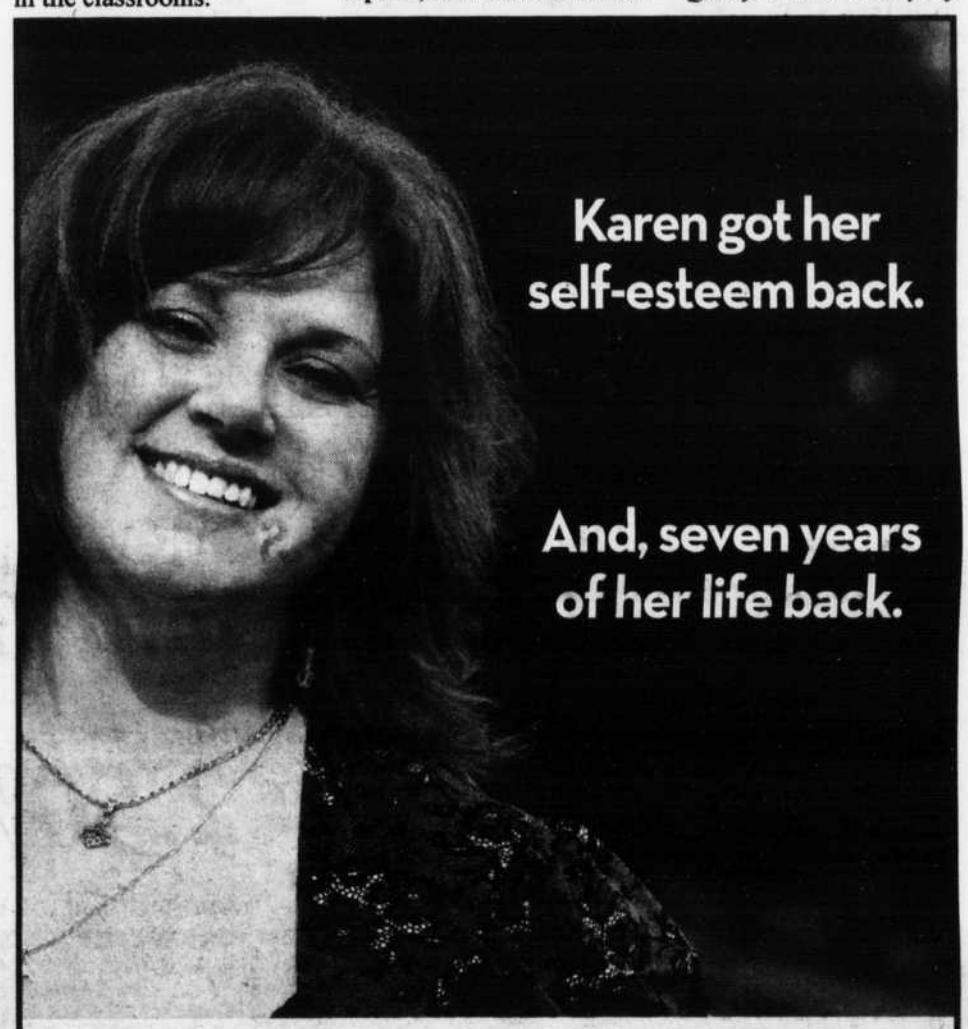

Ambraziejus said he believes that in the years to follow he will be adding other clips from the 10th anniversary and pictures of the memorial site, but doesn't know when the wall will be on display again.

"The wall has to come down eventually," said Ambraziejus. "Life has to go on, other projects will have to go up, but its something that will always be remembered and taught in the classrooms."

'Raising The Stakes' Fundraiser Oct. 6 To Benefit QCAP

By EMILY TAFT

The Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. will hold the fundraiser "Raising the Stakes" Thursday, Oct. 6 from 6 to 10 p.m at the Granite Links Golf Club in Quincy.

The fundraiser is a gambling-themed casino event. Attendees will receive $1,000 worth of play money.

Although it is not real gambling, QCAP Development and Marketing Director Susan Harrington said it's going to be great event and they are excited to be holding what should be an eventful and entertaining night.

Tickets for the event are $100 per person and $175 per couple. "Raising the Stakes" will include food, music, a silent auction, and of course pretend gambling.

Some prizes up for auction include a trip to Aruba, a week in Clearwater, Florida, sports tickets to the Red Sox, Bruins, and Celtics; restaurant gift cards, VIP tickets to the Drop-Kick Murphy's concert, and a golf foursome to Furnace Brook Golf Club.

Because of a $300,000 cut to their budget, QCAP has been forced – for the first time in a decade – to look to the community they have been supporting for years in hopes to raise money to help their housing and emergency food centers.

"We are confident that these cuts won't have a long-term negative impact on us," said QCAP Executive Director Beth Ann Strollo. "We will always have to watch our budget closely and continue to look to raise more private funds, so we can continue meeting the demands for assistance."

QCAP hopes to raise more than $50,000 at the Oct. 6th fundraiser, Strollo said. She noted QCAP would need to continue to raise money on top of what they receive that night because of the high demand for help.

"We will have to look for other grant revenues and ways to raise money," said Strollo. "The community has been wonderful and very responsive. We wanted to do something relaxing and fun."

QCAP, founded in 1965, is a program that began to address the poverty problem in Quincy. Today, the program has evolved to reach as many as 80 communities and work from the ground up with residents financial problems.

The program helps families and individuals not only with their bills but also with getting them the education they need in order to get the jobs they want and the money they deserve. They will pay the rent for a month or the gas bill so those who aren't able to can save up and get back on their feet instead of ending up on the street.

"We provide individuals with the support structure they need, in hopes that they can then go on to support their families and be self-sufficient," said Harrington. "We are that bridge that helps the people in the community get back on their feet."

Harrington recalled a man they had recently just helped who had lost his job and was unable to support his family and pay for heat in his house.

"His fuel bills were building up so we provided him with a short term fuel assistance program," said Harrington. "I remember that in one room of his house you could put a glass of water in there and it would freeze, and that's when we stepped in and helped him with weatherizing his house to help him save money on his heating bill later on. Those are the types of things we want to help with."

QCAP's main goal throughout every program and assistance they provide is to prevent homelessness, not only in the Quincy area but all around the South Shore. "This is a really critical time, we haven't seen the community like this before. This is a tough economy we are in right now," said Harrington. "We have been very fortunate to not have to do fundraisers in the past. We are very humbled by the support of the community."

Finn, Gutro Question Appeal

Two councillors said Monday that they want the city's legal team to explain why the city is appealing the Civil Service Commission's decision regarding the appointment of Fire Chief Joseph Barron.

In that decision issued last week, Commissioners unanimously found that the city had not offered the second candidate, Deputy Chief Gary Smyth, an opportunity to be considered. Commissioners, also, charged that the process was tainted by politics in favor of Barron.

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro referred to the Commission's unanimous ruling and its 60-page explanation when he asked for further information from the administration.

Jim Fatseas, Chief of Staff for Mayor Thomas Koch, suggested that issue and questions regarding placement of the high school track be raised at a future meeting when City Solicitor James Timmins could be present.

Gutro said he was puzzled because the city did not appeal two unfavorable Civil Service decisions issued in the past two years regarding police appointments.

In both cases, the vote by Civil Service Commissioners was split, according to Gutro who noted the commisioner's Smyth decision was unanimous.

"Why are we treating this differently from the others?" asked Gutro.

Councillor Joseph Finn joined Gutro in questioning the decision on the appeal "I was kind of surprised. I encourage everyone to read it."

"We do need to get some feedback," said Finn. "It seems to me to be a pretty serious finding."

Support For Consumer Compensation Fund

City Councillors Monday unanimously supported a Consumer Compensation Fund for National Grid ratepayers financially damaged by power losses due to Tropical Storm Irene.

The petition, if approved by the state legislature, would direct penalties and fines levied against National Grid to the consumer fund, rather than to the all ratepayers

City Council President Kevin Coughlin originally introduced the petition at the Sept. 6 council meeting when he sought support for an investigation into charges that National Grid was negligent in preparing and responding to the tropical storm.

As a result, state officials have begun an investigation into National Grid's response to Irene and could levy penalties against the company.

However, Coughlin pointed out that previous penalties do not benefit the injured parties but are split among all ratepayers with customers all getting a few pennies less than a dollar.

Coughlin's petition specifically requires that funds compensate those ratepayers who suffer income or property loss due to National Grid's negligence and prohibits an increase in rates to cover the damages.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee asked how councillors could be sure that the National Grid will not increase rates to pay the penalties.

Coughlin said that state investigators will be policing the company and it would still be fined. Without this legislation, the fines against the company would still levied but will not benefit those most injured.

Says He Was Better Prepared To Lead Department

Koch Stands Behind Barron As Fire Chief Pick

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that he stands firmly behind his appointment more than two years ago of Fire Chief Joseph Barron as the more experienced and more mature of the two choices he was presented.

"Joe Barron is a firefighters' firefighter. He's a veteran who served his country and he had more experience and was better prepared allaround for the job of leading the department," said Koch. "I had two options and I picked the one I believed was in the best interest of the Quincy Fire Department and the City. There's really no more drama to it than that."

After three previous court rulings shooting down appeals of the appointment, the City plans to seek another independent court review of last week's decision by the state Civil Service Commission, which ordered the City to restart the chief's selection process more than 18 months after it first heard arguments in the case.

The City's legal team believes the commission may have dramatically overstepped its legal authority in its decision for a number of reasons and also made a number of factual errors in the decision. City Solicitor said all of those issues will be addressed in the City's court appeal.

When the appointment process started in 2008, Mayor Koch was presented a list of the top three scorers on the Civil Service exam for chief. The top scorer, Deputy Chief Edward Fenby, declined the job, leaving Mayor Koch to pick from Barron and Deputy Chief Gary Smyth, who were separated by a single point on the exam.

"If Civil Service believes there is absolutely no room for any kind of discretion, they should send me one name and be done with one it," Koch said.

Mayor Koch had no comment on the allegations leveled by his opponent in the November election, according to spokesman Chris Walker.

"There are too many positive things vital to our future going on in the City right now for the Mayor to get distracted by anyone who tosses venomous and dishonest bombshells to gain attention rather than working to move Quincy in the right direction," he said.

will also proceed on its own permitting track – as well as more than an acre of green roof space and 500 new mature street trees. The project will be built to LEED-Neighborhood standards, will overhaul all utilities in the downtown area to maximize efficiency, and create new drainage systems throughout Quincy Center.

The 25-page scoping document issued by Secretary Sullivan lays out the specific details of what state regulators want to see in the impact study. Stephen Chrusciel, Street-Works Director of Construction, said there is nothing in the document that was unexpected.

"Together with the City, we are confident we will be able to fully address every issue raised in the scoping document," he said.

Mahoney: Civil Service Ruling Confirms Koch Mismanagement

The Civil Service Commission decision vacating Mayor Thomas Koch's appointment of Joseph Barron as fire chief is just the latest confirmation that the Koch administration is rife with cronyism and mismanagement, mayoral candidate Anne Mahoney said in a statement last week.

In a new ruling that characterized the Koch administration's hiring process as "circuitous, irrational and financially unnecessary," Commissioner Paul M. Stein found that Koch's decision to bypass Deputy Chief Gary Smyth in favor of Barron was based not on professional experience and longevity, but on the fact that Barron was a longtime friend of Koch's chief of staff, James Fatseas, and a supporter of Koch's political campaigns.

"...the evidence established that Quincy's decision [to select Barron as chief] was predetermined that Deputy Chief Gary Smyth would be bypassed long before, and without any regard to, the candidates' rank order on any civil service Certification list or a fair and impartial evaluation of strengths and weaknesses of the candidates through a reasonably designed objective process free of political or personal bias, as civil service law requires," the ruling stated.

"This Civil Service Commission ruling is the latest independent confirmation by a legal authority that Tom Koch has taken political patronage and cronyism to a whole new level," Mahoney said. "We have a real problem in this city when a critical public safety position like fire chief is awarded based not on professional experience and qualifications but on whether you went to school with Tom Koch's friend and gave money to the mayor's political campaign."

The Civil Service Commission ruling was particularly critical in noting that the Koch administration went to great lengths in its attempts to bypass Smyth in favor of appointing Barron as chief. The 60-page ruling includes numerous references to instances where Koch administration staff, including chief of staff Fatseas, manipulated the process to give Barron an unfair advantage, including calling for a new chief's test and recruiting applicants to ensure that the required minimum of four candidates participated:

"Mr. Fatseas, who did not generally intrude in non-financial departmental management issues but [is] Joseph Barron's longtime personal friend, took steps to try to ensure that the Chief's exam scheduled for March 2008 would have sufficient applicants to go forward, by directing Smyth to encourage another Deputy Chief, then on injured leave, to sign up for the exam. This clearly would have worked to the advantage of Joseph Barron."

The ruling includes numerous references to the fact that Koch was aware Barron had supported his political campaign for mayor while Smyth had supported his opponent. The document also quotes Koch as saying Barron was "the more reliable team player."

The ruling was also critical of the fact that Koch ignored a previous Civil Service Commission ruling urging him to take specific steps to ensure a fair hiring process, including holding public interviews, recording the interviews and broadcasting them on local television. Instead, Koch held closed-door, private interviews at which formal notes were not even taken:

"Under the circumstances presented by this appeal, Quincy's interview process failed to provide the necessary level of protection against arbitrary action and undue subjectivity that the Commission requires. In fact, the process actually reinforces the conclusion that the decision was predetermined rather than engender confidence that the decision was made fairly and objectively..."

"In sum," the ruling concluded, "Quincy supplied no objectively credible reason for taking the circuitous, irrational and financially unnecessary decisions made here, when, at all times, it had a clearly motivated and highly qualified candidate [Smyth] with a 'bright future ahead of him' sitting at the top of the current eligible list and serving honorably as the QFD's department head."

The ruling noted that Koch's defense rested largely on his belief that as mayor, he alone is responsible for making such hiring decisions.

"Quincy claims that, because Mayor Koch is a Plan A 'strong mayor,' who personally makes all civil service appointments and who is directly accountable to the voters for his decisions, that alone makes him sufficiently accountable for those appointments. In fact, this argument lacks merit."

"I find it very telling that the Civil Service ruling calls out Tom Koch for his belief that he is a law unto himself," Mahoney said. "Tom Koch defied the entire Civil Service process to give an important public safety position to a friend and political supporter. The worst part is he refuses to acknowledge that there's anything wrong with that and his refusal to accept the legal authority of the courts and the Civil Service Commission is costing taxpayers for all these grievances, appeals and lawsuits."

The Civil Service Commission's ruling orders Quincy to vacate Barron's appointment as permanent fire chief and begin the process over again, following a detailed list of steps designed to create a fair and objective process.

As part of her campaign platform, Mahoney has pledged to implement new hiring policies that prohibit nepotism and preferential hiring.

The Sun attempted to reach Smyth for comment but he could not be reached.

Smyth's attorny, Betsy Ehrenberg, said, "It's a great decision. We're very pleased.

"We would expect the city to do what the commission has ordered it to do," she added, referring to the Civil Service decision.

Central Middle School Construction Slated To Begin

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday that a project decades in the making will show its first visible signs of construction starting next week when preliminary demolition work begins on the Hancock Street location of the new Central Middle School.

"This absolutely vital new building for our schoolchildren has been talked about for years, and we are getting it done today," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "The new Central Middle School will be the first-class facility our students deserve, and it will also be the most cost-efficient school building built in the Commonwealth. It will be done on time, and on budget."

Residents will see construction fencing erected around the former St. Ann's School on Hancock Street beginning next week, when workers from demolition contractors NASDI, LLC will begin working inside the building. A community meeting is tentatively scheduled for 6 p.m. next Wednesday at the current Central Middle School to provide details of the demolition project for neighbors.

The first several weeks of the $1.58 million demolition project will take place largely inside of St. Ann's as material, including any asbestos, is safely removed from the building. That will be followed by external demolition of buildings and other site preparation work on the four parcels where the school will be built, all of which is scheduled to be completed before the end of the year.

The $50 million school, scheduled to be open to students in the fall of 2013, will be built at the highest state reimbursement rate possible of 80 percent after the Koch administration worked with the Massachusetts School Building Authority to involve the project in the state's Model School Program.

Central will be the first middle school in the state to be built under the model school program. The MSBA's Model School Program adapts and re-uses the design of successful, recently constructed schools; simplifying the design process, reducing the amount of time projects are in the design phase and lowering design fees, officials said.

Using elements of a previously designed Model School allows projects to begin construction faster and reduces construction costs for the project. At least a year of design work can be saved by using a Model School, officials said.

Mayor Koch also noted that the City saved substantial money by negotiating the purchase of the four Hancock Street land parcels needed for the school without using costly and time-consuming eminent domain proceedings.

"We are working together with our state leaders to achieve maximum savings for our local taxpayers and we worked together with the property owners to prevent any land-takings, saving us considerable time and money," Koch said.

Blood Drive Friday From 2 To 7 P.M. At Quincy Marriott

The Gift Of Life: Mom Donates 60% Of Liver To Son

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy resident Laura Guinto didn't think twice when it came to donating 60% of her liver to son Joe Jr.

Laura – a mother of four, three boys and one girl – said she would have done it for any of her children.

"As a mother you don't have to think about something like that," said Laura. "I had no second thoughts about donating to my son, I knew I had to do it. I would do anything to help save his life."

When Joe Jr. was 18 he tried enlisting in the Coast Guard and during his physical they found his spleen was enlarged, and after numerous blood tests they determined he had liver disease.

JOE GUINTO, Jr.

"Facing liver disease at 18 is tough," said Joe Jr. "After everything we went through, it all kind of turned out ok."

Doctors told the Guinto family that Joe could live another 10-15 years before he needed a transplant, but suddenly his health deteriorated and at the age of 25 he needed a liver transplant.

"Everyone in our family stepped up to help," said Laura. "I ended up being the perfect match."

The whole family, cousins, uncles, aunts, volunteered when asked if they would be willing to see if they were a good match.

"At first I didn't want anyone to have to be put through that situation," said Joe. "Then it was either die or get this transplant, there was no other option."

Now three weeks after the surgery both mother and son are recovering and ready to give back to an organization that helped them through.

Tomorrow (Friday) from 2 to 7 p.m at the Quincy Marriott, the Guinto family along with relatives and friends will be holding a blood drive in hopes to replenish the blood they used to help Joe through his surgery.

"The Red Cross helped my family a lot," said Laura. "Knowing my son needed to use a lot of their supplies we wanted to be able to replenish it as much as possible."

The family planned on giving blood before the surgery but due to the fact that Joe's health worsened they were unable to do it in time.

"We have had an overwhelming amount of volunteers for the drive," said Laura. "We were unable to do it before the surgeries, and now we want to give back."

According to American Red Cross Communications Program Manager Jecoliah Ellis they receive many donations from those who have been in a position like Joe.

"We are very fortunate at the American Red Cross to have the opportunity to meet and work with recipients," said Ellis. "We receive all different kinds of donations that are in honor of, or in memory of those we have helped all across the country."

Now unable to join the Coast Guard, Joe will be focusing on a few of his passions.

"My true passion is art, and I hope one day to open up a gallery," said Joe. "I also love to cook, so I have been thinking about doing something in that field as well. For right now I am just focusing on getting better and staying positive about the situation."

All presenting donors will receive a coupon for half off a one-day pass to Six Flags New England and they will also receive a coupon for a $12.99 oil change and free tire rotation, redeemable at any Monro Muffler/Brake location, or a coupon for $30 off any set of four tires, redeemable at any Tire Warehouse location.

Donors should call 1-800-Red Cross (733-2767) or visit www.RedCrossBlood.org to schedule an appointment.

$50M In Core Funds Expected For Center Project

tors to Town Brook, Adams Green, the Ross Parking Garage and Parkingway tenants.

Street-Works of White Plains, NY is the designated developer for the city's planned revitalization project.

In order for the $1.6 billion overhaul of Quincy Center to move forward, the city must have $50 million in place for Town Brook and the Adams Green by Jan. 1,2012.

"You're going to be smiling come October or November," predicted Harrington after describing the state's I-Cubed program which is aimed at bonding new public infrastructure improvements necessary to support new private development.

According to Harrington's formal report, the city's $50 million application "is in the final stages of authorization by the State."

The state's I-Cubed, which stands for the I's in infrastructure, investment and incentive, bonds such projects as Quincy's on the premise that the state will recoup the money through such avenues as sales and income tax once the project is underway.

However, the city must back the bonds in the event the project does not live up to income projections. Therefore, the Funding Team will ask the City Council to authorize the bonds at some point after mid-October. That authorization protects the state in the event the growth "does not meet state bonded debt service."

"We look forward to news on I-Cubed," said Harrington, asserting that Quincy's project will employ 14,000 workers and foster business growth, thus boosting state's income, sales tax and other state revenues and fully cover the state's bond payments.

While I-Cubed bonds may provide the largest chunk of cash for public projects, Harrington described other sources of funds totaling million of dollars, such as a $14 million application underway at MassWorks, a $6 million transfer from the Concourse project to Adams Green transportation planning, a $1.2 million application as a Gateway City, $978,000 already awarded as a transportation grant and a recent $5 million grant from the state.

Quincy is the "only city in the Commonwealth awarded money" through the federal transportation enhancement project, according to Harrington who said the funds will likely be used to improve the train and bus station, Adams Green, and bike transportation.

Harrington also praised the hiring of former MassDOT Chief Engineer Frank Tramontozzi as Quincy Center Engineering Manager to assist him and the mayor's office during the project.

Councillor Joseph Finn and committee members expressed added confidence when Jim Fatseas, Mayor Thomas Koch's chief of staff announced that the city has retained Attorney Robert Fishman to monitor the legal aspects of the project,

Following Harrington's presentation, Committee Chairman Doug Gutro invited Dean Rizzo, President of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, to report on interest in the project.

"A lot of good things are starting to generate," said Rizzo, reporting, "Our phone calls have increased dramatically."

Rizzo said that businesses on the center's periphery are interested in enhancing their property to benefit from a new Quincy Center.

Unfortunately, a large portion of the city's economic development grants is earmarked for the MHI Shipyard, LLC loan through 2020 and there are few new grants available for such businesses.

Adams Green & Town Brook

"The Adams Green (project) will be on schedule," according to Harrington whose formal report stated that the Federal Highway Administration has authorized Howard Stein Hudson to move forward with the design of transportation improvements and construction advertisements should be ready within a year.

As for Town Brook, Harrington described approvals under the MEPA (Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act) and from the historical commission before referring to a citizens' challenge to the city's plan to re-route Town Brook and daylight it along the Concourse.

"The city will prevail on that," said Harrington, stating that planners made sure the "documentation was bulletproof and it is."

Harrington did say there would be some adjustments to the Town Brook plan under a new Order of Conditions that requires 12 feet more of daylighting. In addition, planners are working on increasing the smelt habitat with Brad Chase, Aquatic Biologist, Mass. Division of Fisheries,

However, Harrington does not anticipate investing half a million dollars in a new pump station at Miller Street as he believes some minor improvements will solve the problems.

Despite such changes, Harrington said, "We expect there are those who will continue to appeal."

Ross Parking Garage

"There's really nothing going to change down there until mid-2013," Harrington said of the Parkingway area and Ross Parking Garage.

Harrington said that Street-Works, the city's private development firm, must provide an acceptable parking management plan before the lot is demolished and the buildings will likely stand until at least 2013.

The parking management plan will guarantee "adequate parking for all parking in place before the Ross Garage is demolished," according to Harrington.

Committee Chairman Doug Gutro described the confusion among the 25 tenants of the buildings along Parkingway who have not been informed of any timetable and are worried about relocation costs.

'The city does not own or control that building," said Harrington, noting that Street-Works has that building under agreement and tenants do not qualify for relocation.

"This is a private transaction," said Fatseas, adding that all 25 tenants have been notified.

According to both Fatseas and Harrington, any relocation aid or plan to aid tenants would likely be initiated through a partnership with Street-Works.

Harrington also described an unexpected $80,000 hit due to the removal of hazardous waste at the former Kincaide building site (1495 Hancock St.), and said the city may explore Brownfield grants through state and federal environmental agencies as recommended earlier by Gutro.

"We're going to have to take a hard look at that," said Harrington, noting it's "an old city. You're going to get hit with unexpected expenses.

Also working with Harrington are Principal Planners Robert Stevens and Kristina Johnson.

Laura Kjeldgaard Case, 36
Portraiture Photographer

A memorial service for Laura "LK" Kjeldgaard Case, 36, of Quincy, was conducted Sunday at Wollaston Church of the Nazarene, Quincy.

Mrs. Kjeldgaard Case died Sept. 20.

Born in Denver, Colorado to Susan (Kjeldgaard) Stiker and the late Dr. J. Mark Kjeldgaard, she grew up with her two younger brothers in Yarmouth, Maine. In 1990 her mother remarried and LK gained five more siblings.

In 1993 she graduated from Yarmouth High School, where she was a standout athlete, playing field hockey and lacrosse. She entered Davidson College in North Carolina before transferring to Mount Holyoke College, where she excelled in both sports. LK graduated cum laude from Mount Holyoke in 1997 majoring in medical humanities and ethics.

During the summer after graduating, she was reintroduced to her future husband, Delvyn Case, now a music professor at Wheaton College, whom she had first met as a small child. Though they had known of each other as they grew up in neighboring towns, it took a blind date set up by their mothers to get them together.

LK and Del married in 1999 and then moved to Philadelphia. After the birth of her first daughter, Alexandra, in 2000, the family moved to Massachusetts, where their second daughter, Madeline, was born in 2006. She was a devoted mother who loved spending time with her family. She loved cheering for the Red Sox, apple picking, reading, and visiting her hometown of Yarmouth, especially for the annual Clam Festival.

In the last ten years of her life, LK discovered a passion for photography, particularly for portraiture. Beginning by practicing on her own children, she eventually developed a part-time career in which she photographed hundreds of children and families. After several years of study in film and digital photography and editing, she began to also work as a free-lancer for institutions and organizations in the Greater Boston area.

LAURA KJELDGAARD CASE

Though her talent and attention to detail earned her awards for her work, she always viewed her work as a ministry, often working for free for individuals and groups in her community who could not normally afford high-quality photos of their children, families, and events. Examples of her work may be found at www.lkcasephotography.com.

She was an active member of Hope Central Church in Jamaica Plain, where she served as a lay member of several committees. A self-proclaimed introvert, she maintained a private but strong faith whose authenticity was best attested by her empathy for others and by her generosity to many whom she did not even know.

Wife of Delvyn Case of Quincy; mother of Alexandra and Madeline; daughter of Susan and Bud Stiker; sister of Nicholas and his wife Wendy Kjeldgaard (her husband's sister), Timothy Kjeldgaard, Ned and his wife Stephanie Stiker, Matthew and his wife Leigh Ann Stiker, Tony Stiker and his wife Melissa Schulz, John and his wife Jill Stiker and Samantha Stiker Sheesley and her husband Rick.

She is also survived by many aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews, cousins and friends.

Memorial donations may be made to the Laura K. Case Memorial Fund through Helping Hands Ministries: www.hhmin.org. Expressions of condolences may be sent to the Case family at 162 Waterston Ave, Quincy, MA 02170.

School Committee Eyes Improving Instant Alert System

By EMILY TAFT

The School Committee discussed improving the school system's instant alert process along with updates on the maintenance of several schools and the Study Island program at it's Sept. 21st meeting.

Five or six years ago, Quincy Public Schools implemented a system that allowed speed and accuracy of how messages went out to students and parents, according to Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro.

The issue with this system according to some members of the school committee is that the system isn't up and running quick enough.

The schools use a system called Honeywell, which allows schools to send up to 100,000 messages in 15 minutes.

Honeywell allows schools to notify parents and students about routine notifications such as activity schedules and reminders, along with emergency notifications such as weather-related closings, amber alerts and lockdowns.

The program, although helpful, is not up and running until the last week of September or the first week of October, according to DeCristofaro. Some School Committee members said that isn't soon enough.

"It is really important for these parents to hear about emergencies and social programs a lot sooner than they are right now," said School Committee member Barbara Isola. "I would like to see us maybe tighten the program a bit, I think we can do better."

Some ideas that came up were different ways to communicate with parents such as posting information on the public school website, sending out emails, and also sending out a general phone call to all parents of students in the Quincy public school system, until the Honeywell system is up and running.

Along with the information on the instant alert system, the committee also discussed updates on some of the maintenance being done in the different schools.

School Committee member Elaine Dwyer informed the committee that there has been extensive work done on Sterling Middle School's drain where there was a leak.

Dwyer also updated the committee on the 17 of the 19 Quincy public school roof repairs.

Dwyer said that schools with metal roofs, such as Sterling Middle School, depending on the weather and temperature, might not get done until the temperature heats up because the roof has to be at 50 degrees or higher in order to work on it.

"A lot of the work on these schools is done after school or on Saturdays," said Dwyer. "I think everything will fall into place and all projects will hopefully be done by the end of October."

Executive Director of Career and Technical Education and Instructional Technology Keith Segalla presented the School Committee with news about the Study Island program being implemented throughout the Quincy middle and elementary schools.

"Technology can expand learning," said Segalla. "This is an interactive web-based program that allows teachers to monitor students success."

Study Island is a web-based instruction, practice, assessment and reporting built for Mass. state standards. It has rigorous academic content that has both fun and engaging activities.

The website can be used anywhere, from home computers, cell phones, and in the classrooms. Segalla said the program can be used on any computer system whether it is a Mac or a PC and students are not required to use the site at home, it is voluntary.

The program also allows parents to log on and see how their child is doing in the different subjects it offers. Study Island covers the subjects of English, math, and science.

Students and parents can also look to see where they fall progress-wise compared to other students their age.

"This program doesn't replace the effectiveness of our teachers," said Broad Meadows Middle School Principal Lawrence Tagleri. "This is just another tool to help our students learn."

According to Segalla, depending on the school, students will spend up to 30 minutes once or twice a week in the classroom on Study Island.

Every middle school and elementary school in the Quincy public school district has this program according to Segalla.

Teachers are trained on how to use the program, but aren't required to use it, although Segalla said that most teachers want to use the program.

"This is a great program," said vice chairwomen Anne Mahoney. "I am very excited to hear we have the program in all of our schools."

Firefighters Donate $6,000 To Support Freshman Sports

The Quincy Fire Department recently presented a check for $6,000 to the School Committee to support freshman sports.

Quincy firefighters Ernie Arienti and Paul Moody presented the check at the board's Sept. 21st meeting to help over 300 student athletes. The money was raised through union dues and by running a golf tournament in June.

"We try to give back to the community as much as we can," said Arienti. "It is essential to try and keep these kids off the streets and out of trouble, that's why we decided to donate towards freshman sports."

With budget cuts hurting the extra-curricular activities this year, and freshman teams being non-existent in some school sports, Arienti said he hopes that the money will go towards paying for the coaches, referees, and any other equipment they may need.

"I am absolutely impressed with the amount of service the firefighters give to the schools," said Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro.

In the past the firefighters have also given back in other ways throughout the Quincy community.

They donated $2,000 to the leukemia association, one year they made cards that they handed out to seniors who put their medical information in case of an emergency, and they have also made a book that they handed out to elementary school students on fire safety.

Another Athletic Department success was announced at the meeting when Athletic Director Jim Rendle told the committee that rowing would be available for the boys and girls of Quincy and North Quincy High School.

"This is something new to us but we are working with the school principals to make sure everything is all set," said Rendle. "We held an organization meeting at both high schools and had a significant amount of interest."

The new program, which is at no cost to Quincy Public Schools, is fee based and students who want to participate will pay the same fee as the athletic fee at the school.

Students are required to go through extensive training and swimming exercises; and every student that will be participating will be certified, according to Rendle.

Athletes will be practicing in Fore River, and the boats being used will be shared with Thayer Academy.

"My only concern is for the safety of the children," said Elaine Dwyer. "It isn't safe for them to be in those waters with fishing and oil boats going through."

Rendle said that they have received a schedule for the times when those boats will be in the water and at those times the athletes will not be practicing.

He also mentioned that as of right now there is no competing, athlete's will just be practicing and learning about the sport before they decide to put the teams in competitions.

Around 40 plus students have signed up between the two high schools, and two coaches have been hired. Both are certified in CPR and First Aid.

Montclair/Wollaston Association Marks 20th Anniversary

Neighborhood Group Cited For Community Involvement

By EMILY TAFT

The Montclair Wollaston Neighborhood Association celebrated its 20th anniversary on Sept. 15 at The View Restaurant at Presidents Golf Course.

Both past and present presidents and members enjoyed dinner and discussed the future of the association along with awards being presented.

"Many awards from the city and state were presented to MWNA in appreciation of its efforts to preserve the vitality and civic pride in its neighborhood," said MWNA President Barbara Lok. "The mayor's award cited the association's role in promoting and protecting the vital identity that gives the city its character."

Other awards were received from the Quincy City Council and the Commonwealth of Mass.

The MWNA is a private non-profit organization created to promote community involvement, create diverse opportunities for students, and provide a voice for the community.

"When we first started the neighborhood association 20 years ago we started with doing a lot of small things in the community," said Attorney Jeff Graeber, the first president of the MWNA. "We organized it to help our neighbors keep their ear to the ground."

When the organization was created, Graeber said that it was a good time to have something that gave the community a voice, and allowed people to stay informed.

"Part of the reason we created the association was because we had a growing population in our area so we wanted to make sure everyone felt welcome," said Graeber. "For those people who are constantly active and don't have much time its nice for them to know it is here and they can participate when they can."

The MWNA covers neighborhoods in the North Quincy area, and is bordered by the Neponset River to the north, Sherman and North Central Streets to the south, Newport Avenue on the east, and the Town of Milton on the west.

Lok said that they are very involved in what is going on in each community and help out whenever it is needed.

"We are very involved in the school and clean up of the community," said Lok. "We have a music program and scholarship program for the two schools we cover – the Wollaston School and Montclair School – and we also have a cleaner, greener program."

The music program helps those children who can't afford to get music lessons, buy instruments and equipment. The scholarship program is an essay contest and provides four scholarships to two students of each school.

The cleaner, greener program helps clean up the Montclair Wollaston bog and Bishop Field along with other surrounding areas when it is needed.

The association also holds days where they make care packages to send to the troops in Afghanistan and Iraq. Half of those packages are filled with knitted wool caps and gloves made by the

Forever Proud And Grateful

Allerton House Residents Thank Police, Firefighters With Cookie Drop-Off

Residents of Allerton House at Hancock Park wanted to thank the police and fire departments in Quincy during National Assisted Living Week.

They arranged a cookie drop-off to the emergency public service departments to recognize and honor them.

"Forever Proud," was the theme for the nationally celebrated week (Sept. 11-17) and the Quincy residence held many activities to underscore this theme.

JEAN CAMPO, a resident of Allerton House at Hancock Park in Quincy holds a gift basket for delivery to the Quiincy Police and Fire Departments, as a way of thanking them for their service.

RESIDENTS AND STAFF of Allerton House pose with the Quincy Fire Department's Ladder 1 following delivery of a Gift basket for the firefighters. members.

At Christmas time they organize a concert where the choruses from the Wollaston and Montclair Schools sing. In the summer, the association organizes free rides around Boston Harbor for the day.

"I would like to see more programs moving forward after 20 years," said Lok. "I would like to have us get more involved and maybe during the summer do more beach activities."

Lok said that the one problem they have had is that the number of members has decreased and they are looking for ways to get the younger families involved and part of the association.

"Most of our members are senior citizens but now we are beginning to see a change in our demographic," said Lok. "We have a lot of younger families moving into the area now and we hope we can get them to come to some meetings so we can continue on. Our hope is to come up with different ways to get them to join."

Lok joined the association many years ago where she started as a member wanting to get involved in her community.

"My neighbor had told me about the association so I started going to the meetings to see what it was about," said Lok. "After two years I took over as the secretary, then I became vice president, and now for the past two years I have been the president and I will end my run in February. I am looking forward to a little R (rest) and R (relaxation)."

Presidents are only allowed to stay in office for two years and can run again after a year out of office.

"There are a few things I would like to start before I leave in February," said Lok. "I would like to hopefully come up with some ways to draw in the younger families. Also we have a growing Asian population in our area and I would like to come up with different ways to interest them in attending as well."

The meetings take place from February to June and September to December and consist of a speaker in the beginning and a business meeting to discuss the planning of what to do around the communities follows. They are held every first Thursday of the month from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the Lutheran Good Shepherd Church on the corner of West Squantum and Harvard Streets.

"Our goal going forward is to have more outreach, and have more programs where families can come and get involved," said Lok. "There are plenty of things we can do and should do to get things moving forward."

SIDELINE CONCUSSION TEST
As concern about the potentially detrimental effects of concussion rises among chiropractors and other health professionals, a simple sideline test has been developed that can quickly and accurately diagnose concussions in athletes. The procedure, known as the King-Devick Test, assesses a range of brain functions. It involves asking the affected athlete to read single-digit numbers on index-sized cards, which normally takes about a minute. The need for more time to complete the test is an indication that a concussion has occurred, especially if the player needs more than five seconds beyond his or her baseline test time. This simple test detects impairments in eye movement, attention, language, and other symptoms of concussion, which may help prevent subsequent injury.

Quincy College Exercise Instructor Publishes Research Paper

Dr. Wayne Westcott, instructor for the Exercise Science Program at Quincy College, was recently published in the Journal of Exercise Physiology Online.

The 9-month study took place at Quincy College and included fifty-two participants (48 women and 4 men) ranging in age from 39 to 82 years that were separated into three study groups.

The Control Group did not exercise or take nutritional supplements; The Exercise Group did not take nutritional supplements but performed strength and aerobic training; and The Exercise and Nutrition Group performed strength and aerobic training while taking nutritional supplements.

Dr. WAYNE WESTCOTT

Students in both the Exercise and Exercise & Nutrition Group completed one hour of physical activity that included 25 minutes of resistance exercise strength training utilizing twelve Nautilus machines, 25 minutes of aerobic exercise, and 5 minutes of stretching. In addition to the strength and aerobic training, The Exercise and Nutrition Group drank a protein and carbohydrate shake immediately after each training session, as well as took a daily vitamin that contained calcium and vitamin D.

After the nine-month study was complete, results showed that the Exercise and Nutrition Group attained significantly greater increases in lean (muscle) weight and significantly greater reductions in resting blood pressure than the other groups.

Dr. Westcott expressed his appreciation to all of the Quincy College Exercise Science staff and students who assisted in this important research study that clearly revealed the advantages of combining sensible nutrition and appropriate physical activity for improved health and fitness.

Quincy College offers both an Associate's Degree and Certificate Degree Program in Exercise Science. The Associate's degree program of study is designed for students who wish to continue their education in the field of exercise and fitness. The program will allow students the opportunity to hone their skills as fitness professionals; develop their interpersonal communication and critical thinking skills; and become familiar with basic management principles that will help them in finding a career in the fitness industry. The certificate program is designed for students who want to work as exercise instructors in fitness centers or as independent personal trainers. Completion of this program prepares students to pass professional certification exams, such as those offered by the American Council on Exercise.

"The education I received as a student in the Exercise Science Program prepared me to change my career after the age of 50," said Westcott, instructor for the Exercise Science Program at Quincy College. "I am now a Nationally Certified ACE Personal Trainer employed at Quincy College, and work as a Personal Trainer, Specialty Class Instructor, and Floor Supervisor at the South Shore YMCA. I also have clients whom I train in their homes. I truly love my job and the fact that I am helping people get healthier through proper exercise.

"The Quincy College Exercise Science Program has achieved national recognition for its research on strength training, and our graduates have attained prominent professional positions locally in the field of fitness."

Students who are interested in enrolling in this program must fill out an application form and obtain an advisor's signature prior to registering. For more information, visit the Quincy College website at http://www.quincycollege.edu/qc/enroll/general.htm.

Tips For Driving Smarter

(NAPSA) - Recently, the White House announced an increase in fuel economy standards that would require passenger vehicles and light trucks to average 54.5 miles per gallon by 2025.

While this will go a long way to stretch fuel and our natural energy resources in the future, there are actions you can take today to help increase fuel efficiency.

John and Helen Taylor, known as the world's most fuel-efficient couple and holding 88 world records, know about stretching the boundaries of fuel efficiency. To demonstrate how you can reduce your fuel consumption and lower the price you pay at the pump, Shell and the Taylors are teaming up to introduce the Smarter Driving program by driving across 48 states, using the least amount of fuel in an unmodified, non-hybrid vehicle.

As official spokespeople for Shell, the Taylors agree that by following the Shell M.A.P. to Smarter Driving, you can become more fuel-efficient and save money with this simple plan:

• Maintenance: Perform smart maintenance before you drive:

- Make sure your tires are not over- or under-inflated: Keeping tires at the correct pressure can improve your gasoline mileage by more than 3 percent.

- Keep your engine well tuned and repair problems immediately: Tuning up your vehicle or checking emissions could improve your gasoline mileage by 4 percent on average.

• Actions: Practice smart actions and behaviors while you're behind the wheel:

- Avoid the highs and find the lows: Speeding, rapid acceleration and braking can lower gasoline mileage by up to 33 percent at highway speeds.

• Products: Purchase smart products at the right price without sacrificing quality:

- Choose a high-quality gasoline: Lower-quality gasolines can leave performance-robbing "gunk" on intake valves and fuel injectors.

- Use a loyalty or rewards payment card to save at the pump: The Taylors suggest stretching your budget. Shell has teamed up with leading grocers in more than 110 markets across the U.S. where you can earn rewards for using your existing supermarket loyalty card and then redeeming the points at participating Shell stations. Another option is to use a Shell payment card that saves you money at more than 14,000 Shell stations across the U.S.

Smarter Driving can help consumers stretch their budget while helping to protect their vehicle.

Gas Prices Down 7 More Cents, Says AAA

Massachusetts is following the national trend of falling gas prices, with a drop this week of seven cents per gallon, and a 10-cent drop over the last two weeks, according to AAA Southern New England.

AAA's Sept. 26 survey of prices in Massachusetts found self-serve, regular unleaded averaging $3.55⁹ per gallon, down seven cents from a week ago. The current price is six cents above the national average for self serve unleaded of $3.49.

A year ago at this time the Massachusetts average price was $2.59.

The range in prices in the latest AAA survey for unleaded regular is 54 cents, from a low of $3.31 to a high of $3.85. AAA advises motorists to shop around for the best prices in their area, and to make sure they and their passengers buckle up — every time.

Today's local gas prices and their ranges appear below:

SELF SERVE	GRADE	FULL SERVE
$3.55 ($3.31⁹-$3.85⁹)	Regular Unleaded	$3.75 ($3.69⁹-$3.79⁹)
$3.72 ($3.41⁹-$4.05⁹)	Midgrade Unleaded	$3.88 ($3.87⁹-$3.89⁹)
$3.83 ($3.57⁹-$4.15⁹)	Premium Unleaded	$4.02 ($3.99⁹-$4.09⁹)
$3.87 ($3.73⁹-$4.09⁹)	Diesel	$3.99 ($3.94⁹-$4.04⁹)

AAA Fuel Saving Tip of the Week

One of the easiest and most effective ways to conserve fuel is to change driving styles. Instead of making quick starts and sudden stops, go easy on both pedals. If there is a red light ahead, ease off the gas and coast up to it rather than waiting until the last second to brake. The U.S. Department of Energy reports aggressive driving can lower a car's fuel economy by up to 33 percent.

Spicing Up Your Home's Color Scheme

(NAPS) – If you want to freshen your home without spending a fortune on a major renovation, consider spicing things up with the season's newest colors – colors inspired by spices and other fresh, savory ingredients.

The eight new colors of DuPont Corian® solid surfaces blend all the ingredients of a great meal – diversity of color, attention to detail and good taste.

Stunning hues with dramatic flakes and flashes of particles set the new colors apart, while providing an aesthetic complement to both traditional and contemporary spaces.

These eye-catching colors can be used to contrast or highlight every design element in the room, from flooring to fixtures, walls to ceilings and appliances to cabinets.

The eight new colors are:

• Hickory Smoke – Buttery yellows accented with saffron veining and large silver flecks.

• Clove – Copper and cinnamon emboldened with burnished brown flecks.

• Allspice – Intense chestnut brown with smoke-infused veining accented with silver flecks.

• Basil – Dramatic waves of nutmeg and green fennel peppered with gold metallic sparkles.

• Cilantro – Calming mint blended with hints of cucumber and fresh white flecks.

• Arrowroot – Crisp white leek swirled with mushroom grays and soft silvery metallic flecks.

• Blue Spice – A complex mix of cornflower blue and rich teal with flecks of color and poppy seeds.

• Hazelnut – Warm brown coriander sprouts through a river of white sage with large gray flecks.

Title Insurance For Condos

(NAPSA)-If you plan to buy a condo, you may want to learn more about protecting your investment. Condos are just like single-family homes and land in that they carry titles. Many people do not realize that there can be just as many problems with the title to a condo as there can be with other properties. In fact, according to the American Land Title Association, the title industry must correct problems in a third of all transactions that are made.

Before you purchase the condo, your lender will require a title search. The title company will work to clear any title problems before you take possession. However, if a problem arises after closing, you will only be covered if you have purchased owner's title insurance.

CONDO OWNERS can protect their investment with title insurance.

In the current housing market, where foreclosures and liens are not uncommon, it is wise to protect your most costly investment with owner's title insurance. It can be obtained with a one-time fee that you pay at closing.

To learn more about the importance of owner's title insurance, visit www.alta.org.

Savings Are Key Part of Debt-Free Living

The surprising results of a recent survey indicate that more consumers are opting to pay off debt rather than save money. An online survey by the National Foundation for Credit Counseling showed that 89 percent of respondents believe that right now it's more important to pay off debt than to save.

It wasn't always that way. Back in 1959, when such figures were first kept, consumers were averaging savings at a rate of 8.3 percent of income. At this point, the rate of saving is only at 5 percent of income, which is up from 1 percent a few years ago.

Gail Cunningham, with the NFCC, is quoted in the organization's latest newsletter as saying, "In bad times, people save out of a fear of tomorrow, and in good times they spend as if there were no tomorrow." We're not at either point right now, not saving out of fear nor spending everything we have. Consumers are paying off debt, but they aren't saving the money that's no longer going toward those monthly payments when a debt is paid off.

The problem with paying off debt to the exclusion of saving becomes apparent when an emergency strikes and ready cash is needed. Not having money saved can put consumers in the expensive position of needing to take credit-card cash advances – if they can get them.

The availability of those cash advances has provided a cushion when times are lean. However, because of job loss, lowered incomes and more scrutiny of credit worthiness, fewer people have that credit-card cushion during an emergency.

Savings needs to become the new source of cash availability. If for no other reason, money that is saved will earn interest (although nowadays the percentage rate is pitiful), and it won't cost you the interest that a credit card will.

Yes, pay off those debts, concentrating on the one with the highest interest rate first. But as soon as you pay one off, put that money into savings every month. Begin building a fund that will cover your future plans and emergencies.

Your goal should be not only to be debt-free, but to have savings.

Bureaucracy and Paperwork

Q: During the recent storm that blew through here, my trash cans were damaged. These are heavy-duty rolling-type containers supplied by the city, and they don't blow over easily. These did, but the damage was to the lids, which got blown around in the wind. The attaching hinges, which are plastic, were broken on both containers. The lids aren't too bad. Where can I buy replacement hinges to fix the lids? – Sergei L., Newton, Mass.

A: Contact your city government about the damage. The trash cans were supplied by the city, and storm damage should be a justifiable reason to replace them without cost. Check the city's website in its city services section to see if details are published there, or call city hall.

Q: I had some renovations done to my home about six years ago. Going through my file cabinet recently, I found many of the permits and paperwork, as well as the contractor estimates and invoice. Do I really need to keep this information, or can I discard these old permits since the work is long since done? – Mark, in upstate New York

A: Keep those permits and related paperwork, including inspection reports from when the renovation was completed, with all of the other papers related to your house. If you plan to sell your home in the future, that paperwork is proof that the renovations you say were made, were actually made.

Keeping estimates and receipts also is useful, even a few years after the work was done, if not for tax purposes, then as additional proof that the work was done. Keep them with the permits and inspection reports.

HOME TIP: Get familiar with your city or local government's website. Most U.S. cities these days have sites that convey almost all of the information you need to know about local regulations, permits, licensing, etc.

Play Dress Up With Your Bathroom

(NAPSA)-When it comes to the bathroom, there are simple, stylish and budget-friendly ways to creatively dress it up.

From the shower curtain to hooks or even your toilet paper, paying special attention to these seemingly ordinary, everyday objects is an easy way to make any bathroom an oasis.

Lifestyle and interior decoration pro Maxwell Gillingham-Ryan of Apartment Therapy has teamed up with the Cottonelle brand to share creative tips on how people can make the most of their bathroom. After all, Maxwell is devoted to helping people make their homes beautiful, organized and healthy-including the bathroom.

For some fresh ideas, see Maxwell's favorite tips below.

• Long Is Luxurious. Make your bathroom look more elegant by making your shower curtain taller. Move your shower curtain bar up-right below the ceiling-and install an extra-long shower curtain (or make your own).

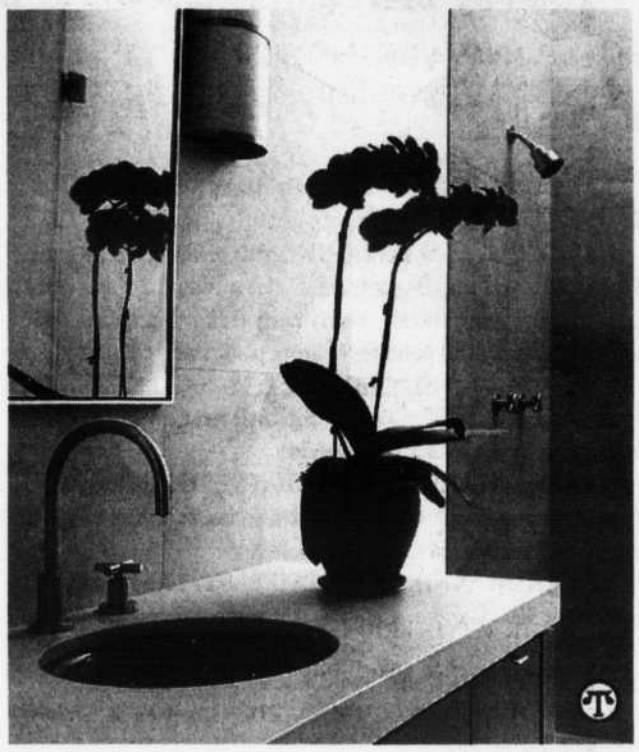

By closing the gap between shower curtain top and ceiling, you'll eliminate an unsightly view and give the feeling of luxury and more space with taller walls.

• Swap Your Hooks. Towel hooks are easy to find and replace, but they are usually boring. Go shopping for some cheap, vintage hooks of different shapes and sizes, paint them all the same color and then hang them in a nice straight line. The detail and "collection" quality will make a big impact-even if they're covered with towels.

• Flowers Always Impress. Fresh flowers in the bathroom or even just one flower in a small vase on the bathroom sink or back of the toilet will make the room fresh and festive.

• Roll Covers. Even small necessities, like your toilet paper, deserve storage in a modern roll cover. Just like how people care for their cotton swabs by storing them in a stylish container, people can care for their Cottonelle Clean Care toilet paper like never before with a modernized roll cover.

• Go with Color. Shower curtains and towels were made to carry colors and you can change your bathroom in minutes by coordinating and changing the colors here. Maxewell's favorite lately? Deep brown towels and hand towels with a linen shower curtain.

PUTTING FRESH flowers in your bathroom is a simple way to dress it up.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, Sept. 17, at approximately 10:30 p.m., Officer David Levine was on routine patrol in a police cruiser at Billings Road and Holmes Street when he observed a male walk up the footbridge and cross over the train tracks over to Newport Avenue.

LT. DAN MINTON

After about 2-3 minutes, the male returned back over to the Billings Road side of the tracks. He kept looking in the officer's direction as he passed by, then continued to look over his shoulder at the officer.

Officer Levine let the male create some distance as he walked southbound on Holmes Street, then slowly drove down the street. At this point, the male suspect ducked into a yard and then came back out. Knowing that there have been many car breaks in the area, Officer Levine caught up to the suspect in the parking lot of 118 Holmes St., which is fenced in and entry can only be gained by residents using a key card.

The officer observed the suspect to be looking into several vehicles in the lot, so he exited his cruiser and approached the suspect, asking what he was doing. The suspect said, "I'm looking for my car." When asked where his car was, the suspect responded, "I parked it in Wollaston at the MBTA station." Officer Levine inquired if the suspect knew where he was and he said he was "in North Quincy."

The officer asked the suspect why he would be looking for his car in North Quincy when he parked in Wollaston and the suspect did not respond. While talking with to the suspect, there was a strong odor of an alcoholic beverage emanating from the suspect's breath and his eyes were also bloodshot and glassy. Officer Levine asked the suspect for identification and he gave his wallet to the Officer, who then pulled out a Massachusetts driver's license that did not match the photo of the suspect.

When the Officer told the suspect that this license was not him, the suspect grabbed the wallet and fled, with the Officer in foot pursuit south on Holmes Street, then East on Hayward and then back West on Hayward Street, losing sight of him behind Hannaford's Supermarket. Several other units responded and after a few minutes, the suspect was again detained on Linden Street.

Officer Levine pat frisked the suspect and removed a bag of a green leafy substance believed to be marijuana from the suspect's pocket.

The zip-lock bag contained four smaller bags of the green leafy substance. Through training and experience, the Officer believed the substance to be marijuana and it was packaged in a manor for distribution. The suspect, a 19 year old Quincy resident, was arrested for "Possession of Class D with Intent to Distribute and Attempt to Commit a Crime (B&E Motor Vehicle)." A total of $137.00 in cash was seized from the suspect for evidence purposes and forfeiture.

In July 2010, the suspect was arrested for the same drug offense too, on Edgewater Drive.

Red Raiders Defeated Whitman-Hanson On Monday; Host Lady Presidents On Oct. 6

North Quincy Is Flying High At 8-0 Overall

By SEAN BRENNAN

The high school volleyball season is a grind. Teams play on average three times per week, which can lead to lulls in performance and nagging injuries.

Experienced teams do their best to overcome these issues while attacking each and every match like it was their last. The less experienced teams tend to fold under the pressure.

North Quincy is a member of the former group. The Red Raiders have started the 2011 season like gangbusters. After Monday's 3-0-match victory over visiting Whitman-Hanson, the reigning Division 1 Central-East champions are a perfect 8-0 overall.

But if you believe what Head Coach Kerry Ginty has to say about her team, North Quincy is not perfect - not even close, yet.

"We did lose to Barnstable in an exclusion game, so technically we are now undefeated at 8-0," she said following a surprisingly easy win over the Panthers on Monday at home. "But it is hard to say that I like where we are because we are never going to be totally happy. We are getting better but I feel like we could be even better if we had some more flexibility with our schedule. We are grinding it out three games a week."

Despite already owning quality match wins over strong programs such as Brockton, Duxbury, Hanover and Pembroke, the Raiders could be better, and that is bad news for the other teams North Quincy has lined up the rest of the way. One such team is Silver Lake, a team the Red Raiders played on Wednesday. The Lakers are undefeated this fall and should present Ginty's team with the opportunity to state its case as one of the best programs this fall in Massachusetts.

"So far we are 6-0 in the Patriot League," Ginty said. "We have to play at Silver Lake this week and they have been a good team the last couple of years so that will be a big test for us. Next week we play against Quincy and that team is solid again this year. The next couple weeks will really show me what type of team I have."

If you watched North Quincy play versus Whitman-Hanson you may think the Raiders are pretty much unbeatable. Ginty mainly sat her top starters against the Panthers and North Quincy still cruised. At times, especially in the second game – a game in which the Raiders allowed the Panthers to hang around before winning 25-17 – there seemed to be a lack of focus. Was North Quincy playing down to a lesser opponent? Not so according to Ginty.

"I was kind of fuming a little bit.but it is hard because volleyball is such a game of momentum," she stated about her team's lackadaisical play in Game Two. "You know 16 and 17-year old girls can get goofy sometimes but on the flipside if it is so rigid they can lull themselves to sleep. I don't mind it as long as we are doing what we need to do on the court and at the same time are having fun. That is fine."

ALL FOR ONE, ONE FOR ALL – North Quincy has started the 2011 season a perfect 8-0. The reigning Division 1 Central-East champions look to be an early favorite to make anothert run at a state championship.

Following the shaky win in the middle set, Ginty gathered her team together and whatever she said resonated. North Quincy came out in Game Three and destroyed any hope Whitman-Hanson had of scratching their way back into the match.

Senior setter Rachel Chu (five serving aces) got the game started with a laser serve. The Panthers evened the score at 1-1 before senior libero Elizabeth Sullivan (nine serving aces) served up five straight aces into the backline of Whitman-Hanson's defense to give North Quincy a commanding 7-1 advantage. When sophomore opposite hitter Maya Umoren killed a ball off an assist from Chu to give the Raiders an 11-3 lead the Game Three rout was on.

Sophomore opposite/middle hitter Carolyn Schwartz (three serving aces), a new full-time addition to the varsity team this fall after splitting last year between the varsity and jayvee teams, served three straight aces that gave North Quincy a 18-4 lead. Another Chu serving ace made it 22-6 and from that point on it was just a matter of time before the Raiders notched another victory to the docket.

"This was a good match because we got to give a lot of kids some playing time," Ginty explained about her strategy to rest her starters throughout the contest. "We really need that for later in the season. We have some girls that are going to need to contribute in big games in November and if we didn't get them in and let them make their mistakes now and let them play through their mistakes now they wouldn't be ready."

"We don't have to have our starting lineup play all the time," continued Ginty. "This time of year you have some girls with nagging injuries and it is great to get them some rest so they are ready to go when the games get more difficult."

Two players who stood out during their time on the court against Whitman-Hanson were seniors Megan Leahy (defensive specialist) and Natasha Sautter (opposite/middle hitter). Leahy was strong around the net and finished with two kills and several digs. Sautter led the team with five kills and anchored North's team defense in the clinching third game.

Seniors Lizzie Kelley, Elizabeth Forde, Kara Reardon, Olivia Umoren, Michelle Cole, and Emma Ainsley played well in limited action while junior Rose Bennett (middle hitter) was a menace when North Quincy was on the attack.

For a program that was two victories away from winning the state championship last season it has been a solid beginning. But the Red Raiders are not playing for regular season bragging rights. The goal is and always will be to bring a state championship back to North Quincy.

"We are in Ok shape through eight matches," Ginty said. "The schedule is about to get a lot tougher, which is fine by me. We need to be playing our best volleyball when it matters most."

Reminder: The Quincy Sun's Emily Taft reported in last week's edition that North Quincy and Quincy will be teaming up along with the Side-Out Foundation's Dig Pink Initiative during their scheduled Oct. 6 match to raise money for breast cancer research.

The two teams are actively trying to raise $5,000 through donations. If you would like to help out the volleyball teams in Quincy, please go to www.side-out.org/application/ous/fundraising_page/45451 and check out the webpage.

The event begins with a jayvee game at 4 p.m. (NQHS gym) with the varsity game starting around 5 p.m.

Fontbonne Volleyball Team Off To Nice Start At 2-3 Overall

The Fontbonne Academy volleyball team, led by first-year Head Coach Kathleen McCarthy of Quincy and Assistant Coach Maria Devine, are off to a 2-3 start; the Ducks are still looking to establish an identity as a team.

Senior Rachel Selbert of Quincy, one of the team's three captains, and teammate Julia Flaco bring experience to the Ducks who graduated six seniors off last year's team. Selbert is a tremendous setter who runs a great offense. The other captains, juniors Jen Gemma and Colleen MacDonald, have also shown leadership ability while leading the team in kills.

"The team as a whole is a great group of girls who work extremely hard," said McCarthy. "They possess great athletic ability and with a little experience, the opportunities are endless for the Ducks."

Home Game Friday Versus Arlington High School

Raiders Washed Out By East Bridgewater, 47-0

By SEAN BRENNAN

If the North Quincy Red Raiders were a ship they would be taking on water.

Playing at Veterans Memorial Stadium last Friday in the driving rain, North Quincy got washed out by nonleague East Bridgewater (3-0 overall), 47-0. The loss dropped the Raiders to 0-3 on the season, and with another nonleague game set for Friday against Arlington – 7 p.m. at the Stadium – North Quincy needs a win to keep the season afloat.

Against the Vikings, the Raiders had no answer for Casey DeAndrade.

East Bridgewater's talented senior made his presence known immediately. His 65-yard punt return in the first quarter gave the visitors an early 6-0 advantage. A conversion pass from Kevin Lynch back to DeAndrade made it 8-0.

A quick turnaround by a struggling North Quincy offense gave East Bridgewater the ball back with time left on the opening period clock and DeAndrade stepped forward once again. This time he took a handoff, swept left and sprinted 44 yards down the sidelines for his second score of the game. Another successful conversion pass put the Vikings up 16-0 entering the second period.

It only got worse for North Quincy in the second quarter.

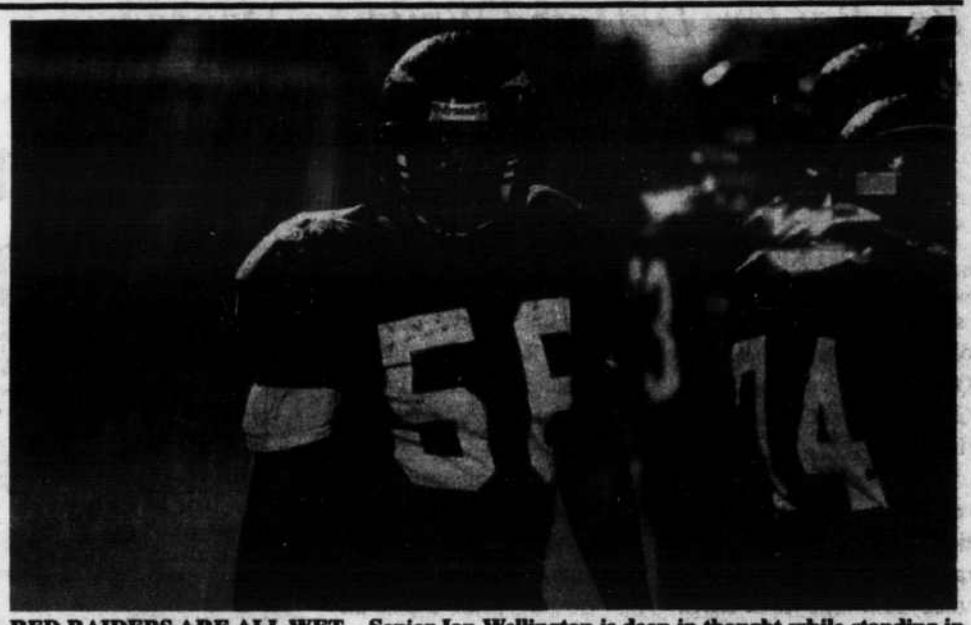

The Vikings exploded for 24 points to take a 40-0 lead into the locker room at the break. Tim O'Brien began the second quarter onslaught with a 57-yard TD scamper (DeAndrade conversion run). O'Brien added to his scoring total with a five-yard touchdown run (DeAndrade conversion catch) on the Vikings' next possession before completing the touchdown-hat-trick with another touchdown run minutes later. This TD rush covered 20 yards and made the score 40-0.

East Bridgewater's Conner McDermott closed the book on the scoring with an 80-yard kickoff return in the third before the Vikings finally took the foot of the gas pedal.

Through three games the Red Raiders have scored a total of 13 points while allowing Boston Latin, Oliver Ames and East Bridgewater to pile up 87 points. With nonleague games versus Arlington and Archbishop Williams on the docket the next two weeks, North Quincy has a difficult road ahead before the Patriot League portion of the schedule kicks off on Oct. 15 against Middleboro.

Following the game with Middleboro, the Raiders get state-power Duxbury on the road (Oct. 21) before returning home to host Hingham (Oct. 28) and Silver Lake (Nov. 5). After traveling to Whitman-Hanson on Nov. 10 to play the Panthers, North Quincy ends the 2011 season the annual Thanksgiving Day game against Quincy.

End Six-Game Losing Streak With 20-16 Victory Over Panthers; Bye This Friday

QHS Made Most Of Its Opportunities Versus Ply. South

By SEAN BRENNAN

When a team is on the short-end of a six-game losing streak, any win, no matter how it was achieved, can change the atmosphere of a locker room and alter the direction of a season that was on the brink of being lost.

Just ask Head Coach Bill Reardon and his Quincy Presidents.

The Presidents won an ugly game last Friday over nonleague Plymouth South, 20-16. But a win is a win. That is all that matters.

"Yeah, it was an ugly win but we will take it," Reardon said on Tuesday, days after his team rallied back from a 16-14 fourth quarter deficit late in regulation to beat the Panthers on a 77-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Andrew Schaaf to Alex Heffernan. "The kids were excited in the locker room after the game. The game really came down to us making more big plays then Plymouth South."

Things looked bleak for Quincy late in the fourth quarter. The Presidents, who had trouble moving the ball on offense all game long, began a drive with about five minutes left in the game deep in their own territory with the score tied at 14-14. A miscommunication under center resulted in the Panthers tackling Schaaf in his own end zone for a safety; the misplay not only gave Plymouth South a 16-14 lead but it also forced Quincy to punt the ball back to the Panthers.

What could have been a worst-case scenario turned in Quincy's favor because the Presidents' defense stood tall and forced Plymouth South to go three-and-out. The ensuing punt pinned Schaaf and the offense 77 yards from pay dirt.

Reardon pulled his junior signal caller aside and let him know that he needed to run the team's two-minute offense. Schaaf needed just one play to give Quincy the lead.

As he dropped back in the pocket he spotted Heffernan open on a post route near midfield. The ball and Heffernan connected and with the help of a block from John Cherwick (INT, touchdown) the junior receiver outsprinted three Panther defenders to give Quincy a 20-16 lead.

"We had a miscommunication on the safety but the defense played really well in the last five minutes and we got the ball back," Reardon explained. "I told Andrew that we were going with the hurry-up offense but he only needed one play. He hit Alex near the 50-yard line and Cherwick threw a great block. I didn't know Heffernan was that fast."

Plymouth South put a late-game scare into Quincy as they drove the field before being stopped on a final-minute goal line stand. Senior linebacker Danilo Lopes made a game-saving tackle to preserve the victory.

Despite Schaaf's fourth quarter completion, Quincy could not move the ball at all on offense. The Presidents completed just two passes all game (the other being a ten-yard screen pass to senior Reggie Cesar). With the offense sputtering, the Presidents' defense and special teams came up clutch.

Cherwick gave Quincy a 7-0 second quarter lead when he returned an interception back for six points. Senior Jalen Green's PAT made it 7-0. Plymouth South would eventually take an 8-7 advantage into halftime but Green stepped up once again for Quincy. On the opening kickoff of the second half, Green brought the ball back 80 yards for a touchdown; his PAT made the score 14-8.

"We edged them on defense and special teams," said Reardon. "Big plays went in our favor and that was the difference in the game."

Quincy will have two weeks to enjoy their first victory since Oct. 22 of last year (34-26 win over Middleboro). The Presidents have a built-in bye week this Friday giving Reardon and his staff extra time to prepare for nonleague Malden Catholic on Oct 7. This time off should also allow some players to recover from nagging injuries, which is an added bonus.

"We will be using this time to work on fundamentals and nurse some injuries," he said. "Winning last Friday makes for a more enjoyable week off."

Two Residents To Be Inducted Into Volleyball Coaches Hall of Fame

Two Quincy residents, one with direct ties to Quincy High School, will be inducted into the 2011 Class of the Massachusetts Girls Volleyball Coaches Association's Hall of Fame on Oct. 16 at Joe's American Grill on Boston's waterfront in the North End.

Tom Henderson, former coach for the Lady Presidents, and Robin Lee, the current head coach for girls' volleyball at Milton High School, are neighbors living on Sunnyside Road in Squantum and both will be inducted together next month.

The following are bios for Henderson and Lee sent to the Quincy Sun from MGVCA:

Tom Henderson

A very seasoned coach, he posted 211 career wins and only 86 losses during his time spent as head coach at Quincy High School. He began his career coaching in 1985 and remained at the helm of the Lady Presidents for 12 years. During this period, he was named Boston

TOM HENDERSON

Globe Division 1 Coach of the Year in 1988 and then again in 1990. In 1985 he was crowned MA High School Volleyball Coaches Association South Sectional Coach of the Year.

His Lady Presidents won rights to State Champs in 1988 and also boast four State Runner up titles in 1985, 1986, 1989 and 1990. Aside from coaching at Quincy High School, he most recently acted as jayvee coach at North Quincy to the girls (2005-2007) and the boys (2006-2008) as well as being the head coach for the boys' team at Quincy in 1996.

Currently, he is enjoying retired life; traveling, playing golf and officiating MIAA matches for girls' volleyball. He also helps out for the Mass Patriots Volleyball Club when he is not abroad somewhere.

Robin Lee

Lee began her career as the assistant coach at Milton High School in 1989. The very next year she was assigned the head coaching position where she has remained for the last 21 seasons. During her tenure with the Lady Wildcats she has recorded 145 wins. In 1999 she led the Wildcats to the South Sectional finals and in 2001 she was named Boston Globe's Division 2 Coach of the Year.

She has four Bay State League Herget Division Championships in the years 1999, 2001, 2002 and 2003. Her teams have had eight state tournament appearances and she has produced four MGVCA All-Scholastic players for the Boston Globe/Boston Herald over her time as well as several Patriot League All-Scholastics.

Aside from coaching, she has been an active member of the MGVCA since 1999 where she is currently serving as interim President and has been the Association's secretary for the last eight years. She coached at Mass Patriots/Juniors from 2001-2007 and is currently the U14 coach with Southern Alliance where she has been since 2008.

Lee credits her husband Joe for his patience and tolerance during the volleyball season. They have three children: Nicole, Austin and Lindsay and when not coaching she enjoys spending time with her family, usually at a local skating rink.

Cross-Country Teams Making Strides

The cross-country teams, both boys and girls, from North Quincy and Quincy responded with good showings during a tri-meet with Patriot League opponents Scituate and Hingham late last week.

The boys lost both ends of their meet; falling to Scituate 24-37 and to Hingham, 20-41 while the girls split, beating Scituate 26-31 and losing to Hingham, 28-31.

In the boys' race, freshman Mike Mullaney took second overall with sophomore Brendan Cunningham finishing seventh. In the girls' race, freshman Emily Bryson led wire to wire for the win with Danielle Mullaney finishing third and freshman Julia Bryson taking fourth.

Despite the bunch at the top of the girls' race, the next North Quincy finisher, Mary Zheng, could do no better than 20th overall as Hingham put all the rest of their top-seven scorers ahead of her.

As was reported in last week's Sun, an MIAA ruling this season separated QHS/NQHS into two teams, after the city's two high schools ran together as one unit for the last six seasons. Word came this week that a possible MIAA rule may allow members of last year's cooperative team to run together with North Quincy, this according to Head Coach Geoff Hennessy.

"Anyone who was a member of last year's team could run with this year's team as a North (Quincy) runner," Hennessy said in an email. "That would be good news for Brendan Cunningham and Aidan McMorrow who, combined with Mike Mullaney, makes for a formidable top-three and could create a winning situation down the road. We met our toughest team with the exception of Pembroke early, so we'll see what happens."

Six Residents Running B.A.A. Half Marathon In Support of Jimmy Fund

Six Quincy residents: Elizabeth Conroy, Peggy Leung, Maryellen O'Dea, David Romero, Jackie Szymonifka, and Adrienne Terra, will be running in the 11th annual B.A.A. Half Marathon presented by the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and the Jimmy Fund, as members of the official Dana-Farber team on Oct. 9.

All six runners have committed to raise at least $500 for cancer care and research at world-renowned Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

"The B.A.A. Half Marathon enables Dana-Farber runners to challenge themselves while making a positive difference in the lives of adult and pediatric cancer patients worldwide," said Jack Fultz, Dana-Farber's training advisor and 1976 Boston Marathon men's champion.

Dana-Farber and the Jimmy Fund have partnered with the B.A.A. in the Half Marathon for nine years, enabling team members to raise more than $2.6 million to fuel life-saving discoveries.

QYHA $700,000 Rink Dedication Sunday

By SEAN BRENNAN

Last December ground was broken for the Quincy Youth Hockey Association's new $700,000 rink off Sea Street after many obstacles had been overcome. Sunday, this new rink will be dedicated at 4:15, climaxing Quincy Youth Hockey Week, which began with a dedication dance last Saturday.

Sept. 27, 1973
38 YEARS AGO

Sunday's dedication will be preceded by a parade, featuring 15 bands, floats, sports dignitaries and more than 1,000 association players.

Bob Fitzpatrick is general chairman of Hockey Week, Joe McConville was dance chairman, Arthur Giordani refreshment chairman, Leo Doyle yearbook sales chairman, John J. Murphy parade marshal, Clifford Marshall publicity chairman, Wilbur B. Lewis dedication chairman and Arthur Boyle treasurer.

The new rink, which eventually will also be used by various groups outside of the QYHA, is located off Sea Street behind the Naval Reserve Training Center. An easement was obtained over land owned by the state, the site of the proposed South Shore Community College.

QUINCY ALL-WEATHER TRACK COMPLETED

The new all-weather track at Quincy Veterans Memorial Stadium is completed and Coaches Tom Hall of Quincy and Lou Tozzi of North Quincy hope to have half of next spring's Greater Boston League meets there.

"This is something we have needed for a long time and I feel this track is better than the one in Medford where we now hold all our meets," Hall said.

The track is made of material, which permits meets regardless of the weather and spikes can be worn by the competitors.

This is the final season in the GBL for Quincy and North and next year both will be members of the Suburban League.

CONROY SEEKS OFFENSE AGAINST REVERE

The failure of the Presidents to move consistently last week played a large part in a heartbreaking last minute 8-7 loss to underdog Weymouth South in a non-league opener at the Stadium.

For three and a half periods it appeared Quincy was on its way to a win despite a disappointing offense, only to have Coach Joe Kelly's Wildcats, taking advantage of the absence of big Paul Riggs, Quincy's regular linebacker, drive 77 yards in 15 plays to score with just 45 seconds and complete a two-point conversion pass for the shocking victory.

"Although they picked away at our line pretty well in that scoring drive, our defense was pretty strong," said QHS Coach Hank Conroy. "We should have had more points and our failure to move the ball better was the reason we lost, not our defensive play."

RAIDERS LOOK FOR NO.1 AT WEYMOUTH NORTH

Everything went against the Raiders in a 29-20 loss to Greater Boston League favorite Revere last week according to NQHS Coach Ralph Frazier.

"It is frustrating to score 20 points and still lose," he said. "It wasn't that Revere scored 29 points but it is how they scored them that bothers me."

North fumbled on its third play of the game with Revere turning that into points. Another Revere touchdown came after a North pitch-out was grabbed mid-air and another came on an 80-yard kickoff return to open the second half with the score tied, 14-14.

North travels to Weymouth's Legion Field Saturday for a non-league game against Weymouth North.

QYFL Week Three Game Results

The Quincy Youth Football League has completed three weekends of football. Each week The Quincy Sun will publish game results provided by Paul Doherty, QYFL President.

The following are game results for Sept. 25:

Panthers v. Apaches (Sept. 25)

The Quincy Point Panthers were able to hold on and edged the North Quincy Apaches, 20-18, in another exciting battle between the longtime QTFL rivals.

After a scoreless first quarter, the Apaches capitalized on a fumbled pitch by the Panthers and took possession near midfield to start the second quarter. Tysean Moore then broke free and outran the Panther defense for a 52-yard touchdown. The try for the extra point was no good but North Quincy held the early 6-0 lead.

This lead would not last. The Panthers, on their first play from scrimmage, saw running back Garrett Cronin match Moore's long touchdown with a 51-yard TD scamper of his own; a successful conversion try gave Quincy Point a 7-6 lead.

At the end of the first half the Apaches' defense led by Mike McNelley (seven tackles, sack), Tom Whooley, who made several big tackles, Allen Lee (four tackles, sack), and Paul McLoughlin sacked the Panthers twice for big losses.

The Panthers were facing a third and long when Cronin rushed around the end and scored on a 40-yard touchdown rush to close out the scoring in the first half with Quincy Point leading, 13-6.

In the second half, North Quincy had a touchdown called back and the Panthers made them pay for that mistake as the defense forced a fumble that was recovered deep in their own end. Bu the Apache defense dug in and forced the Panthers to punt the ball away on a fourth and long. Moore fielded the punt at midfield and returned it all the way to the house to cut the lead down to 13-12.

On the Panthers' next drive Anthony Marcello scampered for another long touchdown run to increase Quincy Point's lead to 19-12. With 5:30 to play, Apaches' quarterback Aiden Brown led a six-play drive that featured big runs by McNelley, Moore and Lee. The drive ended when Brown connected on a 15-yard touchdown pass to McNelley.

With the score 19-18, North Quincy attempted to kick the extra point for the two-point conversion and the lead but the Panthers' special teams broke through, blocked the kick and returned it 90 yards for a conversion point; after the extra point, the Panthers held a 20-18 lead and ran out the clock to end the hard fought game.

Devin Ganno and Shawn Kelly played well in defeat for North Quincy.

"Offensively, we practiced very well and it showed in the game," said Panthers' coach Noel T. DiBona. "I credit the offensive line, which allowed the backs to rush for 200 yards combined."

"I like the adjustments that the coaching staff is doing during practice on a week-to-week basis," added Panther Franchise Owner Taure Rodrigues. "We use our performance from prior games to identify weaknesses and then attack it right away whether it be personnel or fundamental changes. Our success here on out will depend on us playing and coaching together as a team and learning to capitalize on the opponent's mistakes while minimizing ours."

"There has always been a ton of pride in the Quincy Point community but this year we have a lot to prove; to ourselves, our community and to the rest of the QYFL," concluded Rodrigues. "This all comes from the bad taste a lot of these kids have in their system after a 0-8 season last year and an 0-2 start this year. Every day, we get better and better."

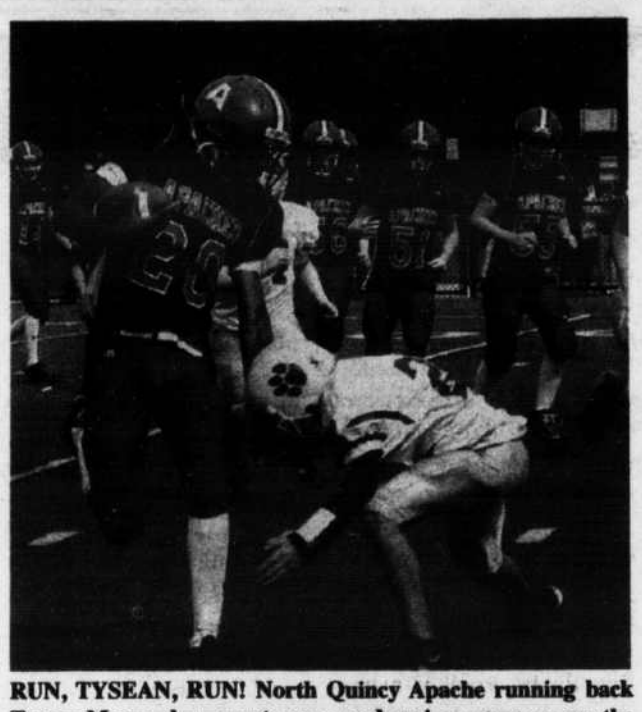

Elks v. Storm (Sept. 25)

The West Quincy Elks overwhelmed the Squantum Storm by a score of 39-0.

On the first play from scrimmage, the Storm lost a fumbled snap and everything went downhill from there. The Elks went in for a touchdown from five plays out on their first play from scrimmage and then converted the extra point. By halftime the score was 27-0 with the Elks scoring on a 57-yard pass play, another pass play of 37 yards, a run of 85 yards, another run of 57 yards and finally a 43-yard touchdown run to end the scoring.

The Storm's jayvee and freshmen teams feared better.

The freshmen team was led by a string defense headed by ends Michael Golden and Joey Champagne, linemen Joshua Jackson and Joshua Dangora, linebackers Johnny Collins, Antonio Allen and Joey Sands, and defensive backs Andrew Airosus, Brandon Palmarin and Dan O'Leary in a 19-6 win.

RUN, TYSEAN, RUN! North Quincy Apache running back Tysean Moore churns out some yardage in a game versus the Quincy Point Panthers. Point's Christopher Wallace makes the tackle. The Panthers won the game, 20-18.

Second-year player Samantha Smith, who starts as an offensive end, ran several plays as quarterback for the Storm.

The Storm's jayvee team dominated the Elks 26-6. Standouts on defense included Pat O'Brien, Pat Bronske, Luca Smith, Max Storch, Tommy Veasey, Johnny Tran, John Paul Kelley, Colin McGrath, Mark Monahan, Dan Steele and Josh Dangora.

On offense, the Storm was led by the contributions of QB Timmy Layden, linemen Ty Finn, Smith, Monahan, McGrath, Steele, Bronske, and O'Brien and fullback Veasey. Storch scored two first half touchdowns (50 and 56 yards) and Kelley rumbled in from 13 and 57 yards in the second half.

Mustangs v. Manets (Sept. 25)

The Milton Mustangs defeated the Hough Neck Manets, 21-12. No additional game information available,

Third Annual Smegs Legs Memorial Run Oct. 8

One wouldn't expect an Atherton Hough, Broad Meadows, and Boston College High School alum to high five President George W. Bush after receiving his diploma at the United States Merchant Marine Academy in Kings Point, New York. You wouldn't expect that unless you knew Chris Smeglin and his unquenchable zest for life, unique sense of humor and service to country.

Smeglin enlisted in the United States Navy to fulfill a lifelong ambition to serve his country and became an aviator. Dedicating one's life to the United States, while a true honor, can also be the ultimate sacrifice. On Oct. 2, 2008, Navy LTJG Chris Smeglin, a 24-year-old Houghs Neck resident, was tragically killed while stationed in Kingsville, Texas during a bike training session for a triathlon.

In respect of his love and desire for fitness, his family, friends and neighbors are asking for Quincy Sun readers' support in their efforts to commemorate the life of this great young man and patriot by participating in, volunteering for or sponsoring the Third Annual Smegs Legs 5 Mile Road Race & 2 Mile Walk to be hosted at Broad Meadows Middle School in Quincy at 9 a.m. on Saturday, Oct. 8.

Smegs Legs proceeds will benefit The Chris Smeglin Memorial Fund, which will raise monies for various local charities. This year's beneficiaries are: Access Sports America (www.accesssports.org) - sports for children and adults with disabilities, a scholarship in Chris' memory with the Houghs Neck Community Council (www.houghsneck.org), and the Broad Meadows Middle School athletic program.

Event run/walk participants can register by mail before Oct. 1 for $20 or on the day of the event, starting at 7:30 a.m., for $25. Online registration deadline is Oct. 6. Any support, including donations would be greatly appreciated and acknowledged at the event.

If you are interested in volunteering or sponsoring the event, contact Eddie Aucoin at eaucoin@gis.net. The Memorial Fund's 501©(3) number is available upon request.

Thank you for your consideration in supporting these causes in the memory of Chris. Please visit www.smegs-legs.org for more information and respond by Oct. 1 to: Chris Smeglin Memorial Fund, c/o Mike and Jane Smeglin, 125 Spring Street, Quincy, MA 02169.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

SCOTT DEWARE

Have you ever noticed how some people seldom – if ever – make premature decisions? How they do not make decisions that cannot be made effective? How, if pressured for a decision, they often say "No" because they know "No" can later be changed more easily to "Yes;" less easy to change from "Yes" to "No?" How when they make a bad decision, they blame themselves, not others?

Lincoln illustrated a good formula for making good decisions. When he was severely criticized he said, "I do the best I know how; the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me all right, what is said about me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference."

On that formula there is seldom any need to hesitate, or 'hem or haw.' Base firm decisions on your best judgment, skills and abilities given you by God – and do the best you can... People who make good decisions know how true this is.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Cosmic changes create a potential for disruptions in your travel plans. In the meantime, you might want to consider shifting your focus to another area of your life that needs attention.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) It's a good time for beauty-loving Bovines to enjoy something special for the senses. It will restore your spirit and return you to the workaday world ready for the next challenge.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) With your planetary ruler, Mercury, going retrograde, you might want to slow down the pace in pursuing some of your projects. Rushing things could be counterproductive.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Tensions begin to ease in those once-testy relationships. This helps create a more positive aspect all around. Expect to hear news that could lead you to rethink a recent decision.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) The pace of activity that had slowed last week now begins to pick up. This is good news for Leos and Leonas who have career-building plans that need to be put into operation.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Venus offers encouragement to romance-seeking Virgos who are ready to get up, get out and meet more people, one of whom could be that long-sought soul mate.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) An ongoing problem with a co-worker might need to be sent to arbitration. Get all your facts together so that you have a solid base from which to make your argument.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You are usually decisive about most matters. But you might want to defer your decision-making this week until you get more facts. Someone is holding out on you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) That quiet period is ending, and a new burst of activity creates some problems at the workplace. But things are soon resolved, and everything goes back to normal.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Relationships could be either helpful or hurtful as you pursue your career goals. You might have to make some difficult choices depending on what your priorities are.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You might still have some doubts about a career move that could involve a lot of travel. If so, continue to check things out until you feel secure about making a decision.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Love rules, as Venus continues to exercise her cosmic influence on both single and attached Pisces. New developments might cause you to change your travel plans.

BORN THIS WEEK: You often think of others before you consider your own needs. You enjoy helping people and would make a fine teacher or caregiver.

Former Mayor Tells Audience At Opening: 'We Dedicate This Road Because We're Serious About A New Downtown'

New Walter J. Hannon Parkway A 'Transition To The Future'

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy's newest street opened on Sunday to much fanfare. Dignitaries from around the city and state were on hand for the official opening of the Walter J. Hannon Parkway.

The parkway, an $18 million, four-lane road spanning from Burgin Parkway to Southern Artery, is considered a crucial step in the planned redevelopment of Quincy Center.

Cong. William Keating of Quincy, one of the speakers at the event, dubbed the opening of the parkway "a transition to the future."

Keating, who grew up in Sharon, reminisced about trips he made to Quincy as a child.

"This was Shoppers Town USA," he said, referring to the old nickname of Quincy Center. "But times changed," he continued. "The mall (Braintree's South Shore Plaza) took it away."

The development plans call for $1.8 billion in spending to revive Quincy Center. The first groundbreaking is expected next year, according to the developer, Street-Works. The parkway is intended to improve the flow of traffic around Quincy Center and to allow easier access for

College Eyes One Campus In Downtown

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy College may consolidate its three campuses in favor of one in Quincy Center by late summer or fall next year, according to President Peter Tsaffaras.

Tsaffaras told city councillors Monday that the college's Newport Avenue lease expires in October, 2012. The college's Board of Governors favors a new, though temporary, Quincy Center location for the entire college that has outgrown its current scattered sites.

Under this plan, the college's Newport Avenue campus, Saville Avenue facility, and Temple Street classrooms would be housed at one larger leased property in Quincy Center by the next fall. The college would remain in that location until moving to a permanent home in the revitalized Quincy Center in four to five years.

Quincy Sun Price Is Now 75 Cents

As announced last week, the price of The Quincy Sun is 75 cents effective with this Oct. 6th issue.

The 25-cent increase is for copies of The Sun sold at newsstands and delivered to homes by newscarriers.

The yearly mail subscriptions are not affected by this new rate.

We regret the increase – the paper's first in four years – but increased production and other rising costs force us to make the adjustment.

At 75 cents, the price of The Sun is lower than most weekly newspapers in the South Shore and New England areas.

We hope everyone who supports The Sun will understand the need for the price adjustment that is effective this week.

Thank you again for the privilege of serving the community as Historic Quincy's hometown weekly newspaper.

Sincerely,

Local Partnership Seeks Lease Of Tidal Mill Site

Seaport Destination For Fishing, Charter Boats As Well As Kayak, Rowing Launch, Walking Paths

ARTIST RENDEING OF a proposed seaport destination called Tide Mill Wharf off Southern Artery.

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The city's waterfront property off Southern Artery could be transformed from its drab and dangerous present into Tide Mill Wharf, a seaport destination for commercial fishing and charter boats with a processing plant and an ice and fish storage area under a plan proposed by three Quincy residents.

Anchoring the site would be a restored Souther Tide Mill at the entrance and at the ocean's edge Thayer Academy's kayak and rowing launch with walking paths in between as described in a proposal for the property submitted by Tide Mill Properties, LLC, of Quincy.

"With a stop for a cup of coffee to watch the lobster boats bringing in their catch, this will truly be one of the most vibrant and interesting destinations in the city," states the proposal. It also anticipates "The City of Quincy and local residents will benefit in various ways and at no cost to the taxpayer."

Tide Mill Properties, LLC, submitted their plan in response to the city's Request for Proposals (RFP) and estimated that the initial cost of $4.6 million could be funded through public grants, private funds or a combination of both.

Three Quincy residents, former Ward 1 City Councillor Michael Cheney, John Urbanus and Stephen Curran are listed as principals of the firm which "was formed specifically to undertake the development of the Souther Tide Mill site."

"Our proposal has been met with eager interest by state, federal and other agency officials," states the proponents who listed nine potential public grant sources in their response.

Assistant City Solicitor Janet Petkun told City Council Monday that city officials are working "diligently to finalize the agreement" after noting that Tide Mill Properties, LLC, submitted the only response to the city's RFP advertised last September for the waterfront property.

The proposal also asserts, "During implementation and then subsequently upon completion of the proposed project, Tide Mill Partners, LLC, will require no special services or financial assistance from the City of Quincy."

However, the partners also state they are seeking a lease agreement with the City of Quincy similar to the city's 50-year lease with Quarry Hill Associates, LLC, which closed and capped the city's landfill.

The tide mill area is a Designated Port Area which limits its use to commercial fisheries and 'marine industrial' use only. Additional marine uses include relocation opportunity for fishermen displaced through other development.

Proposed retail uses include a seafood market, fishing charters, dive shop, nautical gift and coffee shop and office suites.

Two unique factors affect the property and the most important is the Souther Tide Mill, a gristmill building constructed in 1854.

As one of only six remaining tide mills in the Unites States, with fewer than a dozen in the world, the Tide Mill is unique and "should be a testament to Quincy's industrious past," according to the proposal which pledges the principals plan to restore and protect the resource and to initiate meetings with the Friends of the Tide Mill.

Less clear is the plan for the Thayer Academy kayak site and an agreement executed by Mayor Thomas Koch in 2009. Last fall, city councillors challenged the validity of that agreement which they claimed gives Thayer Academy access to the property in perpetuity.

In addition, councillors questioned why the property was never appraised as required for a lease under the state's Chapter 30B.

City Solicitor Jim Timmins said Monday that an appraisal is not necessary for this property.

In describing the principals, the RFP cites Cheney's 15 years as an environmental consultant, his success in grant writing and in serving public and private entities.

"Mr. Cheney is familiar with Quincy zoning ordinances and regulations having served for 13 years on the Quincy City Council."

Urbanus has been in the construction industry for 30 years. He is director of the Boston Lobsterman's Cooperative and is currently the owner of "Commonwealth Siteworks."

Businessman Curran has managed waterfront and maritime facilities for over 20 year in three states. In addition, he was Operations Manager and the Port Director for Boston Port Services. He's also founded two successful companies, Riverside Events and the Fox & Hound Wood Grille & Tavern, both of Quincy.

The firm's consultants are Architect Sean Steward and Landscape Architect Mark Klopfer, both of whom list numerous successful projects.

and to reduce the number of entrances on South Street.

"There are three entrances at the main gate and railroad track," said Harrington, noting that visitors are often confused, particularly when no guard is on duty to direct them around the 25-acre site.

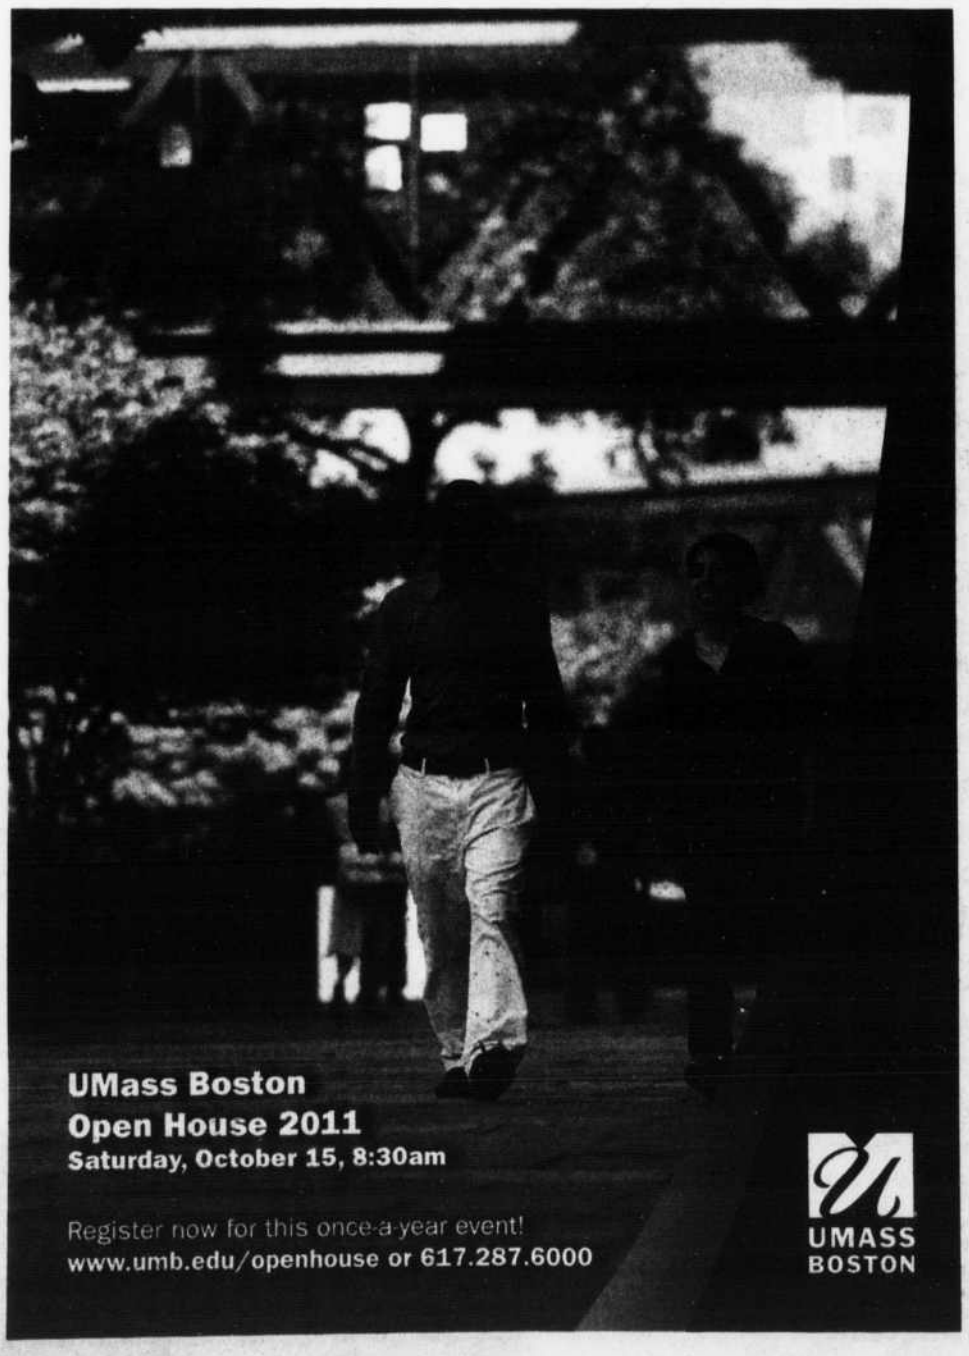

Harrington said the owners plan to create one major entrance at 555 South St. as a prelude to the sub-division of the property and to provide better traffic management for the visitors.

In addition, the new entrance will accommodate 55-foot trailer trucks which will be transporting the equipment and supplies for "the future construction of piers."

Currently, the New England Aquarium and BlueFin Robotics are the major tenants on the property owned by Quincy Shipyard LLC.

According to reports filed by the firm's attorney, Edward Fleming, the company is attempting to reach an agreement with the MWRA, the regional water and sewer provider regarding the property. The MWRA maintains property at the site.

The shipyard hearing will immediately follow a public hearing on a proposal for new construction at 418 Quincy Ave. Under the current plans, the new building will be constructed adjacent to the Walgreens store already onsite.

AN ENGRAVED INVITATION

If a diamond is "forever," engraved jewelry can leave an impression that is likely to last just as long. There can be little doubt engraved jewelry is cherished by all those who receive it. This form of personalized jewelry has been prized at least since the creation of engraved French lockets in the 14th century. Then, as now, who can resist carefully worded sentiments engraved in precious metal? With this in mind, engraving need not be limited solely to engagement rings and wedding bands; it can also be used to denote important names, dates, and thoughts on bracelets, lockets, and charms. Engraving elevates jewelry to heirloom status that practically ensures its constant wear.

With the right inscription, any one of our pieces of engraved jewelry immediately becomes a beloved and personalized present. Come into our store at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center to view our vast selection of engraved jewelry. Should you have any questions or concerns please call 617-773-3636.

Graffiti, Dangerous Sidewalks, Double Poles Focus Of 'Utility Responsibility Package'

Councillors Seek Protection For Lax Utility Companies

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The Ordinance Committee Monday considered creative measures to force utility companies to mend their careless, lazy and sometimes dangerous ways in local neighborhoods where they now leave 'municipal graffiti,' dangerous sidewalk holes and cracks, and long rows of double poles.

This was the first of at least two meetings which the committee will hold on a "Utility Responsibility Package" proposed by Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci.

"We won't allow them to dig up our sidewalks without any authority and then refuse to fix them...," said Palmucci who presented his "Utility Responsibility Package" to the committee as, at least, a partial solution.

"I'm hope that this body and the City of Quincy will be leaders on these neighborhood issues and stand up for residents and ratepayers," said Palmucci who described the public as stuck with the utility monopolies.

"They have a monopoly. And because of that, they owe a greater duty to their customers," Palmucci added.

Before discussing possible solutions, the committee welcomed Kristen Scott of Bates Avenue who described a year-long odyssey dealing with Verizon after their workers installed a double pole outside her home and left the sidewalk in upheaval.

Scott said that "low hanging wires were literally slamming against our house" but she could not get any action from Verizon.

"No one had entered it into a database," said Scott, adding that month after month. "It was just pass the buck."

In contrast, she said that city officials responded within 20 minutes to each of her calls.

Almost a year later, that pole was finally fixed but the row of more than two dozen double poles along her street and neighboring streets remain untouched to this day.

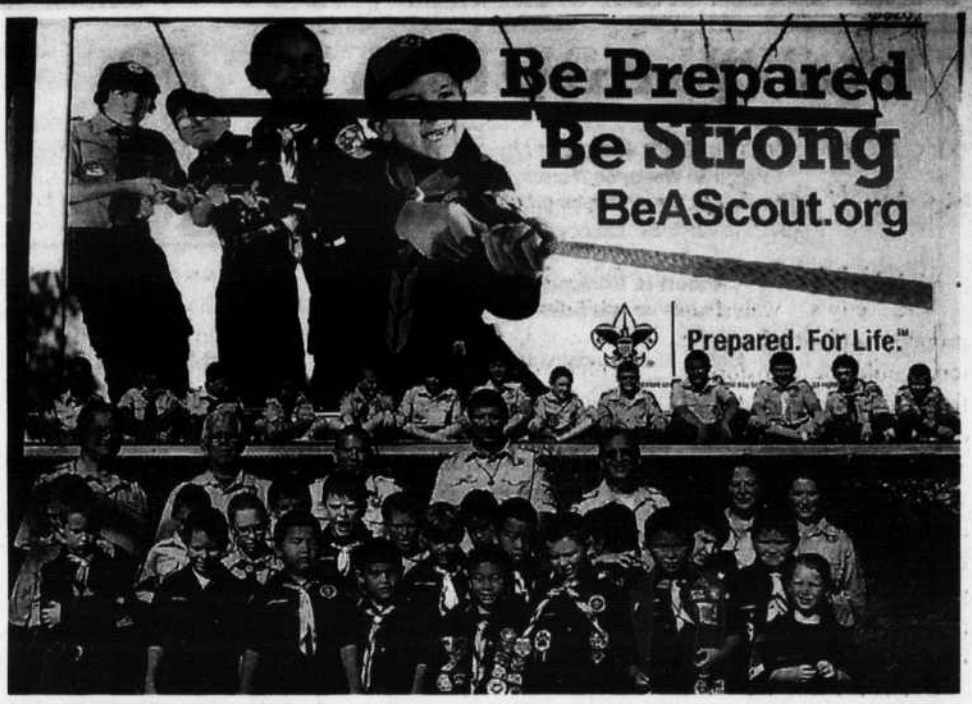

Committee Chairman Doug Gutro told Scott he receives constant similar complaints regarding sidewalks that are left in disrepair, dangerous for anyone especially those in wheelchairs or with baby carriages.

Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymondi addressed the issue of "municipal graffiti," whereby utility companies use permanent spray paint to mark sites.

Raymondi said there were two issues involved as sometimes the paint must remain for a specific period marking a "dig safe" locale.

"We need to strike a balance," said Raymondi who believes that companies could be warned when they apply for a permit to install new lines or a telephone pole,

Palmucci's recommendation also included taxing utility poles and establishing a Utility Advisory Committee within the city.

Determined to pay off your mortgage as quickly as possible?
This loan is for you!

There are so many good reasons to love the 15-Year Mortgage. For some people, it's about being debt-free. Others want the mortgage paid off by the time the kids go to college or before they retire. Some see paying off their mortgage quickly as a kind of "forced" savings. Here's the simple fact: If you can swing the somewhat-higher monthly payments, a 15-Year Mortgage knocks years off your original loan. Your equity builds very quickly. And you pay thousands less in interest, compared to a longer-term mortgage loan. Rates are still at historic lows. How much longer? Who knows. If a 15-Year sounds good to you, let's talk. Soon! Come see us or call Angela Blanchard or Richard Coleman at 617-471-0750. Or apply at colonialfed.com - click the Loans tab. (Also available for debt consolidation and for new home purchases.)

Setting The Record Straight

We think it's unfair and untrue.

And it requires a rebuttal.

We're talking about recent comments made by mayoral candidate Anne Mahoney on her own Quincy Access TV program about the Sun's coverage of her campaign.

MAHONEY

"The Quincy Sun hasn't run anything" Mahoney told viewers referring to press releases in a discussion with her campaign manager, Mike Healy.

Then, she attacks the paper's integrity.

"I'm not getting the coverage. . . . That goes back to the fact that this city is a tough city. It goes back to the very nature that it's cronyism and it's who's connected to who."

Mahoney is entitled to her opinion.

So are we.

And since she brought this up in a public forum, we find it necessary to present our side – with some facts.

First, The Sun has published releases issued by the Mahoney campaign.

She was the lead story when she announced her candidacy in May.

Some readers then criticized us for not running a second story on her kick-off reception. The simple explanation: The Sun can't attend all the campaign receptions so we don't cover any of them.

Since her formal announcement, Mahoney has received coverage in The Sun.

We printed a release with Mahoney calling for a comprehensive economic development strategy.

We printed a release issued by proponents for a track at Pageant Field after a court ruling determined the track siting issue rests with the school committee. Mahoney – an opponent of the Faxon Field site for a new track – was quoted in the release.

A few weeks ago – before her comments on QATV – we considered printing another release, this one on education funding. I had asked a few follow-up questions but never heard back from her camp.

So it didn't make it in the paper.

Political candidates who inquire about the Sun's press coverage are generally told that we try to print their information – but we make no guarantees.

We also want to make our readers aware that Mahoney's comments on TV – which aired the day before we went to press last week – did not influence our decision to run another Mahoney campaign release in the Sept. 29th issue. This one called out Mayor Koch for his decision to appoint Joseph Barron fire chief.

This wasn't a case of a squeaky wheel getting some grease. We planned to use the release all along because we had space for it and it was newsworthy.

We're not making a federal case out of this episode.

But we're entitled to rebut Mahoney's misrepresentation about the Sun's coverage of her campaign.

I also think it's unfair to label the Sun – and she probably means me since I am the newspaper's publisher – as being one of Tom Koch's cronies.

No one – repeat: no one – influences editorial coverage in The Sun.

Those decisions rest squarely on my shoulders.

There are no favors being held as Mahoney would lead viewers to believe who tuned into her show.

Holding press releases is an unfortunate circumstance when publishing a weekly newspaper. It does not mean we are bias against any individual or any group.

The fact of the matter is sometimes we simply don't have space to print everything we receive. And it happens to everyone: political candidates, elected officials, department heads, and other sources.

Even stories written by staff reporters and myself are occasionally held.

We have numerous groups requesting editorial space for their fundraisers, special projects, meeting notifications and other "gotta-get-the word-out" articles.

We also stand by the original mission of The Quincy Sun: to publish more Quincy news than any other source.

We cover the city council, school committee and other government entities.

High school and youth sports are included on our pages.

News from various city departments including the city clerk, health, recreation and library are also printed.

The Sun is a community newspaper and Quincy is a pretty active community.

We do our best to serve everyone.

Which brings me to my last point:

We understand our readers deserve campaign coverage from all the candidates in contested races.

This year is no exception.

So, we have instituted a policy regarding press releases and profiles for all 19 candidates running for mayor, councillor at-large, ward councillor and school committee.

The policy was mailed out to every candidate the day after the Sept. 20 preliminary election.

All candidates will have two press releases on an issue of their choice printed in The Sun.

The releases start this week. They are submitted by candidates seeking a city council seat.

Next week, we've invited the mayoral and school committee candidates to share their views on an issue.

We'll run the second round of releases for the council candidates Oct. 20 and the second round for the mayoral and school committee contenders Oct. 27.

For our Nov. 3 issue – the last one before the Nov. 8 election – profiles of all candidates will appear.

We also plan to cover some of the mayoral debates so both candidates can respond to the issues when they appear face-to-face.

We think that's the best way to give our readers the election coverage they deserve – and in a manner that's fair to everyone on the ballot.

MARIE

MARIE D'OLIMPIO, the Sun's food editor and author, is recuperating from surgery following a recent fall.

Marie said she hopes to return to work at The Sun in four to six weeks.

In the meantime, her fans will be glad to know we'll be repeating some of her favorite recipes until she comes back with "fresh" copy.

One of her recipes – for Orzo Stuffed Peppers – appears on Page 8 this week.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1938-postcard reproduction showing the Cliveden Building on the corner of Cliveden and Hancock Streets in Quincy Square. On the corner of the ground floor of the building was the Gordon Murray Pharmacy and then the Quincy Electric Company's Appliance Store. Upstairs was home to many of Quincy's important civic organizations including: The Quincy Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, Retail Merchants Association, Community Fund and the Granite Manufacturers Association. The next building was Remick's Department Store, next was the State Theater and The Clothes Mart. Further down were these other popular retail stores: Sheridan's, Enterprise, Cummings, Kresge's and Thom McCan. It wasn't until 10 years later that Woolworth's would be built on the left hand corner of Cliveden Street. Surrounded by dozens of other stores after WWII, the Cliveden Building could arguably be called the heart of Shopperstown USA. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Tax Rate Expected To Be $194 Plus - $34 To $35 Hike

By FRANK McCAULEY

Quincy's 1977 Real Estate Tax Rate was expected to be set at just under the $195 mark. It would mean a hike just shy of $35 over the 1975 rate of $159.

Assessors Chairman Elmer K. Fagerlund and Budget Coordinator Sarah Saccone left for Boston late Tuesday to meet with the State Department of Corporations and Taxation.

This Week
1976
35 Years Ago

Fagerlund told a stunned City Council that the figures he had in hand added up to $40 increase but Mayor Joseph J. LaRaia said concessions expected from the State would bring it "closer to $30 than $40."

Council President Arthur H. Tobin pleaded with Jack Salenius, the mayor's executive secretary, saying, "Jack, please don't go into Boston tomorrow and set a $40 tax increase. Don't do this great injustice to the city of Quincy."

Mayor LaRaia commented, "To delay this setting the tax rate any further would only be more expensive for the city. We have already borrowed $12 million this year and that is high."

(Editor's note: The rate for FY1977 was set at $194.80 per thousand of valuation, an increase of $34.90 per thousand of valuation.)

LaRAIA URGES T TO ASSIGN POLICE OFFICERS

Mayor Joseph J. LaRaia urged the MBTA to station police officers day and night at the Quincy Center Station and along the line between Wollaston and North Quincy to prevent vandalism.

The mayor pointed out in a letter to MBTA Director Robert Kiley that Quincy has been heavily committed to the presence of the MBTA and such presence should be balanced by necessary safety precautions on the part of the Authority.

Steps Needed To Insure Traffic Safety Near Fenno House

(A copy of the following correspondence was submitted to The Quincy Sun for publication.)

A petition has been submitted to the Quincy Public Safety Committee to establish a Senior Safety Zone at 540 Hancock St., Fenno House. A report follows which describes the steps needed to insure traffic safety in this area.

While my name (Peter P. Gleba) is on this petition, I represent the residents of Fenno House, senior housing.

This all started some months ago, when at a meeting of residents, all signed a letter to Mayor Koch with a copy to Mr. Gillon, Traffic Engineer, requesting safety improvements to the traffic crossing.

Thanks to Mr. Gutro for introducing this petition. And thanks to Representative Bruce Ayers and candidates for Ward 5 Councilor, Mrs. Kirsten Hughes and Mr. Neil McCole for visiting the crossing. All agreed that safety needed to be improved.

Two Fenno residents have been hit at the crossing, one put into the hospital. One was hit by a vehicle going through the red light on Hancock Street. The hospitalized senior was hit by a vehicle running the red light coming out of Linden Street.

Mr. Gillon asked if these incidents occurred before the overhead traffic light was installed. They did but the overhead arm would not have affected the incidents.

I estimate the speed of the traffic on this part of Hancock Street to be somewhere around 30 to 40 miles per hour. I requested the police department to send someone down with a radar gun to measure the speed of travel. I got no response.

Mr. Gillon emailed to me that since there was a traffic signal at 540 Hancock, signs would not be placed. He emailed that crosswalks that do not have traffic signals get signs.

After awhile I discovered three traffic signals with signs within walking distance of the crossing in question. These are at Hayward Street, Billings Road, and Glover Avenue.

Fluorescent signs have been installed which are inappropriate and poorly placed. The Fenno House area is to be designated as a Senior Safety Zone. Instead we got stick figures for the crossing. Signs stating Senior Crossing should be installed. Using a slogan rather than simply stating Senior Crossing would be attention getting.

Currently, in one direction, a sign is placed on the traffic light yard arm. Another is placed on a telephone pole facing the other direction. In neither case are the signs visible from Linden Street and the driveway at Fenno House from where vehicles run red lights. These signs are disconnected from the crosswalk.

Drivers take the opportunity to get to the far lane in the break in traffic afforded by the red light. Invariably, they run the red light. The aforementioned senior who was struck and put in the hospital was hit this way.

The signs should be placed in front of the street level traffic signals as they are at the three traffic lights within walking distance of 540 Hancock Street and in other parts of the city.

It has been stated that signs would not have any effect on vehicles running a red light. I believe they would have some effect if they were at the crosswalk and indicated that the crossing is being used by seniors. Otherwise why are there combinations of sign and traffic light all over the city?

An objection has been made by Mr. Gillon that there is a tree in the way of one of the signs if it were placed on a traffic signal pole. The view is not obstructed.

A sign should be also placed in the middle of the Fenno House crossing. There is a such a sign on Sea Street, another raceway like Hancock Street, and periodically on Beale Street near the CVS in Wollaston Center. And there is another on Hancock Street near the Quincy bus stop. The request is for a sign, not a barrel. There are some very old persons using the crossing.

As to part two, I noted that in the change from green to red, the yellow light stayed on for three seconds by personally timing the length. Much too quick, given the rate of speed of the vehicles, to react to a change to red. The time the yellow light should be lengthened from six to eight seconds.

As to installation of red light cameras, Mr. Ayers tells me that such legislation is wending its way through the legislature. He states that the crossing at Fenno House could be a pilot. It is a poster child for red light running. Please note that red light cameras differ from traffic cameras. Perhaps a Home Rule Petition could be made if state legislation does not pass. If this were to be a pilot study, perhaps the state would pay for the camera. Or obtain one on a trial basis.

There are signs on either side of the crossing stating: "Senior Zone 20 MPH". Photo 5 is of one of those signs. They might as well be invisible. As indicated by Mr. McCole's letter. Enforcement is impossible as it would require a constant police presence. These signs should be replaced by red light camera signs.

Mr. Gillon has made some improvements to the crossing. A signal cross arm has been installed and the crosswalk stripes have been refurbished. The signal light push button has been reconfigured so now the light comes on immediately instead of a long delay. Recent-

Quincy Art Council Receives $22,710

The city's State House delegation – Reps. Ronald Mariano, Bruce J. Ayers and Tackey Chan and Sen. John F. Keenan announce the Quincy Art Council has been awarded $22,710 from a Massachusetts Cultural Council grant.

The announcement was made as part of a statewide funding program by the Massachusetts Cultural Council. The Quincy Art Council will re-grant these funds to local cultural programs.

This funding is spread throughout the state to support a variety of cultural programs to connect children and adults through music, art, theater, literature and language.

"A significant portion of the funds are given at the local level to encourage and support local organization," Keenan said.

Harry Potter Extravaganza Oct. 22 At Quincy Community Methodist Church

Quincy Community Methodist Church will transform itself for one day into Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry on Sat., Oct. 22. The doors to this magical world will open promptly at 1 p.m.

"This is the seventh year we've offered the Harry Potter Extravaganza to our community," said Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of the church, "however, this year we have to hold the event a week earlier than usual."

Planning for this yearly event begins months ahead of time and this year the event will once again include things people most enjoy: there will be a representative from Ollivander's Wands, a Sorting Ceremony and a Great Feast. "Classes" in Defense Against the Dark Arts, Divination, and Care of Magical Creatures will also be held. However, Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden emphasized, the "classes" will be brand new. "We hope people will enjoy the surprises we have planned," she said.

Members and friends of the church portray some of the characters from the books. Returning this year will be Hagrid, Mad Eye Moody, Madame Maxime, Beatrix Black, and Professor McGonagall, among others.

"I can't emphasize enough how important it is for people to make their reservations soon," Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden noted. "We've sold out every year. Last year some people called several days before the celebration, and we had to turn them away – we'd already sold out."

Reservations can be made by calling the "Harry Potter Hotline" at 617-773-6854. To help make the registration process faster, all tickets purchased by Oct. 15 are $6 per person and $20 for a family of four. For those paying at the door or those who send in their payment later than Oct. 15, the cost is $8 per person and $25 for a family of four. In either case, children under three are free. All children need to be accompanied by an adult and costumes are encouraged, but not required.

"This year we are also asking everyone who comes to Hogwarts to bring non-perishable food items," added Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden. "The food will be donated to the Interfaith Social Services Food Pantry in Quincy."

Quincy Community United Methodist Church is located at 40 Beale St., across from the Wollaston Red Line train stop. The building is handicapped accessible through the door nearest the flagpole.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Orzo Stuffed Peppers

Stuffed peppers, one of the family's favorite can be made many ways, from a bread stuffing to meat, rice and so forth.

But today's recipe is made with orzo, so popular these days in salads. Although I use it mostly in soup. I love the way it comes out as a stuffing for a pepper.

STUFFED PEPPERS WITH ORZO

3 large green peppers (I usually use a red one also)
1/4-cup vegetable oil
1 medium onion
1-cup orzo
Salt and pepper
½ cup chopped fresh parsley
¼ cup tomato sauce
2 small tomatoes
1 ½ cups water
2 tablespoons tomato sauce (over the peppers)

Cut the peppers in halves, removing the seeds. Grease a 9-inch baking dish and set aside. Heat the oil and sauté the onion until golden. Add the orzo, salt, pepper and parsley. Simmer for about two minutes. Dice one of the tomatoes and add. Add the ¼ cup tomato sauce and one cup of water. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer until water is absorbed. (About10 minutes).

Fill the peppers with the orzo mixture. Place in a baking dish.

In a small bowl, put the ½ cup water and the two tablespoons tomato sauce. Pour around each pepper. Cut the remaining tomato into thin slices, and arrange them on top of the peppers. Cover and place in a cold oven, 350- degrees and bake for one hour.

Sheriff's Office Joins Fight Against Homelessness

Recognizing that homelessness is a significant factor in the crime rate, Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti has agreed to share statistical data with researchers in an effort to decrease homelessness and its drain on public resources.

MICHAEL G. BELLOTTI

"In many cases, there appear to be links between habitual criminality and habitual homelessness," Sheriff Bellotti said.

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office is working with the Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance (MHSA) in order to track the correlation between homelessness and the commission of crime. MHSA is working with research evidence showing that helping a homeless person find permanent housing actually saves taxpayer money. For instance, annual Medicaid costs for homeless people plummeted by 67 percent when they found permanent housing.

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office gathers detailed information about inmates upon their intake at the Norfolk County Correctional Center in Dedham. MHSA and its partner, the Case Strategy Group, have found certain statistics from this information to be extremely valuable in determining how best to attack the problem of homelessness. Sheriff Bellotti recently met with MHSA Executive Director Joe Finn and Case Strategy Group founder James Quinn to discuss how best to coordinate the transfer of data.

"The fight against crime requires us to constantly think outside the box and to recognize that so many of these societal problems are inter-related," Sheriff Bellotti said. "The smart approach is a comprehensive approach, and that is the approach we are taking."

By JOHN F. KEENAN
State Senator

The Massachusetts State Senate is now a week into its debate over casino gaming and I wanted to provide a brief update on where it stands.

Senators filed 182 amendments to the 88-page bill and, as of last Tuesday, when debate was suspended in deference to the start of Rosh Hashanah, we had debated and voted on about one-half of those amendments.

Debate was scheduled to resume this week. The main vote on the bill was not scheduled to take place until after the deadline for submitting this update. I will be sure to provide another update later.

I filed 27 amendments to the bill. Although this was, by far, the most filed by a freshman senator, all these amendments address specific concerns I have with the bill. My primary issue is that I oppose the licensing of three casinos and one slot parlor. As a result, I filed amendments that would reduce the number of casinos from three to two, and strip out licensing for slot parlors as well. Neither of these amendments have been debated yet.

The main concern I heard during my public town hall meetings on the bill was that if casinos are permitted in Massachusetts, they should employ Massachusetts residents. I agreed with this sentiment and am pleased to say that the Senate has adopted my amendment requiring casinos to utilize Massachusetts residents in the building and operation of the facilities.

JOHN F. KEENAN

I also have tremendous concerns with the proposed regulatory commission established to license and oversee casino gambling. There are not enough checks to prevent this commission from becoming another runaway state authority. To this end, I filed amendments specifying that the commission had to abide by the state's Open Meeting and Public Records Law. These amendments sparked a legal review of the bill and were later withdrawn after reaching a consensus that the existing language would prevent the commission from meeting behind closed doors, and keeping their records private. I also proposed mandating a review of the commission's budget and management structure every five years to make sure it was staying within industry best practices. This amendment did not pass. I was, however, successful in passing an amendment requiring the commission to wait 30 days after the public hearing on an application before taking a vote. This is so the commission has time to review materials submitted as part of the hearing, as well as contemplate the testimony and not make a snap judgment.

My other main worry is that the proposed ethics rules contained in the bill that will guide the commission are not strict enough. Considering the ethics and corruption problems we've historically seen within the casino industry in other parts of the nation, I filed amendments that would ensure Massachusetts has the nation's strictest gaming commission ethics code. I seek to prohibit not just commissioners and commission employees from accepting gifts, or drinking and gambling in Massachusetts casinos, but extending those prohibitions to immediate family members as well. While the proposed legislation contains prohibitions on commission employees having financial stakes in casinos or casino vendors, I have sought to extend this prohibition to include immediate family members. In addition, I also filed an amendment to require a longer cooling-off period before casino industry executives can join the commission, and vice versa. These particular amendments, however, were not adopted.

There was some media attention given to an amendment that would have prohibited legislators from taking a job within the casino industry for five years after leaving office. This proposal, after some passionate debate, was reduced to one year. Please know that I would have voted in favor of the five-year ban, as I felt it an appropriate standard for this unique industry.

I also worked to pass amendments that prohibit the commission from employing anyone convicted of a felony within the previous 10 years, and that prohibit political contributions from the casino industry to municipal candidates in host communities.

This has been a very informative and, at times, passionate debate about an issue that will have long-lasting cultural, economic and social impacts on our state. Senate President Murray has encouraged a full and open debate on casino gaming, and I anticipate that the issue may be resolved finally one way or another soon.

Historic Hancock Cemetery Prepares For The Future

A major step in the preservation, interpretation and stewardship of Quincy's historic Hancock Cemetery is underway, announces Mayor Thomas P. Koch.

One of the oldest municipal cemeteries in the nation, Hancock Cemetery looks out on historic United First Parish Church and stands beside Quincy's stately Old City Hall. It is the resting place of many of Quincy's early families from the 1600s through the 1800s, including Hancocks, Adamses, Hoars, Breislers and Quincys.

A team of award-winning specialists hired by the City is currently preparing the "Hancock Cemetery Master Conservation Plan," a comprehensive strategy to ensure the future of this important and popular historic site.

The project is led by Halvorson Design Partnership, the Boston landscape architecture firm who recently developed the concept plans for the new Adams Green downtown open space initiative. The Halvorson firm is also renowned for its historic cemetery planning and design, with projects throughout the eastern United States and Canada.

The consultant team also includes Dr. Ivan Myjer, a national expert in historic stone preservation, Sutherland Conservation & Consulting, one of New England's leading firms of cemetery preservation professionals, Shary Page Berg, noted landscape historian and Northern Geometrics, electronic mapping specialists.

A major focus of the plan is on the "objects" in the cemetery—gravestones, crypts, tombs and monuments. The team has identified a total of 743 items and has systematically inspected and evaluated each one, in order to make recommendations regarding maintenance or repair needs.

In addition, the cemetery landscape as a whole is being assessed by Halvorson Design Partnership, to identify actions needed to ensure the future of the lawns, trees and pathways that contribute to the totality of this sacred ground. High priority, emergency repairs, identified during the study, will also be performed by the team.

The Master Conservation Plan project is directed by the City's Department of Planning and Community Development, led by Dennis Harrington. An ad hoc committee is advising the City on the project, including representatives of the Quincy Historical Commission, Quincy Historical Society, National Park Service and the City's Cemetery and Park & Forestry Departments.

The plan is slated for completion in late fall 2011.

Water Meter Replacement and Automated Meter Reading System Project

Information for Residents

The Quincy Department of Public Works is updating 24,000 water meters throughout the city. The project includes the replacement of both the water meters and external reading system. The completed project will greatly improve the reliability and accuracy of water meter reading operations and will increase the efficiency of the DPW. The city has contracted with Easton Winwater Services, who will be performing the installations. Easton WinWater Services will need access to each water customer's house or business for this work. Please be aware that Easton WinWater Services will contact customers directly via U.S. mail. Residents of Quincy are reminded not to respond to unsolicited phone calls or home visits. All personnel installing water meters are issued identification and will arrive in uniform and in marked vehicles. A link to names and pictures of each installer can be found on the DPW website. If you believe you have been contacted by someone other than Easton Winwater or the city, please call the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

The meter replacement work will begin in September in the North Quincy/Squantum area, and will progress throughout the city by water meter reading route over the course of a two-year period. There is a systematic implementation plan for this project and therefore customers are asked to not contact Easton Winwater Service or Public Works for their meter replacement until they have received a notification letter from Easton Winwater. For a current update on this program please visit the DPW website at http://www.quincyma.gov/Government/PWD/WaterMeterRepacement.cfm

Survivor Of Columbine School Shooting Tells North Quincy High School Students:

'Leave A Legacy Of Kindness, Show Compassion'

By EMILY TAFT

A survivor of the Columbine High School shooting massacre called on students a North Quincy High School to live a life of kindness during an inspirational and moving visit to the school Sept. 15.

"The story and the message were inspirational," said Senior Ally Vadeikis. "I was very moved and touched by it."

Craig Scott, whose sister Rachel was the first among the 12 students who were killed in the tragic shooting, also urged them to practice pre-acceptance, not pre-judging.

"Our culture is in dire need of some compassion," said Scott. "Your attitude has the power to effect the people around you. Through the people Rachel helped her legacy will continue on."

Scott's appearance at North Quincy High School was part of the Rachel's Challenge named for his sister. The assembly was organized by the school's Students Against Destructive Decisions (SADD) chapter. They raised money with the help from the North Quincy High School Parent Advisory Council and Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti.

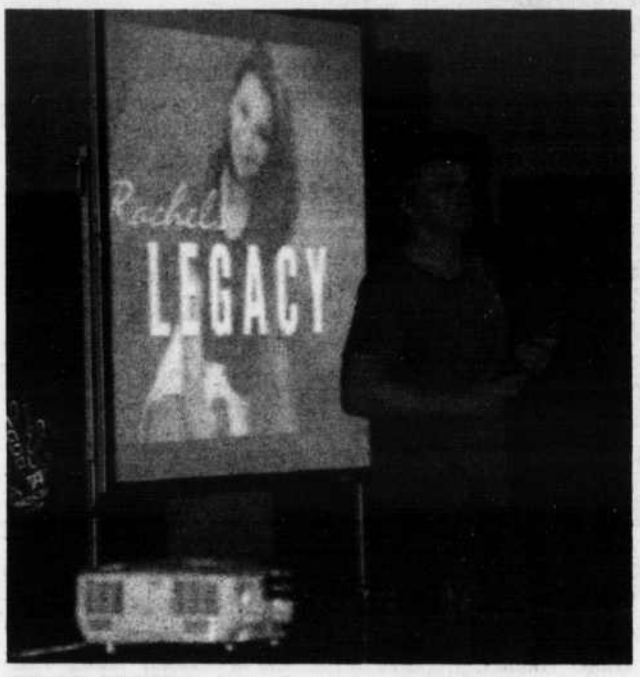

On the morning of April 20, 1999, two Columbine High School seniors in Littleton, Colorado walked into the school armed with guns, knives and explosives. They walked the hallways, into the cafeteria and finally into the library killing 12 students and 1 teacher, and injuring 21 others, and in the end taking their own lives.

The first fatality that day was Scott's sister Rachel. The program tells the story of her short-lived life, and what students can do to impact their lives and the lives of others in a positive way.

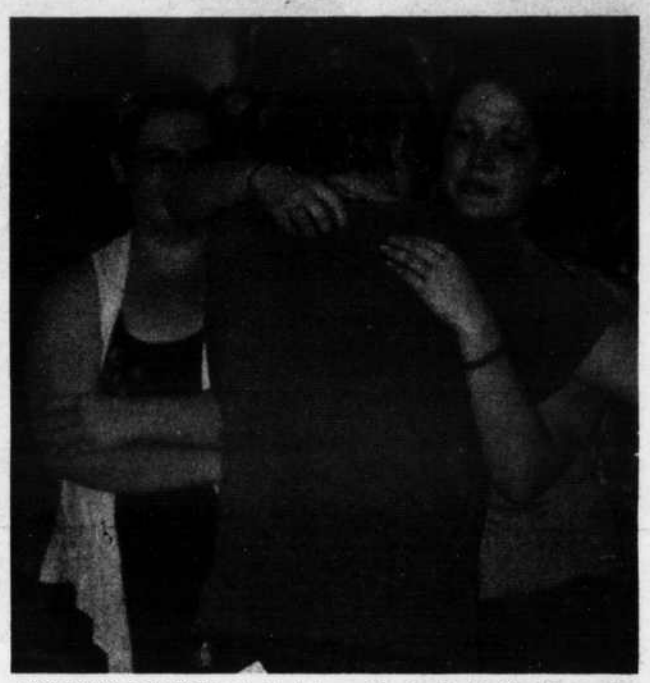

That day, Craig was one of many in the library where most of the deaths and injuries occurred.

"When I saw those two boys I saw what no compassion looks like, no feelings for other people," said Scott. "They treated that day like it was a game, like playing with peoples lives was just a game."

Scott saw no compassion from the two boys that day except for one instance when they decided to let one of their acquaintances hiding in the library go.

CRAIG SCOTT speaks to students at North Quincy High School as part of SADD Rachel's Challenge. He talked to students about leaving a legacy of kindness and showing compassion towards others. Scott spoke of his sister, Rachel – a victim of the Columbine High School shooting 12 years ago – and how in her short-lived life she had touched many with her acts of kindess. Quincy Sun Photos/Emily Taft

A NORTH QUINCY student hugs Craig Scott after he spoke with students about his sister, and the horrific tragedy that happened at Columbine High School in Colorado 12 years ago. His appearance was part of the Rachel's Challenge program put on by SADD (Students Against Destructive Decisions). Many students were brought to tears from scenes and messages brought up throughout the presentation.

While in the library, Scott hid with two of his friends underneath a desk, hoping to not be seen. He was the only one who survived of the three.

After her death Darrell Scott, Rachel's father, came up with the idea of Rachel's Challenge, a non-profit organization that teaches students to make a positive change in the way they treat others.

The challenge was created from six of Rachel's diaries that spoke of how she wanted the world to be.

The program challenges everyone to step out with compassion in hopes to "start a chain reaction."

"We decided in 2003 that we wanted to focus our program in schools," said Craig Scott. "This is a special story, a powerful story, and a program that is good for the climate of the schools."

The program, to date, has reached over 15 million students and adults, and has traveled all around the world.

During the presentation Scott told the story of his

Since becoming mayor, Tom Koch has cut $9 million from our public schools. At the same time, he's spent millions on unsuccessful lawsuits, legal appeals, pet projects, and jobs for his friends and family.

As a member and vice chair of the school committee, Anne Mahoney fought successfully for free, full-day kindergarten and literacy specialists. She helped oversee the construction of the new Quincy High School and plans for Central Middle School. And as your mayor and chair of the school committee, she'll stop wasting money on lawsuits and start making our schools a priority once again.

visitors coming from I-93 via Burgin Parkway.

It's named after former Mayor Walter J. Hannon. Hannon, 80, was Quincy's mayor from 1972 until 1975. Hannon is credited with starting redevelopment plans when he was in office.

"Vision is a great word," Hannon said at the ceremony, "but you need commitment. We dedicate this road because we're serious about a new downtown."

Also on hand was Cong. Stephen Lynch of Boston. He drew a parallel between Hannon's time in office and today.

"When Walter was mayor it was a tough economic time coming out of the Vietnam War," Lynch said before praising Hannon for his plans for Quincy. "Today," he went on to say "we have another mayor thinking out of the box."

Mayor Tom Koch served as master of ceremonies for the event. He called Sunday "a wonderful day to be mayor."

Koch also thanked all of his predecessors, including five who were in attendance: former Mayors Walter Hannon, Arthur Tobin, Francis McCauley, James Sheets and William Phelan.

Former mayor Joseph LaRaia was invited but was unable to attend.

"So many contributions from so many folks" made this (parkway) possible, Koch said. Later on, before introducing Hannon, Koch noted he got his first taste of politics from the ex-mayor because he "delivered flyers for him" as a kid.

While the parkway is seen as a major piece of the future, most of the hour-long event was spent honoring Hannon himself. Lynch read a citation from the U.S. House of Representatives he and Keating introduced. And Keating presented the former mayor with an American flag that had flown over the Capitol in Washington.

City Clerk Joseph P. Shea delivered the introduction for the unveiling. After naming all the visiting politicians in attendance, including State Treasurer Steve Grossman, former Lieutenant Governor Francis Bellotti and former State Treasurer Tim Cahill, he said it was good to see "so many friends and families here." He also noted "all of the former mayors thought of ways to honor Hannon."

Former Cong. William Delahunt, who represented Quincy in D.C. before Keating, spoke about Hannon's character. He called him a "genuine article and the real deal." He also said he found him "refreshing" and that Hannon's character traits, mainly his honesty "are sorely missed today."

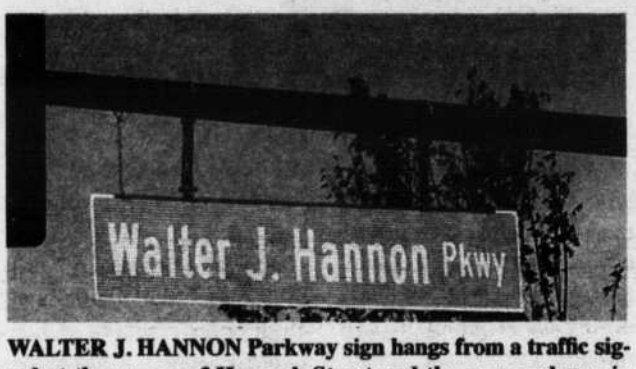

And in a moment of levity, Delahunt, who ran against Hannon for a City Council seat in 1969 joked, "The only election I lost was to this little guy here, I'm not going to say you stole the election, but you won by two votes."

House Majority Leader and Quincy state Rep. Ron Mariano also addressed the crowd.

"Unfortunately, I wasn't in office when you were mayor," the Quincy Point resident said, "but I know we would've had a good time." He also called the act of securing funding a "rite of spring" he and other members of Quincy's delegation to Beacon Hill made annually.

The entire City Council was also there. Council President Kevin Coughlin spoke highly of his relationship with Hannon.

"I have appreciated his counsel," he said. "He's not afraid to tell you both sides of the issue." He also called the dedication of the parkway to the former mayor "a metaphor" because "like it, it will contribute to our well-being." When he finished his remarks Coughlin handed Patricia Hannon, Walter's wife of 58 years, a bouquet of orange roses.

WALTER J. HANNON Parkway sign hangs from a traffic signal at the corner of Hancock Street and the new parkway in Quincy Center.

Koch also spoke highly of another former mayor, the late James McIntyre. "Jim McIntyre was the architect," he proclaimed "and Hannon was the builder." "McIntyre brought the (MBTA) Red Line to the city," he continued "and secured the air rights for the city."

Hannon was the last to speak at the event. He thanked his wife Pat for helping raise their children and grandchildren, and revealed when city officials first approached him about the road's dedication he "told them to call it the Pat Hannon Parkway" for her support.

Hannon started his career at his family's tire business, and eventually took control of it. His public service started on the City Council, and later was elected a state representative. During his term as mayor he helped launch State Street South in North Quincy. Despite opposition from neighborhood residents, he also pushed for the building of the Quincy Adams MBTA Station; 12,000 people signed a petition against it according to Koch.

After leaving office, he became the director of Small Business Development for the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. Following his tenure there, he helped oversee the construction of Marina Bay and later the building of Granite Links Golf Course. He currently works as Granite Links' director of Civic Affairs.

Before ending his speech, Hannon gave some words of advice to today's city leaders.

"Don't ever give into the naysayers," was his first. The second was "failure is not an option." And most poignantly "in the end, no one's going to thank you… but at the end of the day you're going to say 'I was on the team and I won the fight."

He then took the first ride on the Parkway in a vintage sedan – a black 1951 Mercury – with a police escort; a monument to him was also unveiled at the street's intersection with Hancock Street.

Hannon's Remarks At Parkway Dedication

'Don't Ever Give In To The Naysayers'

The following are excerpts of the remarks made by former Mayor Walter Hannon at Sunday's dedication of the Walter J. Hannon Parkway named in his honor.

The naming of the street is a great honor, but today I speak for all the men and women who served our City since 1964. Their names are not here today, but they made the decisions, painful at times, to move ahead; no one person does this alone. I thank them.

Not all cities had the leadership and will to do what's right, and those cities paid a price because they listened to the naysayers who are the most vocal, the most threatening.

Quincy, like older cities had to change itself, recycle itself, build new and updated buildings, housing and places of employment for our citizens. State Street South, Marina Bay, Crown Colony, Burgin Parkway Connector, and Granite Links are monuments to forward thinking - always focused on the future. We have strong and vibrant neighborhoods. We have a new Quincy High School and Central Middle School – expensive but worth it. Our parks and recreation areas are second to none. How many cities our size have three golf courses?

Most everyone agrees the city center has to be brought up to the 21st century. We hear the word "vision." It takes more than vision to build the "downtown," it takes commitment. If you tell the usual answer is, "call me when it's done." Today, it's done – Quincy is open for business and development. The road that we dedicate today shows that the City is serious in the rebuilding of Quincy Center; Mayor Koch and his administration are firmly committed to this project.

The next few years will be challenging, sometimes unpleasant, but the end result is worth the challenge. Don't ever give into the naysayers, failure is not an option; in the end, no one's going to thank you but at the end of the day you're going to say 'I was on the team and I won the fight.'

I predict that, within the next ten years, Quincy Center will be the place to work and live and will be the envy of the South Shore.

The ball is passed to you, its citizens and elected officials. It's your turn. Don't drop the ball.

Good luck, and may God bless the City of Quincy.

Walter J. Hannon Parkway Fitting Tribute To Former Mayor

By FRANK McCAULEY

On Sunday, Oct. 2, I had the occasion to attend the dedication ceremonies and the naming of the Concourse in honor of former Mayor Walter J. Hannon.

Walter Hannon and I grew up together in the "Willows" section of Houghs Neck. We both became active in Quincy politics during the early 1960's. In November, 1963, we both were elected to the City Council; Walter winning the Ward 5 City Council seat while I won the Ward 1 City Council seat.

During his eight years on the city council, Walter championed the cause of economic and business development in Quincy as a way of easing the burden on Quincy residential property owners.

In 1971, as a candidate for mayor and chairman of the City Council's Economic Development Committee, Walter worked hard for development of the Montclair area bordering the Neponset River. His efforts led to the construction of the State Street South development which is now one of the largest taxpayers and employers of Quincy residents.

Walter also implemented a plan to combine the rubbish and garbage pickups. A plan which has saved Quincy taxpayers millions of dollars in refuse costs over the years. He also successfully fought to bring the South Quincy MBTA Station to South Quincy.

Many of Walter's ideas were not popular at the time with his constituents, some may have cost him a third term as mayor, but in the long run have proved their worth.

At long last, the crosstown connector (Concourse) and now the Walter J. Hannon Parkway, is a fitting tribute to former mayor, councillor and state representative, Walter Hannon!

space on Newport Avenue," said Tsaffaras, describing the potential for a more attractive lease in Quincy Center now when there is "more value for our money."

William Grindlay, chairman of the Board of Governors, and Pushap Kapoor, vice president of Administration at Quincy College, joined Tsaffaras at Monday's meeting when he asked City Council to approve a 100,000 square-foot lease for the college.

"We're short of space," said Tsaffaras who reported that approximately 4,600 part-time students are enrolled, the equivalent of 2,900 full time students.

Despite the three locations, space and parking issues have dogged the administration in recent years, according to Tsaffaras who said shuttling students and faculty from one campus to another costs the college $200,000 a year and that would be saved with one destination.

Tsaffaras asked councillors to vote to approve a lease of up to 100,000 square-feet for up to eight years, thus replacing the council's previous vote approving a 30,000 square feet proposal. The council unanimously approved the request.

Currently, Quincy College is an entity of the City of Quincy which requires that major decisions be approved by the mayor and city council.

Grindlay and the governors will likely choose between locating at Hancock Plaza at 1515 Hancock St., or at Presidents Place, 1250 Hancock St., as these were the only two respondents to the college's recent Request for Proposals.

College officials originally sought new quarters of only 30,000 square-feet through an RFP issued in August. The original plan sought larger accommodations for the college's nursing and health educations programs currently located on Temple Street, Quincy Center.

Once they reviewed responses, they considered one unified campus.

Tsaffaras said the college could now lease 100,000 square-feet in Quincy Center and be better positioned for a move to its permanent home in the revitalized Quincy Center in 2016.

Currently, college officials are working with the Quincy Center redevelopment team, Street-Works of White Plains, N.Y., on plans for a single permanent facility of 200,000 square feet with a target date of 2016.

"This lease is the bridge to get there," said Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro.

DENTISTRY
for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

EROSION CONTROL

Tooth enamel may be the hardest tissue in the body, but it is still susceptible to the erosion that occurs as a result of brushing teeth too hard. Excessive consumption of fruit juices and soft drinks can lead to erosion of the tooth surface, which begins with gum recession and tooth sensitivity. The tooth enamel will eventually show signs of erosion that usually takes the form of horizontal notching at the gumline. Eventually, the enamel may wear through, and the underlying dentin becomes exposed, which leads to severe tooth sensitivity. Fortunately, this problem can be addressed with resin bonding, which fills in the eroded tooth with a resin material that exactly matches the original tooth color.

Dental bonding is among the easiest and least expensive of cosmetic dental procedures. This column has been brought to you in the interest of better dental health. Call us at 617-479-6220 for an appointment. Have you been putting off seeing a dentist? We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where we're currently accepting new patients. We provide cosmetic, functional, and preventive dental care for all ages. You can rely on us to answer your questions about dental treatments and procedures. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincy-dentist.com.

P.S. To circumvent abrasion caused by tooth-brushing that can lead to enamel erosion, patients should use soft-bristled brushes and avoid exerting too much pressure on the handle of the toothbrush.

Keynote Speaker Calls For Greater Accountability For Companies That Produce, Market Alcohol

QPD, School Nurses Join DA Morrissey's Underage Drinking Prevention Conference

District Attorney Michael Morrissey recently hosted more than 150 educators and police from across Norfolk County, including several city police officers and school nurses, at an all-day conference providing strategies to prevent and address underage drinking and other dangerous behavior.

"The time to address underage drinking is before it comes into court as an alcohol-fueled assault, or the car crash that takes a life or causes permanent injury," Morrissey said.

"We are trying to help local police and schools to have the best tools to do that."

Seminars provided strategies for the "High-Risk Season" -- proms and graduations -- Law Enforcement Perspectives on House Parties, the emerging Recovery High School model with insights gained from that population and "Promoting and Supporting Non-Users in Your School."

"We tried to have topics that would appeal to, and hopefully help, each of the different groups attending," Morrissey said.

Quincy Police Officers Lisa Devine and Thomas Gaeta, Sr. attended, as did School Nurse Coordinator Jane Kisielius, North Quincy High School Nurse Mary Jane Callahan and Sterling School Nurse Diane Coletti.

The event, which drew from 23 Norfolk County communities, was also meant to strengthen collaboration among schools, communities, court officials, local law enforcement authorities and social service providers, Morrissey said.

Featured speakers included Mary Elizabeth Heffernan, Secretary of Public Safety and Security, who emphasized the importance of working together to confront this issue, and underscored her agency's commitment to the cause. The Honorable Paul C. Dawley, Regional Administrative Justice for the Administrative Office of the Trial Court, identified some of the substance abuse challenges facing our communities, and outlined how the judiciary has tried to respond.

Participating organizations included the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the Caron Treatment Center, the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, the American Automobile Association (A.A.A.), the Safe Roads Alliance, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (M.I.A.A.), the Southeast Center for Healthy Communities, Students Against Destructive Decisions (S.A.D.D.), the Brain Injury Association of Massachusetts, and the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (A.B.C.C.).

The keynote speaker was Professor Michael Siegel, M.D., M.P.H., of the Department of Community Health Sciences at the Boston University School of Public Health. Dr. Siegel used televised advertisements to illustrate the strategic marketing of alcohol to teens, and called for greater accountability for companies that produce and market alcohol.

The event was funded by a grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security and held at the Lake Pearl Luciano's conference facility in Wrentham.

'Leave A Legacy Of Kindness, Show Compassion'

Scott told the story of his sister, what inspired his father to create this project, and what he would like each and every student to take from the program.

Throughout her life, Rachel wrote in her diary of things she wanted to accomplish in life and things she thought would happen in her life.

Scott challenged the students to answer two questions by the end of his presentation, what will your legacy be, and how will you be remembered.

Rachel impacted many people in her short life and during his presentation Scott talked of these stories in hopes to show students what just a few simple words or actions can do to effect someone else's life.

Thirty minutes before Rachel was killed she said to one of her teachers, "I am going to have an impact on the world" and Scott believes that through this program and through the acts of kindness she did before her death, she has impacted the world.

Rachel was a girl with many ideas about how she would live her life and many times had said to friends and her brother that she believed she would die at a young age. She also had mentioned to her father that she would one day be on Oprah that day did come, but tragically it was to mourn her death.

Scott challenged each student at North Quincy High five things to think about and practice this year: leave a legacy of kindness, show compassion, practice pre-acceptance not pre-judging, learn from your mistakes, and forgive yourself and others.

"I hope that this school becomes a place where you are accepted for who you are," said Scott. "I hope that you all can be different, and that you, in a fast pace society, can take time to find a quiet place for yourselves."

The assembly raised many emotions in the students, and even the faculty, of North Quincy High, and many times throughout the presentation there wasn't a dry eye.

"We held this program last year but had a different speaker," said school nurse and SADD advisor Kristin Houlihan. "The response and the climate of the school after last year's program was so great that we knew we wanted to have it again, and we wanted Craig to be the one to come."

After the presentation students gathered to discuss with Craig on how they will continue on with Rachel's club, which is a group that meets weekly to come up with different projects they will run throughout the year.

"My life has changed since that day, I have learned a lot from being a part of this," said Scott. "Doing this has helped me to focus on the right things, and has challenged me to be the best person I can be."

Steps Needed To Insure Traffic Safety Near Fenno House

ly, another improvement has been made. The solid green light has been replaced by a blinking yellow light. None of these improvements have made a significant impact on vehicles running red lights.

While the blinking yellow light does indicate caution, it does no good when the light changes to solid yellow. It will take significant steps to stop the red light running.

In addition to these points, there is a sign permitting two-hour parking at the bus stop at 540 Hancock St. Vehicles parked here prevent buses from pulling up to the sidewalk. The sign is in front of the sign for route 3A.

In submitting a Constituent Request to install no parking signs, the response was that the request had to come from the MBTA.

I sent another Constituent Request which stated:

I contacted the Quincy Bus Superintendent with no response. The city does not need permission from the MBTA to protect its citizens. The sign permitting two-hour parking at the bus stop at 540 Hancock St. should be replaced with a sign stating "Bus Stop No Parking" such as is the one at the bus stop on Hancock Street next to the intersection with Beale Street.

Another such sign should be placed across the street at 540 Hancock. As it is now, because the bus cannot pull up to the sidewalk when cars are parked at the bus stop, seniors are forced to walk through slush in the winter and puddles when it rains in order to get to the sidewalk.

Vehicles also park at the bus stop across from 540 Hancock St. on Saturday mornings. Folks have to go out into the street to get the bus because the of the cars blocking off the sidewalk. I noted a police car drive right by cars parked at the bus stop across from Fenno House. The officer did not stop to issue tickets. He may have if a no parking sign was present.

I later went down to the bus headquarters on Hancock Street. There I was told that the MBTA has nothing to do with street signs. It is the city that determines the placement of street signs.

Signs stating "Bus Stop No Parking" should be placed at both bus stops.

Representative Ayers has introduced a bill to the State Legislature establishing Senior Safety Zones with a 20 mile per hour limit. As the bill is written now, the Fenno House crossing would not be eligible because the zone is excluded from state highways and numbered routes. This part of Hancock Street is Route 3A. If the bill were passed, Mr. Ayers stated he would seek an exemption for the Fenno House area. Again, I don't feel a 20 mph speed limit is enforceable.

Although this part of Hancock Street is part of State Highway Route 3A, I don't believe the city requires permission from the state to make these changes. Changes have already been made. Unfortunately to no avail.

Welch Group In Step With Federal Health Initiative

Two additional Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group centers have joined Hancock Park Rehabilitation & Nursing Center in Quincy in utilizing cutting-edge technology to enhance quality of care and patient safety.

Colonial Rehabilitation & Nursing Center in Weymouth and Harbor House Rehabilitation & Nursing Center in Hingham also have implemented SigmaCare™ Mobile Electronic Medical Records (EMR) for Long Term Care. The SigmaCare™ EMR allows centers to document and access vital patient information anywhere, at any time, using a computer or handheld mobile device.

The Welch Group's implementation of this real-time, point-of-care technology supports healthcare initiatives at the federal level that call for the creation of a national health information technology infrastructure to increase efficiencies, improve patient safety and enhance quality of care.

"An EMR allows health care professionals to improve the quality of care by keeping records immediately up-to-date, accurate and easily accessible," said Michael Welch, vice president, Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group. The SigmaCare software also alerts providers of possible adverse drug effects for any given patient and offers a comprehensive drug reference guide.

The benefits of electronic medical records (EMR) are many. For example, they:

- Ensure continuity of care by improving coordination and communication among physicians, nurses and other caregivers.
- Allow medical caregivers to document and access information such as vital signs, blood sugar levels, allergies, medication orders, progress notes and hospital discharge summaries at the point of care and in real time.
- Keep all of the patient's up-to-the-minute medical information in one, secure location, accessible only to appropriate medical providers.
- Enhance medication safety across care settings; protects against possible medication transcription errors and illegible orders.
- Have been shown to reduce the occurrence of re-hospitalization.

Charles M. Rippberger, MD, Hancock Park Medical Director since 1996 and Chief of Medicine and Medical Director of Geriatrics at Quincy Medical Center, said he endorses the use of the technology.

"Most useful from a physician's point of view is the ready availability of notes from nursing and other support services, as well as vital signs and weights. The SigmaCare system blends seamlessly with the electronic medical records system I already use, which allows me to upload my notes with a few keystrokes," Rippberger said.

According to Vice-President of Nursing Services and Chief Nursing Officer for South Shore Hospital Tim Quigley, RN, systems such as the SigmaCare™ EMR enhance the partnership between healthcare organizations.

"At South Shore Hospital we believe completely in working with progressive post-acute providers, such as Welch Group, to improve the quality of the care for patients that we share and to help avoid or minimize costly re-hospitalizations."

Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group is a family-owned senior services company that has provided rehabilitation, skilled nursing and memory care, independent, assisted living and home care services for more than 60 years.

Bank Of Canton Donates $2,500 To St. Boniface Haiti Foundation

The Bank of Canton recently donated $2,500 to the St. Boniface Haiti Foundation to help the Foundation's healthcare, education, and community development programs in Haiti.

The contribution was made at the Foundation's recent fundraising event, "Looking Back and Reaching Beyond: The Story of the St. Boniface Haiti Foundation" held at the Granite Links Golf Club in Quincy.

More than 450 attendees were on hand to celebrate the past, present, and future of the organization, and pay tribute to retired President and CEO Nannette Canniff for her 28 years of service to Haiti.

"The St. Boniface Haiti Foundation was excited to welcome our friends at the Bank of Canton as supporters to our annual fundraising event," said Alysia Mueller, Communications officer of the St. Boniface Haiti Foundation. "It was a successful night thanks to the participation of the local community. All the funds raised will go directly to supporting St. Boniface operations in Haiti, where we work to serve the poorest of the poor."

Bank of Canton President and CEO Stephen Costello said, "For nearly three decades, Nannette Canniff has been a driving force at the St. Boniface Haiti Foundation helping improve the quality of life in the Haitian community.

"The Foundation played a vital role in the relief efforts following last year's devastating earthquake, and Nannette has made it her life-work responding to the needs of the Haitian people. Bank of Canton shares that commitment to community betterment through involvement, and we're proud to continue our support of this tremendous organization."

The St. Boniface Haiti Foundation, located in Randolph, is a non-profit, organization founded in 1983 by the parishioners of St. Boniface Catholic Church in Quincy. For over 25 years, it has served those who suffer from extreme poverty in rural Haiti, providing healthcare through the St. Boniface Hospital and clinic and education and community development programs to the communities it serves.

A Job Well Done

On Tuesday, Sept. 27, at approximately 1:30 p.m., Officer Kristen Bowes was on routine patrol in the area of Hancock Street and East Squantum Street when she observed a male standing in front of Walgreen's Pharmacy approach two separate people, holding a red object in his hand. It appeared that the two individuals who were confronted by the male quickly went into the store attempting to get away from him.

LT. DAN MINTON

Officer Bowes drove into the parking lot and as she exited the vehicle, the male walked directly up to her. The Officer asked the male suspect who he was talking to in front of the store. The suspect stated that he was trying to sell his $17 gift card for $10. Through training and experience, Officer Bowes knew that people will steal gift cards before activation (no money on the card) and attempt to scam people into buying them. The suspect denied doing this, saying that he received the gift card today after returning an item without a receipt.

Officer Bowes requested a warrant check and learned that the suspect had a warrant out of Plymouth District Court. The suspect, a 38 year-old Quincy resident, was placed under arrest and searched by Officer Brian Flaherty, who found a cigarette box with pills inside. Officer Flaherty removed these pills which were wrapped inside a plastic bag. There were a total of ten pills: Suboxone (1), Adderall (3), Gabapentin (2), and (4) unidentified tablets. All were turned over to Detective Barkas and will be forwarded to the MA Department of Health Laboratory for analysis.

The suspect was unable to provide a prescription for the above mentioned pills, therefore he was charged with the warrant, Possession of Class B (Suboxone, Adderall), and Possession of Class E (Gabapentin).

ANOTHER JOB WELL DONE

On Sunday, Sept. 25, at approximately 8:40 a.m., Officers William Lanergan and Paul Murphy were dispatched to the area of the Derenzo work site located at the intersection of Revere Road and Mechanic Street for a report of two suspicious males inside the work site possibly stealing materials. Upon arrival, Officer Lanergan observed two males moving a metal pipe from a pick-up truck.

As the Officer approached the two males, one of them stated, "It's ok, we put it back, we are going to leave now, sorry about this." Officer Lanergan told the two suspects that they were not free to leave, then spoke to the caller, who said that he was driving by the work site and he observed the suspects placing numerous items in the rear of the truck.

The witness thought it was suspicious that anyone would be working on a Sunday and stated that they did not look like they belonged to the regular work crew that has been working that site for the last few years. The witness said he called the Police and then approached the suspects, advising them that he knew they were taking property and to stay put. The suspects then got into their truck and quickly drove off, followed by the witness.

The suspects then turned around and came back to the site and started to unload the stolen property (three manhole cover holders, a large piece of pipe and an entire fire hydrant, all located at the rear of the pick up truck's bed area on the ground) just as the Police pulled up. Officer Murphy informed Officer Lanergan that on September 22nd, a call came in for a suspicious male putting items into a red truck. When one of the suspects overheard this, he stated, "Yeah, I was driving around the other night but I had my daughter in the truck. I didn't take anything, but this stuff has been just sitting here for days. There are no signs or fences - I thought it was all junk." The work site has been established at that location for well over two years as the company constructs the new access road from Southern Artery to Burgin Parkway.

The site is closed to the public and has orange barrels and barriers blocking the general public from coming into the area. In addition numerous pieces of construction trucks are inside the area which is clearly a work in progress. There have been numerous past thefts of items and materials from the site in question.

The two suspects, a 40 year-old and a 28 year-old, both from Weymouth, were arrested and charged with Larceny over $250. One suspect is currently on probation and has 32 arraignments on his record, while the other suspect has 43 charges on his record.

Couple Married 58 Years Celebrating 80th Birthdays

Leo And Francesca Andronico Have Lived A Life Of Love

LEO AND FRANCESCA Andronico of Quincy today and on their wedding day 58 years ago (right) - May 3, 1953.

By EMILY TAFT

It's hard to imagine what its like to have all your dreams come true but for Francesca Andronico her life has become all she ever imagined it to be.

"I have really lived a charmed life," said Francesca. "I have gotten everything I wanted, I wanted Leo, I got Leo; I wanted five children, I had five children; I have always wanted to sing professionally at the church, and I have done that."

Francesca's dreams started the day she met her now husband Leo at the age of four.

"We met in first grade," said Francesca. "He walked me home half way on the first day of school."

Francesca and Leo, both from Quincy, turn 80 this month. Francesca celebrated her birthday Tuesday, and Leo's birthday is Oct. 31. They have been married for 58 years.

Francesca said that she has always known she wanted to be with Leo since that first walk home.

"I would run into the house and yell to my mother to hurry up and go to the window so she could see what he looked like. He was such a handsome guy," said Francesca. "She would never get there in time and all she ever saw was the back of his head, and say to me 'that's nice.' She never saw what he looked like until we started dating."

The two remained in the same circle of friends throughout the school years, but never dated.

"There was this time where we were all at the beach and Leo was sitting all alone away from us all, so I went over and asked him if he was ok. He went on to tell me that his then girlfriend at the time had dumped him," said Francesca.

"At the time I told him he is only 17 and not to be sad. He will find the woman he will marry and he will no longer think of this girl. His response was he could never forget about her. So now every once in a while I ask him if he still thinks about her and he says 'how can I not, you keep bringing her up.'"

It wasn't until after they had graduated and Leo came home on leave from the Navy that they finally went out on their first date. After years of waiting, Francesca finally got what she had wished for.

"Somehow there was a chemistry there at that time," said Leo. "I took her to a movie, which I believe was a musical, and then after we went across the street and had hot chocolate and an English muffin."

The date of course didn't go without a hitch. When they arrived at the movie theater Leo had realized he had forgotten his wallet. He ran all the way home to grab it after telling Francesca to wait in the lobby.

"I stood there wondering where he had went," said Francesca. "He had ran all the way home grabbed his wallet and took a cab back to the theater."

From that day forward the two talked about marriage and their future together. Leo said that he wanted to wait until he was out of the service for them to get married.

"I was away on a ship in the Navy talking to one of my shipmates about Francesca," said Leo. "I said to him 'I think I want to get married,' and that's when I knew I was going to marry her."

On New Years Eve, 1952 Leo and Francesca were sitting outside on a bench at his parent's house when he finally got up the nerve to ask her to marry him.

"He didn't get down on one knee, but it was a full moon and a beautiful night," said Francesca. "He turned to me and said 'I think we should get married' and I said I think we should, too."

After a year and a half of dating, Leo and Francesca were married on May 3, 1953 surrounded by family and friends at Saint John's Church in Quincy. They went to Washington D.C for their honeymoon, where they saw the sites and met another couple who was married on the same day.

The couple settled down in Quincy where they raised a family. They have five children: David, Dawna, Anthony, Melissa, and Maria.

"Both of my parents never missed a meal at home with their five children," said daughter Maria. "They valued their time together and their time with their family and friends more than anything else."

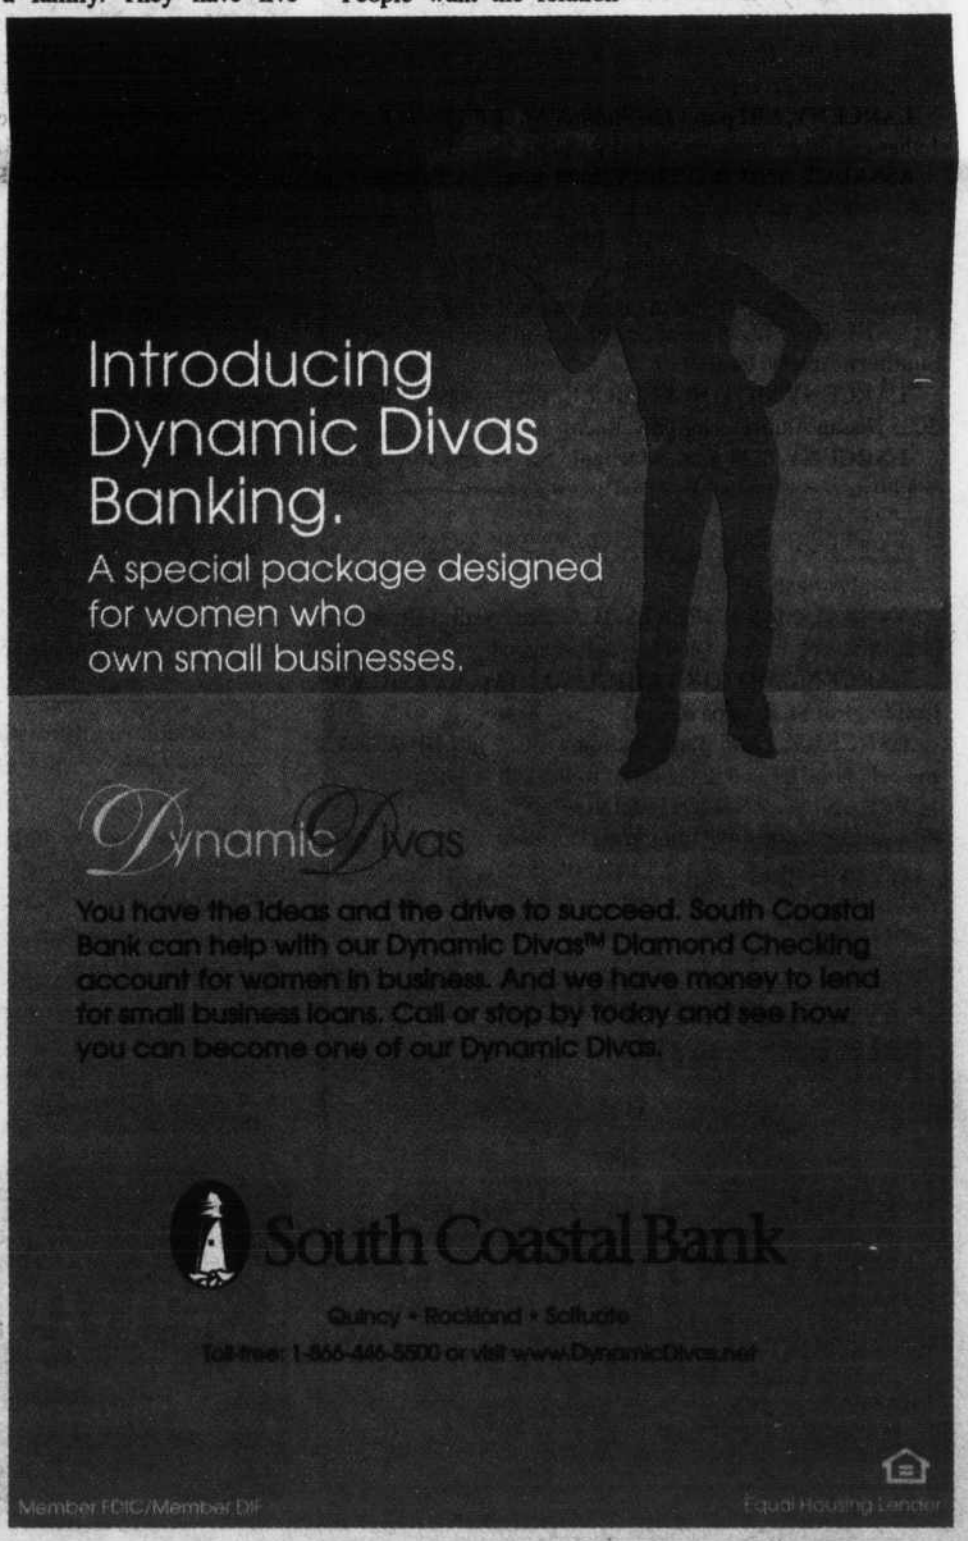

Leo and Francesca have spent the last 76 years together going to different events together and spending a lot of time doing things with each other and their family.

"Everyone who knows them thinks they are such a model couple," said Maria. "People want the relationship they have."

The secret to such a happy and lasting relationship, to an outsider, is to find that one you're meant to be with, but Maria said she believes the key is family, and respect.

"My parents shared the same values of humility, honesty, respect, commitment to family and service to the community," said Maria. "They always showed each other the utmost respect, and I never heard them say an unkind word to one another. They lived the dream of a life lived to the fullest and totally shared with the love of their lives."

Election Accountant Bill Roberts Commended For 50 Years Of Service

Also Recognized For 40 Years As Church Trustee

BILL ROBERTS (center) was recently recognized by the City Council for his 50 years of service to Quincy as the city's election accountant. Roberts has also served as a trustee of Union Congregational Church for 40 years. With him are (from left) City Clerk Joseph Shea, Roberts' wife, Helen, Union Congregational Church Pastor John Swanson, who is also a member of the city's Board of Voter Registrars; and Council President Kevin Coughlin.

Members of the Quincy City Council recently honored long-time Quincy Election Accountant Bill Roberts for his service of over 50 years to the city.

"Casey Stengel said there are three kinds of people; those who make things happen; those who watch things happen; and those who say 'what happened,'" City Council President Kevin Coughlin said. "Bill Roberts is the first category, a man who has chosen to be a part of making things happen."

Coughlin presented Roberts with a commendation in recognition and appreciation for his service to the City of Quincy.

"This is the first time and probably the last time I will ever be recognized for something," Roberts said. "I am humbled and very appreciative of everything that was said that night."

A certified accountant, Roberts' career as an Election Accountant for the city began when a friend from Northeastern University, former City Clerk John Gillis, mentioned that they had an opening for an Election Accountant and decided to take the part-time job.

"You don't see the type of commitment and service in this day in age," said Coughlin. "Something in terms of his generation where they stick with things for decades, and that's something we can only hope gets passed on to the next generation."

Coughlin went on to add that the City Council tries to recognize people who made a difference to the quality of life in the city, and he believes Roberts is one of those people.

Roberts has been married to his wife Helen for 54 years. They have two sons – Mark and Scott – along with four grandchildren.

Roberts would start his workday at 8 p.m when the polls closed and sometimes wouldn't come home until 9 a.m the next morning during the era of paper ballots.

"After 50 years of working as an Election Accountant I have seen a lot of changes in the polls," said Roberts. "The way the ballots are counted, and the machines are all different, they have changed for the better."

According to City Clerk Joe Shea, the election ballots have changed dramatically throughout the years.

"We had paper ballots up until 1983, then key punch ballots until 1996. When they were outlawed, and since 1996 we have used the system called Opti-Scan," said Shea. "Bill's position was more utilized when we used paper ballots, but you will always need your Election Accountant."

Roberts, who volunteered to work as the Election Accountant, worked along side Shea – who as city clerk oversees elections in Quincy – for over 20 years.

"Bill is a good guy and a good citizen of Quincy," said Shea. "Kevin (Coughlin) and I decided we needed to put something together to honor him, after hearing he not only had worked for the city for over 50 years but had been on his church's board for over 40 years."

Shea hires about 180 people during every city-wide election. Roberts was in charge of verifying the accounts. Roberts would work three or four days a year balancing the paper work and examining and proofing the ballots.

"I worked with a wonderful group of people," said Roberts. "I loved going to work, I loved working with them."

After 50 years of service to the City of Quincy, Roberts decided last year he no longer wanted to do the job.

"It was a fitting time to present him with this commendation," said Coughlin. "He will be missed."

Along with working for the city, Roberts is very active in the Union Congregational Church where he was a Trustee for 40 years.

Roberts has helped the church in many different aspects, from creating a youth basketball team with friend Bob Jordan, establishing a youth group for the church, and also being on several different committees.

"Bill has been a member of the church since he was a baby," said Union Congregational Church Pastor John Swanson. "He has been a part of virtually every committee in the church, and a real asset to me during my 18 years here. Every pastor should be blessed to have someone like Bill, he has been so helpful through out the years."

Roberts said he still stays active in the church and does anything to help whenever Rev. Swanson needs it.

"Bill Roberts devoted 50 years of his life in service to the city as an Election Accountant and nearly matched that with 40 years of service as a Trustee of the Union Congregational Church," said Coughlin. "Our country was created and has been sustained by people of faith and conviction and the spirit of volunteerism, Bill Roberts embodied all of these."

Sandra Fennelly Earns Government Program "HAFA" Designation

At a recent Plymouth and South Shore Association of Realtor training program, Sandra Fennelly, sales manager of Century 21 Abigail Adams, became one of the first realtors in Quincy specially trained in the U.S. Treasury Department's new "Home Affordable Foreclosure Alternative" program.

The government program pays up to $3,000 relocation assistance to property sellers of short sale homes. In addition, payments towards second mortgages and delinquent condominium charges are available for those that qualify.

Launched April 5, 2010, HAFA is designed to allow homeowners to avoid foreclosure by selling their homes via short sale. This program fully releases the seller from future liability of mortgage debt on their primary residence with no personal cash contribution, promissory note or deficiency judgment allowed. The process is streamlined by the seller receiving a pre-approval from their lender for a short sale.

If a homeowner is having serious financial difficulty and their home is in jeopardy of foreclosure, contacting a realtor that has been specifically trained in the program critical.

"HAFA is sanctioned by the National Association of Realtors and is a definite step in the right direction for all parties concerned," Fennelly said. "Avoidance of foreclosure should be the primary goal of any homeowner in trouble. This program is complex and was designed primarily with the homeowner in mind. It is free and the process moves surprisingly quick," she added.

For more information on the details of this program include qualification, contact Fennelly at CENTURY 21 Abigail Adams in the Quincy office at 617-471-7575.

Neighborhood Housing Services To Mark 30th Anniversary Oct. 13

Neighborhood Housing Services of the South Shore will mark its 30th anniversary Thursday, Oct. 13 at its annual meeting.

To be held at the Quincy Marriott, the event will feature the first-ever presentation of the organization's new "Good Neighbor Awards" recognizing the area businesses that have supported the agency's efforts to increase the local supply of affordable housing. Awards will be presented to James Blake, CEO of HarborOne Credit Union; John Boucher, CEO of South Shore Savings Bank; and George A. Russell, Jr., executive vice president of State Street Corporation.

"We couldn't have accomplished all that we have over the past 30 years without strong support from the local business community," Executive Director Robert Corley said.

"As part of our 30th anniversary, we wanted to recognize the contributions of those organizations that have been our partners in building and renovating affordable housing across the South Shore."

Founded in 1981 as a public-private partnership created to revitalize low-and moderate-income neighborhoods in Quincy, the agency has expanded to provide services in 24 cities and towns across the South Shore. In addition to building and managing more than 150 units of affordable housing, NHS offers a wide range of affordable housing services, including foreclosure prevention counseling, home rehabilitation loans and grants, and first-time homebuyer workshops.

Yet while the agency has worked to increase the availability of affordable housing on the South Shore, NHS Executive Director Robert Corley said local families are in need of its services now more than ever.

"Over the past 30 years, times have changed a lot, but the issues we deal with are strikingly the same," Corley said. "It's almost like back in the 1980s when we were founded. The issues we were working on then – job creation, financial literacy, homeowner education – apply perfectly to today."

For tickets or more information on Neighborhood Housing Services of the South Shore's 30th anniversary annual meeting, call 617-770-2227.

Ward 5 City Councillor and candidate for Councillor at-Large Doug Gutro called for quarterly City Council briefings on Quincy's Downtown Project throughout the duration of the project's implementation.

Gutro, a past president of the City Council, currently serves as the chairman of the City Council Downtown and Economic Development Committee.

"Quincy's historic downtown development project promises to be one of the largest downtown makeovers on the East Coast, if not the nation," said Gutro, Chairman of the City Council's Downtown Committee.

"While the Council hired its own attorney to review the landmark agreement with Street-Works, its implementation will surely be an evolving, complex, and disruptive endeavor. I firmly believe that the Quincy City Council has an obligation as an oversight body to ensure that Streetworks and the City of Quincy plan and executive in accordance with the commitments made in the 2010 agreement," Gutro added.

"There are a lot of moving parts and entities that will participate in the build out of this project. The City Council has a responsibility to our residents and taxpayers to provide a transparent, periodic, and public review of every facet of this massive and historic redevelopment of our city center", Gutro noted.

"Quarterly updates to the City Council will help inform residents, businesses, and taxpayers and ensure greater accountability by the City of Quincy, Streetworks, and other development partners involved in this project.

"While these meetings and hearings should not and will not be the only opportunities for public information and input, they will prove critical and necessary to monitor the overall implementation of our Downtown Project."

On Sept. 26, the City Council Downtown and Economic Development Committee held its first oversight meeting on the implementation of the Downtown Project.

Finn Endorsed By Quincy & South Shore Building Trades Council AFL-CIO

On Sept. 21, the Quincy & South Shore Building Trades Council AFL-CIO announced its endorsement of Joe Finn for re-election as Quincy Councillor at Large.

The prime factor for the endorsement they noted was Finn's "commitment to the issues that affect Organized Labor and all of working men and women in Massachusetts."

"I am honored by this endorsement," said Finn, "to be recognized by such a wide group of various trade unions validates my efforts to ensure jobs, living wages and the rights of all working families. My work this year related to the Downtown Development plan and the negotiated Land Disposition Agreement (LDA) reflected these values."

Other unions have also endorsed Finn and recognized his important contribution to the LDA for the downtown. Finn received the endorsement of the Union Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America Local 424. In that endorsement, Union President Richard Braccia noted, "Our faith in you over the years was rewarded, and not unexpectedly, once more when you became an insistent voice speaking on behalf of labor throughout the LDA hearings before the Council."

Finn also has been endorsed by the Laborer's International Union of North America, Local No. 133. Business Manager Tom Williams echoed similar sentiment regarding Finn's commitment to the issues impacting all working people. "Your commitment to the Laborer's has proven to be a plus for our members and their families who are living and working in the City of Quincy."

A critical moment for working families was the confirmation of an LDA for the planned development of the Downtown. When the LDA was presented to the City Council late last year, there was great pressure to move it quickly to passage. Finn sponsored an order calling for an independent counsel for the City Council in its consideration of the document. "I felt strongly that this document needed significant analysis to ensure that it protected the tax payer of Quincy, protected the City's rights in the event of failure, but that it also reflected the community standards of the City of Quincy and meant real jobs for the many working families that call Quincy home." This was one of the few times in the history of the City Council that they had access to independent counsel, but Finn feels it made all the difference. "Until the Council addressed the LDA, there was no assurance that these would be prevailing wage jobs or that potential developers would be held accountable to our tradition of responsible employment."

Finn noted that much remains to be done and he looks forward to re-election for another term and working for all of Quincy's working families.

Quincy Center – The Financing Makes It Possible, McFarland Says

With the opening of the Walter J. Hannon Parkway this past week a vital part of the redevelopment of Quincy Center starts to bring some reality to this project, said Councillor at-Large Michael McFarland.

"In the 1950s the decision to have the Southeast Expressway bypass Quincy Center started a decline in retail activity that brought all but death to Quincy Center.

"The Burgin Parkway provides the vital link from the interstate highway system, the Paul Harold Bridge provides the access to Quincy Center and the Walter J. Hannon Parkway provide the final link connecting the Southeast Expressway with the entire City of Quincy and the South Shore. Commuter rail and the MBTA already provide vital rail links to Boston and the rest of the South Shore.

"The taxpayers of the City of Quincy have seen a major tax burden shift in the last twenty five years from the commercial and industrial taxpayer to the residential taxpayer. At the same time changes in both federal and state revenue streams have place a larger portion of City expenses on the residential taxpayer. For the last two years there has been no increase in the tax burden mainly due to a reduced City workforce, a restructured employee health insurance program and several zero extensions to employee collective bargaining agreements.

"The redevelopment of Quincy Center and the partnership with Street Works provide us with a tremendous opportunity to increase our commercial and industrial tax base which should reduce the residential tax burden.

"The Quincy Center redevelopment project will provide Quincy residents with construction employment over the next ten years and permanent jobs thereafter. New residential construction is expected to generate over fifteen hundred people living in Quincy Center. Open air gathering places, a new home for the farmer's market and the Adam's Green Project will make Quincy Center a welcoming place for Quincy residents to gather on weekends and evenings.

"There are many reasons that I support this project and have voted in favor of it," McFarland said. "Quincy Center has been in a state of decline for an extended period of time. The plan is solid, well conceived and the partnership with Street-Works is realistic. Their track record is excellent. The support of both state and federal elected officials and agencies has been overwhelming. There is tremendous support from the citizens of the City of Quincy. The quality of life for the residents of the City of Quincy will be greatly improved.

"The financial aspects of this project however are the most compelling reasons for my support. The increased commercial taxes allow the City of Quincy to shift some of the tax burden away from the residential taxpayers and the neighborhoods. The tax dollars generated are going to allow The City of Quincy to update and to rebuild our infrastructure in Quincy Center and provide additional tax dollars for the Quincy Public Schools, police and fire protection, parks, libraries, roadways and the improvement of our quality of life.

"This is a bold creative project and one that we all can be proud of," McFarland added.

Rodophele Concerned Downtown Project Will Cost Residential Taxpayers

By JOHN RODOPHELE,

"I am running for one of the three city councillor at large seats. I am very concerned that the downtown development project will cost the residential taxpayers in the future.

"I am very concerned about higher residential property taxes if the project fails. Lower property taxes for the homeowners of Quincy should be the main goal of the project. The main goal of the current administration appears to be the bottom line profit of the developer. Residential homeowners currently absorb the bulk of the property tax burden in Quincy.

"Another of my concerns with the downtown project is the lack of adequate parking spaces.

"I question the current downtown parking situation and the future parking plans for the New Quincy Center. The traffic in Quincy is already very congested. Without proper planning and development, the traffic situation will only get much worse. There should be ample downtown public parking for the residential homeowners of Quincy, not just apartment buildings with exclusive private parking areas. Where is the parking lot for Quincy City Hall today?

"This administration gave away the Key to the City of Quincy to developers based in New York. Street-Works or any other developer must pay their fair share of property taxes to the city. Unfortunately, this administration has chosen to shift the tax burden to the residential homeowners who cannot afford to pay any more.

"I have resided in Quincy my entire life, and have been paying property taxes for 45 years. My taxes have increased every single year, even during times when my assessment value has gone down.

"I have had enough.

"I will not be a rubber stamp for the developers, like the incumbent city councillors.

"I will represent the residential homeowners best interests. There has been deal after sweetheart deal for the developers over the last 30 years, from Marina Bay to Quarry Hills.

"Crown Colony is full of buildings, but many of them are exempt from property taxes. The New Quincy Center developers are getting another sweetheart deal at the expense of the residential homeowners.

"I'm tired of watching this adminstration give away our city to their developer friends and cronies.

"It's time for the homeowners to stand together. It's time someone represents the residential homeowners best interests. It's time to stop looking out for the developers best interests.

"I will be the voice of the residential property taxpayers of Quincy.

"A voice that has not been heard in City Hall for a very long time."

"I need your help now and ask for your vote please on election day."

Croall Offers Customized Communication Platform To Be Effective Ward Advocate

By BRAD CROALL

"Responsive listening is what the voting residents of Ward 2 are looking for. While interacting with the residents of the ward, I realize that people want assurance that if they have an issue or concern someone is going to return their phone calls and offer a solution.

"I plan on being an effective advocate for our ward through a customized communication platform. I will work with the people and bring us together so that we can achieve a common goal – a unified community. To do this, I will be initiating a community contact system that will feature an e-newsletter of the happenings in our ward; I will be conducting ongoing community meetings to inform the residents of situations affecting our neighborhoods and I will also be hosting consistent office hours at the Fore River Clubhouse, 1000 Southern Artery, 95 Martensen St. and Pagnano Towers. As your city councilor, your issues become my follow-through, which means it is very important for me to attend Zoning, Planning and Park & Recreation Board meetings when decisions are being made that affect our ward. My aim is to continue to build a safe, friendly and family-oriented community for us to enjoy together.

"Being one of the most diverse corridors in the city, I believe it is important to work with our Community Police Officer to integrate his services into our daily lives and learn how we can act as another set of ears to discourage criminal activity in our neighborhoods. I also plan to work closely with the Public Works Department to make sure Ward 2 has safe sidewalks, navigable roadways and effective water pressure.

"Our ward has some exciting growth prospects on the horizon such as the Fore River Shipyard. I have already taken the initiative to meet with the property owners for an all-inclusive site tour and learn about possibilities for future development. This will be a progressive project and I look forward to being a beacon of advocacy for Ward 2 residents.

"My goal is to ensure that growth is done responsibly and that the development takes into account the history of the parcel and allows for open space so that we can enjoy it with our families. As the Ward 2 Representative on the City's Park & Recreation Board and as a member of the Friends of Faxon Park, I will work closely with residents as we continue to take steps to revitalize Faxon Park and ensure the end result is an urban gem we can all be proud of.

?In closing, I realize that my plan of action - to be available, work with you, listen to your issues and help you solve your problems - will require time. Having the time is critical to be effective and get things done for our ward. I have the necessary time, and I look forward to partnering with the people of Ward 2 to recognize community issues and work on your behalf to resolve them. I humbly ask you for your support on Nov. 8th."

Perdios Promises A Pledge To Constituent Concerns

By STEVE PERDIOS

"Over the past four months, I have personally visited over 1,100 homes and talked with hundreds of Ward 2 residents.

"From fallen trees due to Hurricane Irene that have yet to be removed, to cars speeding on our streets, to crime in our neighborhoods, you've shared many of your thoughts and concerns with me. I want you to know that I have not only heard you, but that I pledge to focus all of my efforts as your City Councilor on issues that are important to you.

"One concern that nearly everyone mentions is the condition of our roads and sidewalks. They are absolutely deplorable. The city is directing $2 million to $3M million per year into roads and sidewalks and it just isn't enough.

"We are not failing to maintain our roads and sidewalks - we have failed. The current plan of fixing some roads a few at a time does not work. If elected, I will propose that all new revenue into the city over the next five years be directed entirely to roads and sidewalks until the city budget is adjusted to dedicate $10 million per year towards this.

"After contributing a lifetime to the strength of our community, our seniors should not have to risk life and limb to take a leisurely stroll. Mothers with baby strollers and small children deserve to walk down the sidewalks without having to take their newborns and toddlers into the roadway just to get around a broken sidewalk. Our cars are costing us money every year in new tires, suspension, and mufflers from all the potholes we have to navigate just to get around the city.

"My experience as a civil engineer makes me the most qualified to provide oversight on this issue. With a city budget of over $230 million per year, I am confident we can find a way to direct a bit more towards our roads.

"From Washington Court to Phipps Street, from Circuit Road to Union Street road work is needed. We must, and will, find a way to do a better job.

"Ward 2 has been my home for more than 40 years. This is where my parents chose to raise me and my three older brothers. This is where my Dad came home to every night after working in the sheet metal union for 35 years. This is where my wife and I have chosen to raise our three daughters.

"As a homeowner and taxpayer I understand why we expect our elected officials to be effective stewards of our community and our tax dollars.

"I will fight hard every day to protect our neighborhoods and improve the quality of our lives, beholden to no one but the residents of Ward 2.

"This is just one of the many concerns we all share. I'm eager to get to work towards finally solving this and other issues if you choose to elect me your next Ward 2 City Councilor."

"I respectfully ask for your vote on Nov. 8th."

Coughlin Legislation Subject Of Beacon Hill Hearing

According to data from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration as many as 6,000 pedestrians are killed each year in the U.S. by automobiles and 55% of these fatalities occurred on neighborhood streets. For every pedestrian killed by a car, another 15 were injured. In 2009, 59,000 pedestrians were injured in motor vehicle crashes in the United States.

These are just some of the facts presented in testimony that Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin submitted to a hearing held by the legislature's Joint Committee on Transportation.

The Committee is expected to make a recommendation on Coughlin's locally approved Home Rule Petition submitted to the legislature by Senator Keenan and co-sponsored by Representatives Mariano, Ayers and Chan. It will allow the city to add a traffic enforcement tool wherein speeds within densely populated side street neighborhoods could be established at 20 m.p.h. Coughlin successfully enacted similar legislation, Senior Safety Zones, which was signed by former Governor Romney and has been implemented in order to protect senior citizens who reside or congregate in various areas throughout the city.

Speed is a major factor in determining whether a pedestrian will be killed or injured by an automobile. The idea that the faster a striking vehicle is traveling, the more damage is done to a struck pedestrian, is almost too obvious to require proof. Yet the relationship has been documented in a number of validated studies which have shown that about 5 percent of pedestrians would die when struck by a vehicle traveling 20 mph. The pedestrian fatality percentage would rise to nearly 45 percent for vehicles traveling 30 mph. Thus a pedestrian is nine times more likely to die if struck by a car traveling at 30 mph compared to 20 mph.

"If we accept the simple postulation that greater speeds contribute to greater pedestrian injuries and deaths, a premise clearly supported by researchers and traffic engineering practitioners, then it follows suit that reduced speeds would reflect a reduction in those pedestrian injuries and deaths," Coughlin said.

"Numerous studies document the effects of 'traffic calming' changes on crash reductions and pedestrian safety. An extensive study of 20 mph zones in London demonstrated that such zones are associated with a 42% reduction in all casualties, reduced child pedestrian casualties by 70% and child bicycling casualties by 28% and areas adjacent to 20 mph zones also saw a reduction of 8% for all casualties.

"These zones are being adopted across the country," Coughlin said. "There is no doubt that when traffic is forced to travel at speeds of 20 mph or less, it saves lives and enforcement is the key."

Additionally, "speed reduction initiatives have additional quality of life and health benefits. Twenty mph speed limits/zones help to improve the urban realm and create safer more pleasant environments for walkers; particularly children, young people, and older people; and better cycling conditions for cyclists all which has direct physical health benefits for residents," Coughlin said hoping for swift passage.

Cain Proposes 'Neighbor To Neighbor,' A New Version Of 'The Welcome Wagon'

By JOHN CAIN

"As I canvassed Ward 3 shaking hands with neighbors old and new, I was impressed by the pride our citizens take in their homes and families. I was struck by the continuity of purpose.

"The needs of our neighborhood citizens are simple. In Ward Three and across the city, the citizens desire to build a community where their real estate values are stable and the neighborhood is safe for one and all.

"A generation ago, this task was easier. On a Saturday afternoon, the neighborhood would be abuzz with the sound of lawn mowers, pickup basketball games, and the laughter of children as they rode their bikes up and down familiar neighborhood streets.

"Because of our fast-paced society, the streets are quieter on a Saturday. The neighbors no longer talk over the backyard fence. Thirty years ago, I could name every household on my street. I knew which neighbor got laid off from work and might need a helping hand. I knew who was on vacation, and who needed help with yard work because they had a sprained ankle.

"People still care about their neighbors and their neighborhood. When talking to different Quincy City Officials, I shared my ideas about creating a "Neighbor to Neighbor" program. This program would be a modernization of the "Welcome Wagon" of the 1950's. When something is amiss in the neighborhood, trained neighborhood representatives would interface with individual homeowners in a non judgmental fashion. These neighborhood representatives would bring ideas and solutions without criticism. These neighborhood representatives would be sensitive to the cultural and economic limitations that restrict an individual's ability to acclimate to the rhythm of their neighborhood.

"You can "Count on Cain" to devise solutions to problems that frustrate our neighbors. You can "Count on Cain" to empower you, my friends and neighbors, to keep Ward 3 safe, secure, and beautiful," Cain added.

Hughes Pledges To Successfully Advocate For The Needs Of Ward 5 Residents

By KIRSTEN HUGHES

"On Nov. 8, residents of Quincy's Ward 5 will head to the polls to select a new ward councilor. For the first time in a decade, voters will have a choice between two, first-time candidates running for the open seat. As the city embarks on a number of major projects that will impact our neighborhoods, this election comes at an especially important time for Ward 5 residents.

"Over the past several months, I have had the pleasure of knocking on doors and meeting hundreds of residents. I have been privileged to listen as Ward 5 residents from Hospital Hill to Wollaston shared their pride in our city and the issues on their mind.

"As a lifelong resident of Wollaston, I remember growing up as a kid when a stroll with my brothers and grandmother to Wollaston Center was a reward for good behavior. As I got older, I regularly ran clothes up to the dry cleaners, brought my shoes to be mended at the cobbler, grabbed a much-needed slice of pizza and more recently, picked up the programs for my wedding ceremony.

"Wollaston Center has been and should remain a place where businesses thrive and benefit residents. Attracting small- and medium-sized businesses to Quincy's business districts creates jobs for local residents and provides property tax relief for residential homeowners.

"It is critical, however, that this growth enhances our quality of life without negatively impacting our residents. Proposed plans to redevelop Quincy Center and build a new state-of-the-art Central Middle School are important to the advancement of Ward 5 and our city. These plans will undoubtedly affect adjacent areas, especially Wollaston Center. These improvements will require careful monitoring of the projects themselves and their effect on surrounding areas.

"I believe by taking a fresh, new look at current parking restrictions and zoning ordinances in the Wollaston Business District, we can help to ensure that much needed business growth is carefully balanced with residential prosperity. Providing clear and reliable standards for the review of improvements to existing businesses and new applications for business will help ensure that the needs of Ward 5 residents are being met and residents are not overburdened.

"Assuring adequate parking, safe and efficient traffic standards and preserving the architectural integrity of the existing structures will promote positive growth in the area, increase foot traffic at local establishments and serve to benefit not only residents on directly affected streets but Ward 5 and the City of Quincy.

"As an attorney, I possess the professional experience needed to work on these issues and the ability to successfully advocate for the needs of the residents of Ward 5.

"As Ward 5 Councilor, I will work to foster an atmosphere that promotes and creates new opportunities for residents to work and find affordable places to shop and dine, while preserving the integrity of our neighborhoods."

McCole: Protect Property Values, Contain Property Taxes

By NEIL McCOLE

"In speaking with the people of the community over the years as President of the Friends of Wollaston Beach and the Ward 5 Community Association, the most consistent message I've heard from property owners and residents is the economy's impact on property values, property taxes, and neighborhood integrity. I reconfirmed this message when speaking with hundreds of residents in recent months during my "Walk the Ward" campaign as a candidate for Ward 5 Councillor.

"With homeownership accounting for the largest single investment made by individuals and families, it is imperative that city leaders, and more specifically ward councillors, keep a watchful eye on our city's finances and our neighborhoods.

"With Federal and State funding drying up as a supplement to Municipal revenues, property owners will now be left to deal with the potential for increased property tax burdens and the potential elimination or reduction of core services, coupled with the potential for decreasing property values. In watching the news, it is clear that the federal government and big business are struggling with economic growth while our national debt continues to expand. This macroeconomic problem is already trickling down to the microeconomic areas of our state, our city, and our neighborhoods with the potential to impact residents.

"There are financial and non-financial solutions that a ward councillor, along with residents, can take to help offset the impact the economy is having on us as homeowners and taxpayers. Investing in our neighborhoods via community and friends groups is one way residents can take ownership of their neighborhood and be sure to preserve the pride. Simple steps such as neighborhood meetings, cleanups, and barbeques can instill a sense of community and help rally the efforts to preserve and grow property values. The collective voice of a community group is a powerful tool when lobbying for limited city funding for capital improvements around the neighborhoods. There are also creative funding solutions beyond city finances that groups can obtain to solve local problems. As President of The Ward 5 Community Association, I wrote a $25,000 grant to begin the process of rehabilitating Sailor's Home Pond in Ward 5. That work has already begun in conjunction with W5CA, City of Quincy DPW, an external vendor, and of course the neighbors. This is just one example where property values are positively impacted through the work of residents.

"As your next Ward 5 Councillor, I will leverage over 20 years of business experience; including project management, budgetary planning and analysis, and compliance, along with my undergraduate degree in Business Administration, and my coursework for a master's degree in Finance to thoroughly monitor revenue streams, budgetary spending, and projects for our city. As the Ward 5 candidate invested in our city as a homeowner and taxpayer, I have the real world business, neighborhood, and homeowner experiences to protect our property values, contain property taxes, and preserve the pride in Ward 5. I kindly ask for your vote on Nov. 8th."

McNamee Opposes C-Mart Because Of Traffic Concerns In North Quincy

By BRIAN McNAMEE

"Special Permit to allow a supermarket to open in North Quincy on Hayward Street was denied by an 8 to 1 vote of the Quincy City Council. The owner of that site is now suing the City of Quincy in State Land Court.

"My opposition to the Special Permit was not based on the fact that it was an "Asian supermarket" as the building's owner has alleged. My opposition was based solely on the adverse traffic impacts and the public safety threats posed by C-Mart, a position I hold after hearing the concerns of the residents of Ward 6. These are also concerns I know to be real as someone who has lived in this neighborhood for nearly 30 years.

"The facts are as follows:

"The site is located at 28 Hayward Street, the location of the former Boston Gear Works, one block behind the Wheelhouse Diner next to the MBTA train tracks. The site is also located next to the Hannaford Brother's Supermarket.

"Traffic in North Quincy is made difficult by the unalterable presence of the MBTA's Red Line. The train tracks create an impenetrable wall to transportation east or west for nearly one mile as you enter North Quincy. As a result, north and south traffic is confined to one lane in either direction on Hancock Street. As a general overlay to a traffic network you could not have a more restricted and fixed set of geographic features.

"Add to the above description the following conditions:

"The intersection at Hancock Street and East/West Squantum Street has a "Level of Service score" of F. This is the lowest functioning grade for an intersection in a 6 level grading system, A through F. In this context "F" means the intersection fails to allow for the safe flow of traffic. Difficulties that start at this intersection continue throughout the travel corridor clear through Wollaston.

"Of all the intersections in the Commonwealth the Mass DOT rated the Hancock Street and East/West Squantum Street intersection as having the 67th worst accident rate in 2009 and the 60th worst accident rate in 2008. Add to this consistently rated "worst" intersection an MBTA train station, a High School, two gas stations, and a Walgreens and you get not only a traffic nightmare but a deadly public safety threat.

"The number of fatalities and pedestrians hit on Hancock Street in North Quincy is well known. In the last 10 years there have been three fatalities on Hancock Street and numerous pedestrians hit my motor vehicles. The pedestrian and vehicular traffic is not only generated by MBTA commuters but by the North Quincy High School, Sacred Heart's Catholic Academy, the Atlantic Middle School, the Parker Elementary School, Sacred Heart Church, a Community Center, a Post Office, and a Bank. This is not taking into account the number of specialty schools like the Chung Yee School at the K of C, Kids Connection Learning Center, and Ken's Learning Center at 488 Hancock Street. One needs to further consider the several after school child care centers and the Senior Housing at the Fenno House.

"All of the above highly sought after destinations including the Hannaford Brothers Supermarket are within a four block radius of the proposed new supermarket.

"If re-elected Ward 6 city councillor, I will continue my opposition to C-Mart."

Radell: Increased Communication Will Better Serve Ward 6

By BRIAN RADELL

"Over the past four months, I have had the opportunity to learn about the needs and issues that are important to the residents of Ward 6.

"What I have found most is that people have lost confidence in their government. Whether it is the state of our roads and sidewalks, their concern for safety with the recent rash of break-ins and robberies or even simple tree removal, they feel as if their needs are not being addressed. The question needs to be asked, how can we provide a more effective government?

"Good government does not just happen. It is the result of a community of people working together to decide what needs to be done, and then working to carry it out. People make government work.

"As your next city councilor I will work to effectively communicate with you to determine your needs, and work to address them as a community. This will be accomplished by opening new lines of communication with the Ward including a monthly newsletter, making all residents aware of the issues, concerns and events taking place in the Ward as well as the city. I will also be providing a website for the residents to access information and provide feedback. I feel strongly that by bringing these two resources to our Ward, we can work more effectively to solve any issues that arise.

"The community will be better served with increased communication, but working together does not end with the constituents. It is imperative that our elected officials work together, respectful of others opinions yet mindful of the residents they represent. Our elected officials are responsible for seeing that local government responds to the public needs and works well to meet those needs. As your next councilor, I will always work with others to ensure that your needs are satisfied.

"Working together includes working with the local government employees. The majority of our needs and issues as residents of the City of Quincy require the services of our local employees. Leadership needs to understand the impact they have on our residents and work together to effectively solve problems. This is especially important with the hiring of our employees. We need to base our hiring decisions on merit. As your next councilor, I will work with the council to install legislation that forces the city to require job descriptions and hire based upon merit.

"Finally, working together requires you. Everyone uses local government services, is affected by the decisions local government makes and influences local government decisions. People unintentionally influence local government policies, through the use of government services, through cooperation or noncooperation with government programs, and through public behavior that helps or harms others.

"A good example of this is the recycling program, if people cooperate we lower our waste cost, if not, the program does not work and we cost ourselves more.

"As your next councilor, I will always work with and for you, will you work with me?"

Fall Automotive Care

Basic Maintenance Can Be A Smart Investment

(NAPSA)-Whether your car came right off the showroom floor or you drive a used vehicle that has seen its share of miles, one of the best ways to extend its life is to practice basic maintenance.

To help, here are some tips:

• Take care of your tires. A good rule of thumb for tire rotation is to have your tires rotated every other oil change. This can vary depending on the amount of driving you do. Check the air pressure in your tires. This simple procedure can help your vehicle's fuel economy.

• Check your belts and hoses. You may not know what everything does under the hood of your vehicle, but even you can recognize a belt or hose that has a crack or corrosion. These parts are usually made of rubber and will eventually wear out. If you're still unsure, belts and hoses can be checked during an oil change or at your vehicle's annual checkup.

• Check your oil. If the level of oil in your vehicle is too high or low, it can cause engine problems. Owners of both new and older vehicles can consider using synthetic motor oil to help increase the mileage between oil changes.

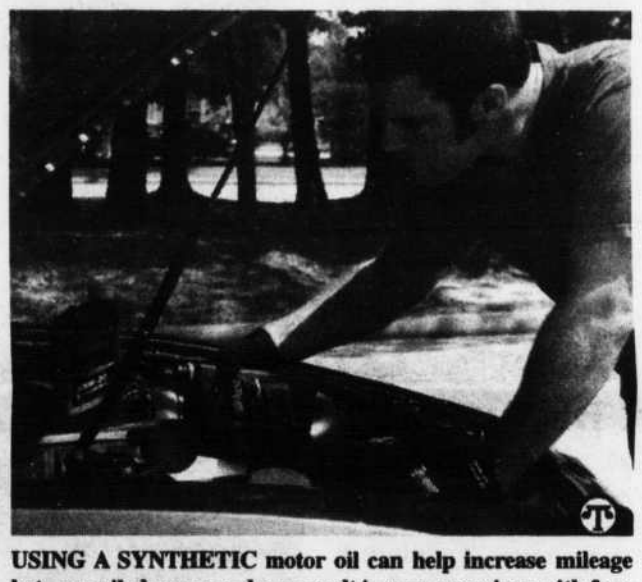

For example, Royal Purple offers a variety of motor oil viscosities for different makes and models, recommending the SN Series for vehicles 2011 and newer and the new High Performance Series for older vehicles. This can result in money savings with fewer oil changes and less impact on the environment with less oil disposed.

When you get your oil changed, ask if they recycle their oil, and if you're changing your oil, at home, check out www.earth911.com for a motor oil recycling center near you.

• Check your coolant. If you're not sure where your coolant reservoir is, check your owner's manual. The ideal level of coolant should be between the low and high markings.

If you are checking the coolant yourself, do not take the cap off if your vehicle has been recently driven. If the coolant system is hot, the pressure inside could burn you when the cap is removed. To keep your engine cool, try a coolant additive. It's designed to reduce engine temperatures and protect the engine from corrosion.

• Learn the dashboard lights. Refer to your owner's manual to familiarize yourself with some of your dashboard warning lights. These include: Check Engine, Service Engine, Electrical Fault, Brake Warning, ABS Brake Warning, Coolant and Oil. Ignoring these warning signs could result in expensive repairs if left too long.

Gas Prices Continue To Tumble

Gasoline prices in Massachusetts have fallen by another 10 cents per gallon this week, leaving prices at their lowest point since back in late March, according to AAA Southern New England.

AAA's Oct. 3 survey of prices in Massachusetts found self-serve, regular unleaded averaging $3.45[9] per gallon, down ten cents from a week ago and 20 cents lower than three weeks ago. The current price is four cents above the national average for self serve unleaded of $3.41. A year ago at this time the Massachusetts average price was $2.63.

The range in prices in the latest AAA survey for unleaded regular is 56 cents, from a low of $3.19 to a high of $3.75.

AAA advises motorists to shop around for the best prices in their area, and to make sure they and their passengers buckle up — every time.

AAA Fuel Saving Tip of the Week

Drive the speed limit. Slowing down to observe the speed limit not only can conserve fuel but also avoid a speeding ticket. Leave yourself plenty of time to reach your destination to avoid feeling rushed so you can arrive safely and with a little more fuel in the tank.

NQ's Shannon McCleary's Header Caps Off Comeback; Dominique Lucier Scores for QHS

Late Charge Lifts North Quincy Over Quincy, 2-1

By SEAN BRENNAN

The match's first 55 minutes belonged to the upstart Lady Presidents. The last 25 minutes belonged to the Lady Red Raiders, and that was the difference on the final score sheet.

North Quincy (6-3 overall) rallied from an early 1-0 deficit with second-half goals from juniors Kayla Sugrue and Shannon McCleary and hung on to beat Quincy, 2-1, in a highly contested inter-city soccer game last Friday afternoon at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

Quincy (0-5-4 overall), a much-improved team this fall, jumped out in front 1-0 three minutes into the match after freshman forward Emma Papile streaked down the right sidelines, beating two North Quincy defenders to the spot to earn her team a direct kick from inside the 18-yard line. Papile struck a beautiful ball across the box where sophomore midfielder Dominique Lucier gained inside position on the Red Raider defense and volleyed the ball past North Quincy keeper Sara Sullivan.

The early tally swung momentum Quincy's direction for the remainder of the half. The Presidents continued to control the pace of the action in the middle of the pitch as senior center midfielder Olivia Goldson along with Lucier and defenders Kayla McArdle and Brielyan O'Leary kept North Quincy's supercharged offense in check. And when the Red Raiders took advantage of cracks in the Quincy defense, sophomore keeper Natalie O'Donovan was up to task.

A frustrated North Quincy team walked off the pitch at the halftime break looking for answers. The respite seemed to reenergize the Red Raiders.

"Quincy came out and took it to us for 55 minutes," said NQ Head Coach Paul Bregoli. "We did a nice job of coming back and when Kayla (Sugrue) popped that goal over (O'Donovan) it felt like we finally could breathe because up to that point we were playing tight."

"Quincy was doing a good job of stopping our offensive attack, but when we changed our point of attack, which we finally did in the second half, Abby Smith found McCleary and she buried the header that gave us the lead."

As the game clock slowly ticked down and with his team struggling against the suffocating Quincy defense, Bregoli made a late-game substitution that immediately paid dividends. Looking to add some additional firepower to the offense, Bregoli put in Sugrue. The move worked.

Sugrue, off a clean pass from junior midfielder Liz Kelly, lofted a chip shot from 35 yards out that beat O'Donovan to the back line to tie the score at 1-1. Sugrue's goal lit a spark into North Quincy's game and following several up-field rushes the Red Raiders finally broke through, again.

Smith dribbled the ball from left to right across the middle of the field bringing with her most of Quincy's defense. McCleary, North Quincy's leading goal scorer, slipped behind the wall of defenders just in time to be in position to head a beautiful cross from Smith past O'Donovan.

"We finally changed the way we attacked them and McCleary finished," Bregoli said. "I thought Abby Smith played a good game. That was a good ball."

Quincy's Papile made a strong run down the sidelines late in the half, but her attempt was swatted by the strong defense of North Quincy sophomore Arianna Viscione. McCleary had a golden opportunity to give North Quincy a 3-1 lead late when she broke in alone off a slick pass from Smith but O'Donovan made an aggressive advance to stonewall the Raiders' talented forward. Sophomore forward Delia Devane corralled the rebound only to watch as her booming right-footed blast sailed high over the crossbar.

Despite giving up a 1-0 lead, the Presidents made the Raiders work hard for these two points. Head Coach Don Martin's team is young and very talented. This is a program that is headed in the right direction; no longer is playing Quincy a guaranteed victory.

"We played well," said Martin. "Just a couple of mistakes by our sophomore keeper but that can happen with a young team. I thought we controlled the game in the first half."

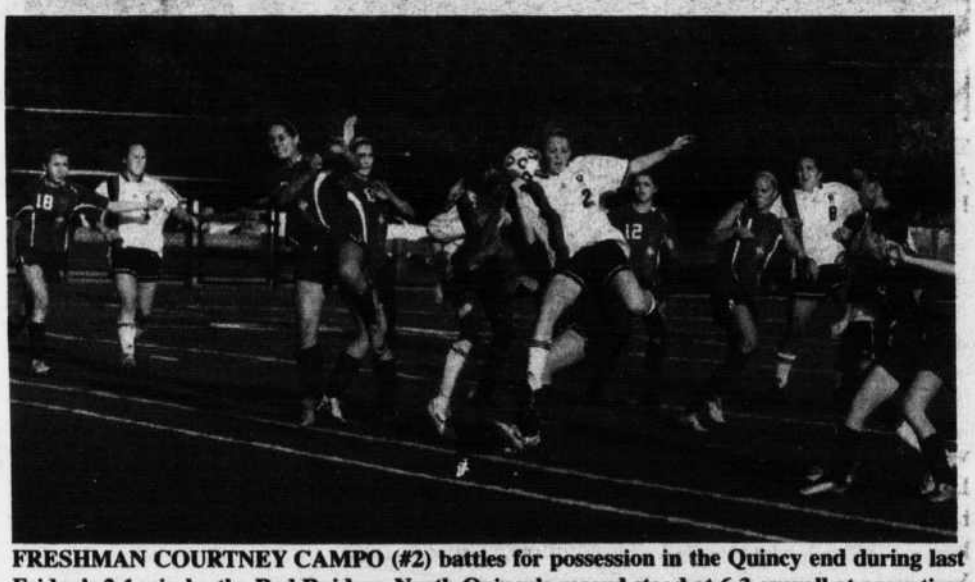

McCleary's game-winner was redemption of sorts. Late in the first half she had a clear path to O'Donovan only to see the ball bounce off her knee and out of harm's way.

Also playing well for North Quincy were freshmen Courtney Campo (midfielder) and Sydney Chang (defender/midfielder).

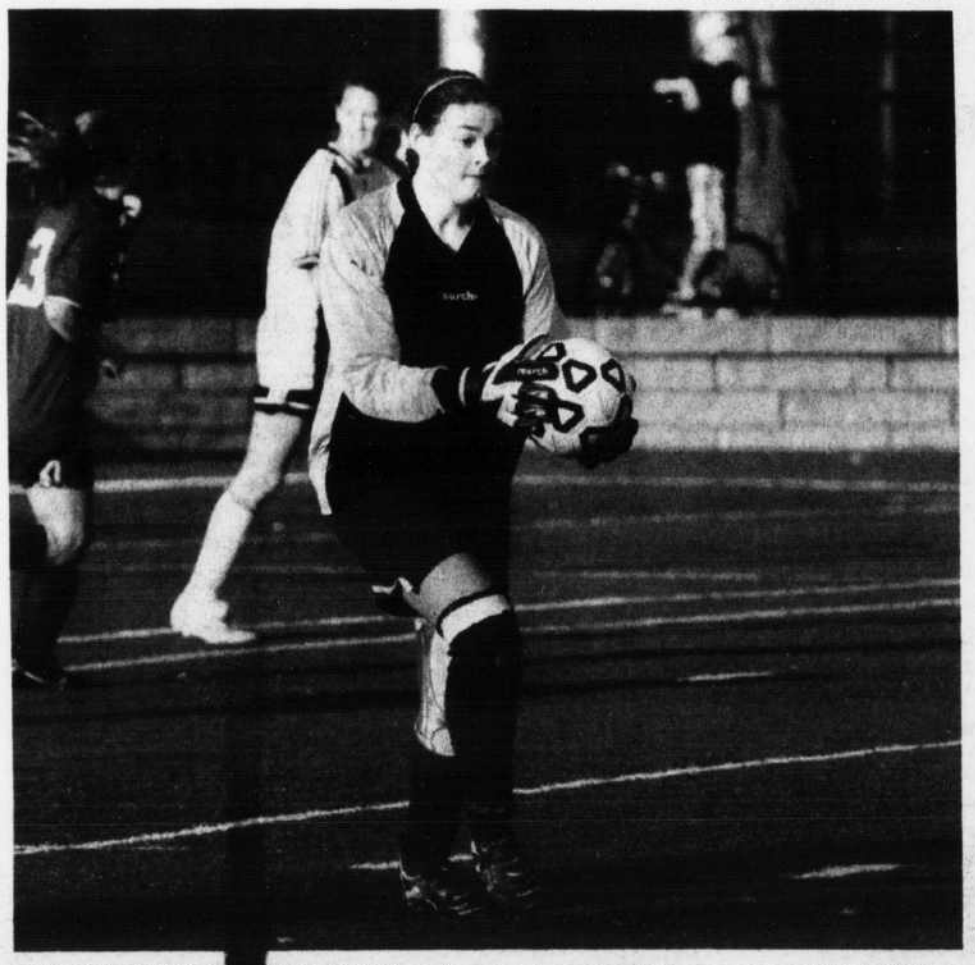

The Presidents are in the midst of their most challenging slate of games on the schedule. Quincy played at Silver Lake on Tuesday and travel to Middleboro today (Thursday). Next week the team plays road matches versus Hanover and Scituate.

North Quincy played at Scituate on Tuesday and host Pembroke today (Thursday) at 4 p.m. on Teal Field. The Raiders travel to Silver Lake on Oct. 11 before hosting Hingham on Oct. 13. As of press time, North Quincy was four victories away from qualifying for the state tournament for the first time in two seasons.

"We are right we should be," said Bregoli. "Four wins to go (to qualify). What we need to do is get healthy. Right now with all of our injuries I have to put kids in different spots on the field and that makes us weaker in other areas. But these kids have stepped up, which is a good sign."

FRESHMAN COURTNEY CAMPO (#2) battles for possession in the Quincy end during last Friday's 2-1 win by the Red Raiders. North Quincy's record stood at 6-3 overall at press time Tuesday.

QUINCY'S NATALI[illegible]'DONOVAN made several spectacular saves against North Quincy. The sophomore stopp[illegible]hannon McCleary on a clean breakaway to keep the game close in the second half.

Newest Member of the United States Marine Corps Boxing Team at Camp Lejeune, NC

Quincy's Luis Valentin Fighting For Self And Country

By SEAN BRENNAN

Being street tough will only takes someone so far in life.

Luis Valentin figured that out before it was too late, and the 19-year old Quincy native has two outlets to thank for turning his life around: Boxing and the United States Marine Corps.

Valentin was like a lot of kids these days, growing up without a true sense of direction. Luckily for him he found the sport of boxing one day while walking through Quincy Center when he passed by the Cyr-Farrell Boxing Gym. Down the creaky set of stairs, Valentin found salvation in the form of a boxing ring.

Under the tutelage of renowned trainer Jimmy Farrell, Valentin has turned himself into one of the best amateur fighters around. His 5-1 record proves that, but boxing has been more about helping him become a grounded young man more than anything else.

"I moved to Quincy when I was 13," Valentin said last week in between sparring rounds at the Cyr-Farrell Boxing Gym. "I was a little troublemaker and was always getting into trouble. I decided that I wanted to do something productive so I began taking out my anger in the gym."

"I walked by the (Cyr-Farrell) gym one day and saw that they had boxing and thought I would pick it up and ever since Jimmy has been training me," Valentin continued. "(Boxing) helps build character and helps me stay away from trouble. I have something to do and I am not in the street. I am working towards a goal and not out in the street fighting."

Valentin was still not satisfied with where his life was heading. Boxing helped for sure, but a year and a half ago, the even-tempered fighter chose to take his maturation to the next level. He joined the United States Marine Corps as a way to keep his life on the right path and as a way to give back to his country.

It just happened that his boxing prowess translated into a golden opportunity within the USMC. And Valentin also caught a break. He heard that the USMC had a boxing team and got lucky enough to earn a tryout. His performance against some of the better fighters in the USMC earned him a spot on the Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton (California) boxing team.

"About a year and half ago I decided to join the United States Marine Corps. I went through boot camp and then went to rifle training and all types of weapon training," Valentin explained. "Then I went to school and about eight months later I actually hit the fleet, which is your job for the USMC. I heard that they had boxing and I was interested."

THE BROTHERS VALENTIN – Luis Valentin (left), aka "Baby Face," and his younger brother Joe Valentin (right), a sophomore at QHS, took time out of their sparring schedule last week. Luis Valentin, USMC, is currently based out of Camp Pendleton, CA.

"I got lucky enough to where they let me tryout and usually that doesn't happen like that; you usually have to be in for a few years. I got lucky enough, thank God, and when I went to tryout I did great and they liked me and they kept me. I have been there about six months now."

What is unique about Valentin's boxing journey in the USMC is that most fighters spend several years in active service before having the opportunity to fight in the ring for their country worldwide.

"I was supposed to get deployed a day before I joined the boxing team at Camp Pendleton, but I got fortunate," Valentin said. "On the base team I am on right now, we fight in Los Angeles and travel around locally. I finally got my order from the Marine Corps' team saying that they wanted me, so I am just waiting for my unit to sign off and then I am off to Camp Lejeune in North Carolina."

Valentin is not the type to shy away from duty. For now he is excited about continuing his boxing accession, but if the USMC orders him deployed he is ready for that challenge.

"If I get deployed that would be good," he said. "That is what I signed up for."

When he eventually gets to Camp Lejeune, Valentin will have the opportunity to take his skills onto a global stage. The USMC boxing team frequently travels to foreign lands representing the United States of America in the ring. It should be an eye-opening opportunity for a local kid with sights set on someday turning professional.

"I am going to use being on the USMC team for the experience going all around the world and fighting the best guys," he said. "I would like to eventually turn pro, but let's see what happens."

Valentin's rise from street tough kid to an amateur boxing phenomenon to becoming a select member of the USMC boxing team has been rocket-fast, but Farrell, who knows a thing or two about spotting untapped boxing talent, saw this potential the first time Valentin put on gloves and sparred.

"The first time I saw him he was so calm and collected," Farrell said. "He has something so special about him, which is this belief in himself. He walked into the gym and stood out. He is one heck of fighter."

Young Team Includes Six Freshmen and Four Sophomores; Match Today Versus NQHS

Presidents Golfers Weathering The Storm

Tropical Storm Irene wreaked havoc on the entire East Coast in late August, but it brought on a different kind of fear for Coach Lou Venturelli and his Quincy High School boys' golf team.

With power out for over a week at Furnace Brook Golf Club, the Presidents' home course, Venturelli was fearful that incoming freshmen turnout might be poor. But even with only six returning upperclassmen returning from last year's team, Venturelli was pleased that eight freshmen came out for the squad despite the blackout causing his team to miss the first few days of practice.

"We lost two of those freshmen due to their commitments to other sports but I am very pleased with our additions. Three or four freshmen are starting varsity on a regular basis and that experience will be invaluable down the road," Venturelli said.

With such a inexperienced team, wins have been hard to come by for Quincy thus far this fall. The Presidents' most impressive showing was a narrow loss to rival North Quincy last Thursday at Presidents Golf Course.

Standing out amongst the youngsters for Quincy has been senior captain Justin Keenan, who has held his own against the cream of the crop in the tough Patriot League.

"Justin has played great," stated Venturelli. "He has had a few rounds only a couple over par and is always facing the best golfer on some very tough teams. I have to give him credit for hanging in there."

Keenan recently defeated the Scituate High School number one golfer who was the club champion at Hatherly Golf Course.

Also playing consistently for Quincy has been sophomore Mike Pugsley at number two.

"Match play wins over Pembroke and Hingham opponents are not easy tasks and Mike has a very bright future in golf," praised Venturelli.

Quincy played at Pembroke on Tuesday and at Middleboro on Wednesday. The Presidents host North Quincy today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m. at Furnace Brook Golf Club.

WELL VERSED ON BURSAE

Over 150 of the fluid-filled sacs known as "bursae" cushion the movement between bones, tendons, and muscles near joints. As a result of repetitive movement, traumatic injury, or arthritis, the bursae may become inflamed, causing a painful condition known as "bursitis." The most common areas for bursitis to occur are the shoulders, elbows, knees, hips, heels (Achilles), and toes, which become tender and difficult to move. In cases of acute bursitis, the onset of pain is sudden; chronic bursitis manifests symptoms of pain and limited movement after exercise or strain. Because bursitis will not show up on X-rays, a careful physical examination is needed to make a diagnosis, after which manipulation of the joint may help relieve pressure.

Is the pain of bursitis getting you down? At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we don't use drugs or surgery to correct your situation; all of our methods are safe, gentle, and recommended for all ages. For the ultimate in chiropractic care, call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where we welcome difficult and unusual cases. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. While we are born with most of the bursae we have, some may form later in life in response to repeated pressure upon a joint.

Recreation Dept. Crowns Citywide Tennis Champions

The tradition continued as the finest tennis players in Quincy came together at the Russell Park Tennis Courts on the grounds of Quincy High School to battle for the title of city champion in the Annual Tennis Tournament for the 41st year.

The much-anticipated annual event sponsored by the City of Quincy Recreation Department and the Quincy Credit Union had eleven divisions of play and brought together the young and old, newcomers and past participants, along with tennis families to determine the best resident tennis players.

New champions were the rule in this year's Tournament as eight and a half events had different champions from last year. The only repeat champions were Tiffany Leung in the Women's Singles Division, Gopal Tatavarthi in the Men's Doubles Division and teammates Ron Abell & Aileen Eleey in the Mixed Doubles Division.

In the Men's Singles event, tournament veteran Matthew Donatelle was awarded the Lionel "Shine" Buckley Bowl for the first time when he defeated Gopal Tatavarthi in the final, 6-0, 6-1. Donatelle earned his spot in the final by defeating Kevin Paterno, 6-2, 6-0. Tatavarthi defeated Phillip D'Orazio, a Men's 35 and Over Singles finalist, 6-4, 2-6, 6-3, to make the final. There were many competitive matches in the Men's Singles division this year, Tournament Director John Franceschini noted.

Defending Champion Tiffany Leung won the Women's Singles title by defeating four-time champion Phoebe Chan, 7-5, 6-4 in the final. In the semi-final matches, Leung defeated Rachel Smith, 6-0, 6-0, and Chan defeated Fanny Zhou, 6-1, 6-1. One of the best matches of the tournament was in the quarterfinals of this division when Fanny Zhou defeated Kathleen Conroy, 6-7, 6-4, 6-4.

Aileen Eleey's name will be etched on the Women's Doubles Championship Silver Bowl for the 14th time! Eleey joined with Sara Walker to win the 2011 Women's Doubles title by defeating Helen Mao and Ann Foresman, 6-4, 7-5, in the finals.

Tournament veteran Leonard Hourihane stepped into the winner's circle in the Men's 50 and Over Singles bracket by defeating Mark Donaghue, 6-2, 6-1. This is the second title for Hourihane who defeated tournament veterans Bill Eaton, 6-0, 6-0 and Ken Tarabelli, 6-0, 6-0, to earn his spot in the final. Donaghue defeated tournament newcomer Paul Ma, 7-5, 6-1 to qualify for the final in this event. Hourihane was presented the Richard Meade Bowl from Recreation Director Barry Welch.

Three-set matches were the rule in the 35 and Over Singles Championship matches in both the Women's and Men's Divisions. Four-time champion Helen Mao defeated defending champ Ann Foresman, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, in the Women's 35 and Over Singles Final. On the men's side, tournament newcomer Jakub Janiga was crowned Men's 35 and Over Singles Champion after a three and a half hour three-set match. Janiga defeated another tournament rookie Phillip D'Orazio, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1, in one of the tournaments best matches. Tournament Co-Director Michelle Hanly presented the championship bowl to Janiga.

In Men's Doubles, Gopal Tatavarthi captured his second championship and the coveted Henry McAuliffe Bowl with a new partner Vishal Trivedi by defeating Kevin Paterno and Tyler Perron with a score of 6-1, 3-6, 6-4. Tournament Director John Franceschini noted that this was a great year for Men's Doubles with over twenty teams competing for the sought-after McAuliffe Silver Bowl.

Ron Abell and Aileen Eleey won the William F. Ryan Bowl for Mixed Doubles by defeating Richard Griffin and Tracy Maloney, 6-3, 6-2, in the final. This is the third Mixed Doubles title for Abell and Eleey who secured their spot in the finals by defeating Kevin Paterno and Emily Sato, 6-0, Ret. Griffin and Maloney defeated Earl Rudkin and Helen Mao, 7-5, 6-3 in the semi-finals.

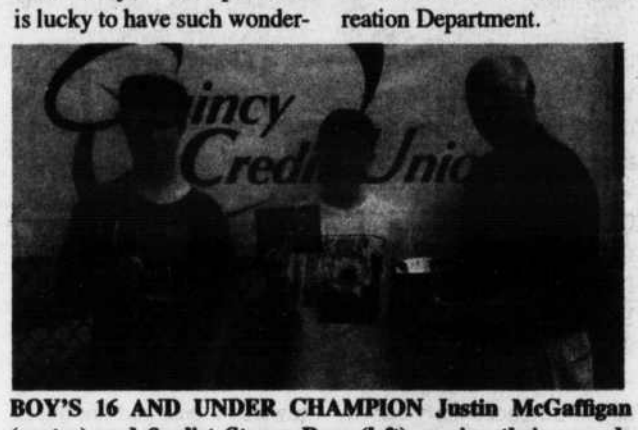

The 16 and Under Singles events were popular again this year with over thirty participants. Justin McGaffigan won his first Boy's 16 and Under Singles title. Tiffany Leung won her first title in the Girl's 16 and Under Singles and second in the tournament. McGaffigan defeated Steven Ross, 6-3, 6-1. Leung defeated Sanjana Kadirvel, 6-0, 6-1. The tournament spectators marveled at the number of young participants in this year's tournament. All of the youngsters are a credit to their parents and tennis coaches alike. Franceschini and Hanly both agree that these children were a joy to work with this year. The future is bright for tennis in the City of Quincy.

Benjamin Yee defeated Kadirvel Subramanian, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2 to win his first Men's "B" Singles Title. Yee won a great match on his way to the final when he defeated Jefferey Lim, 6-0, 6-4.

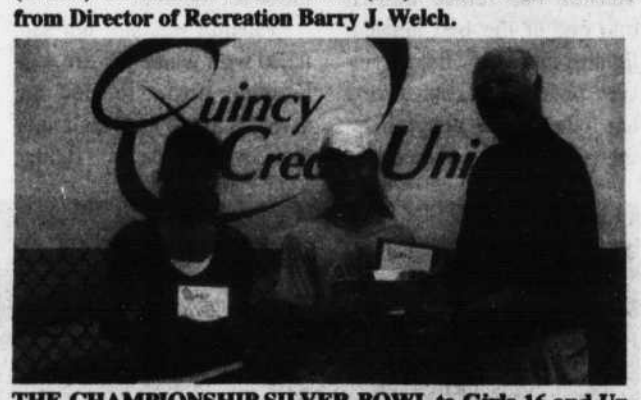

Director of Recreation, Barry Welch, had high praise for the continued commitment by the Quincy Credit Union, "In difficult times, traditional family events like this tournament provide stability to our community, values, and traditions. This is the 16th year that the Credit Union has provided the funds necessary to continue this activity. The participants and the community are grateful for their generosity and their friendship."

"I would also like to acknowledge the continued outstanding work of John Franceschini who has for over 30 years been the guiding force who as director makes the tournament draw to ensure the championship quality of the tournament. Continuing to be the glue that holds the event together is Michelle Hanly a seventeen-year veteran who coordinated and supervised some 140 matches over 12 days. The Department is lucky to have such wonderful staff."

Welch, Hanly, and Franceschini joined with Maura Gillmartin of the Quincy Credit Union to present each Finalist and Champion with a plaque for his or her achievement. Each champion was also presented with the permanent bowl which has the name of each champion engraved and is kept on year-round display in the main office of the Recreation Department.

Norfolk County Youth Leadership Academy A Hit

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti said this week that the return of the Youth Leadership Academy this summer turned out to be hugely popular with Norfolk County families.

"The feedback from parents has been great. It really validated our decision to bring the academy back into operation," said Bellotti in a release to The Quincy Sun. "It was so popular that at one point, we had a waiting list of 260 people, and we had to add an extra week-long session to accommodate some of them."

This summer also marked the first year of the academy since the Town of Braintree purchased the Braintree Public Safety Complex property, where the academy is held, from Norfolk County. The town leased the property back to the sheriff's office.

"We had a great cooperative relationship with Mayor John Sullivan and his people in Braintree," Bellotti added. "Their cooperation made this a successful academy."

A total of 665 children between the ages of 10 and 14 attended the academy, which was held in eight one-week sessions beginning in July.

As in prior years, the Youth Leadership Academy featured a unique aerial ropes course. The specially trained academy staff used the course to teach kids about team building, smart decision-making and risk-taking, and reaching and exceeding goals.

Sheriff Bellotti also introduced a new feature to this summer's camp: an anti-bullying presentation.

"Through my work as a member of the state's special commission on the implementation of the school bullying law, I know first-hand how important this issue has become. So we added this new piece to the academy, and I thought the kids really responded well to it."

In addition, the Youth Leadership Academy included hands-on training on fire safety and an informative demonstration by a Norfolk County Sheriff's Office K-9 team.

The 2011 academy took place after a two-year absence due to budget constraints. Sheriff Bellotti was able to come up with funding from revenues generated by his Civil Process division.

Paterno Lifts QHS Over NQHS, 1-0

Presidents' senior midfielder Kevin Paterno located a loose ball out of a scrum in front off the North Quincy goalmouth just ten minutes into the first-half of last Saturday's contest against the Red Raiders and buried it.

Paterno's tally would eventually stand as the only score of the game as Quincy defeated North Quincy for the first time in almost five years, 1-0.

"Kevin scored on a ball that was bouncing around the North Quincy goal after it had been deflected off the crossbar," said QHS Head Coach Mark Spendlove on Tuesday. "It came about ten minutes into the first-half. We basically failed to put the game away later despite having several scoring opportunities and North Quincy never went away."

"It was a solid performance overall by both teams," continued Spendlove. "But for us it was a really good display of soccer."

Quincy will be looking to feed off their winning momentum when they play today (Thursday) at home versus Middleboro (3:30 p.m.) and on Saturday at home against nonleague Randolph (10 a.m.). Home matches with Hanover (Oct. 11), Scituate (Oct. 13), and Pembroke (Oct. 18) precede an away tilt at Middleboro (Oct. 20).

The Presidents face North Quincy for a second time on Sat., Oct. 22 at 6:30 p.m.

Panthers v. Storm (Oct. 2)

Despite an effective running by seven Squantum Storm backs, which accounted for 161 net rushing yards, the Storm lost to the Quincy Point Panthers, 18-6. The Panthers were led by running back Garrett Cronin (three touchdowns) who scored from 51, 86 and 47 yards. Other than Cronin's three long TD dashes, the Storm played strong defense. The score at halftime was 0-0.

Middle linebacker Connor Cramond, ends Jeremy Downey and Liam O'Connor, and outside linebackers Mac Deegan and Joel Lawless stood out on defense for Squantum. Cronin and Anthony Marcello shined on defense for the Panthers.

Storm backs Troy Shepherd and Kevin Mock each had long kickoff returns, with Mock's 80-yard KO being nullified by a blocking in the back call. Downey scored Squantum's only touchdown on a six-yard run.

In summary, Lawless ran eight times for 70 yards; Downey five times for 27 yards and a TD; O'Connor one carry for 21 yards; Mock five times for 17 yards; Max Storch three times for 14 yards, and Deegan two carries for six yards. All running was done behind the blocking off center Declan Mayo and Ryan Manning, guards Downey, Mark Monahan and Raphy Veras, tackles Cramond and Colin McGrath, and ends Jake Grady and O'Connor.

Johnny Tran, Pat Bronske and Pat O'Brien played well on special teams for the Storm.

Mustangs v. Apaches (Oct. 2)

The Milton Mustangs defeated the North Quincy Apaches, 19-0. The Apaches are still searching for that elusive first victory of the fall season.

On their first play from scrimmage, the Mustangs coughed up a fumble that was recovered by North Quincy defender Colin Maloney for one of the few highlights of the game for the Apaches.

Towards the end of the first quarter, the Mustangs' offense began moving the ball well behind great running from Stephen Timmons. The six-play drive resulted in a touchdown by Timmons at the start of the second quarter for a 7-0 lead. North Quincy's offense got some big runs and a strong effort from Mike McNelley and quarterback Aiden Brown but was mostly frustrated by the solid play of Milton's defensive line. At the end of the second quarter, Timmons caught a 40-yard pass as Milton took a 13-0 lead into the break.

North Quincy's offensive problems only got worse in the second half as they fumbled away the ball on the first play from scrimmage and Milton took over near midfield. On their next drive the Apaches were forced to punt and McNelley got off a great kick pushing the Mustangs back to the 25-yard line. Three plays later, the Mustangs fumbled the ball back to North Quincy as McNelley came up with the loose ball.

But the North Quincy offense sputtered again. On their final drive of the game, Milton mounted a nine-play scoring drive to close out the scoring at 19-0.

McNelley (11 tackles, fumble recovery), Brown, and Tom Whooley (four tackles) played well on defense for North Quincy.

Elks v. Manets (Oct. 2)

The West Quincy Elks behind a dominant offense and defensive display ran their record to 4-0 overall following a 27-0-win over the Houghs Neck Manets.

Douglas Santos scored four touchdowns for the Elks to lead the attack.

"Simply unstoppable," said West Quincy Head Coach Justin Thorley about Santos' performance. "He is the best player I've seen in five years coaching the Elks."

Santos had runs of 27 yards, 65 yards and 43 yards. He also had a 35-yard receiving touchdown; the Elks' offensive line was the key to Santos' success.

Defensively the Elks welcomed back defensive captain Devonte Bowden who missed the first three games with a knee injury. Also playing well for West Quincy on defense were Michael Ortiz, Joey Weinstein, Vagnos Santos, and John Tiexiera. The Elks' junior varsity played well in relief of the starters in the fourth quarter with Curtis Frazier, Daniel Shurwin, Conner Ainsley and JJ Camara leading the way.

Although the Manets took one on the chin strap, the continued to compete until the final whistle. Defensively, Ryan Tucker and Sonny Ciugini played well on the defensive front and Joe Fallon came up with his second interception of the fall.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Someone from your past could arrive with welcome news concerning your future. Meanwhile, avoid taking sides in a workplace confrontation until you have more facts to go on.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A decision about a relationship could have longer-lasting consequences than you might imagine, so be sure of your facts before you act. A trusted friend can help.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A strained relationship could be restored with more personal contact between the two of you. Letting others act as your go-between only adds to the ongoing estrangement.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) New facts could mean taking a new path toward a goal you've been hoping to reach. However, be sure all your questions are answered before you undertake to shift directions.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) This is a good week for all you fine Felines to turn your attention to some important considerations, such as your health, your job situation and the status of important relationships.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Avoid making a quick decision about a matter that needs more study. Keep your mind open for possibilities, even if they don't seem plausible -- at least not yet.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) You might welcome the emphasis on openness in relationships that mark this period. But it's a good idea to avoid sharing personal secrets with people you hardly know.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) There are still some questions that need to be asked and answered before you can feel confident enough to make a potentially life-changing decision.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Some lingering effects from a now largely resolved workplace confrontation could make things difficult for you. Act on this before it becomes serious.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) You feel you're finally in control of your own life after months of making compromises and concessions you never felt comfortable with. Congratulations.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) No sooner do you decide to pass on one job offer than another suddenly turns up. This one might not have everything you're looking for, but it's worth checking out.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Congratulations. With Jupiter's strong influence dominating this week, don't be surprised to get some good news about a troubling financial matter.

BORN THIS WEEK: You are usually kind and loving. But you can be highly critical of those who don't measure up to your high standards.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Pre-arranged/pre-financed funerals make economic sense and are increasing every year. . .

There are many reasons for pre-arranging a funeral . . . More than anything else, one makes pre-arrangements because of those they love. It removes from the family the burden of making important decisions at one of the most difficult times in their lives. It makes one's wishes known. The family knows what to do. . . It eases the concern as to "Is this what he or she would want?"

Through the years, The Deware Funeral Home has always been truthful in answering any and all questions concerning our costs/services/facilities and merchandise. We have always believed that it is our responsibility to provide a range of prices and services that provide exactly what the needs and preferences of the consumer prefer. Over the years our service shows a remarkable consistency of economy. The many, many families of all faiths we have been privileged to serve will confirm this.

Please feel free to stop by The Deware Funeral Home or call us anytime for an appointment to discuss any pre-arrangements or pre-financing you might desire. We will be pleased to answer any questions you might have. This will be in complete confidence and is without cost or obligation, of course.

The money is part of the Infrastructure Development Fund, a new state initiative to provide funding for "shovel-ready" infrastructure projects across the Commonwealth that will jumpstart additional economic development activity. In addition to appropriating $37.95 million for these projects, the Legislature also transferred $350 million in the state's "Rainy Day Fund."

Trip To Washington, D.C. Honors Quincy WWII Vets

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy resident Gordon Simmons, a World War II veteran, along with other war vets, recently took a trip to the nation's memorials in Washington D.C.

The veterans were taken on an all expense paid trip to D.C. as a part of The Honor Flight Network, a national non-profit organization created to honor America's WWII veterans.

"This was the first time I have visited Washington," said Simmons. "It was outstanding, such a wonderful day, and the highlight of my military career."

New England joined the Honor Flight program in 2009 after law enforcement retiree Joe Byron worked with seniors and veterans and got the idea to include New England vets.

October Domestic Violence Awareness Month

DOVE Marks 33 Years, Need Keeps Growing

By LAURA GRIFFIN

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month and the number of victims keeps growing, according to Sue Chandler, Executive Director of DOVE, the local agency dedicated to identifying, aiding and protecting victims of domestic violence.

Public awareness is an essential factor in reducing those numbers, according to Chandler who described the special events planned to mark Domestic Violence Month in October, the agency's fundraiser in early November, and a teen-awareness program in February.

"Love shouldn't hurt," is the theme of several programs planned to highlight the dangers facing one in four women, to raise awareness in the community and to boost funding for critically needed services and facilities.

In DOVE's service area alone, three women died in domestic violence incidents in the past 26 months and the violent deaths of three other local women in 2011 are under investigation. Across the state, two teenagers were violently killed this year alone.

2-Alarm Fire At 42-44 Penn St. Under Investigation

Duplex Destroyed; May Have Had Illegal Apartment

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy's Task Force on Illegal Rooming Houses is investigating the possibility of a two-family home on 42-44 Penn St., in Quincy being overcrowded after a fire destroyed the three-story duplex Sunday evening.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation.

"The city is investigating the overcrowding of the building," said Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci. "The Quincy Fire Department did a terrific job in containing the fire from spreading to surrounding buildings."

The Quincy Fire Department responded to the two-alarm fire at 9:27 p.m. Sunday after police notified them of the fire.

The Red Cross took in eight people Sunday night to help find shelter.

No one was injured, authorities said.

Quincy Deputy Fire Chief Edward Fenby said he believes there were more people living in the unit than allowed, and that there may have been an illegal apartment on the third floor.

"Units were cut up with curtains as make-shift walls," said Fenby. "There were mattresses everywhere on the floor, and the front door was dead bolted and covered with closets."

The Fire Department had to break through the two front doors in order to gain access to the attic.

According to Fenby, authorities were not notified right away. The occupants of the four-bedroom building attempted to extinguish the fire themselves with five gallon buckets of water.

A neighbor called police after hearing what they thought was a fight outside. When police arrived they found no one fighting, but the occupants trying to extinguish a fire. Quincy Fire Department was soon dispatched.

"When we arrived at the scene it had looked like an exterior fire," said Fenby. "We had then learned that it had pre-burned before we arrived."

According to Fenby the fire is believed to have started at the front door of the third floor left hand unit. He went on to add that because the building is an older model it has "Balloon Framing" which allowed the flames to quickly move through the attic because there was nowhere for the fire to stop.

"It becomes a game of chasing the fire around," said Fenby. "Getting to the attic to stop the fire was a challenge."

The building, which will have to be torn down, is valued at $172,200 according to the city's Assessor's Database.

The last listed owner of the property is Kuang Hui Chang.

Ask the GEMOLOGIST®
BY JEFFREY M. BERTMAN
GRADUATE GEMOLOGIST
CUTTING CRITIQUE
It is often said that "cut" (along with "carat weight," "color," and "clarity," the "4Cs") is a characteristic that largely determines the value of a diamond. Thus, it is important to inspect the thickness of the diamond's "girdle," which is the edge around the periphery of the gemstone where the upper and lower sections meet. While diamond is legendarily hard, it is also brittle. Therefore, a diamond with a thin girdle is considered to be a liability because it is more vulnerable to chipping. However, if the girdle is too thick, its value is also somewhat reduced because the gemstone will look a bit smaller than a diamond of the same weight with a girdle of normal thickness.
The cut of the diamond is extremely important because it has the greatest influence on the diamond's brilliance. And when it comes to diamonds, brilliance is what makes diamonds "a girl's best friend." DOVE Marks 33 Years, Need Keeps Growing

Hundreds of others are at risk as evident by the nearly 2,000 calls to DOVE's hotline this year, a 30% increase over FY2010's 1,519 calls.

"That's an awful lot of people looking for help," said Maureen Flores, DOVE's Civilian Domestic Violence Advocate for the Quincy and Randolph police.

Flores and Chandler outlined local domestic violence statistics as well as DOVE's programs, needs and goals during a presentation to City Council on Sept. 26.

Today's battered economy adds one more element to the risk of domestic abuse, according to Chandler who said Monday, "Unemployment is a very high-risk factor."

Not only does the loss of fuel assistance, jobs and social services raise the risks, but community support and social services dwindle as agencies lose funding and grants are cut, according to Chandler.

"There are fewer safety net resources," Chandler added.

The economy's impact has even hit DOVE shelters which serviced fewer guests last year due to the lack of sufficient resources.

"People are staying longer in our program," said Flores, noting that they have nowhere else to go. As a result, fewer people can be sheltered as DOVE's facilities are limited and so often filled.

"It is our hope in the current fiscal year to relocate," said Chandler, describing the need for more and better facilities and programs especially for children of abuse victims.

SUE CHANDLER

MYTHS

Eliminating the myths associated with domestic violence is a first step, according to Flores who said, "One of those myths is that domestic violence is not a community issue."

In fact, Flores said domestic violence affects every economic level, age, ethnic group and neighborhood.

"There is no boundary around whom it affects," said Flores who followed up on 250 domestic violence incidents reported to local police this year, up from 40 calls or 510% in just12 months.

Flores works with Quincy and Randolph police and contacts victims after reports of violence. During her service with the police, she said, "I have reached out to over 800 victims."

Outreach is an essential part of DOVE's mission, according to Chandler who described special efforts to stem dating violence through presentations at high schools, such as Quincy and North Quincy High Schools.

"The teens are really engaged," said Chandler, noting that 126 teen signed on for the Peer Education Program this year in addition to 72 in 2010. Such programs succeed in preventing violence and sometimes expose violence in a home.

DOVE's YouthSpeak Teen Dating Violence Prevention Program also sponsors the White Ribbon Pledge programs offering teens an opportunity to take "a stand against domestic violence."

"The support is broad and deep in this community," said Chandler of the DOVE which was formed 33 years ago during Mayor Arthur Tobin's administration. Tobin's Commission on the Status of Women in 1978 began the work which continues to this day.

Throughout the years, DOVE workers found cooperation and "concrete support" provided by Quincy Medical Center, Quincy Police Department and the Office of the District Attorney.

DOVE services all of Norfolk County and its single goal is in its name, "Domestic Violence Ended."

Honor Flight A Moving Experience

There was reminiscing, camaraderie and some dancing, too.

For Quincy's Bob Noble and his son, Bob, Jr., it was an experience they'll never forget.

Noble, an Army veteran of World War II and former Prisoner of War, and his son, recently took part in the Honor Flight Network. The network is a national non-profit organization created to honor America's WWII veterans. It provides a free trip to Washington, D.C. for the veteran (an accompanying guardian pays $400) and a visit to the nation's memorials.

The experience lasts less than 24 hours.

But the memories will endure much longer than that.

The day's itinerary – sandwiched between a round-trip flight from Manchester, N.H. to D.C. – went off like clockwork.

Among the highlights: Visiting the World War II and Korean War Memorials, seeing the U.S. Navy, U.S. Marine Memorial and new Air Force Memorial, and watching the changing of the guard at the Tombs of the Unknown at Arlington National Cemetery.

Bob Noble - the veteran – has visited Arlington Cemetery on several occasions but this trip marked the first time he's witnessed the placing of the wreath at the tomb and the playing of Taps by an Army bugler.

"It was flawless and beautiful and very moving," he said.

In New England, the Honor Flight Network is facilitated by Joe Byron, a law enforcement retiree with assistance by Sheila Peters, a social worker at the Manchester V.A. Medical Center. Joe and Sheila – with the help of many volunteers – have organized 18 trips to the Memorials in D.C. for 525 veterans.

Noble learned of the program from Capt. Mary Jo Majors, U.S. Navy Reserve retired, a former Navy nurse. They met at Quincy's Memorial Day exercise. Majors has participated in four flights to D.C. as both a nurse and a guardian.

Bob's experience with the program began about a week before the trip at an orientation session at the Manchester V.A. Medical Center.

"I met four other veterans – a Naval pilot, an Air Corps A-26 pilot, a B-24 Ball Turret gunner and an Army veteran from the Philippines."

While the guardians were being orientated, the veterans gathered for about an hour or more. "We had a lot of conversation – mostly humorous – about funny things that happened to us (during the war). We had a really good mix of guys. It was a very nice get-together."

That was just the beginning of a very pleasurable experience.

On Sunday, Sept. 18, at 6:30 a.m., the Nobles met the group's 22 other veterans and guardians at the Manchester V.A. The veterans ranged in age from 85 to 93. Bob noted the 93-year-old was experiencing his first airplane ride.

"There were wheelchairs for everyone. Though many of us thought we wouldn't need one, most of us found them handy – particularly at Arlington and at the end of the day."

The red carpet was already rolled out at this early hour.

At the V.A., the vets were welcomed by a troop of Boy and Cub Scouts and by motorcyclists from the Goffstown American Legion Post. At 7:30 a.m., they boarded buses and were escorted to the Manchester Airport by the Manchester Police and by about 25 American Legion motorcyclists.

"In the Airport Concourse, we were welcomed through two lines of American flags and over 60 volunteers and other veterans. We proceeded through the welcoming group accompanied by a bagpiper."

At 9:25 a.m., they received another big salute by the Southwest Airlines Crew as they boarded a plane bound for Baltimore-Washington Airport.

They touched down about 10 minutes before 11 a.m. to a wonderful reception by Honor Flight Volunteers from Baltimore and a surprise welcome by a group of Honor Flight veterans who were returning to California.

Over the next five hours, the veterans visited and stopped at a host of our nation's most meaningful and moving monuments – many in honor of those who paid the supreme sacrifice.

At noon, the group arrived at the World War II Memorial. "Many of us were able to find our service records on the computer at the kiosk," Bob said. "We spent 45 minutes visiting the Memorial. We had a group photo taken in front of the Wall of Stars (400,000 Gold Stars commemorating the servicemen and women lost during World War II)."

Taps was played during a moment of silence.

It was not Bob Noble's first time visiting the World War II Memorial.

"I was fortunate to go to Washington for the dedication of the World War II Memorial (May 29, 2004). What my wife (Gloria) and I both regretted at the time is that we didn't have any of our children with us.

"When this (Honor Network) came up, it was an opportunity for me to have my son with me and go down and take in the memorial again because it is beautiful. It's very meaningful and well situated."

The WWII Memorial honors the 16 million who served in the Armed Forces of the U.S. It is located at the very end of the reflecting pool that runs between the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial.

After a box lunch, the bus toured the Mall area, Capitol area and stopped at the U.S. Navy Memorial on Pennsylvania Ave. At 2:45 p.m. the group arrived at Arlington Cemetery. Besides witnessing the Changing of the Guard, the Nobles visited the graveside of Major Audie Murphy – the most decorated American soldier who served for 27 months in the European Theatre.

During the last hour of the tour, the Nobles saw the Lincoln Memorial, visited the Korean War Memorial, drove by the U.S. Marine Iwo Jima Memorial and stopped at the new Air Force Memorial. It was here that Bob – a longtime freelance photographer for The Quincy Sun – showed his eye for the perfect snapshot.

The memorial's three spires "soar" more than 200 feet. They resemble the images of "contrails" of the Air Force Thunderbirds as they peel back in a precision "bomb burst" maneuver. Only three of the four contrails are shown; the absent fourth suggests the missing man formation traditionally used at Air Force funeral flyovers.

"I hadn't been to that memorial before. There's one spot on the ground where you can take a picture of the entire monument. So guess who was the only veteran to do that? I got down there. They were a little concerned. But my son said, "He can do it," and I did it."

The only site they didn't get a chance to see was the Vietnam Memorial because of traffic.

But overall, the entire day went off like clock-work.

"Everybody were where they were supposed to be a specific time," Bob noted. "If you had to be back at the bus by 1:30 p.m., everybody was back at the bus at 1:30 p.m."

Before the boarded the plane for the return trip home, there was one last "hurrah."

"At the end of the day, we had a 45-minute wait before we boarded the plane. They played music – from the 40s and service songs – on the loud speaker and there was dancing. One Marine did a jig to the Marine Corps hymn," Bob said.

The plane touched down around 11:05 p.m. and the Nobles returned to Quincy at 1:15 a.m. Monday morning.

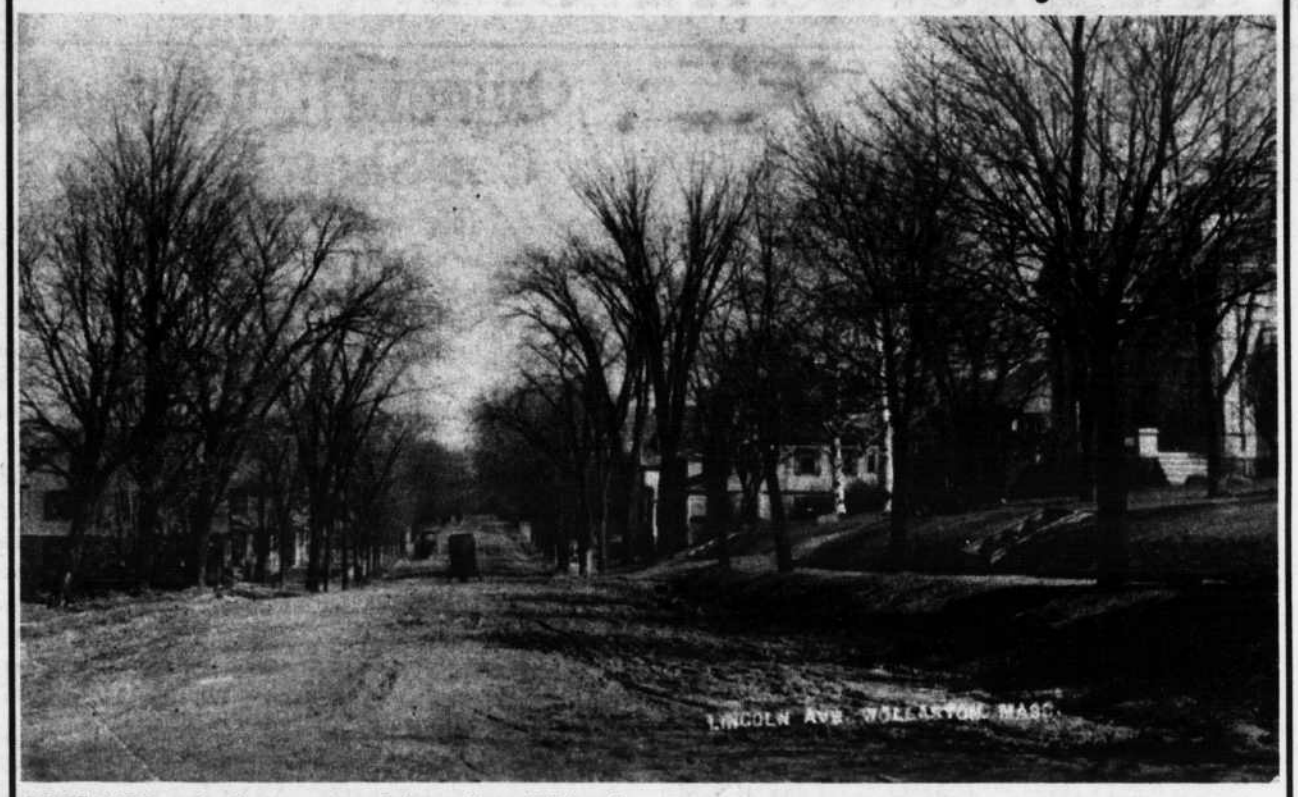

Tired but quite pleased by the whole experience.

"We had a wonderful day. The weather was perfect (cloudy, mid 60's, low humidity.) Everything was well planned. We enjoyed each other's company.

"I particularly liked sharing my experience with my son, Bob.

"Everybody had a great time. It was a lot of fun. Every body had a smile on their face the entire day. It was well worth the experience."

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS 1908 real photo postcard is a view of Lincoln Avenue in what was known then as Wollaston Heights. This was one of the first sections of Quincy laid out for development by the land companies that saw the potential of Quincy as a suburb of Boston. The Heights consisted of three hills, or glacial drumlins, that were bordered by Newport Avenue, Beale Street and Adams Street. All of this area was previously farmland. Beginning in 1870, purchasers of house lots were lured by offers of three years of free transportation to Boston on the Old Colony railroad. The Wollaston Depot was built for this purpose. At the time there were no trees on the hills and spectacular views ranged from Boston Harbor to the Blue Hills. Many Boston businessmen built the grand homes that stand here today. This old winter scene shows why homes built then had mudrooms at their entryway. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Says The Sun Has Ignored Mahoney Mayoral Campaign

I have been a long time subscriber to the Quincy Sun.

I called the Quincy Sun in July asking why there was no mention about a mayoral race going on in the city of Quincy. I was told by Mr. Bosworth that as soon as all the signatures on the campaign papers were verified, the Quincy Sun was going to start running articles from both candidates—Anne Mahoney and Tom Koch.

By deciding to wait until all signatures were verified, you gave Mayor Koch coverage all summer while ignoring Mrs. Mahoney. Well Mr. Bosworth, this process was completed in August and STILL you have only run a couple of articles given by the mayoral campaign of Anne Mahoney.

Every other article her campaign has given you has been totally ignored. You sure do seem to have plenty of pictures and articles about Tom Koch and Dan Raymondi though. This is ridiculous.

Every resident in this city deserves to hear from both sides... not just your undying devotion to Mayor Koch. There are plenty of taxpayers in this city that are unhappy with the way this city is being run and Mrs. Mahoney's ideas should be available for all to read so everyone can make an informed decision. What are you afraid of Mr. Bosworth?

You also made the decision to limit press releases to just two dates. There are too many issues going on in this city to just arbitrarily limit what needs to be discussed.

I not only subscribe to the Sun but I also buy subscriptions anonymously for my friends. I am asking to cancel my subscription immediately along with all other subscriptions I have purchased.

To my friends that have been receiving the Sun anonymously, you now know who has been your Secret Sun Santa but I no longer will spend one penny on a publication that should be renamed the Bosworth Sun because it does not cover what truly is going on in the city of Quincy.

Mullen Sees Tight Money Top Challenge

By FRANK McCAULEY

This Week
1990
21 Years Ago

When Quincy Police Chief Francis E. Mullen was appointed in early Sept. by Mayor James A. Sheets the mayor cited Mullen's experience and ability to make difficult decisions in tough financial times.

Mullen, 58, a former lieutenant and a 33-year veteran of the force, will be put to the task soon.

Mullen said managing the department under tight fiscal restraints would be his biggest challenge. As for changes and reforms in the department, Mullen said, much of the department's future hinges on the outcome of the tax rollback, petitions sponsored by the Citizens for Limited Taxation.

Once Question 3 on the Nov. 6 ballot is answered by the voters, Mullen says he would begin making reforms such as manpower realignment and possible utilization of the city's auxiliary police. (Editor's note: The CLT rollback petition was defeated statewide. In Quincy Question 3 received 14,443 (39%) YES votes and 21,876 (60%) NO votes.)

PRESIDENTS PLACE OPENING USHERS IN NEW DOWNTOWN ERA

Presidents Place, the $60 million mixed use development located in Quincy Square, officially opened its doors ushering in what officials hope is the beginning of a renaissance in the historic downtown area.

Some 300 business people, community leaders, city officials and residents attended the festive grand opening ceremony held inside the complex's three-story glass and marble atrium. The atrium is located between one eight-story tower and one five-story tower.

Mayor James A. Sheets called the opening of Presidents Place the beginning of a renaissance and a decade of positive change.

Sheets credited former Mayor Francis X. McCauley and his former Planning Director James Lydon for beginning the city's planning on the project. In his second Inaugural Address in 1984, McCauley mentioned that the Bargain Center area of the Square was underutilized and some positive changes should take place.

In 1985, the Ricciardi family joined Boston Five Cents Savings Bank and the Capanelli Family Trust in a venture to build the project.

Quincy College Student Launches International Music Career

It comes as no surprise that Joyous Gurung is a talented musician as he grew up in a musically inclined family.

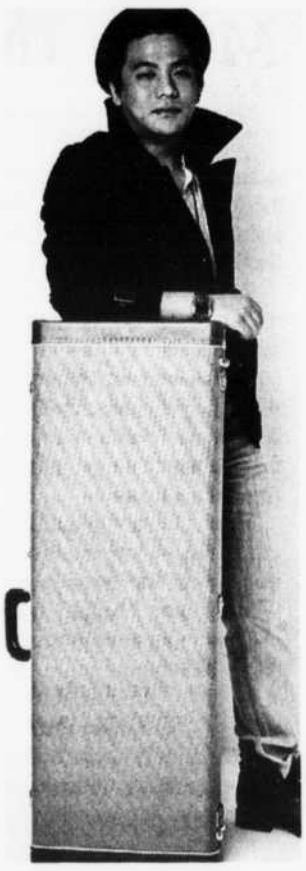

His father has a Bachelor's Degree in music as well as a Master of Arts in Ethnomusicology, his uncles both attended Berklee College of Music on full scholarships, and his grandfather wrote the Nepalese national anthem.

"My musical inspiration and passion came from growing up with my loving family in Kathmandu, Nepal," Gurung said. "Every corner of my home was filled with musical notes that lifted my heart and nourished my soul."

Gurung began playing the guitar at an early age and then began writing songs at the age of twelve and his love for music continued on through his childhood and teenage years.

The journey to his first album began in 2006 when he moved to the United States from Nepal to further his studies. He spent his first year abroad living with his aunt and uncle in Connecticut and attending a local community college.

"Their home was a peaceful home in a beautiful rural setting – the natural vibes and rhythms re-ignited my passion for writing songs.

JOYOUS GURUNG

Writing songs helped me channel my emotions and reconnect me with memories of my loved ones left behind in Nepal. Music gave me a comfort zone where I could feel better about myself and think positively about my future," Gurung said.

Since moving to Boston and attending Quincy College, Gurung has made new friends who share his love for music and it is through this experience that his musical adventure really began to accelerate and take shape.

"Boston has one of the best musical scenes in the world and gives aspiring musicians like myself a chance to share their work. I started playing at a local coffee house, for my peers at Quincy College, and performed a few small gigs here and there," Gurung said. He even received inspiration to write one of his songs from Professor Steven Dooner, his English Professor at Quincy College.

"As he studied with me in my literature classes, I slowly became aware of the enormous talent of Joyous Gurung. When he finally played for me his recent video, I was struck by the lyrical beauty of that song, and after listening to his whole CD, I was stunned at the range of feeling in each tune and his consummate musicianship throughout. Joyous' music deserves an even larger audience, and I know his star is rising because he definitely has a lot more that he can give," said Dooner, a professor of English & Humanities at Quincy College.

Gurung is in his third semester at Quincy College and is pursuing an Associate of Science Degree in computer science.

Using his small home studio, Gurung pre-produced songs and explored new lyrics and choral arrangements. Soon after that, a friend offered to produce his album. So together, Yuki Kanesaka and Joyous Gurung spent several months locked in a music studio and set out to bring his own compositions to life. When asked about his experience in the studio, Gurung said: "It was so much fun to see the music evolve and we would constantly challenge each other with new ideas to improve the arrangements."

Saath, the name of his debut album that released in May 2011, means company or support in Nepali.

"Someone once told me, 'Never look in the rear-view mirror – always focus on the here and now' - I'm heeding this advice and currently working on my second extended play album and composing new songs," Gurung said. He has formed a band called Sound Craft with the following members: Joyous Gurung, vocal/guitar, Yuki Kanesaka, electric keys/saxophone; Massato Ittoh, guitar, and Takuma Anzai, drums. They have played numerous shows here in Boston and continue to explore different sounds and experiment with musical ideas.

Gurung hopes to launch Saath back home in Nepal and would like to record his second album in the United States by the end of 2011. He has called in to on-air radio programs in Nepal and will be going back home this winter for a visit.

Gurung would like use his music to share peace, compassion and love all over the world. In addition, he would like to donate the profits he makes from his albums to charity and Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO) to build schools, buy books, etc. for children from third world countries who are in need.

An opening reception was held Wednesday from 6 to 8 p.m. for students, families and friends.

All were welcome to attend.

Art teacher Erin Massa instructs students through a strong art education curriculum and guides Woodward students individually, using directed and free creativity in the classroom so that students produce truly remarkable pieces. Student talent is highlighted through unique pieces such as Natchalee Toruen's Picture in Pieces, based on fashion trends combined with unique materials.

Project themes focus on different ideas, such as Anh My Ngo's monochromatic flower painting or Nadia Zimo's take on The Girl with the Pearl Earring. JAMES ZUPKOFSKA MEMORIAL Scholarship was recently awarded to Nicole Peterson and Dimitrios Kalogeras of Quincy Public Schools Career and Technical Education Legal and Protective Services pathway at Quincy High School. Nicole Peterson, Dimitrios Kalogeras Receive James Zupkofska Scholarship

The first James Zupkofska Memorial Scholarship was recently awarded to Nicole Peterson and Dimitrios Kalogeras of Quincy Public Schools Career and Technical Education Legal and Protective Services pathway at Quincy High School.

Peterson and Kalogeras were recognized for their leadership and diligence throughout the three -year course.

Legal and Protective Services is a three year program for students who are pursuing a career in the field of criminal justice.

Peterson is attending the University of New Haven to study forensics.

Kalogeras is attending the University of Massachusetts Boston to study criminal justice.

James Zupkofska was a 45 year-old Norfolk County Correctional Officer who graduated from Quincy High School in 1982. He was also a member of tunnel workers union local 88 and was a Coast Guard Veteran.

While out for a jog on Aug. 22, 2009, Zupkofska was struck and killed by a vehicle. His wife Laurie, along with family and friends, started an annual golf tournament in James' name, and with raffles and donations, are now giving back to the community in which Jim grew up. Because Quincy High School offers a Law Enforcement major, Laurie reached out to Quincy High School to donate to that program. This past school year the James Zupkofska Memorial Fund donated seven CPR manikins which allowed 14 Protective Services seniors to become certified in CPR/AED. Also donated was a wood display case, with a dedication plaque to James Zupkofska, now standing outside the Protective Services classroom.

In addition, the two students each received a $1,000 scholarship. In total, approximately $5,000 has been given this year in the memory of James Zupkofska.

Quincy College Chairman: Nursing Standards Never Lowered

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Quincy College has never lowered its standards for nursing school applicants and promoted a 17-year employee strictly on merit, according to William Grindlay, chairman of the Quincy College Board of Governors.

Grindlay was responding to a published report that he said was full of inaccuracies.

The charges followed a vote by the Board of Governors which eliminated $35,000 annual stipends for two persons in administrative roles. Both persons lost roughly $700 a week in those stipends when the college hired its current dean of nursing studies.

"There were a lot of inaccuracies," Grindlay said Tuesday, citing the charge that Catherine Maloney, a 17-year employee and president of a college workers' union, was promoted due to her politically connected relatives.

Maloney is the sister of Sen. John Keenan and sister-in-law of Mayor Tom Koch.

Grindlay said the position was advertised and posted and he believes Maloney was the only applicant for the position which increased her salary by about $2,500 annually.

However, the published reported stated Maloney's salary would have increased by $17,000.

Grindlay said Maloney was promoted by a unanimous vote of the Board of Governors who were familiar with her work on various committees and college programs.

As for questions regarding the staffing of the nursing program, Grindlay said that the elimination of the stipends had the unanimous support of the Board of Governors.

In fact, Grindlay said the governors had never actually approved the $35,000 stipends. The stipends were funded while the college looked for a new director for its nursing program and it is a budget issue at this time.

As for the most important charge that Quincy College had lowered its standards for nursing school applicants, that's not true, according to Grindlay.

"That testing has not been adopted. That was presented to us and the Board put it on hold," said Grindlay who said it hasn't been discussed for months.

Finally, Grindlay addressed questions regarding administrators teaching in the classroom and said Quincy College President Peter Tsaffaras himself plans to teach a class in the near future and has directed all department heads to do the same.

A Quincy College employee filed the charges with the state's Board of Registration in Nursing. The investigation is being handled by Judith Pelletier, Nursing Education Coordinator.

Pelletier asked for a response to the charges by Oct. 31 from Quincy College's Dean of Nursing, Kimberly Crocker Crowther. That will allow the issues to be discussed at nursing board's meeting on Nov. 9.

The Board is officially the Massachusetts Board of Registration in Nursing which oversees all nursing education and licensing.

Stop & Shop/Ahold Changes On Target in Quincy Center

Stop & Shop's parent company, Ahold USA, is moving forward with its plans for adding employees and investing in its Quincy Center operation, according to the company's spokesperson Tracy Pawelski.

"Ahold USA is on track with our commitment to invest approximately $4 million in capital improvements and IT infrastructure into Quincy Center Plaza at 1385 Hancock St," reported Tracy Pawelski, Vice President External Communications, Ahold USA.

In fact, construction has been ongoing since the spring with upgrades to the interior of the building a reconfiguration of office space, according to Pawelski who offered photographs of interior improvements,

Pawelski outlined the current timetable for bringing more employees and upgrades to its Quincy site through an e-mail response to The Quincy Sun.

Under the current plan, Pawelski expects the building will be fully occupied with 950 employees by February as the company relocates the New England Division of Ahold to Quincy.

Pawelski reported that the New England divisional leadership moved into the building in June and the management group will be moving from Braintree within six months.

Ahold, an international retail food corporation, is the parent company of Stop & Shop and has two main support offices: Quincy and Carlisle, Pa.

Currently, Stop & Shop New England and Stop & Shop New York Metro Divisions operate more than 390 supermarkets in the northeast, as well as a distribution center in Freetown.

An international retail food giant, Ahold is based in the Netherlands with supermarkets in Europe and 13 states in the U.S. where it employs more than 106,000 associates.

Trip To Washington, D.C. Honors 2 Quincy WWII Vets

WORLD WAR II MEMORIAL in Washington, D.C.

World War II P.O.W. who told me about the program and got me interested in organizing a program here," said Founder Joe Byron. "We are now focused on getting those vets to D.C. so they can have an amazing experience."

He has now organized over 18 trips to the Memorials in D.C. for over 525 veterans, with the largest trip to date being 65 veterans.

Simmons, 85, served in the Army Air Corps as an Aircraft Electrician and was stationed in Frankfurt, Germany at the end of the war.

Simmons signed up for the service in January of 1944 for the air cadet training. In February of 1945 he was called into active duty.

"His generation was the type to do things because it was the right thing, and my dad signed up because that was what needed to be done at the time," said Wendy Simmons, Gordon's daughter. "When we arrived at the airport and throughout the whole trip all of the veterans received acknowledgment from not only those we were with but strangers thanking them for their services. It was an honor to be with my father then, and to do this trip with him."

All veterans are accompanied by a "guardian" who pay $400 for to take the trip. Byron said that they require this mainly to help keep the vets safe, but also to allow them to pick someone they want to share the experience and their stories with.

"My dad signed himself up to go and I found out that he needed a chaperone so I decided to go," said Wendy. "I wanted to be there for him, the more memories we make the better."

Simmons said that his daughters and his wife saw an advertisement on television and asked him if he would be interested. He then found contact information and was on his way to Washington, with his daughter Wendy.

"A lot of vets had their family members go with them on the trip," said Simmons. "It meant the world to me that my daughter wanted to come. I was thrilled and pleased."

Wendy said she thinks it's great that the organization makes the guardian pay to come, that way they can save their money for the veteran's they want to bring on future trips.

"It was interesting to learn that there were many people who volunteered to be guardians that weren't related to the veterans attending," said Wendy. "I met a man who had volunteered six times to help out and the reason he did it was because he just got so much out of the experience."

The veterans and their guardians arrived in Baltimore at around 10:50 a.m. on a recent Sunday morning where their busy day began. They took the day to visit the World War II Memorial, a tour by bus of the mall and Capitol areas, the U.S. Navy Memorial, Arlington Cemetery, U.S Marine Iwo Jima Memorial, Air Force Memorial, the Korean War Memorial and Lincoln Memorial.

"The thing that stood out to me was the World War II Memorial," said Wendy. "It was very impressive, very grand, and very expansive."

The day went by fast and before it ended the veterans and their guardians were all taken out to dinner.

"I was so impressed with everything," said Wendy. "They did everything for us. They packed a box lunch for everyone and by the end of the day they took us out to dinner."

For Simmons it is hard for him to pick a highlight of the trip.

"For me the best thing was the reception we received by people," said Simmons. "The way we were treated by not only military personnel but by civilians, it was like we were heroes."

For Byron it just proves what he believes, that for the veterans who are able to experience this trip get more out of it then just a visit to Washington.

"This program is more than just a trip to the veterans that attend," said Byron. "It goes far beyond that."

Mahoney Proposes Arts, Cultural Center At Old QHS

School Committee Vice Chair Anne Mahoney has called Mayor Tom Koch's plan to demolish the old Quincy High School ill-conceived and a waste of taxpayer money.

Mahoney, who is challenging Koch for mayor in the November election, said the mayor's plan to spend $7.5 million to demolish the building is unworkable. Under the terms of an agreement with the Army Corps of Engineers reached during construction of the new Quincy High School, the city is not permitted to demolish the former school.

"Once again, Tom Koch has gone ahead and announced plans to do something he doesn't have the legal authority to do," Mahoney said. "Just as he mismanaged the track project by usurping the School Committee's authority and moving the track to Faxon Field, Tom Koch is now moving forward with plans that are in direct conflict with binding legal agreements – and his continued mismanagement of projects like these is costing Quincy residents a lot of money."

Even if the city were allowed to demolish the building, Mahoney said,

ANNE MAHONEY

Koch's plan to spend $7.5 million simply to demolish the school and replace it with landscaping is a waste of taxpayers' money.

"Given that Tom Koch is already proposing to spend $1.5 million to renovate the Coddington School, $17.6 million to build a new Central Middle School, $7.8 million to renovate Old City Hall and still needs to come up with $50 million for the downtown redevelopment, Quincy doesn't have the luxury of spending another $7.5 million to tear down a perfectly good downtown building simply to replace it with grass," Mahoney said.

Mahoney said the city should develop more creative and innovative uses for the building, such as leasing it to a non-profit that could transform the building into an arts and cultural center.

"From the Quincy Art Association and the Quincy Symphony Orchestra to the Quincy Choral Society and numerous children's theater, dance and music programs, our city has a vibrant arts community," Mahoney said. "The availability of the former Quincy High School offers a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to create a permanent year-round home that could become a focal point of the new Quincy Center."

Currently, Mahoney said, Quincy's many arts groups move from venue to venue, using public schools, libraries and private facilities during off hours on an "as available basis." Two of the city's better known arts events – the Arts Affair at Marina Bay and the two-day ArtsFest – occur outside, putting them at the mercy of inclement weather.

"Quincy's arts community has grown to the point that putting up a tent one weekend a year simply doesn't do justice to the full range of activities that could be available at a permanent, year-round cultural center," Mahoney said. "Just think of the arts and educational programs that could be available to Quincy residents and children."

Mahoney pointed to the Fort Point Artists Community in South Boston, the Brickbottom Lofts in Somerville and the Appleton Mills development in Lowell as just a few of the Massachusetts communities that have used arts and cultural developments to revitalize downtown neighborhoods. The Boston Redevelopment Authority has also launched an Artist Space Initiative.

"By leasing the old Quincy High School to a non-profit organization, this historic building could be transformed into a year-round cultural center that could host art exhibits, theater performances, concerts, educational programs and more," she said. "Some of the classrooms could also be converted into artist studio space, thereby generating revenue."

Mahoney noted that millions of dollars in state and foundation funding is available to finance the renovation and creation of arts and cultural spaces.

Quincy was also one of the few large cities in Massachusetts not to participate in the Mass. Cultural Council's contest to create videos describing why the arts are an important part of their communities.

"Quincy needs a mayor with the financial expertise to develop creative and innovative solutions to the city's economic challenges," said Mahoney, who holds a degree in finance. "As mayor, I would work with the city's arts community to aggressively pursue funding through the Mass. Cultural Council's Cultural Facilities Fund as well as the Ford Foundation's $100 million arts space initiative to secure the funds needed to preserve the old Quincy High and transform it into a revenue-generating cultural center that would add immeasurably to the city's quality of life."

State OKs $5M For Downtown

the agreement requires the city to raise $50 million in local, state or federal funds to cover the cost of Core Public Improvements needed for the overall development:

- Construction of Hancock Common between Quincy City Hall and the Church of the Presidents;
- Rerouting of the Town River culvert and;
- Construction of a new bridge from Burgin Parkway to Cliveden Street.

This $5 million appropriation from the Infrastructure Development Fund is the largest grant awarded so far to help pay for the Core Public Improvements.

"This allocation brings us another step closer towards making the Downtown Quincy project a reality," said Sen. John F. Keenan (D-Quincy). "Downtown Quincy is one of the largest private development projects underway in the Commonwealth, and will have not just local, but regional and even statewide economic implications."

State Rep. Bruce Ayers (D-Quincy) said: "This is another step towards our goal for economic development and job creation for the city of Quincy."

State Rep. Tackey Chan (D-Quincy) added:.

"We are thrilled that this $5 million allocation was awarded to Quincy. This is an exciting time for Quincy and this funding will help advance these essential Core Public Improvements for the redevelopment."

Street-Works' $1.6 billion investment plan calls for 1 million new square feet of office space, 700 new residential units, 570,000 square feet of retail space, 4,100 temporary construction jobs, and 5,700 permanent jobs. Street-Works recently announced it has signed a deal with National Realty Development Corp., the nation's largest developer of retail space, to recruit tenants for the new Downtown area.

Quincy's New Zoning Code Headed To City Website

Task Force Honored For Years Of Dedication

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The city's new zoning code should be up and running on the city's website within the next few weeks, according to City Clerk Joseph Shea who said Tuesday that the goal is to make the entire document available as soon as possible.

The zoning code is the first revision of the city's zoning since the 1970's when James McIntyre was mayor. Mayor Thomas Koch appointed the Task Force on Zoning in 2008.

Enacted last June, the revised code, now 115 pages, includes the dozens of changes recommended by the Task Force and City Council Ordinance Committee and approved last June by the city council.

At a special ceremony last week, city council thanked the Task Force members for their dedication and issued special commendations honoring their work.

For those volunteers, the Task Force's work will help protect their city and address future issues.

For Task Force member Jimmy Wong, a firefighter, zoning is only important to those who care about their neighborhoods and property values.

Wong, along with the other Task Force members, met for hours and hours month after month before the final code was approved in June by City Council. By that time, the proposed code had been revised 19 times during task force meetings and City Council Ordinance Committee meetings.

For former Planning Director Peter Meade, another Task Force member, the new zoning code "brings the City of Quincy into the 21st century…"

Meade not only served on the Task Force, but also had been the city's Planning Director when some of the original codes were enacted in the 1970's.

The new ordinance "will guide the City going forward with future development," according to Attorney Steven Striffler, another member of the Task Force, who believes the code now addresses issues raised after past developments.

Much of the zoning code was revised and completed when City Council approved the 20th version in June. However, councillors will consider such issues as signage, residential wind turbines and local business areas in the future. Human Resource Director Steve McGrath coordinated the project and Councillors Joseph Finn and John Keenan represented the council at the meetings.

Working with the Task Force and, later, with city councillors at nearly every meeting was Attorney Mark Bobrowski, a consultant "who brought a wealth of knowledge and understanding of land use law to the table," according to Meade.

Bobrowski, a professor at New England School of Law, specializes in Land Use Law, Real Property and Administrative Law.

"These were volunteers who did an extraordinary job," Councillor Michael McFarland said of the volunteers in June and speakers last week echoed those words when they saluted Wong, Striffler, Meade, and Galvin at the ceremony and commended other members, Architect James Edwards, William Cunniff, and Melissa Kelleter-Stamos.

Councillors also honored the late Robert Kachinsky, a member of the Task Force who died in January, 2010.

Congressman: Housing Issue A Priority, Too

Keating Focuses On Job Growth At Visit To Quincy Career Club

By EMILY TAFT

The Quincy Career Club recently welcomed Cong. William Keating and discussed with Quincy's congressman how they think he can help create more jobs in Massachusetts.

"The congressman wants to focus on talking to the people without jobs," Michael Jackman, Keating's district director. "He wants to hear what they are experiencing in the job field."

The Quincy Career Club – which meets in the basement at St. Chrysostom's Church, corner of Linden and Hancock Streets in Wollaston – provides an opportunity for the unemployed and underemployed to meet and support one another in their search for employment.

"I decided to make this club because I saw there was a strong need for it in Quincy," said Founder Evie Shore. "It was devastating to watch the struggle of those pursuing a job and not do something to help. I enjoy helping people."

The club, which always has fluctuating members, has around 15 to 20 members attend the once-a-week meeting. They gather to discuss what they have done in terms of job searches, work on their resumes and interviewing skills, and all the while supporting one another as they look for ways to pay the bills.

"This is a great group of people," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "I receive letters every day from people looking for work. This is a great way to help. It provides hope for people."

Keating spoke with many members at the Sept. 28 gathering and tried to answer as many questions as possible, while also letting it be known he is on the unemployed side, he wants to find a way to produce more jobs.

"It is important for the community, its neighborhoods, and families to get people back to work," said Keating. "We need to create full-time, permanent jobs to help decrease the deficit."

Keating also said that although it may not seem like it to those in the room, Massachusetts is one of the fastest places to get a job right now.

"Can you create jobs that can pay market rent, which right now is approximately $1,400 (a month)," said Quincy Career Club member T. Lawrence Ware. "Right now it is a depressing life many have to lead, because the job they have isn't paying enough to pay for their rent. As a man I want to provide for my family and I can't do that right now."

Keating said he knew about the struggle with paying rent and not having the money to do so, and that he was there to get suggestions to help with the issues Americans, and more specifically, Mass. residents, are facing in this economy.

"Sixty-one percent of people say they are living paycheck to paycheck," said Keating. "That is why I am here to find out what I can do, and what obstacles you are facing. The housing issue has to be a priority in our country."

Keating also said the state and country are dealing with long-term costs, and things aren't going to change with a new president. He said procedures need to be simplified, and that things that can get Americans on the right path to success and to jobs are not being done.

He said too much is being spent in places it shouldn't, such as with nuclear missiles and in trades with China.

"The young people graduating and going out looking for jobs are the ones affected the most, because there are no jobs out there for them. The fight is working on investing in our own country and our own jobs," said Keating. "I want to be helpful not only in Washington but here.

"The American Dream is in jeopardy."

Volunteers Of America Launches Prisoner Reentry Program

Volunteers of America established the Norfolk Bounty Reentry Mentor Program through a grant from the Bureau of Justice Assistance under the auspices of the Federal government's Second Chance Act. This is part of an ongoing effort to combat the problem of recidivism in our cities and towns.

Volunteers of America is a national, nonprofit, spiritually based organization providing local human service programs and opportunities for individual and community involvement. In Quincy our human service programs help abused and neglected adolescents, as well as adults and youth in recovery from drug and alcohol addiction.

The Norfolk County Reentry Mentor Program has key linkages in place with other Volunteers of America programs, including the Family Center in Quincy Center, Located on Hancock Street the Family Center is a licensed metal health clinic that serves the emotional, psychological and social well-being of adults, elders, adolescents, children and heir families.

The ultimate goal of the Norfolk County Reentry Mentor Program is to return offenders to their community with an enhanced sense of self-worth and specific knowledge and skills to increase the chance of a successful reentry. In order to achieve this goal, the program has been designed to include mentoring during and after incarceration; case management and transitional support services; and comprehensive training for mentors.

The mentorship program begins before the offender is released from jail and continues throughout the one-year mentor-mentee commitment. During the incarceration phase of the mentoring process, a bond will be developed between the volunteer and the offender through weekly visits. He interpersonal connection between mentor and mentee developed in the incarceration phase will foster and sustain the relationship after the offender is released.

Each offender who participates in the mentoring program will be at least 18 years of age or older. Typically, the offenders involved will have been identified as substance using/abusing. Offenders with histories of serious violence and sex offenses are ineligible to participate in the mentoring program. Finally, the typical participant in the mentoring program will be returning to the Quincy/Weymouth/Braintree areas. Offender participation is strictly voluntary; they do not earn any special privileges whatsoever.

Offenders and mentors should use the incarceration phase to identify the key areas of need the offender must address to achieve a successful transition from the facility to the community. In general, the areas of need will be in employment preparation, obtaining substance abuse or mental health treatment, education and repairing damaged relationships.

The Norfolk County Reentry Mentor Program requires individuals who wish to be mentors to make a one year commitment to the program and maintain client confidentiality at all times. Former offenders are actively encouraged to apply, provided that enough time has elapsed since their involvement with the court system ad depending n the gravity of the offenses on the record.

Mentor training includes an orientation at the prison, which explains safety and security procedures and the rules and regulations, which govern the conduct, expected of volunteers at the facility. Training with Volunteers of America staff for the post-incarceration stage of mentorship focuses primarily on development and maintenance of effective professional boundaries between mentor ad mentee. Also, Volunteers of America staff will provide each mentor with a thorough compilation of local resources to help direct the mentee to essential services.

Currently, the Norfolk County Reentry Mentor Program has 17 active mentors who are working with 20 offenders. An individual interested in becoming mentors should contact the Mentor Recruiter, Bart Timilty, by phone 617-390-0234 or by email at btimilty@voamass.org.

Ex-offenders are welcome to apply.

A Job Well Done

On Sunday, Oct. 2, at approximately 2:45 a.m., Officers Patrick Folan and Scott Doherty were dispatched to a West Quincy residence on a report of a disturbance. Upon arrival, Officer Folan observed a woman leaving the residence from the driveway area and two men standing in the driveway, one with a ripped shirt.The woman was carrying a small child.

LT. DAN MINTON

Officer Folan approached the woman with the child and asked what occurred. The woman, who appeared upset, said that she was leaving and taking the child with her. The officer again asked the woman what happened. She did not answer so he asked her if she lived there and she said no.

The officer asked for identification and received a passport from the woman. At this time, Officer Doherty and Sergeant Daniel Guarente arrived on scene. Officer Doherty approached the men who were still standing in the driveway to determine what happened. The woman said that she was unharmed and that they did not need any help.

While the woman and child remained with Sergeant Guarente, Officer Folan proceeded to speak to the men in the driveway. Officer Doherty told Officer Folan that he was able to determine that an incident of domestic violence assaults had occurred. After identifying themselves, one of the men stated that he is the former boyfriend of the woman and the child is their 3 year-old son. The other man said that he was a friend and that he called the Police.

The father of the child said that he was babysitting his son while the child's mother was out with friends. He said that he and his son were at the other man's house earlier and then returned home. He said that when he returned home, the mother of the child was there waiting for them.

She then approached the father of her child, who was holding their child and angrily stated, "Where were you with my baby?" She then physically attacked and assaulted the father of the child as she grabbed their son and attempted to wrestle control of the child from his father. To prevent injury to the child, the father let her have the child. At this time, according to the two males, the mother of the child intentionally threw the boy to the ground. She then immediately attacked the father by first slapping him across his face with an open hand, followed by clawing at his chest and ripping his shirt. The father of the child said he put up his hands in a defensive manner and was bitten by the mother of the child (suspect) on his right fore arm.

The friend and the father, who picked up his son, retreated from the suspect inside the apartment. They were followed into the apartment by the suspect, who began to physically break and smash windows in the apartment. The two males and the child exited the apartment for safety reasons and to get the suspect out too. The other male then called "911" for Police assistance.

The suspect responded to this information by picking up a piece of broken glass from one of the broken windows and held the tip of the broken shard of glass to her own neck, stating, "If you call the Police - I'll kill myself." She then pointed the shard of glass toward her son and yelled, "……..and my son."

The suspect then dropped the glass, grabbed her son and said that she was leaving. The father of the child tried to engage the suspect in conversation to stall her for the Police, but Officers arrived on scene quickly. An ambulance was dispatched and the EMTs determined that both the mother and the child were uninjured.

The suspect, a 39 year-old Quincy female, was arrested and charged with, "Domestic Assault and Battery, Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon for physically throwing her son to the ground and "Reckless Endangerment of a Child" and with "Threatening to Commit a Crime" for her threats to harm herself and the child. The father and son were transported to Quincy Medical Center via ambulance for a check-up.

The victim was advised of his rights under 209A and the option of obtaining an emergency restraining order, however, he declined and said he will consider the order option later.

Officer Folan filed a written and oral child abuse/neglect report to the Department of Children & Families.

Nice Work!

Candidates Forum – Mayoral Candidates

Editor's Note: This week's Candidates Forum focuses on press releases submitted by candidates running for mayor and school committee.

Koch: We Must Continue To Work Together

The progress being made in the City over the last several years – from unprecedented employee health care reform to the historic Quincy Center redevelopment to major investments in schools and infrastructure – requires a continued commitment of working together toward shared goals, Mayor Thomas Koch said.

He cited the negotiations that led to City employees voluntarily joining the state-run Group Insurance Commission for health care, a move that has translated into more than $30 million in savings in just the first several years. Quincy is the largest City in Massachusetts to join the state plan voluntarily at a time when cities and states across the country are struggling to find solutions to skyrocketing health care costs for workers.

"We did not fight and we did not bicker. We sat together at the table, rolled up our sleeves and got it done," Koch said. "We are showing what can be done when we work together and treat everyone with dignity and respect. In these historically difficult times, we absolutely must continue to work this way."

Mayor Koch noted that all of the City's unions accepted at least one year of wage deferrals, and some agreed to freeze contractual raises for two straight years, marking a level of cooperation unmatched in the state and one that saved dozens of jobs, he said.

The commitment to working together extends to the City's $1.6 billion plan to redevelop Quincy Center, a program that took three years of negotiating to develop a plan requiring that only new revenue from the private development be used to pay for public improvements, Mayor Koch said. The first-of-its-kind agreement garnered national attention, including in The New York Times, a potential new model for urban revitalization

"Our plan takes the risk off the taxpayer and puts it squarely on our private partner: The project pays for itself without affecting our homeowners or it doesn't happen," said Koch. "This unprecedented model took almost three years of serious negotiations, but in the end, we did it together because everyone at the table had the same shared goal of transforming our downtown, creating jobs and securing the future of the entire City."

A new Central Middle School is now under construction at the highest possible state reimbursement rate of 80 percent because of the same leadership strategy, Koch said, pointing to the positive relationship built with state leaders that will result in the first middle school to be built under the state's new model school program, which aims to save money by using efficient design and construction standards.

"Working together gets it done – there's no two ways about it," said Koch. "There are always going to be those who will criticize, but it's my job to lead and we're going to keep moving this great City in the right direction."

Mahoney Submits FOIA Request For City Payroll, Overtime Records

Mayoral candidate Anne Mahoney has submitted two Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests to the city of Quincy, seeking access to city payroll and overtime records since Mayor Thomas Koch became mayor in 2008.

Mahoney said she submitted the FOIA requests after hearing from numerous residents concerned about Koch's record of awarding jobs, city contracts and preferential treatment to friends, family members and political cronies. Koch's recent appointment of former Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi to a $110,000 year position as DPW commissioner has prompted voter outrage, she said, as has last week's ruling by the Civil Service Commission vacating Koch's appointment of friend and political supporter Joseph Barron as fire chief.

"When it comes to Tom Koch and cronyism, it seems the Raymondi and Barron appointments may be just the tip of the iceberg," Mahoney said. "Numerous residents have asked me to investigate charges that, if true, would show a deep-rooted pattern by Tom Koch of putting the financial interests of his family and friends ahead of the taxpayers who are footing the bill for his nepotism and patronage."

In particular, Mahoney said, some voters are concerned with the amount of overtime pay being awarded to Koch's brother, Joseph Koch, who is employed as a general foreman/tree warden in the Park Department. According to city payroll records for 2007 – the last year for which records are publicly available – Joseph Koch's base salary was $57,565.04. With overtime, however, Koch increased his base pay by 56 percent that year, taking home $89,951.85.

Mahoney said residents reported seeing Joseph Koch working on the track at Faxon Field over the summer – work that began after the School Committee, which has legal authority over the field, voted against putting the track there. On Sep. 2, a Norfolk Superior Court judge found that Koch overstepped his authority by beginning work on the track at Faxon after the School Committee voted against it.

In addition to the payroll and overtime records, Mahoney also requested all records and correspondence regarding Woodward & Curran, an engineering firm that has received city contracts and which employs the son of City Clerk Joseph Shea.

"In these challenging economic times, Quincy can't afford to be handing out six-figure jobs and awarding large contracts to all of Tom Koch's political allies and their assorted friends and family members," Mahoney said. "As mayor, I will adopt new hiring policies that prohibit nepotism and political cronyism."

She also pledged to publicly post all available city positions and make city payroll records available.

"The city's payroll records used to be available publicly – right up until Tom Koch became mayor," Mahoney said. "It shouldn't take a Freedom of Information Act request to force the Koch administration to release this information. The citizens of Quincy have a right to know how Tom Koch is spending their money, and more specifically, who is benefiting financially from his cronyism."

Candidates Forum – School Committee

McCarthy: Put Student Support Intervention Counselor, Middle School Tech Back In Budget

By DAVID McCARTHY

The last few years the school budget in Quincy has taken its fair share of budget cuts.

The budget was cut almost 9 million dollars, a huge reduction for any city or town.

Through many meetings the school system was able to bring a 9 million dollar deficit down to 5 million as we added back personnel and expenses in 5 phases:

Teacher deferrals, Increased Fees, unemployment reimbursements, reconciliation of positions and additional funding.

All of the budget reductions took its course on the Quincy Public school system. The School committee and the Supt's leadership team were put in a position that no one wants to be in. "Make the appropriate tough cuts and keep the school system operating at its usual excellent level.

Two positions that were just currently added to a recent budget were the Quincy High and North Quincy High Intervention counselors. These two individuals were tasked with the tough assignment of getting involved with all kids, their issues, problems or triumphs and connect with the families. A must need in today's world.

I will work very hard this upcoming budget cycle to bring these positions back to the budget" McCarthy said. "Folks out on the campaign trail ask me about my message in the literature I speak about and hand them. The counselor's and that new program are on my literature and need to be put back into the budget somehow".

"With the Citywide Drug Task Force supposedly gearing up with great emphasis on these problems it didn't make sense to cut these two positions, It is extremely hard to make any cuts but the economic times and the bottom line budget from city hall sometimes dictates the number you need to get too. I have great confidence in this intervention approach and would love to discuss a return.

At the High School level situations are posed everyday to our staff and sometimes you need that person who can get involved with kids, with issues that could and can make a difference.

We need more interaction with the High School kids. We need a program that connects all to school programs, clubs and other avenues of identity" We need to get these two positions back in the budget and grow a program that can assist all associated to it.

Middle School Technology took a hard hit as well as it was eliminated from the budget. All I hear is technology is changing every year. This is an item that needs to come back also. We need technology at every level of the school system." The middle school program was a key component as it prepared most kids for a successful High School experience.

Our High Schools have benefited from technology upgrades the past few years, Quincy High is state of the Art, North Quincy High has had significant upgrades last year. Middle school should be brought back on the map.

Technology is in everyone's hands every day. We need to stay on top of this particular subject and make it work. Our kids cannot be left behind as other districts move forward with the latest state of the art technology". This is one that we need to revive.

Hubley: Public Schools Need A Funded, Comprehensive Program On Bullying

By KATHY HUBLEY

In recent years the Quincy Public Schools (QPS) have made strong strides towards understanding and defining the issue of Bullying.

In the past few years, the QPS Bullying policy has incorporated state-wide changes, and was adjusted to reflect changes in technology whereby bullying no longer stops in the classrooms, school yards and busses, but rather follows the child home through cell phones and online social media. Teachers are trained on the policy, as are school administration and staff, however bullying remains a major issue in our schools and more must be done.

Every child deserves to be in a school where they can be free from the threat of harm. No child should have to withstand ridicule or social pressure that often result from bullying. When a child is being bullied, or witnesses another child being bullied, they do not feel safe. Like proper nourishment and sleep, feeling save is a fundamental requirement for having a general readiness to learn. Victims of bullying span every social group, though special education students are at a particularly high-risk for being bullied.

While school districts are mandated to have anti-bullying policies, these mandates are unfunded. Funding that does exist is often the result of grants attained through the efforts of our individual QPS guidance offices and student support services. In some cases, funding is sought out by individual teachers or even a school's Parent Teacher Organization (PTO). Guidance councilors should be working with children and parents not writing grant requests. While an admirable effort by these groups and individuals, it is not an appropriate and consistent source of funding for this core issue.

Kids need age appropriate instruction in every grade level throughout the year on how to handle situation where they are being bullied, witness another child being bullied, and/or how to avoid behavior that bullies other children. Parents need specific information and training on what steps to take if their child is being bullied, witnesses another child being bullied, and how to identify and council their child if they are showing signs of being a bully. This instruction needs to be incorporated into the curriculum, as oppose to just intervening at the time of incidence, if reported or identified.

Through my years as a parent and volunteer, I have spoken to many parents about bullying. All too often I hear of the struggles parents have dealing with this problem.

Through Wollaston School PTO, and Quincy Citywide Parents' Council, I have worked to help fund programs that address bullying. It is time for the Quincy Public Schools to take the next step and put a comprehensive program in place that is funded, as we do with other education priorities. The issue of bullying will be at the core of my education priorities if elected to serve on the School Committee in Quincy.

Bregoli: Health Educators, Certified Athletic Trainers Needed At High Schools

By PAUL BREGOLI

Former Quincy Public Schools teacher and guidance counselor Paul Bregoli cites a lack of health educators and certified athletic trainers at both high schools as areas of health and safety, which need to be addressed immediately.

This current school year marks the second in which the Quincy Public Schools will not have health education being taught at either high school; this, despite a continuing drug problem in the city. In addition, a nationwide awareness of childhood obesity and its long-term effects on our children is being ignored with the absence of health educators at the high schools.

Two years ago, a decision was made to no longer retain the two health educators at Quincy and North Quincy High Schools. This is both short sighted and inexcusable. It will have a long-term negative impact on the health and well being of our current students. It is also a fact that most crimes committed in our community can be traced back directly to a need to feed a drug habit. It is also a fact more young people will die from drug overdoses in Norfolk County this year than will give their lives in the war in Afghanistan.

Alcohol,however,continues to be the drug of choice amongst middle and high school students in Quincy. All the good being done at the elementary level with the DARE program is being negated by the absence of health education at the upper levels. Continuity in this area is a must and must not be ignored any longer. The health of our young people depend on that.

Additionally, coaches at all levels in high school are being asked to also assume the role of trainer, which most are not qualified to do. This has also gone on for two years. Coaches are now expected to care for injuries to their student athletes that the athletes incur either at practice or an MIAA athletic contest. Again, the majority of coaches are not trained to evaluate the extent of an injury, much less treat that athlete. Yet, this is what they have been expected to do with the absence of a professional athletic trainer.

Everyone is aware of national attention head injuries in sports is receiving both nationally and statewide. This past summer the Massachusetts State Legislature addressed guidelines regarding evaluation and treatment of head injuries, Quincy needs to have in place a person professionally trained in this area, an area, which impacts the health and safety of our student athletes.

My solution to both problems is this: Hire a person for Quincy and another for North Quincy whose responsibility would be health education from 11:30-2:30 and athletic trainer after school is out. This is a common sense solution. It will cost a few dollars to do. But, can we put a dollar amount when it comes to health and safety of our students?

I spent 34 years in the school system and am aware of problems that have solutions. This is just one example.

Perry: We Need To Maintain A High-Level Of Literacy And Medial Specialists

By LINDA PERRY

In the past few months I have spoken with many residents throughout the City regarding their thoughts and concerns with the school system. Although I have heard a wide array of concerns, there is one key concern that came up again and again – the loss of literacy and media specialists.

The number one issue on people's minds is the budget and how cuts to staffing have resulted in a loss of literacy specialists and media center personnel. Of course, the district must deal with the current economic downturn, financial restraints and potential budget cuts while still delivering the best possible educational experience – but the ability to read is the very foundation of a student's future.

We need to identify innovative ways to maintain a high-quality level of literacy education with a decreasing budget and increasing demands. Early literacy teachers and media specialists make a tremendous difference in a child's education, and Quincy Public Schools has some of the very best and brightest. As for restoring programs, I believe the first thing that must be returned is media center personnel. Being able to do your own research is vital to developing study skills, and media centers teach that skill.

We must continue to ensure a high quality teaching force - attracting, retaining, and continuously developing the best teachers and support staff at every level of our education system. We need to ensure that our faculty know and feel they are appreciated and an integral part of our community. Across the district and neighborhoods, we need to insure that all schools have effective literacy curriculum and that students, teachers, and staff personnel who need supports get them.

An appreciation for the written word leads to a life of learning; including learning about all manner of other lands and cultures. Unfortunately, introductory instruction in world languages has been reduced through budget cuts in the past few years. Many Quincy parents are deeply involved in their children's education by creating home environments that value learning, by volunteering in the classrooms, and attending school events. Research shows that there is a strong correlation between parental involvement and high levels of student achievement. Extra effort is needed to involve the parents who are not as active in their child's school and education. The recent visit of students from Spain to our city was an exciting learning experience for host families and students. I enthusiastically support these innovative opportunities that expand our children's understanding of the world beyond our city.

By always keeping the students and their education foremost in our minds, we will continue to best serve our students and move our schools forward. We must ensure that the students of the Quincy Public Schools are the focus of every decision and every conversation. If elected, these are issues that I would strive to keep at the forefront of each and every school committee meeting.

In closing, I respectfully ask for your vote in the Nov. 8th election.

Davis Advocates For Stronger Business Partnerships

Quincy School Committee Candidate Jay Davis has pledged to strengthen the Quincy Public School Business Partnership program if elected.

"Government can not, nor should it be expected to, solve all our schools' challenges," Davis said. "However, Quincy has a number of resources, including a strong business community that can help address some of these needs, including finding meaningful employment for our students and recent graduates."

As a member of the Quincy Public Schools Business Partnership for more than eight years, Davis has worked with others to promote collaborations between Quincy businesses and schools. Through his law firm, Davis has employed several interns from Quincy High School and North Quincy High School.

"As a businessman, I have been able to see first-hand the quality education our interns possess. They come into our office ready to hit the ground running and quickly become essential parts of our team," Davis said.

"I began working for Graeber, Davis, and Cantwell, P.C. while attending Quincy High School. I worked directly with the business manager overseeing and balancing several bank accounts that had daily balances of several million dollars during the height of the real estate market from 2003 through 2005," said Matt LaCorte, a 2003 graduate of Quincy High School and current Senior Financial Analyst with John Hancock Financial Services.

"Because of this experience, I was able to obtain an internship at John Hancock Financial Services while I was attending Wentworth Institute of Technology and obtained full-time employment with the company upon graduating from college."

Through the Partnership, businesses work with each of the public schools in the City.

"As a member of the School Committee I will have a unique prospective as to how businesses and schools can work together. During these difficult economic times our high school students are finding it tough to get a job," Davis said. "Through partnerships more businesses can start with student interns, which will hopefully lead to paid positions."

If elected to school committee, Davis intends to use his resources to recruit additional businesses to join the Partnership and work with school representatives to host job fairs for students.

"Any new business coming to Quincy center needs to be encouraged to join the Partnership and work with our schools," said Davis.

Protect Your Deck For The Winter

(NAPSA)-Foot traffic, food spills and weather can take their toll on any deck, but you can clean and protect your deck to prepare it for the winter with a few simple steps.

• Clean Thoroughly: Ground-in dirt and barbecue stains can ruin your deck's appearance and ultimately degrade the wood. Exposure to sun can cause wood to gray and weather and exposure to moisture can encourage the growth of mold, mildew, moss and algae.

Use a bleach-free cleaner specifically formulated for wood to restore your deck to its natural beauty without bleaching or yellowing as chlorine bleach can. Cleaners such as Jomax Deck Wash loosen and lift dirt from gray weathered wood and remove stains caused by mold and mildew to prepare the deck for a new protective coating. A convenient hose mount applicator makes it easy to use; just attach to an ordinary garden hose and spray.

A FEW DECK survival steps can help you keep it looking beautiful longer.

If your stained or painted deck has seen better days, consider stripping any faded or deteriorating finish prior to applying a water-repellent sealer or stain.

• Apply a Protective Finish: After cleaning, it's important to apply a water-repellent finish to protect your deck against the damaging effects of winter. Moisture from ice, snow, sleet and rain can penetrate the surface if it's not protected and can cause splitting, cracking and warping. Fortunately, there's a wide variety of premium exterior wood finishes that offer protection against the elements, while giving you the opportunity to achieve just about any look you like.

For example, if you're looking for a clear water repellent to protect against water damage without changing the color of the wood, you can choose Rust-Oleum Premium Water Sealer. It can protect your deck against the elements for three years.

For maximum protection against water absorption and maximum durability, there's Rust-Oleum Premium Deck and Fence Stain. It's available in both solid and semi-transparent formulas in 22 different colors. What's more, it's backed by a 10-year satisfaction guarantee so it can keep your deck protected and looking beautiful for years.

The stain also features breakthrough Cool Touch Technology, which reflects solar rays to keep surfaces cooler to the touch.

New Storm Windows

Q: I've had metal storm windows covering my older wooden windows for a few years now. These came with the house when I bought it, but I've never been happy with them. They rattle loudly and don't seem to stop any wind. Can I affordably replace them? – Harriet in Syracuse, N.Y.

A: Replacing storm windows isn't a huge task, but it can be a challenge to get good quality, long-lasting windows installed on a budget. You'll want to ask several questions when making the decision to replace those annoying rattlers.

–Do I want metal or wooden storm windows? Should they be removable, or do I want combination windows that don't have to be removed each season?

–Can I purchase standard-size storm windows, or do I need custom-fit storm windows (often an issue in older houses with nonstandard window sizes)?

–Are the storm windows I want good quality? Do the joints at each corner fit securely so that no light can be seen through them?

–Do the windows open and close smoothly?

–Can I install the storm windows myself, or would it be safer to have a professional contractor install them (especially if the windows are located on an upper floor)?

–If I use a professional, what are his or her credentials? Is he licensed or certified to install windows? Does he provide a written estimate of the work to be performed? Does he listen to my concerns about budget and try to come up with an affordable solution?

You may want to take a few weeks, or more, to decide on which storm windows you'll purchase and how they'll be installed. That may mean another winter with your old storm windows. In that case, temporarily minimize the rattling by inserting a thin piece of self-adhesive foam weather stripping under the storm window's sash.

HOME TIP: Cold air can enter through some unusual spots in the house. Check with your home-improvement store for a variety of weather-stripping and sealing materials, such as light-switch and outlet sealers, self-adhesive strips and expandable spray foams.

How To Choose Exterior Siding Colors And Textures For Your Home

(NAPSA) – When it comes to picking the right colors and textures for a home, most homeowners color themselves confused.

There are so many styles to choose from. Exterior design does not need to be difficult. Here are eight tips to help you pick the perfect home palette:

1. Think about the kind of statement you want to make. Do you want your home to naturally blend in with the environment or be bright and distinctive? Would you like your home to be welcoming or stately?

2. Look around at color schemes that appeal to you. What makes the homes you see look friendly and appealing? Take pictures and think about how the color scheme helps deliver that look.

3. Consider the materials already used in the house. Is the foundation brick, stone or concrete? What colors are the roofing shingles? The colors and textures you choose don't have to match existing materials but should harmonize with them.

4. Use an exterior design visualizer that lets you try colors and styles on your home's exterior without leaving the comfort of your home.

For example, with siding manufacturer Exterior Portfolio's Dream Designer visualizer you can mix and match siding colors, textures and styles online to find the right exterior home design. The online tool gives users the freedom to change siding, window, door and corner trim, as well as roof color.

You can also choose from a gallery of homes or upload images of your own home to design with. Try the Dream Designer at www.Exterior Portfolio.com/DreamDesigner.

5. Consider the surroundings. Some siding textures and colors work better in some environments than others.

6. What colors work best with the style of your home? Colors can be brighter with a Victorian house, say, than a Colonial house, if you want to stay accurate to the period.

7. Get samples to see how each color looks on your home. Swatches and color samples aren't just for a home's interior. The best way to test your home's design decisions is with actual color samples. Through Exterior Portfolio's Dream Designer program, you receive a customized Dream Designer Board with high-resolution ima_ges of your exterior design and large siding sample pieces of the selected products so you can try it before you buy it.

8. Lighten up. Pick a lighter neutral shade for the walls; use white for window trim and darker colors on add-on features such as shutters. Use bold colors or bright neutrals to play up beautiful architectural features.

Came Together To Raise Breast Cancer Awareness

North Quincy Strikes First Against Quincy, 3-1

By SEAN BRENNAN

Rivals on the court but united for a common cause was the prevailing theme last Thursday at North Quincy High School when the Quincy Presidents and the North Quincy Red Raiders met for the first time since last year's Division 1 Central-East final – a match won by the Raiders, 3-2.

Quincy/North Quincy games are always pressure-packed, from game-to-game, the Presidents and the Raiders always give-and-take. But for one night, at least during the pregame ceremonies, this healthy rivalry and the tension that fills gymnasiums when two of the more-competitive programs in the state face off, took a backseat.

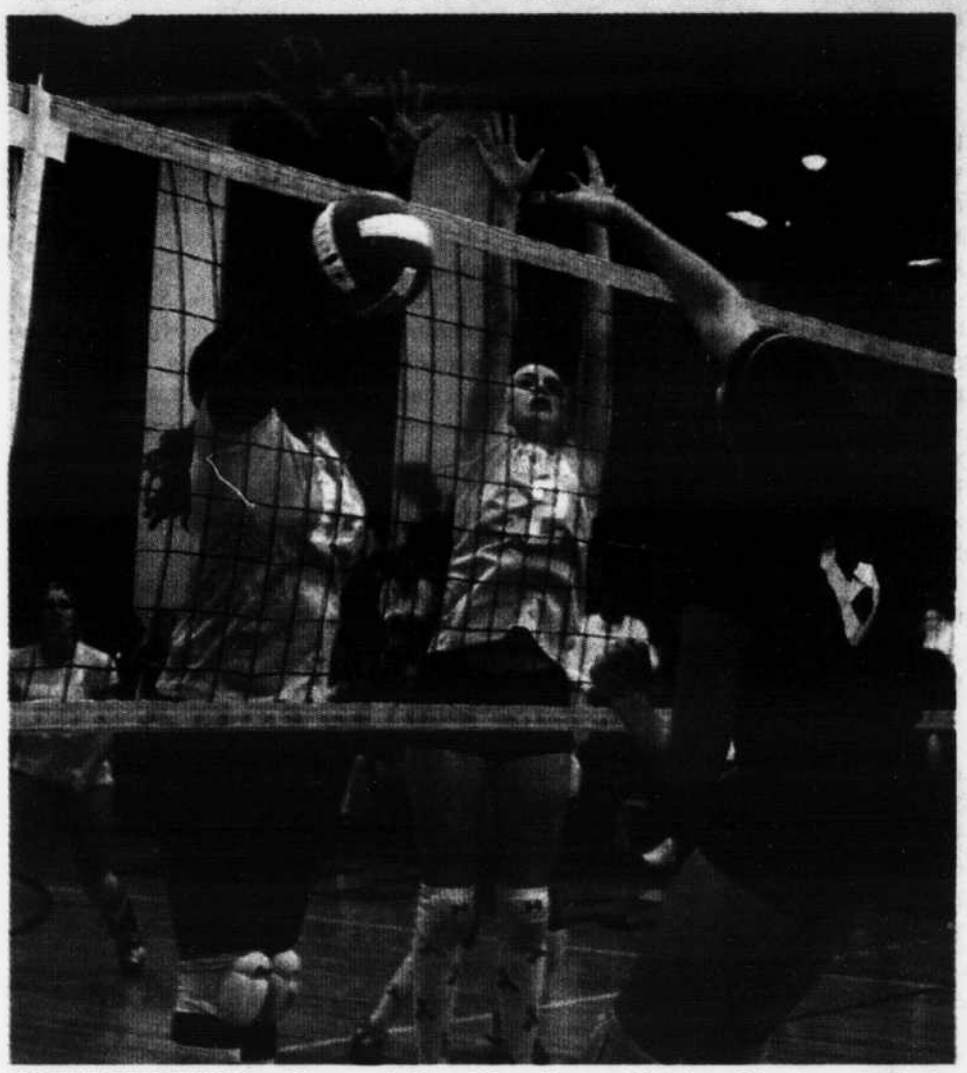

In its place, the color pink took over.

North Quincy and Quincy were there to play a match (and it was a good one won by the Raiders, 3-1) but more importantly, the two programs were there to raise money and awareness for breast cancer research through their Dig Pink National Breast Cancer Awareness festivities.

Donning pink jerseys, socks, and bandanas and playing with a pink ball, the Presidents and the Red Raiders brought this cause to the forefront. It was an evening of togetherness that saw the best of everyone involved on display.

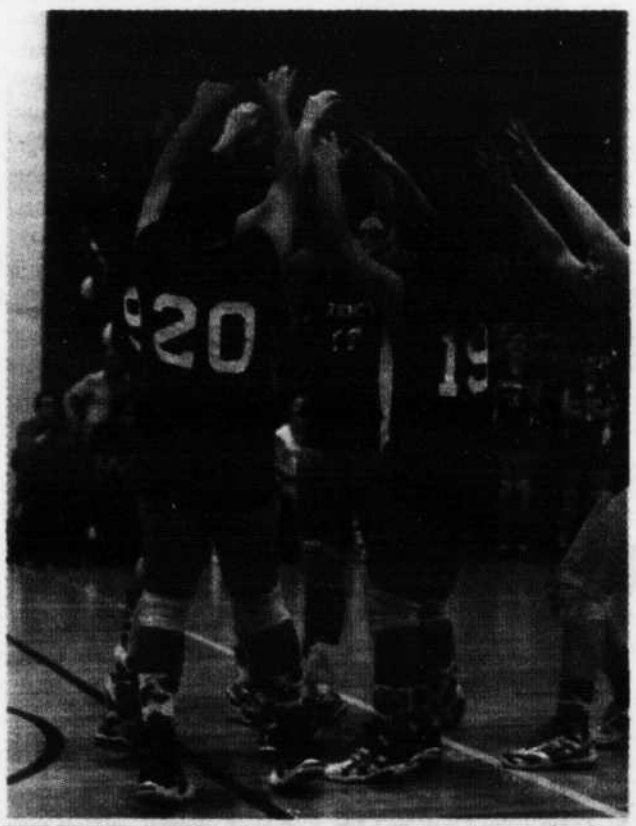

"This was a fun time and the girls really wanted to do this for charity and for the community," said NQ Head Coach Kerry Ginty about her team's campaign to raise money and collect donations. "In the end we still knew it was a Quincy game and we came out fired up; our girls were so fired up. Both teams played with such emotion, which was great."

"I think it was great to see the girls take initiative for such a great cause," added QHS Head Coach Jacqui Niosi about the evening's festivities. "We are glad that we could be a part of it. It was such a wonderful event."

THE PRESIDENTS huddle together after scoring a point during Game Three. Quincy rallied back from down 2-0 to win the third game, 25-23, before dropping Game Four by a score of 25-23.

With Quincy and North Quincy it is impossible for an actual match to not be intense; and so was the case once the teams hit the court following a freshmen and jayvee game.

Playing in front of an excited crowd, the Red Raiders (10-0 overall), behind three straight serving aces from senior libero Elizabeth Sullivan, broke open Game One. Sullivan's skillful serve gave North Quincy a 14-10 advantage, forcing Quincy into a quick timeout. Senior setter Rachel Chu (29 assists) set up junior middle hitter Rose Bennett straight out of the break for a 15-10 lead, and three late-game kills by senior Olivia Umoren (12 kills) put the Red Raiders a point from a 1-0-match lead.

Sophomore Maya Umoren's serving ace sealed Game One for North Quincy (25-12) as the momentum swung towards the Red Raiders' side of the court.

Chu connected with Bennett, Olivia Umoren, Maya Umoren and sophomore Carolyn Schwartz (ten kills) early in Game Two, allowing the Red Raiders to maintain momentum at 12-10. Maya Umoren's consecutive serving aces upped the score to 14-10 and when Red Raider senior outside hitter Emma Ainsley rose above the crowd and spiked the ball in between two Quincy defenders the Red Raiders took a commanding 18-12 advantage.

Kills from Olivia Umoren and Schwartz closed out the Presidents in Game Two as North Quincy gained a 2-0-match lead.

But the Presidents (10-2 overall) snatched the momentum right back. Being down 2-0 to North Quincy is nothing new for Niosi's team. Last season, Quincy rallied back from 2-0 deficits in both regular season matches, winning one of them, 3-2.

Behind the play of seniors Donna Niosi (setter), Erin Chiocchio (outside hitter), Caity Lowry (middle hitter), Nicole Parry (setter), Sam Albanese (defensive specialist) and Kiley McDonald (middle hitter), Quincy went toe-to-toe with North Quincy in the third game. Trailing 16-15, the Presidents stole momentum with a long volley that finally went their way.

Quincy would eventually score the last three points of Game Three to win 25-23 avoiding a match sweep while setting up a Game Four.

In the fourth game, momentum shifted again as North Quincy jumped out to a 16-12 lead. Olivia Umoren's final kill of the match made it 17-12. Despite a late charge from Quincy, including a smothering block by McDonald, the Presidents ran out of time. The Red Raiders closed out Game Four on a 3-1 scoring run to win the fourth game, 25-23, and the match, 3-1.

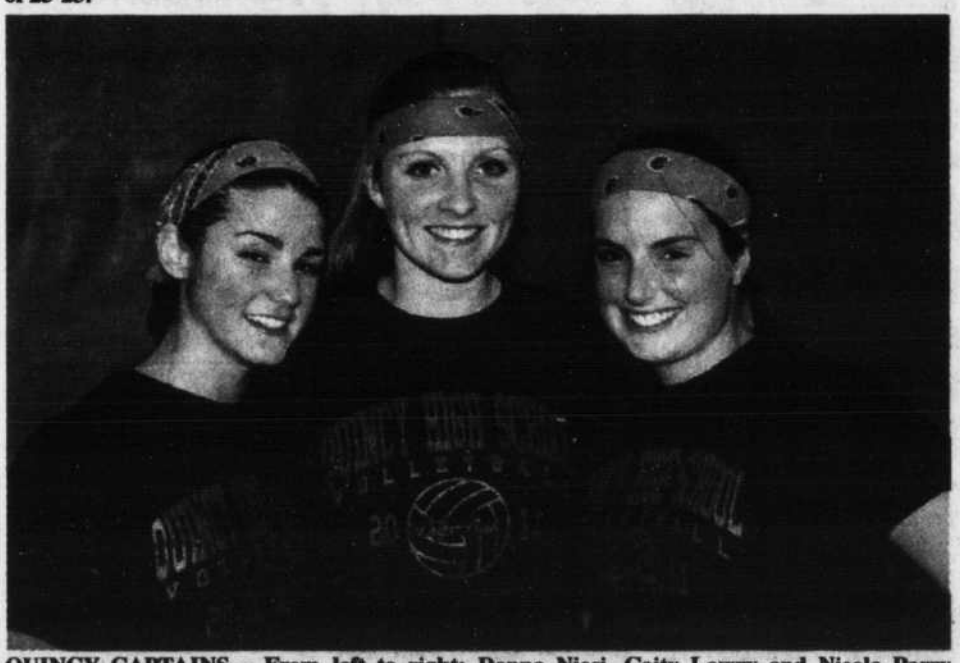

"(Quincy) is a very good team," said Ginty. "I think it was kind of how the Quincy games turn out all the time – it was up and down. There were so many momentum shifts. The first two games when we did get the momentum we held on to it and then the last two games when they got momentum they held on to it. It was give one point take one point all night long."

For Quincy this match versus North Quincy couldn't have come a better time. The Presidents have cruised through the first month of the season, losing just once to Silver Lake before last Thursday's match. According to Niosi, there is nothing wrong with playing hard and losing to a quality opponent, especially this early in the year, because if Quincy wants another shot at a sectional title, the Presidents are going to have to learn to win games of this magnitude.

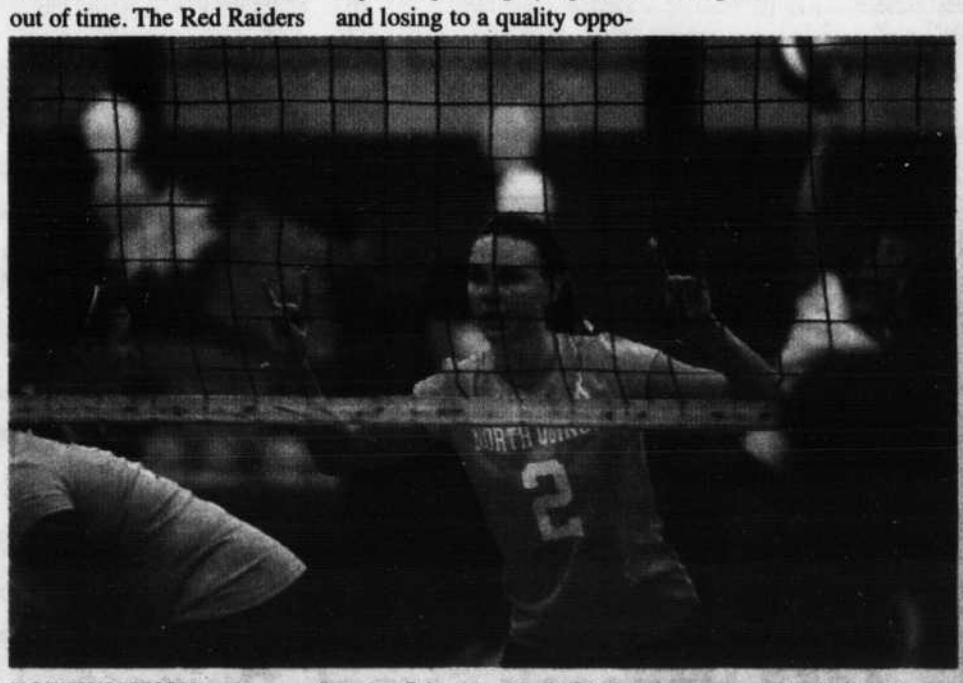

"This was a good game for us,' said Niosi. "We really haven't been pushed by another team like North so it is tough when you see the speed of the game at a different level. I thought we made pretty good adjustments."

"They are a good team," Niosi continued. "I am not really disappointed with how we played. I thought we stepped up and I think we can do a little better defensively but it is a start and it gives us something to work toward before we play them again."

The Presidents get another crack at the Red Raiders on Oct. 26 at Quincy High School. Start time is set for 6:30 p.m.

QYFL Week Five Results

The 61st season of the Quincy Youth Football League is shaping up to be one of the best to date.

The West Quincy Elks, out of the Desmond Division, lead the pack with an undefeated 5-0 record followed closely behind by the Milton Mustangs (4-1). These divisional foes are set to square off on Sunday in a battle for bragging rights. The Houghs Neck Manets sit at 1-3-1 in the Desmond Division.

Over in the Myers Division, the Quincy Point Panthers (2-3 overall) hold a slight lead over both the North Quincy Apaches (1-3-1) and the Squantum Storm (1-4).

The following are game results from Week Five:

Elks v. Panthers (Oct. 9)

The West Quincy Elks improved to 5-0 following a 32-0 victory over the Quincy Point Panthers. The three-headed monster of Douglas Santos, John Teixeira and Joey Weinstein led the Elks.

Teixeira ripped off two touchdowns, the first a 70-yarder and the second from ten yards out, while Weinstein scored on a 30-yard dash. Santos and Michael Ortiz accounted for the Elks' other scores.

Devonte Bowden, Aaron Eitenne, Corey Hernandez and Santos all made plays on defense for West Quincy.

Mustangs v. Manets (Oct. 9)

The Milton Mustangs outlasted the Houghs Neck Manets, 20-12, despite a first half rally by the Manets.

After spotting Milton a 13-0 lead, the Manets made a game of it before halftime behind the strong running of Mike Nazzaro and Joe Boddie. Houghs Neck's Cody Desmond scored on a three-yard TD run and later added to his total with a 62-yard touchdown scamper.

Co-captain Conor Pound, Bryan Hanley and Sonny Ciugini all stood out on defense for the Manets in the loss.

Apaches v. Storm (Oct. 9)

The North Quincy Apaches finally got into the win column following a decisive 20-0 victory over the Squantum Storm. North Quincy's Allen Lee scored two touchdowns, quarterback Aiden Brown finished 4-for-6 for 130 yards and two TDs, and running back Mike McNelley provided quality yards carrying the rock.

But, it was the work of the North Quincy defense that gave the Apaches its biggest momentum, as they overcame three first half fumbles and two trips by the Storm into the Apaches' red zone, to hold Squantum scoreless.

McNelley (linebacker), Dan Collarusso, Pat McLoughlin, Tom Whooley, Colin Maloney, Jimmy Bille, Shawn Kelly, and Devin Ganno played well for North Quincy on defense.

Liam O'Connor (59 total yards), Joel Lawless (16 carries, 51 yards), Max Storch (seven carries, 45 yards), and quarterback Tommy Jaehnig played well for the Storm on offense as the line of Ryan Manning, Ty Finn, Declan Mayo, Raphy Versas, Connor Cramond, Jeremy Downey and Mark Monahan provided the blocking.

Patrick Bronske, Johnny Tran, Brian Anton, Patrick O'Brien, Mac Deegan, Cramond, Lawless and Storch shined defensively for Squantum.

At The Halfway Point: Football Teams Looking To Gain Traction

By SEAN BRENNAN

The high school football season typically consists of ten regular season games. This weekend marks the start of the "second half" for the 2011 campaigns of the North Quincy Red Raiders – North Quincy plays eleven regular season contests - and the Quincy Presidents, so there isn't a better time to look forward to see what lies ahead for the city's teams as both programs get ready to kickoff the Patriot League portion of their schedules.

Red Raiders

North Quincy (0-5 overall) hosts Middleboro High on Saturday at Veterans Memorial Stadium with kick-off set for 4 p.m. The Red Raiders have struggled through the first month-plus of the fall and are coming off a 27-20 defeat to nonleague Archbishop Williams High School last Friday night.

Coach Jim Connor's boys found an offensive spark versus the Bishops after accumulating 13 total points in nonleague games against Boston Latin (7-6 loss), Oliver Ames (33-7 loss), East Bridgewater (47-0 loss) and Arlington (3-0 loss), but it wasn't enough to earn that elusive first victory of the season.

Senior Marquis Chase returned a first half kickoff 77 yards for a score after the Bishops had taken an early 14-0 lead and fullback Walter Hannon pulled the Raiders even in the fourth quarter (20-20) with a four-yard TD dash, but Archies stormed right back, sealing the victory with a 63-yard touchdown run late in the fourth.

The Middleboro game is a Patriot League crossover game. The Sachems are a member of the league's Fisher Division. The Raiders did not play Middleboro in 2010.

Following this contest North Quincy begins the Keenan Division portion of the schedule beginning with a road date against undefeated Duxbury High School (5-0) on Oct. 21. The Dragons, at the halfway point, are the top team in Eastern Massachusetts in Division 2 and were ranked No. 2 in all of Eastern Mass by Boston Herald High School guru Dan Ventura in his weekly Sweet 16 poll.

Divisional contests versus Hingham and Silver Lake, on Oct. 28 and Nov. 5, respectively, account for the final two home games on the slate for North Quincy. The Red Raiders lost to the Harbormen 34-14 and 21-7 to the Lakers last season.

A road game at Whitman-Hanson is set for Nov. 11. The Panthers are currently 4-1 and hold the inside track to second place in the Keenan Division.

Presidents

Quincy (1-3 overall) travels down Route 53 on Friday to play at Hanover. The Presidents hosted nonleague Malden Catholic, out of the Catholic Conference, last Friday at Veterans Memorial Stadium. Quincy hung tough with the private school before losing 14-7.

The Presidents were looking to build on a nonleague victory over Plymouth South (20-16) on Sept. 23, but the Lancers jumped out to a 14-0 advantage and held on to stall Quincy on a late-game drive. Senior running back Reggie Cesar (16 carries, 195 yards) set up the Presidents' lone score with a 69 yard run. Senior Jalen Green accounted for all seven points; he scored off a four-yard sweep following Cesar's dash and also kicked the PAT.

The Indians present Coach Bill Reardon's squad with a tough matchup. Hanover sits at 4-1 overall; Quincy lost 29-7 last year to the Indians. Following this Fisher Division game, Quincy travels to Pembroke to play the Titians in another divisional affair. The Presidents beat Pembroke 22-12 in 2010.

On Oct. 29, Quincy hosts red-hot Whitman-Hanson (4-1 overall) out of the Patriot League's Keenan Division. Scituate (3-2 overall) invades Veterans Memorial Stadium on Nov. 4 looking to avenge last year's 35-7 loss to the Presidents and Quincy takes a trek to Middleboro on Nov. 10 to play the Sachems in a divisional game.

Quincy and North Quincy square off on Thanksgiving.

Presidents Have The Look Of A Championship Contender

By SEAN BRENNAN

State-championship contenders get right back up after they've been knocked down.

Want proof? Just set your sights on the Quincy High School girl's volleyball team.

Last Thursday in a supercharged match with North Quincy, the Presidents battled the Red Raiders point-for-point only to fall in the end by a 3-1-match score. But Quincy, like any championship caliber team, took its lumps and responded with a dominating 3-1 decision over Pembroke High School the next night to improve its overall record to 11-2 entering the final month-plus of the regular season.

Winning a huge Patriot League match after a hard-fought loss to its fiercest rival was a sign to Head Coach Jacqui Niosi that her girls are gaining steam in their quest to make it back to the state tournament, one year removed from advancing all the way to the Division 1 Central-East sectional final in 2010.

"Win wise, I was really happy with they way we came back against Pembroke after playing North Quincy the night before," Niosi said on Monday. "It is tough to come back after such a tough match. That was a huge confidence boost and it sets us up nicely for the final month of the season."

Niosi led teams are no strangers when it comes to volleyball dominance. Coaching her sixth season at the helm of the Presidents, Niosi has talent up-and-down her roster even after graduating a handful of players off last year's team, which finished as the Patriot League regular season champions, ended the fall with a 21-3 record, and advanced to the Division 1 Central-East finals for the second year in a row. Quincy won the sectional title in 2009.

This year's talent is evident in the strength of the senior class.

Leading the way are team captains Caity Lowry (middle hitter), Nicole Parry (setter), and Donna Niosi (setter). The Lowry-Parry-Niosi trio provides Niosi with the type of big-game experience and leadership that is going to be critical to Quincy's success moving forward.

"I look to them for leadership," said Niosi whose younger sister is Donna. "They all have the experience of playing in the playoffs and in plenty of North Quincy games. All three of them are leaders on the court and the rest of the team looks to them during the course of any match. We have some kids this season who are playing for the first time at the varsity level and my captains are there to help out during the course of a match."

Backing up the captains and providing additional support are seniors Kiley McDonald (middle hitter), Erin Chiocchio (outside hitter), and Samantha Albanese (defensive specialist).

"My senior class brings a positive attitude to every practice and every match," Niosi added. "They all see time on the court and that experience has helped get us off to this fast start."

Two straight appearances in the Central-East title match by Quincy's senior class should give them a leg up once the state tournament begins. The Presidents began the 2010 playoffs as the top seed. This year, it isn't a question of if they make it back to the tournament (they will), but instead it will be how far they will advance.

With a deep senior class accustomed to success, Niosi is blessed to have underclassmen willing to buy into the Quincy way. Behind the seniors, the junior class represents the next wave of reinforcements. At the front of that line this season has been Laura Donahue (outside hitter) and Alysha Dunbar (outside hitter). Donahue and Dunbar, along with junior defensive specialists Maryssa Dwyer and Michelle Connolly, have provided big minutes for the Presidents.

After the senior and junior classes, Niosi has a problem most high school volleyball coaches can only dream they had; Quincy's depth has regulated a talented sophomore class to sparse minutes at the varsity level. There have been matches where Niosi has used her tenth graders in spots but right now this class is getting their volleyball education playing jayvee matches while watching varsity matches from the bench.

Next year and moving forward sophomores Rachel Papile (outside hitter), Courtney Ryan (setter), Taylor Parry (defensive specialist), and Gabby Zorkers (outside hitter) will be the ones battering opposing defenses and filling the end game box scores with huge numbers.

"I have been playing my sophomores mainly at the jayvee level because of the depth on varsity," explained Niosi. "They haven't seen a lot of action but these girls are a big part of the future of Quincy volleyball."

The concept of a freshman making an immediate impact at the varsity level for the Presidents seems out-of-the-ordinary, but this fall, it is happening and, at one of the more important spots on the court. Playing at libero, Emma Kelly has burst onto the scene as the ninth-grader has seamlessly slid into the starting rotation.

"Emma is doing well," Niosi, said acknowledging that Kelly still has plenty to work on. "She has this innate ability on defense and she hasn't been afraid to hit the floor."

Quincy has eight regular season matches left – a rematch with North Quincy looms large on Oct. 26. The rest of this month according to Niosi will be the time to refine team chemistry with the broader goal of making sure that the team is at its best come tournament time.

"We are still getting the team chemistry down," she said. "There are a lot of plays we need to still work on, especially on defense. This should be a good time for the team to start playing better together."

The Presidents played at Whitman-Hanson Tuesday and will play at Hingham today (Thursday). Two home matches against Duxbury (Oct. 17) and Brockton (Oct. 19) are set for next week.

STRAIGHT TO THE POINT!

Not only does good posture improve one's appearance, it also helps preserve the strength and flexibility of muscles and ligaments, making them more resistant to injury and better able to carry out everyday tasks. Poor posture can lead to narrowing of the spaces between vertebrae, which increases the risk of compressed nerves. It also increases the wear on joint surfaces, which contributes to the development of arthritis. The problem is that many people tend to overlook their posture as long as they are not experiencing pain; others think that "straightening up" once in a while is enough to preserve good posture. It takes more than that to maintain good posture. Begin with a careful assessment by a chiropractor.

Posture is the window to the spine and poor posture can indicate there is a problem with a person's spine and nervous system. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we offer computerized spinal scans. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We are able to adjust patients sitting, standing, or lying down to accommodate any level of discomfort. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Telltale signs of poor posture include protruding buttocks and abdomen, rounded shoulders, overly arched lower back, and the head pushed forward in an exaggerated position.

Red Sox Collapse Brings Back Bad Memories

By FRANK McCAULEY

Red Sox fans of the 21st century era who saw two World Series championships (2004 and 2007) come to Boston were stunned by the sudden September collapse of the 2011 Red Sox who, in the spring were being called the "greatest Boston Red Sox team ever."

However, for us veteran Red Sox fans and watchers (I go back to 1940) it seemed to be quoting New York Yankee great Yogi Berra "déjà vu" all over again!

How many times over the years have the Red Sox faltered? Let me count the years, 1948, 1949, 1972, 1974, 1978 and 2003! Forgive me if I missed a couple of other years.

1948 – After a slow start the Red Sox picked up steam. On the final two days of the year the Sox were tied for second place with the Yankees, two games behind the league-leading Cleveland Indians. The Sox beat the Yankees twice while Cleveland lost both games to the Detroit Tigers, creating the first tie for the pennant in American League history.

A toss of the coin determined that the one-game playoff would be held at Fenway Park. Red Sox manager Joe McCarthy, who had won a slew of pennants and World Series for the Yankees, chose as his starting pitcher, one Denny Galehouse, a journeyman pitcher in the twilight of a so-so career.

Galehouse was trounced by Cleveland by an 8-3 score. The Indians went on to win the World Series defeating the soon-to-be-departing Boston Braves in six games.

1949 – After another slow start the 1949 Red Sox found themselves playing the last two games of the season in New York. The Sox had a one game lead and all they had to do was win one and the pennant and a trip to the World Series was theirs. Alas, the Sox lost both games and the Yankees and their new manager Casey Stengel went on to win the World Series in 1949 as well as in 1950, 1951, 1952, and 1953.

1972 – The Six finished in second place a game and a half behind the Detroit Tigers in the Eastern Division when Luis Aparicio fell down rounding third base and was tagged out.

1974 – In late August, the Red Sox held a 7 ½ game lead in the American League East after Luis Tiant pitched the Red Sox to a win over the Oakland A's. The Red Sox slide began when they lost a Labor Day double-header in Baltimore by identical 1-0 scores. The Orioles went on to win the East while the Red Sox wound up in third place behind the second-place Yankees.

1978 – The year 1978 witnessed another great Red Sox collapse. In late July, the Sox held a 10 ½ game lead in the American League East and a 14 ½ game lead over the third place Yankees. After a disastrous series with New York, the Red Sox lost the lead. However, they made a comeback by winning their last eight games to finish in a tie for the Eastern Division crown with their nemesis, the New York Yankees.

Once again history repeated itself and a toss of the coin determined that the one-game playoff would be played in Boston. Entered the immortal Bucky Dent; need I say more?

2003 – This year the Red Sox and Yankees finished in a toe for the American League East championship. Since the Yankees won a majority of their games with the Red Sox, New York became the AL East Division champions and the Red Sox the Wild Card.

The American League Championship between the Yankees and Red Sox came down to a seventh and final game. With the game in extra innings entered Aaron Boone, the Bucky Dent of 2003. Boone's walk-off home run off Tim Wakefield gave the game and the American League pennant to the Yankees.

Finally, we should not forget the four times the Red Sox actually won the pennant and advanced to the World Series: 1946 and 1976 versus the St. Louis Cardinals; 1975 versus the Cincinnati Reds, and 1986 versus the New York Mets.

Each of those World Series went to the seven-game limit and each time our beloved Red Sox came up short. In Game 6 of the 1986 World Series versus the New York Mets the Sox had a two-run lead in extra innings. In the last of the tenth the Mets' first two batters flied out and there were two strikes on the batter. However, the Mets, with the help of a disastrous error by first baseman Bill Buckner, rallied to win, forcing a seventh game. I didn't even watch the final game, which the Mets of course won!

Those of us who have suffered with the Boston Red Sox over the years are now in our twilight years. However, we still have our fond memories of 2004 and 2007.
